Jacqui Smith: The new approach we have proposed is about putting in place the right incentives to ensure people are able to leave hospital as soon as treatment is completed and it is safe for them to do so. Local authorities and the national health service will need to develop more appropriate settings than an acute hospital ward for patients to await a place in a home of their choice. We will be consulting on the details of the charging system later in the summer.

Beta Interferon

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made to make beta interferon available for MS sufferers by (a) primary care trusts and (b) hospital trusts serving North Yorkshire. [64457]

Ms Blears: On 4 February 2002, Health Service Circular 2002/004, was issued to the national health service announcing the risk-sharing scheme for drug treatments for multiple sclerosis (MS). The scheme makes provision for an estimated 9,000 MS patients to be eligible for treatment on the NHS.

In total 49 patients from North Yorkshire were receiving beta interferon therapy by March 2002. Following the implementation of the risk sharing scheme it is expected that the number of North Yorkshire residents receiving treatment will double to over 100.

Given the potential number of patients who may be eligible, representatives from all four North Yorkshire primary care trusts and the North and East Yorkshire and North Lincolnshire health authority met with clinicians and managers from York Health National Health Service Trust in May 2002 to discuss local implementation of the guidance. The trust prepared an initial assessment of introducing the scheme. An agreed action plan and the timetable for implementing the guidance will be available by the end of July 2002.

For North Yorkshire residents who will not use the York assessment service, the following actions are being undertaken:

> Leeds Teaching Hospitals National Health Service Trust will be in a position to implement from July 2002.
> Hull and East Yorkshire Hospitals NHS Trust has set up a steering group which met on 27 June 2002.
> South Tees Acute Hospitals National Health Service Trust has identified a designated specialist consultant neurologist and a list of patients requesting treatment is being drawn up. A plan for the delivery of the service is being drawn up and is due for completion in August 2002.

Performance Targets

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many performance targets he has set for his Department; and how many that were included last year have been dropped this year. [64274]

Mr. Lammy: The Department is committed to six standards for the delivery of public services to meet the needs of citizens. These standards are called Service First and include:

1. Answering correspondence (includes letters, faxes and e-mails) within 20 working days;
2. Seeing callers with an appointment within 10 minutes of that appointment time; and seeing callers without an appointment within 20 minutes;
3. Answering telephone calls quickly and helpfully within 10 rings;
4. Provide clear and straightforward information about its services and those of related providers;
5. Have a complaints procedure; and
6. Do everything reasonably possible to make its services available to everyone.

We expect these standards to remain in place throughout this year.

Back Pain

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average wait is for a GP referral to a hospital specialist for a back pain appointment in (a) England and (b) Gloucestershire; what steps he is taking to reduce this waiting time; and if he will make a statement. [64445]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not collected. Waiting times are not collected by diagnostic group. General practitioners' referrals to out-patient attendance are collected by medical consultant specialty. A patient with back pain may be seen by any one of a number of medical consultants in different specialties, though often to rheumatology or orthopaedics. Within these specialties, we have no further breakdown by diagnostic group.

The NHS Plan sets out the progress we want to make on waiting times over the coming years. Each year these will fall, by the end of 2005 the maximum out-patient waiting time for a first out-patient appointment will be cut to three months. Urgent cases will continue to be treated much faster.

As a step towards achieving the NHS Plan targets, from 1 April a new maximum waiting time of six months has been established for patients waiting for their first out-patient appointments with a medical consultant.

The "Action On" programmes have been established by the Government as part of the modernisation of the national health service. They are led by the modernisation agency service improvement team. Their aim is to significantly encourage and disseminate best practice, improve access to care and to reduce variations in waiting times in the four specialties with the longest waiting times: cataracts, orthopaedics, ear, nose and throat and dermatology.

Delayed Discharges

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric patients have had their discharge delayed in each quarter in the last year for which figures are available. [64518]

Jacqui Smith: The Department does not hold this information centrally.

Fertility Treatment

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many infertile couples were seen by specialists in Portsmouth, South in the last three years; how much was spent on fertility treatment in that time; and if he will make a statement. [64729]

Ms Blears: The information requested on the funding of fertility treatments and the numbers of couples seen by specialists in the Portsmouth, South constituency is not collected centrally.

Medical Malpractice

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been awarded lump sum damages payouts for medical malpractice in the last three years, broken down by constituency; how much money has been awarded in each of these years, broken down by constituency; and if he will make a statement. [64724]

Mr. Lammy: Information on the numbers of people awarded lump sum damages payments and how much money has been awarded for medical malpractice broken down by constituency is not collected centrally.

Eye Tests (Children)

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements exist to [illegible]vide eye tests for children of school age; what plans he has to change them; and if he will make a statement. [64716]

Mr. Lammy: All children are entitled to free annual national health service sight tests provided by community based optometrists under the general ophthalmic services scheme. Children with spectacle prescriptions that are altering as they grow, are receiving treatment or who become symptomatic between examinations, may be seen at intervals of less than one year. In some areas health visitors and school nurses undertake sight checks when screening the health of young children. The eye care professions have been reviewing this practice and their report is expected to be available shortly.

Henoch Schonlein Purpura

Mr. Keith Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money his Department will provide in 2002–03 for research into Henoch Schonlein Purpura; and to which research centres it is allocated. [64849]

Ms Blears [holding answer 27 June 2002]: A multi-centre, randomised, double blind, placebo controlled study to determine whether steroids reduce the development and severity of nephropathy in Henoch-Schonlein Purpura is being funded by the Wales office of research and development for health and social care of the Welsh Assembly Government. The lead researcher is based at the University Hospital of Wales, which is receiving £91,949 over three years including £19,460 in 2002–03. There are 19 other hospitals involved throughout Wales and the south-west of England.

Nursing Care

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when a report is expected on the evaluation of the impact of covering nursing care costs. [65011]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 27 June 2002]: We have already commissioned a full evaluation of the implementation of free nursing care. This will cover the first six to eight months of implementation and report in autumn 2002, so that lessons from the evaluation can be used in the implementation of national health service funded nursing care for all nursing home residents from April 2003.

Minimum Data Sets

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on the application of minimum data sets. [65012]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 27 June 2002]: To date, national minimum data sets have been developed for use in the national health service as follows:

Admitted patient care (in-patients and day cases)
Elective admission (waiting) lists
Out-patient attendances
Accident and Emergency attendances.

Collection of admitted patient care and outpatient minimum data sets for transmission via the NHS-wide clearing service is mandatory. Currently it is not mandatory for NHS trusts to exchange elective admission list or Accident and Emergency data sets via the clearing service.

Building on work done by the clinical professions, considerable progress is being made in developing data sets to support sharing information along care pathways and the production of comparative clinical information to enable services to monitor quality and clinical performance. This includes developing clinical data sets in the national service framework areas as follows:

Cancer
Mental health
Coronary heart disease
Older people, including single assessment, stroke, falls and dementia, and Diabetes.

The cancer data set has been piloted and once it has been revised in the light of the pilots, decisions will be taken on phased implementation in the NHS. Services are already beginning to collect the waiting times component of the data set.

For mental health, a programme is in place to ensure that appropriate services are collecting the mental health minimum data set by 31 March 2003. Further work to develop a comprehensive mental health data set is planned.

And for coronary heart disease, work is in hand to standardise four existing data sets on paediatric cardiac care, acute myocardial infarction, adult surgery and angioplasty to ensure they are consistent and to develop a more comprehensive data set. The paediatric cardiac care and acute myocardial infarction data sets are being collected and used to monitor services. Collection of the adult surgery data started in April 2002 with the aim of having robust national comparative data on the clinical quality of care by 2004.

The older people and diabetes data sets are at an earlier stage of development.

The NHS Information Authority is responsible for the development of national data sets which can then be applied across the NHS in England through their national data set development programme. The data sets are based on national standards which are approved by the independent NHS information standards board.

Laser Eye Treatment

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on entitlement to laser eye treatment. [65775]

Mr. Lammy: Laser treatments to overcome problems caused by ophthalmic disease are available within all large ophthalmology units. Treatments such as capsulotomies following cataract extraction, photocoagulation and focal laser for diabetic retinopathy, and laser for macular disease are available within national health service hospitals. The NHS does not provide laser surgery to correct refractive errors, which can be successfully corrected by spectacles or contact lenses.

Free Eye Tests

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many free eye tests have been given to pensioners in each quarter since the scheme was launched; and if he will make a statement. [65584]

Mr. Lammy: Eligibility to national health service sight tests was extended to those aged 60 and over from 1 April 1999. The table shows the number of NHS sight tests paid for by health authorities in England from 1999–2000 for those aged 60 and over.

million

	Number of sight tests for over-60s[1]
April 1999 to September 1999	1.51
October 1999 to March 2000	1.79
April 2000 to September 2000	1.87
October 2000 to March 2001	1.88
April 2001 to September 2001	2.01

[1] Figures for England

Nurses

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures the Government have taken to improve nurses' pay and conditions of service since 1997. [65821]

Mr. Hutton: We have accepted in full and implemented the recommendations of the independent pay review body for nursing staff for the last four years without staging pay awards. From April 2002 all nursing staff will have received an above inflation increase of at least 3.6 per cent.

Pay has increased across the board for all nurses employed in the national health service by at least 26 per cent. in cash terms since 1997.

The introduction of nurse consultant posts has extended career opportunities for senior nurses who wish to remain in clinical roles and provided the opportunity to earn salaries of over £46,000.

We are working with unions, professional organisations and employers to introduce a new pay system that will offer nurses and other staff working in the NHS a more attractive career structure, fairer pay and consistent conditions of service.

The development of a child care strategy is a key element in improving working lives for staff in the NHS and plays a key role in the recruitment and retention of staff. Our child care strategy centres on providing good quality, accessible and affordable child care. The main focus of the strategy currently is the development of around 150 on-site nurseries with subsidised places. Funding available from April 2001 amounts to over £70 million. Around a further 7,500 places will be created by 2004.

Care Homes

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 24 June 2002, Official Report, column 733W, on care homes, when he is planning to issue guidance on qualified nursing input. [66145]

Jacqui Smith: The Department has commissioned the residential forum to produce further guidance on nurse staffing. Work on this is under way and due to be completed over the summer.

Rubella Vaccines

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions the Department has given to Farillon on the amount of single rubella vaccines to be issued to private clinics in the UK. [66257]

Ms Blears: The Department has a contract with GlaxoSmithKline to supply a fixed quantity of single vaccines for national health service use per year. These vaccines are owned by the Department. We use a private company (Farillon Ltd.) to store and distribute these vaccines to ensure that NHS needs are met. Any excess or remainder stock is made available for sale to private customers.

We have instructed Farillon to manage orders so that the excess of vaccine stock is available equitably to all private clinics.

National School Fruit Scheme

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of apples and pears supplied to the pilots for the national school fruit scheme in (a) autumn 2000 and (b) autumn 2001 were of UK origin; and if he will list the other countries of origin of the apples and pears. [57167]

Jacqui Smith [pursuant to her reply, 11 June 2002, c. 1215W]: I regret that my previous reply was incorrect. It should read:

In Autumn 2000 all apples and pears supplied to the original national school fruit scheme pilots were from the United Kingdom.

We do not have comprehensive data on the origin of fruit in the much larger number of pilot sites in autumn 2001. We did not begin to collect such data until the regional expansion of the national school fruit scheme that started in April 2002, since when nationally contracted suppliers have routinely been providing detailed information on the origin of fruit.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Refugees

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (a) how much and (b) what forms of aid have been provided by her Department to help refugees and displaced persons in (i) Armenia, (ii) Azerbaijan and (iii) Georgia. [66353]

Clare Short: The table sets out, by country and by purpose, the support my Department has provided to help refugees in the south Caucasus since 1999 (the first year in which direct assistance with the refugee problem was provided).

	Humanitarian	Naturalisation/ Community development	Conflict prevention
Armenia
2001	—	—	18,150
Azerbaijan
1999	208,500	—	—
2000	240,000	70,000	—
2001	—	—	18,150
Georgia
1999	97,850	—	250,620
2000	100,000	100,000	124,145
2001	—	—	180,000

My Department also provided block funding to UNHCR totalling £9.46 million in 2000–01 (the latest year for which figures are available). It is not possible to make a direct attribution, but a proportion of this funding will have supported the UNHCR refugee programmes in the south Caucasus.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with (a) UN, (b) Russian and (c) EU representatives regarding the refugee situation in (i) Armenia, (ii) Azerbaijan and (iii) Georgia. [66355]

Clare Short: Regular discussions are held with UNDP, UNHCR and UNFPA about the progress of south Caucasus refugee programmes to which my Department has contributed. My Department also responds to appeals made by those agencies on a case-by-case basis.

There has been no discussion of the issue with representatives from the Russian Federation, nor any substantive discussion with the European Union.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with (a) Armenian, (b) Azeri and (c) Georgian authorities regarding (i) the refugee situation, (ii) the return of people to their homes and (iii) improving living conditions in the refugee camps. [66354]

Clare Short: My Department's assistance towards alleviating the refugee problem in Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia is directed through the Red Cross, UN agencies and non-governmental organisations.

Discussions with the Governments of the region are therefore wholly concerned with reviewing the progress of those programmes to which my Department has contributed.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Stadium

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if she will place in the Library a copy of correspondence between Ministers and officials in her Department and Mr. Ken Bates on the subject of (a) Wembley National Stadium Ltd. and (b) an English national stadium since 1 May 1997; [58115]

(2) if she will place in the Library a copy of correspondence between Ministers and officials in her Department and the (a) chairman and (b) directors of Wembley National Stadium Ltd. since 1 May 1997. [58114]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 21 May 2002]: No. Such correspondence is covered by the exemptions set out in Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information which cover third party commercial confidences and information given in confidence. This is in line with the practice observed by previous Governments. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already placed in the Library of the House an exchange of correspondence between herself and Sir Rodney Walker, the then chairman of Wembley National Stadium Ltd., in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Ann Keen) on 14 February 2002, Official Report, columns 597–98W. This exchange contained an explanation of the Government's commitment to the project for the benefit of WNSL's then bankers and others who were or might become involved in the Football Association's project. Given it was essentially a public commitment, my right hon. Friend considered it important that Parliament should see its contents. This was done with the consent of Wembley National Stadium Ltd.

Historic Buildings (Public Access)

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what action the Government are taking to link receipt of funding to improve buildings of historical interest to increased access for members of the public; and if she will make a statement; [63938]

(2) which properties in London have received funding from (a) English Heritage and (b) the Heritage lottery fund in each of the last 10 years for improvement works; and how many of these properties allow access to members of the public for (a) one day a year, (b) one week a year and (c) more than one week a year. [63937]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 24 June 2002]: Over the last 10 years English Heritage has grant-aided 295 properties in London. Of these 166 were administered under the Historic Buildings and Monuments Act 1953. These grants are conditional on the provision of public access. The level of access depends on the circumstances of the case and the size of the grant. Opening arrangements for the properties which receive grants are available on English Heritage's website at www.english-heritage.org.uk and in "Hudson's Historic Houses and Gardens" directory.

Grants to the remaining 129 properties were administered under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 and the Local Government Act 1985 for exterior work and essential structural repairs. These grants were to Grade II listed buildings or buildings in conservation areas. There is no automatic access requirement, although some of these properties are open to the public.

Since 1994 the Heritage lottery fund has made 238 awards to historic buildings in London. Public access is an important consideration in awarding grants. The Heritage lottery fund recognises the central role of access in achieving its overall aim to use heritage funding to improve people's quality of life. The organisation is committed to developing the widest possible constituency for heritage, and to promoting access, equality of opportunity and inclusion in all activities.

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the EU directives relating to her Department which have been (a) amended and (b) repealed in 2002. [64944]

Dr. Howells: Council directive 93/7/EEC on the return of cultural objects unlawfully removed from the territory of a member state was amended by directive 2001/38/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council.

Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3911–92 on the export of cultural goods was amended by Council Regulation (EC) No. 974–2001.

No EU directives relating specifically to my Department have been repealed in 2002.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the EU directives and regulations that have been implemented through her Department in 2002; and what was the cost of each to public funds. [64994]

Dr. Howells: Directive 2001/38/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council, which amended Council directive 93/7/EEC on the return of cultural objects unlawfully removed from the territory of a member state, was implemented by SI 3972–2001 which came into force on 1 January 2002. There was no cost to public funds.

Ice Rinks

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many ice rinks have (a) closed and (b) opened since 1995. [65528]

Mr. Caborn: Three ice rinks have closed since 1995, one each in Sunderland, Stevenage and Richmond. The ice rink in Altrincham is due to close in [illegible] 2003.

Three ice rinks have also opened since 1995, one each in Nottingham (National Ice Centre), Coventry and Birmingham. A fourth ice rink is due to open in Sheffield in May 2003.

National Lottery

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she will make a statement on the review of procedures for the allocation of the operating licence for the National Lottery provider. [65742]

Mr. Caborn: We published last week a consultation document setting out a number of possible changes to the future licensing and regulation of the Lottery which is available on the DCMS website at www.culture.gov.uk Copies may also be obtained, free of charge, from the Department.

Tourism (Lancashire)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many tourists visited Lancashire in the last year. [65609]

Dr. Howells: Provisional figures from the Office for National Statistics show that in 2001 210,000 visits were made to Lancashire. Overnight stays in the county are shown as 1.4 million and visitor spend is £56 million.

Digital Television

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make an assessment of the benefits to the consumer of a digital terrestrial television service being (a) wholly free to air and (b) partly free to air and partly pay. [65463]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The licences surrendered by ITV digital have been re-advertised by the Independent Television Commission. I understand that the ITC have received six applications. Some of the applicants propose a wholly free to air service, other a mix of free to air and pay channels. Decisions on the licence awards are not a matter for the government but for the ITC which aims to announce the new licensees by 4 July.

Clarence House

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the projected cost is to public funds of the refurbishment of Clarence House; on what works public funds will be spent; and if she will make a statement. [65652]

Dr. Howells: Detailed surveys are currently taking place to ascertain the extent of the Clarence House refurbishment works, which include work on fire compartmentation, automatic fire detection, upgrade of electrical and mechanical services and some redecoration. It is not possible to provide a firm estimate of the cost of the refurbishment until the completion of these surveys. The refurbishment will be funded from the current level of grant in aid for the maintenance of the Occupied Royal Palaces.

Broadband

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps she is taking to publicise the benefits of access to broadband services. [61804]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

I am convinced that broadband services have an important role to play in increasing the competitiveness of the UK economy. I have therefore taken several opportunities to promote the benefits of broadband including by supporting the 'Demand: Broadband' campaign run by the Communications Workers Union.

The UK Online Annual Report 2001 sets out the Government's broadband strategy. To stimulate demand for current broadband content and applications the Government will:

> work with the broadband supply industry to facilitate an industry-wide collaborative campaign to promote the benefits of broadband and give impartial advice on the different technological options available.
> provide more encouragement to small and medium enterprises (SMEs) to adopt e-commerce solutions. The DTI are now expanding the £66 million 'UK online for business' programme to: > provide more effective advice to businesses on the introduction and setting up of e-business solutions, with particular emphasis on the benefits of broadband; and
> introduce a web-based guide to broadband availability for SMEs and a network of demonstrators of practical applications.

We have also established a £30 million fund to help the Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) and devolved Administrations develop innovative schemes to extend broadband networks. Using this fund, some of the RDAs and devolved Administrations are carrying forward work which demonstrates the benefits of broadband.

DEFENCE

Trident Acquisition Programme

Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the latest estimate is of the cost of the Trident Acquisition Programme; and if he will make a statement. [67206]

Mr. Hoon: The current estimate of the total acquisition cost of the Trident programme, with payments already made expressed at the prices and exchange rates actually incurred and future spend at the current financial year rate (the hybrid) estimate, is now £9,800 million. Since the 2001 estimate and leaving aside the effects of price inflation and exchange rate variation (+£11 million), there has been a real cost increase of £25 million. This increase derives principally from additional costs associated with dockyard projects and with missiles and related equipment, offset by a reduced acquisition cost for the four submarines. Expenditure on the Trident acquisition programme to 30 September 2001 represented over 98 per cent. of the total estimate. If all expenditure, past and projected, is brought up to this current year's economic conditions (the non-hybrid estimate) the estimate is £14,376 million.

The programme continues to show an overall reduction in real terms on its original 1982 estimate. This reduction, including the savings resulting from the decision to process missiles at the United States facility at Kings Bay, Georgia, now stands at over £3.7 billion at current prices.

The proportion of the estimate for work undertaken in the United Kingdom continues to be around 70 per cent.

Three in-service Vanguard class submarines are successfully maintained for continuous at-sea deterrence, with the fourth, HMS Vanguard, now undergoing a planned major overhaul.

Ministerial Salaries

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the annual cost was of ministerial salaries in his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 2001–02. [60937]

Mr. Ingram: The level of ministerial salaries are recommended by the Senior Salaries Review Body. From May 1997, in the Ministry of Defence there was one Cabinet Minister, at an annual salary of £43,991; two Ministers of State, at a total annual salary of £82,963; and one Parliamentary Under-Secretary, at an annual salary of £23,623. From June 2001, there was one Cabinet Minister, at an annual salary of £68,157; one Minister of State, at an annual salary of £35,356; and two Parliamentary Under-Secretaries, at a total annual salary of £87,796.

SA80A2 Rifle

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the performance of the SA80A2 rifle in Afghanistan; and what faults have been reported. [66017]

Mr. Ingram: The SA80-A2 is operating in a very difficult environment in Afghanistan with both dusty conditions and extremes of temperature. To date, three formal equipment failure reports have been filed from Afghanistan; this under a 100 per cent. fault reporting regime. In an operational environment any concerns are treated very seriously and a specialist team on the ground in Afghanistan is investigating these reports as a matter of urgency.

RAF

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the daily average number of RAF aircraft movements was for each RAF base in the United Kingdom over the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [65200]

Mr. Ingram: The information in the format requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The table details the daily average number of fixed wing and rotary wing aircraft movements over the last five years at current RAF stations. A number of the movements may have been aircraft belonging to the other services. At RAF Brize Norton, RAF Lyneham, RAF Northolt and RAF St. Mawgan, commercial aircraft movements are also included.

Meteor Missile Programme

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from Governments of the partner countries regarding the Meteor missile programme. [66022]

Dr. Moonie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has not recently received any formal representations from the Governments of the partner countries regarding the Meteor missile programme. He has, however, taken every opportunity to discuss the project with his counterparts in the partner countries as the occasion has arisen.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions the German Government have made representations to the British Government regarding the Meteor missile project. [66023]

Dr. Moonie: The German Government have made no formal representations to the UK Government since the United Kingdom selection of Meteor in May 2000, to salsify the requirement for a Beyond Visual Range Air to Air Missile for Eurofighter. There has, however, been regular dialogue between UK Ministers and officials and their German counterparts regarding the Meteor missile project.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he expects the Meteor missile programme to move into its development phase; [66021]

(2) if he will make a statement on the future of the Meteor missile programme; [66020]

(3) if he will make a statement on the Meteor missile programme; and if he expects them to be in service on time. [66040]

Dr. Moonie: A draft contract for the development and production of the Meteor missile was sent to our partner nations at the end of April following the conclusion of negotiations with the prime contractor MBDA. A revised and final draft contract was passed to our partners earlier this month. We very much hope that all partner nations will confirm within the next few weeks that they are content for the contract to be signed. Germany will need also to sign the Meteor Memorandum of Understanding, which has already been signed by the other five partner nations.

Although negotiation of the Meteor contract has taken longer than expected, we assess that Meteor can achieve its planned in-service date with the RAF if the contract is awarded in the near future.

Infantry

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many trained infantry there were in the Army in each year since 1997. [66028]

Mr. Ingram: The number of trained infantry in the Army in each year since 1997 are detailed in the table:

Date of strength	Officer	Soldier	Total
1 January 1997	2,673	22,683	25,356
1 January 1998	2,726	22,741	25,467
1 January 1999	2,748	22,232	24,980
1 January 2000	2,753	22,385	25,138
1 January 2001	2,783	22,606	25,389
1 January 2002	2,837	22,619	25,456

Eurofighter

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the spare parts for Eurofighter will be stored; and if he will make a statement. [66018]

Dr. Moonie: Spare parts for the Royal Air Force Eurofighter fleet are essential to operations and many are classified as RESTRICTED and above and disclosure of their location could be prejudicial to national security. Therefore, I am withholding this information in accordance with Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which relates to defence, security and international relations.

Armoured Regiments

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which armoured regiments have been at (a) high readiness, (b) training year and (c) other tasks in each of the past three years. [66027]

Mr. Ingram: It is assumed that reference to armoured regiments refers to Royal Armoured Corps (RAC) tank regiments and not Armoured Infantry (IA) Battalions. Those regiments that have been at (a) high readiness, (b) training year and (c) other tasks in each of the past three years are shown in the tables:

2002
High readiness	The Royal Dragoon Guards (RDG) King's Royal Hussars (KRH)
Training	Royal Scots Dragoon Guards (SCOTS DG) Queen's Royal Lancers (QRL)
Other tasks	The Queen's Royal Hussars (QRH) 2 Royal Tank Regiment (2 RTR)
2001
High Readiness	The Queen's Royal Hussars (QRH) 2 Royal Tank Regiment (2 RTR)
Training	The Royal Dragoon Guards (RDG) King's Royal Hussars (KRH)
Other tasks	Royal Scots Dragoon Guards (SCOTS DG) Queen's Royal Lancers (QRL)
2001[1]
High Readiness	Royal Scots Dragoon Guards (SCOTS DG)
Training	The Queen's Royal Hussars (QRH)

[1] The Formation Readiness Cycle (FRC) as a mechanism to deliver these units at readiness was in its infancy in 2000, hence the declaration of just two armoured regiments, rather than the full six.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Royal Armoured Corps is at establishment strength in personnel. [66026]

Mr. Ingram: The establishment and strength of the Royal Armoured Corps (RAC) and the Household Cavalry (HCAV) as at 1 May 2002 is detailed in the table:

Trained strength against liability for HCAV/RAC as at 1 May 2002

	Officer	Soldier	Total
Liability	855	5,023	5,878
Strength	835	4,940	5,775
Difference	–20	–83	–103
Difference (percentage)	–2.3	–1.7	–1.8

Manning statistics for the RAC are currently grouped with the HCAV. Work is in progress to provide separate totals for the HCAV and the RAC. I will write to the hon. Member when these figures are available and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Armoured Vehicles

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) MBTs and (b) AFVs are held in reserve. [66025]

Mr. Ingram: There are no Challenger 2 main battle tanks nor other armoured fighting vehicles specifically designated as reserve stock. The greater proportion of the vehicles that make up the fleets are held on the war-fighting establishment. The remainder are either held for training and trials or are undergoing planned maintenance programmes.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the recommended establishment number of main battle tanks is for an armoured regiment. [66024]

Mr. Ingram: The establishment of main battle tanks in an armoured regiment is 58, although the number allocated to each regiment at any given time is dictated by its role in any one year.

Fishing Patrols

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what agreements his Department has with DEFRA in relation to the number of days per year Royal Navy fishery protection vessels must be on patrol; and if he will make a statement; [66037]

(2) how many days on fishery patrol naval vessels have undertaken for MAFF/DEFRA in each of the past five years; [66038]

(3) when HMS Shetland completed her last fishery protection patrol; and when she will be paid off; [66036]

(4) when HMS Tyne will carry out her first operational fishery patrol. [66039]

Mr. Ingram: The Royal Navy carry out fishery protection duties under an agreement with the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs. The current arrangements run from April 2002 until March 2008. For the current year the Royal Navy has agreed to provide a total of 950 days of fishery protection. This figure is reviewed and agreed annually.

In each of the last five years the Royal Navy carried out the following number of patrol days:

	Number
2000–01	977
1999–2000	979
1997–98	1,130

HMS Shetland completed her final fishery protection patrol on 28 June 2002. She will be paid off at the end of July. On current plans, HMS Tyne will carry out her first operational fishery protection patrol in January or February 2003.

Lynx

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Lynx Mk 8 are operational. [66034]

Mr. Ingram: As of 2 July 2002, there are 24 operational Lynx Mk 8 helicopters.

Harrier

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evaluation his Department has made of the Harrier II plus programme; and for what reasons he has proceeded with an upgrade of the Harrier GR7 to GR9 specification rather than capabilities offered by Harrier II plus. [66031]

Mr. Ingram: As I made clear in my answer on 28 February 2002, Official Report, columns 1451–52W to the hon. Member for Broxtowe (Dr. Palmer), the Harrier GR7 is being upgraded to GR9 standard as this best meets our capability requirements. The Ministry of Defence has not conducted a formal evaluation of the capabilities offered by the Harrier II plus programme, but understands that the main capability difference between the Harrier GR9 and the Harrier II plus is in the latter's nose-mounted radar.

While it would, in theory, be possible to mount a radar in the nose of the GR9, we currently have no requirement to do so. Therefore, no detailed work has been undertaken by the MOD into the practicality and cost-effectiveness of such a modification.

Such a programme would be at least as complex, lengthy and costly as the Sea Harrier Blue Vixen/AMRAAM update in the mid-90s. Given the likely considerable cost, time scale and technical risk involved, and the planned entry into service of the Future Joint Combat Aircraft in 2012, the benefits of integrating a radar on to the GR9 Harrier would be of limited duration and utility. Such a programme would also delay the integration of the smart weapons on to the Harrier GR9 required to enable it to continue to conduct its primary role of the delivery of offensive air power from land and sea.

Munitions Depots

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the anticipated remediation costs will be, including munitions and chemical retrieval, prior to the market sale of Dean Hill munitions depot; and when he expects to put it on the market. [65734]

Mr. Ingram: Defence Munition (DM) Dean Hill's primary task is (and has been) the storage of munitions. The limited (compared to other Defence Munitions sites) processing facilities at the Dean Hill site have primarily been used for maintenance of munitions and associated stores. There has been no explosives manufacturing on site and hence little anticipated contamination to remediate. This has been confirmed by Land Quality Assessment action and a sum of £216,000 has been included in the Investment Appraisal to cover any "industrial site" remediation identified as necessary during run down and closure activities.

It is anticipated that Defence Estates will market the sale of the Dean Hill site in 2004–05 once all closure activities have been completed.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence police are employed at West Dean Munitions Depot; and how they will be deployed following the closure of the depot. [65706]

Mr. Ingram: There are currently 21 MDP officers stationed at Defence Munitions (DM) Dean Hill. DM Dean Hill is scheduled for closure by 1 April 2004 and the MDP officers stationed there will be subject to redeployment procedures. We do not envisage any compulsory redundancies of MDP officers.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the employees at the West Dean Munitions Depot are (a) under 25, (b) under 45, (c) under 60 and (d) over 60 in each category, broken down by sex. [65707]

Mr. Ingram: The age profile and gender of the bearing of 57 Defence Munitions civilian staff currently employed at DM Dean Hill near West Dean village in south Wiltshire is as follows:

Age	Male	Female	Total
Under 25	4	1	5
26 to 45	[1]19	4	23
46 to 60	18	6	24
Over 60	5	—	5
Total	46	11	57

[1] Includes two members of civilian staff on long term detached duty due to return to DM Dean Hill.

Golden Jubilee

Hywel Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the estimated cost is of the tri-service Jubilee celebrations held on 27 June. [66164]

Mr. Ingram: In accordance with the wishes of Buckingham Palace and the direction of the Government it was agreed that there would be no undue expenditure from public funds. The sum of £1.5 million was allocated from the budget of the Royal Naval Base Commander, Portsmouth, towards core project costs and any additional costs will lie where they fell. It will be some months before an accurate assessment of this expenditure could be made, but it will consist primarily of additional travel and subsistence costs.

Defence Assistance

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which countries received expenditure under the (a) defence military assistance fund and (b) the defence assistance fund in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000, (iv) 2000–01 and (v) 2001–02; how much each country received in each year from (A) the defence military assistance fund and (B) the defence assistance fund; how much was used to support defence sales in each case; and if he will make a statement. [66553]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Sudan

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel his Department has contributed to monitoring the Nuba ceasefire in Sudan. [65659]

Mr. Ingram: One British colonel was deployed to Sudan in May of this year to act as deputy vice chairman of the joint military mission monitoring the Nuba mountain ceasefire.

Medical Treatment

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 21 June 2002, Official Report, column 597W, on medical treatment, on what date the Army Training and Recruitment Agency secondary health care initiative commenced and with what budget; by what criteria personnel are treated under the scheme; how many personnel in (a) the Army, (b) the Navy and (c) the RAF have been treated under the initiative and at what cost to his Department in each month since commencement; which health care providers have been used under the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [65569]

Mr. Ingram: The Army Training and Recruiting Agency's (ATRA) secondary health care initiative was formally introduced on 1 April 2001 and the Budgetary sum allocated for the financial year 2001–02 was £1.3 million. Personnel eligible for treatment under the scheme are ATRA trainers or trainees who are referred by their unit general practitioner for investigation, opinion and/or treatment for a condition which is preventing them from continuing with their employment/training. Personnel are referred only when waiting lists at the local Ministry of Defence hospital unit or NHS hospital are deemed excessive. The vast majority of these are Army personnel; a small number of RN and RAF personnel might have been included who were posted to ATRA units, either as trainers or trainees, but these cannot be readily identified. Records held do not allow for numbers treated per month to be easily identified, as an individual may well be treated over a period and therefore feature in more than one month's figures. The costs per month since inception are as follows:

Month	Numbers treated	Cost (£)
April 2001	—	35,035
May 2001	—	61,201
June 2001	—	88,289
July 2001	—	77,286
August 2001	—	97,995
September 2001	—	93,581
October 2001	—	129,601
November 2001	—	79,544
December 2001	—	100,397
January 2002	—	136,503
February 2002	—	159,605
March 2002	—	150,262
Total financial year 2001–02	1,351	1,209,299
April 2002	—	169,047
May 2002	—	129,788
June 2002[1]	—	42,701
Total financial year 2002–03[1]	435	341,435

[1] To 15 June

The healthcare providers utilised under this scheme have been:

BMI

BUPA

Nuffield Trust

Caprio

Independent

NHS.

The initiative has proved successful in reducing the average waiting time for both consultation and treatment, enabling trainers and trainees to return to work or training more quickly. The scheme is kept under constant review.

RAF Fylingdales

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what new agreements have been reached regarding the Ballistic Missile Early Warning Station at RAF Fylingdales following the end of the 1972 ABM Treaty. [66684]

Mr. Ingram: None.

Bereaved Services Families

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what support is given to the widows and families of servicemen who have died. [66362]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence operates a comprehensive Casualty and Compassionate Reporting Policy that extends from the moment of casualty notification all the way through to making arrangements for stress counselling for partners, offering advice on eligibility for pensions, compensation or other financial support and helping with relocation arrangements for surviving dependants.

The MOD also provides an annual Grant-in-Aid to the Remembrance Travel Department of The Royal British Legion in respect of the War Widows Pilgrimage Scheme. The scheme provides financial assistance to any Service widow, whose husband died and was buried overseas between 1914 and 1967, to visit her husband's grave. The Grant contributes 7/8ths of the cost of a pilgrimage organised by Remembrance Travel and to date has benefited over 4,000 widows. The scheme has recently been extended to 31 March 2005.

Support to the bereaved partners and family of ex-service personnel also comes from the Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen and Families Association—Forces Help (SSAFA-FH) and the Armed Forces Benevolent organisations for whom the MOD has the utmost appreciation. We are very conscious of the tireless and highly professional way these organisations assist their former colleagues and know how greatly their efforts are valued both by the present Service community and by ex-Servicemen and women.

Ex-servicemen

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what support the Government are giving to voluntary organisations that help ex-servicemen. [66363]

Mr. Ingram: In keeping with the practice that central Government do not provide funding in direct support of charities' core activities, the Ministry of Defence does not provide any direct financial support to the ex-Service voluntary organisations as they are independent of government and responsible for raising their own funding through private donations.

Nevertheless, the MOD does provide annual Grants-in-Aid to The Royal British Legion's Benevolent Department to assist with the welfare they provide to distressed Polish ex-Servicemen and also to Remembrance Travel, the Pilgrimage Department of The Royal British Legion. This money is used to fund the War Widows Pilgrimage Scheme which enables Service widows to visit the graves of their husbands who were buried overseas between 1914 and 1967. Finally, a Grant-in-Aid is given to the Victoria Cross and George Cross Association every two years to assist with the travel costs associated with their biennial reunion.

Balkans

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the US Administration concerning the International Criminal Court and the continued deployment of US forces in the Balkans. [64814]

Mr. Straw: I have been asked to reply.

I have been and continue to be in close touch with my US counterpart on this issue, and in particular in respect of draft UN Security Council resolutions renewing the UNMIBH/SFOR mandate for UN peacekeeping forces in Bosnia. My hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) also discussed the issue with representatives of the State Department and the National Security Council in Washington last week.

The Government are committed to an effective International Criminal Court. We understand US concerns for their peacekeepers but do not share them. We believe that the Rome statute contains effective safeguards which make it inconceivable that peacekeepers will be investigated or prosecuted by the Court when national investigations or procedures are being carried out. We are working hard with the US and other members of the Security Council to achieve a mutually acceptable solution.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General how many (a) lawyers, (b) caseworkers and (c) administrative staff were recruited in (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) 2001–02; and how many (A) lawyers, (B) caseworkers and (C) administrative staff were employed in the same period in each CPS region. [59656]

The Solicitor-General: The information requested is in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General if she will make a statement on the inappropriate attribution of agents' costs to the CPS non-cash limited vote. [60214]

The Solicitor-General: The CPS is responsible for the payment of fees to counsel agents engaged to prosecute in magistrates courts. Counsel agents attend magistrates courts to undertake routine prosecution work to supplement advocacy by CPS prosecutors. This work is paid for from the cash limited administrative costs budget. In some cases, where specialist advocacy is required, or exceptional preparation time is needed or a case is likely to be lengthy, a special fee is negotiated with counsel and paid from the non-cash limited prosecution costs provision.

In their quarterly report to the Law Officers for July to September 2001, HM CPS Inspectorate commented on the inappropriate attribution of costs to the non-cash limited prosecution costs provision by some areas. Following receipt of that report, further guidance was issued to area business managers in December 2001.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what action is being taken in each CPS region to develop qualitative and quantitative performance indicators. [60215]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service maintains qualitative performance indicators, both locally and nationally, consisting of records of case outcomes and a measure of attrition within the CPS case load. Procedures are under development to provide local area managers with a standard to measure the quality of case work against which will mirror, to an extent, those used by HM CPS Inspectorate. The CPS also maintains a range of quantitative performance indicators showing the timeliness of key functions such as the delivery of briefs to counsel, the service of committal papers, witness expense payments, the payment of invoices, replies to complaints, and replies to MPs' correspondence.

The implementation of the Compass Case Management system from December 2003 will enable an important expansion of the Department's range of information.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what externally approved quality standards have been gained by each CPS region, with specific reference to BS5750 ISO 9000. [60206]

The Solicitor-General: ISO 9000 is not one of the 'Quality Schemes' used by the Crown Prosecution Service to measure the quality of its processes in meeting the needs and expectations of its customers. The Crown Prosecution Service is using the European Foundation for Quality Management (EFQM) Excellence Model. This is a comprehensive framework used by a large number of organisations from across Europe both in the public and private sector to assess the strengths and areas of improvement across all its business activities.

PRIME MINISTER

Belfast, South

Q14. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Prime Minister when he next plans to visit Belfast, South. [64197]

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to visit the hon. Gentleman's particular constituency in the near future.

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Collins: To ask the Prime Minister what expenditure was incurred by (a) the No 10 Press Office, (b) the Strategic Communications Unit and (c) the Research and Information Unit (i) in the latest available year and (ii) in 1997. [63583]

The Prime Minister: For the No. 10 Press Office, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 10 April 2002, Official Report, column 11W.

For the Strategic Communications Unit (SCU), I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Norman Baker) on 23 October 2001, Official Report, column 142W. SCU did not exist in 1996–97.

The total cost of running the Research and Information Unit (R&I) for the financial year 2000–01 was £432,556. Research and Information provides a single information resource at No. 10, providing policy briefing, library resources and reference material for the Prime Minister and No. 10 staff. R&I did not exist in 1996–97.

Mr. Collins: To ask the Prime Minister how many staff (full-time equivalents) were employed by (a) the No. 10 Press Office, (b) the Strategic Communications Unit, (c) the Research and Information Unit, (d) the GICS Development Centre, (e) the Media Monitoring Unit and (f) the News Co-ordination Centre (i) in the latest available year and (ii) in 1996–97. [63581]

The Prime Minister: For information on the No. 10 Press Office, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for West Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 10 April 2002, Official Report, column 11W.

As at 1 April 2002, there were eight members of staff in the Strategic Communications Unit. The unit did not exist in 1996–97.

As at 1 April 2002, there were eight members of staff in the Research and Information Unit. The unit did not exist in 1996–97.

Staff numbers in the GICS Development Centre have fluctuated. As at 1 April 2002, there were 16 members of staff. On 1 April 1996 there were 16 members of staff; by 1 April 1997, following cutbacks in its marketing activities and the training and development support it provided to GICS members, the unit had been reduced to eight members of staff.

Following the Mountfield review of the GICS in 1997, which stressed the importance of high quality staffing, training and development and the exchange of best practice across the service, the unit has gradually returned to its previous staffing level as it has expanded its services to meet this wider remit.

As at 1 April 2002, there were 12 members of staff in the Media Monitoring Unit. The unit did not exist in 1996–97.

The News Co-ordination Centre has members of staff drawn from the Civil Contingencies Secretariat in the Cabinet Office. It is activated in an emergency or crisis, to provide a support and co-ordination role for the lead Government Department, when it is augmented by staff from other Departments. The NCC did not exist in 1996–97.

Annual Leave

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Prime Minister what the average annual leave entitlement is for staff in his Office in 2002. [64647]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office today, Official Report, column 388W.

Summits (UK Delegations)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Prime Minister how many people attended the G8 meeting in Calgary in June from UK Government Departments; and what the total cost of the visit was. [66225]

The Prime Minister: I was accompanied by my noble Friend Baroness Amos and 25 officials. It was one of the smallest delegations.

Since 1999 the Government have published an annual list of all overseas visits undertaken by Cabinet Ministers costing £500 or more during each financial year. The list for the period 1 April 2002 to 31 March 2003 will be published as soon as possible after the end of the current financial year.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Prime Minister how many people attended the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in March from UK Government Departments; and what the total cost of the visit was. [66226]

The Prime Minister: Since 1999 the Government have published an annual list of all overseas visits undertaken by Cabinet Ministers costing £500 or more during each financial year. The list for the period 1 April 2001 to 31 March 2002, including the information requested, will be published as soon as possible.

Official Histories

Mr. Watts: To ask the Prime Minister what further official histories are planned. [67112]

The Prime Minister: I have appointed Professor Rodney Lowe of Bristol University as the official historian to write the official history of the Civil Service since Fulton. I have also agreed to a list of topics for future official histories, as follows:

Privatisation
The Criminal Justice System
Chevaline
Devolution
Policy towards the former Yugoslavia
The D Notice System
A Biography of Desmond Morton.

Sir David Omand

Mr. Beith: To ask the Prime Minister who will exercise day-to-day ministerial responsibility for the work to be designated to Sir David Omand in the fields of propriety, ethics and constitutional affairs; and whether he will report to (a) the Cabinet Secretary and (b) other Ministers on these matters. [65568]

The Prime Minister: On Sir Richard Wilson's retirement, Sir David Omand will lead on propriety, ethics and constitutional issues for which he will be responsible to the next Secretary of the Cabinet and Head of the Home Civil Service, Sir Andrew Turnbull, who will report to the Prime Minister.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Local Government

8. Lynne Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what Government sources of funding can be used for local government services. [64161]

Mr. Leslie: There are several sources of funding which Government provide for local government services. Revenue grants fund day-to-day running costs other than housing. The Government have increased such Government grants by some 20 per cent. in real terms since taking office. Housing is funded through Housing Revenue Account Subsidy and housing grants. Capital expenditure for both housing and other needs is supported through borrowing and credit arrangements and through capital grants provided by central Government.

13. Mr. Neil Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what progress is being made on a replacement formula for funding of local government; and if he will make a statement. [64166]

Mr. Leslie: As announced by my right hon. Friend the Member for Greenwich and Woolwich (Mr. Raynsford) to Parliament earlier this month, we intend to consult on detailed options for a new system by mid July. We will then implement the new system in time for financial year 2003–04.

22. Mr. Soley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what plans he has to introduce proposals to increase the powers and responsibilities of local authorities. [64175]

Mr. Leslie: The Local Government Act 2000 already empowers local authorities to do anything likely to promote or improve the economic, social or environmental well-being of their area. Proposals from the local government White Paper are included in the draft Local Government Bill which my right hon. Friend the Member for Greenwich and Woolwich (Mr. Raynsford) launched for consultation earlier this month. For example, it includes powers to trade and to charge for discretionary services.

Social Housing

9. Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what assessment he has made of the reasonableness of limits on the prices of houses that can be bought by local authorities for use for social housing in high house price areas. [64162]

Mr. McNulty: The Government impose no limit on the prices of houses that can be bought by local authorities for social housing purposes. The hon. Gentleman may be referring to a system of total cost indicators, which the Housing Corporation operates as a benchmark for assessing the value for money of social housing development schemes funded through social housing grant.

Single Equality Commission

10. Paddy Tipping: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what plans he has to establish a single equality commission. [64163]

Mrs. Roche: I recently announced the start of a project to consider the feasibility of, and options for, a single equality body in Great Britain. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, East (Jean Corston) on 14 May 2002, Official Report, column 566W.

Asylum Accommodation

11. Mr. Luff: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the planning process in relation to the establishment of asylum accommodation centres. [64164]

Mr. McNulty: The Deputy Prime Minister's policy is to adhere to the procedures set out in part IV of the memorandum to DoE circular 18/84. These require the developing Department to serve a notice of proposed development on the local planning authority.

Regional Government

12. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what representations he has received from local government leaders on his White Paper on regional governance. [64165]

The Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State: I have received a number of representations from local government, many of them welcoming our White Paper, "Your Region, Your Choice".

14. Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State if he will make a statement on the role counties will have in regional government. [64167]

The Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer in response to the hon. Member for Faversham and Mid-Kent (Hugh Robertson).

21. Mr. Chope: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State when he will bring forward legislation to allow for referendums on the Government's proposals for regional government in England. [64174]

The Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State: I cannot pre-empt future Queen's Speeches. But we intend to introduce a Bill to provide for referendums when parliamentary time allows, so that the first assembly referendum(s) can be held during this Parliament.

25. Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State if he will make a statement on his plans to create regional assemblies. [64178]

The Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made on 9 May 2002, Official Report, columns 275–78. The full detail of our plans to create elected regional assemblies can be found in the White Paper "Your Region, Your Choice", which is in the Library of the House. We are now working to take these plans forward.

26. Dr. Murrison: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State if he will make a statement on the future of county councils in the Government's plans for regional government in England. [64179]

The Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my earlier answer in response to the hon. Member for Faversham and Mid Kent (Hugh Robertson).

27. Mr. Prisk: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State if he will make a statement on his Department's proposals for regional government affecting Hertfordshire. [64180]

Mr. Leslie: Our proposals for regional government and how this will affect all areas of England are set out in the White Paper "Your Region, Your Choice". Copies are in the Library of the House.

29. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what proposals he has for a west midlands regional assembly. [64182]

The Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State: Our proposals for elected assemblies in all the regions of England are set out in the White Paper "Your Region, Your Choice". Copies are in the Library of the House.

Business Improvement Districts

15. Ross Cranston: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what steps he is taking to implement business improvement districts. [64168]

Mrs. Roche: In the White Paper, "Strong Local Leadership—Quality Public Services", published in December, we detailed our scheme for enabling those places which want to introduce business improvement district arrangements to do so. Implementation requires legislation and the draft Local Government Bill, published on 12 June, contains the necessary primary legislation.

Corporate Governance Inspection Reports

16. Mr. Sanders: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State if he will make a statement on corporate governance inspection reports. [64169]

Mr. Leslie: Corporate governance inspection is a powerful diagnostic tool in determining the corporate and managerial capabilities of a council. A total of 15 corporate governance inspections have taken place since April 2000, and their findings reported to the authorities. These inspections have helped inform the corporate assessment model introduced as part of the comprehensive performance assessment.

Housing Market Renewal Fund

17. Ian Stewart: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what progress has been made in setting up a housing market renewal fund. [64170]

Mr. McNulty: The idea of a housing market renewal fund was proposed last autumn by the National Housing Federation, Key Cities Housing Group and the Northern Housing Forums, against a backdrop of severe housing market failure in parts of the country. We are considering the proposal in the context of the current spending review.

However, we are in no doubt that we must address the problem of low demand housing, which underlies the fund proposal. That is why we have invited nine areas, where the problems are most acute, to work with Government establishing pathfinder projects to tackle low demand. We are making available £25 million from the Capital Modernisation Fund to assist the pathfinder projects in vital preparatory work.

Urban Poverty

18. Gillian Merron: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what role his Department has in tackling urban poverty. [64171]

Mrs. Roche: The Government are committed to tackling poverty wherever it is found. Within the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, the Social Exclusion Unit, the Urban Policy Unit, the Neighbourhood Renewal Unit and Government Offices play a crucial role in the Government's work to tackle poverty, both in urban areas and elsewhere. The Department's work on local government, regional policy and housing and planning also makes a critical contribution in this area.

Housing

19. Sue Doughty: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State how many new affordable homes were built in the UK in the past 12 months. [64172]

Mr. McNulty: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Tyneside, North (Mr. Byers) to the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendel) on 21 May 2002, Official Report, column 137.

Rent Restructuring

20. Mr. Coleman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what discussions he has had with local authorities and registered social landlords regarding the Government's future plans for rent restructuring implementation; and if he will make a statement. [64173]

Mr. McNulty: The Government have consulted fully with local authorities and housing associations at all stages in the development of rent restructuring and will continue to do so.

In particular, we have recently issued a consultation paper on further changes to the Housing Revenue Account subsidy system to support rent restructuring.

Planning

2[illegible] Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Deputy Prime Min[illegible]r and First Secretary of State Minister if he will mak[illegible] statement on the future role of county councils in plan[illegible]g decisions. [64176]

M[illegible] McNulty: In our consultation paper 'Planning: deli[illegible]ng a fundamental change', published last Dec[illegible]ber, we set out proposals for abolishing structure plan[illegible] an unnecessary tier of planning. We invited views on t[illegible]future role that the counties might play in the planni[illegible]ystem in addition to their transport, minerals and wa[illegible] responsibilities. We are considering the responses [illegible]de and hope to make a statement this summer. These proposals do not alter the role of the county councils in determining county matter planning applications.

28. Mr. Hoban: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State if he will make a statement on the operation of the planned local planning advisory service. [64181]

Mr. McNulty: The idea of a local planning advisory service was mooted in the Planning Green Paper—"Planning: delivering a fundamental change". We will be making a statement on progress with implementing the Planning Green Paper in due course.

30. Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State if he will make a statement on responses to the Government's proposals for planning. [64183]

Mr. McNulty: The Government have received over 16,000 responses to the consultation on the Green Paper "Planning—delivering a fundamental change". We will be making a statement on the outcome of the consultation in due course.

Homelessness

24. Richard Ottaway: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what steps he is taking to alleviate homelessness; and if he will make a statement. [64177]

Mrs. Roche: We have adopted a new approach which focuses as much on the problems homeless people face as the places they live. Our specific measures include £125 million investment this year to tackle homelessness, and new legislation to strengthen the assistance to people who are homeless or at risk of being homeless.

Franchise

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what his plans are for reducing the voting age to 16; and if he will make a statement. [62690]

Yvette Cooper: I have been asked to reply.

We have no plans to propose legislation to lower the voting age. We would, however, welcome a public debate on the issue. It is also open to the Electoral Commission to consider it and make recommendations for future policy.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what progress has been made on achieving the Government's objective that no child should be living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation by 2004; and if he will make a statement. [65993]

Mr. McNulty: In March 2002 a £35 million programme was launched to help local authorities ensure that by March 2004 no homeless family with children is in bed-and-breakfast hotels (B&B) other than in an emergency, and even then for no more than six weeks.

The 44 authorities with the highest number of families with children in B&B were required to submit bed-and-breakfast action plans showing how they will meet the March 2004 commitment. On 17 June £25 million was allocated to these authorities to help them implement their B&B plans. We will now be working with the next 40 highest using authorities to see how we can help them reduce B&B numbers. We will be monitoring closely the progress of all authorities.

All local authorities will benefit from recent changes to housing benefit subsidy levels, worth up to £10 million, which provide an incentive to lease private sector homes as a better quality alternative to B&B hotels. Authorities have also been sent a 10-point check list of good practice outlining the key 'building blocks' we expect every authority to have in place to deliver reductions in B&B hotel use. Regional B&B 'Good Practice' seminars have been held and examples of good practice have been shared through a newsletter and are posted on the ODPM website.

Mobile Phone Masts

Mr. Norman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State who is on the Working Group established to take forward and monitor the operation of the revised Code of Best Practice on Mobile Phone Masts. [66444]

Mr. McNulty: The Telecommunications Working Group is chaired by the Head of the Department's Development Control Policy Division and comprises representatives of the mobile phone network industry and of central and local government.

Renewal Fund

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State what guidance his Department gives to participants in projects involving funding from the (a) Neighbourhood Renewal Fund, (b) New Deal for Communities and (c) Housing Market Renewal Fund relating to private renting. [63911]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister issues guidance relating to the use of grant from the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund in the form of a Special Grant report, one of which is specifically drafted and laid before Parliament for debate and approval prior to each financial year throughout the lifetime of the fund. Special Grant report No. 78 specifies the purpose and allocations of funding and the conditions for use of the grant in 2001–02 and Special Grant report No. 93 sets out the corresponding purpose, allocations and conditions in 2002–03. Copies of the reports are placed in the House of Commons Library, sent to Neighbourhood Renewal Fund grant recipients and made available on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's website.

The New Deal for Communities grant is provided under section 126 of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 and section 2 of the Employment and Training Act 1973. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister makes NDC guidance available on its website, including:

Learning Lessons: Pathfinders' Experiences of NDC Phase 1
Phase 1 Proposals Guidance for Applicants
Developing Delivery Plans
Finance Guidance
Developing and Testing Ideas
Gathering Baseline Information
Outcomes and Milestones
Support and Advice
New Deal for Communities and the Single Regeneration Budget—Project Appraisal and Approval
New Deal for Communities Annual Review 2000–01
NDC Project Appraisal and Approval Guidance Forward Strategies
Delivering Change
Monitoring, Review and Evaluation
Race Equality Guidance.

TREASURY

Private Pension Funds

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total value of private pension funds. [63398]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Mark Hoban, dated 3 July 2002:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on the total value of private pension funds. I am replying in his absence. (63398)

The market value of the funds held by self-administered pension funds was £765 billion at the end of 2000. These are occupational pension funds where the funds are invested in one or more managed schemes or unit trusts.

The total value of private pension funds is not available. Private pension funds held by long-term insurance companies are not distinguished from other funds, such as life assurance, within the total long-term fund of the insurance sector on which data are collected by the Office for National Statistics.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce mortgage tax relief for first-time buyers in rural areas. [66151]

Ruth Kelly: The Government have no plans to reintroduce mortgage interest tax relief.

VAT

Brian Cotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average time taken was to issue a VAT number for a new business once an application has been filed over the last 12 months. [65718]

John Healey: Customs does not maintain statistics on the average time taken to issue a VAT number and it would involve disproportionate cost to produce this information.

Customs work to a Charter Standard for the processing of applications for VAT registration, requiring 95 per cent. of properly completed applications to be processed within 15 working days of receipt. For 2001–02 Customs received over 180,000 applications for registration and achieved the Charter Standard.

Green Minister

Sue Doughty: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who his Department's Green Minister is; when they (a) have attended and (b) plan to attend meetings of the Green Ministers' Committee; what the outcomes of meetings were for his Department's activities; and if he will make a statement. [65983]

John Healey: I am HM Treasury's Green Minister. I was appointed to the ENV(G) committee in June this year.

Following the general election in June 2001, the previously informal Green Ministers Committee was upgraded to a Cabinet Sub-Committee of ENV and it is established practice under exemption 2 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. Therefore I cannot relate progress or outcomes by my Department to anything that has been discussed.

Cancer

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the incidence rates of cancers for the last five years. [66660]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Bruce George, dated 3 July 2002:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question on the incidence rates of cancers for the last five years. (66660).

The latest available information on trends in the incidence rates of cancers for England was published in table 10 in "Cancer Statistics: registrations 1998" Series MB1 No.29, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Buildings Value

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the buildings owned by his Department and estimate the market value of each of them. [66948]

Mr. Boateng: The National Asset Register, published in July 2001 (Cm5221), lists assets owned by each Department and their valuation.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many statutory instruments have been (a) introduced, (b) removed and (c) amended by his Department since 1 January; and what the (i) cost and (ii) saving has been in each case. [64629]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Treasury, HM Customs and Excise and the Inland Revenue have introduced 44 statutory instruments; removed none and introduced 22 amendment instruments since 1 January 2002. Many of the instruments concerned were of a routine nature, for example approving annual fee increases.

The HMSO SI Registrar Siregistrar@cabinet-office.x.gsi.gov.uk can provide a list of statutory instruments which have been issued by individual Government Departments. SIs which have been originated by Departments but eventually made by the Privy Council are only listed under the Privy Council Office.

The costs associated with regulatory proposals are considered at the policy development stage. A Regulatory Impact Assessment is completed for regulatory proposals unless there are no or negligible costs. HM Treasury, HM Customs and HM Inland Revenue have produced 13 final RIAs in this period: Implementation of the E-Commerce Directive; Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 Administration Orders Relating to Insurers Order 2002 ("the Order"); Implementation of the electronic money directive; National Insurance Contributions Bill; Fuel Scale Charge; Reform of Intangible Assets; Construction Industry Scheme; R&D Tax Credits for large companies/ vaccines research relief; Exemptions for gains and losses on substantial shareholdings; Reform of the Corporate Debt, Financial Instruments and Foreign Exchange gains and losses regimes; community amateur sports club; VAT: Introduction of a Flat Rate Scheme and Changes to the Annual Accounting Scheme and Oils Fraud Strategy. These are available in the House Libraries and are available on departmental websites.

National Insurance (Reduced Rate)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was paid in aggregate in national insurance contributions by married women paying at the reduced rate in each of the last 30 years. [65744]

Dawn Primarolo: Available estimates of the amount of reduced rate contributions paid by married women over the last 27 years are in the table.

	Contributions paid by women paying at the reduced rate (£ million)
1975–76	90
1976–77	100

2001–02	25

Estimates for 1975–76 to 2000–01 are based on a 3 per cent. sample of the National Insurance Recording System and are rounded to the nearest £10 million.The estimate for 2001–02 was provided by the Government Actuary's Department and has been rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Recycled Paper

Sue Doughty: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of (a) paper and (b) other goods purchased by his Department was recycled paper in each year since 1997; what the annual total cost of these purchases was; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65769]

Ruth Kelly: The Treasury in all cases purchases on a best value for money basis. Until recently the cost and quality of recycled paper did not provide this compared to virgin paper from sustainable sources and therefore only limited amounts were purchased.

Recycled paper appears to have improved in both quality and price. It is now the intention of the Department to look again at this issue. If recycled paper currently offers best value for money overall, Treasury will purchase this as the main source of its paper.

Asthma

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many deaths due to asthma occurred in each primary care trust in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [66264]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Ms Brooke, dated 3 July 2002:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your question on how many deaths due to asthma occurred in each Primary Care Trust (PCT) in each of the last three years. (66264)

PCTs took over the responsibilities of Health Authorities on 1st April 2002, but the geographical definition of all PCT areas has not yet been completed. Mortality statistics for PCT areas are not available at present. The figures requested are available for Health Authorities, the three most recent years being 1998–2000, and these have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arms Exports

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her Department's policy was towards arms sales to (a) Pakistan and (b) India between December 2001 and June 2002. [65436]

Nigel Griffiths: I refer the hon. Member to the statements made by my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 15 March 2002, Official Report, columns 1296–98W and by my noble Friend the Lord Sainsbury of Turville in another place on 28 May 2002, Official Report, House of Lords, columns 1147–49.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has held since December 2001 with the Secretary of State for Defence regarding arms export licence grants to (a) India and (b) Pakistan. [65443]

Nigel Griffiths: I refer to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 2 July 2002, Official Report, column 230W.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received regarding her Department's arms export application process and legal criteria for such exports to (a) India and (b) Pakistan in each month from December 2001 to June 2002. [65434]

Nigel Griffiths: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, the Department's Export Control Organisation and I have received representations regarding arms exports to India and Pakistan from a number of different sources, including Members of Parliament, exporters and the general public.

The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Green Minister

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who her Department's Green Minister is; when they (a) have attended and (b) plan to attend meetings of the Green Ministers' Committee; what the outcomes of meetings were for her Department's activities; and if she will make a statement. [65988]

Mr. Wilson: I am DTI's Green Minister.

Following the General Election in June 2001, the previously informal Green Ministers Committee was upgraded to a Cabinet Sub-Committee of ENV, and it is established practice under exemption two of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees.

LPG Fuel

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to widen the availability of LPG fuel for motor vehicles. [65250]

Mr. Wilson: At the opening of the 1,000th LPG filling station in February this year I announced LPG Boost, a £1 million DTI funded programme over two years to boost the uptake of LPG as a vehicular fuel. This programme (in conjunction with DTLR funded PowerShift) is aimed at increasing awareness of LPG in rural areas and encouraging local specialist conversion workshops. I will be making a further announcement shortly.

Military Equipment (Licences)

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what licences have been granted in each of the last five years for equipment on the military list to (a) African countries, (b) Bolivia, (c) Guyana, (d) Honduras, (e) Nicaragua, (f) Laos, (g) Vietnam, (h) Myanmar and (i) Yemen, in receipt of aid; what equipment is covered under these licences; and if she will make a statement. [65258]

Nigel Griffiths: Details of all export licences for items on the military list issued since 2 May 1997 are published by destination in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls. Copies of the 1997, 1998, 1999 and 2000 Annual Reports are available in the Libraries of the House. The 2001 Annual Report will be published soon.

In addition, items on the military list might have been exported under certain Open General Export Licences; copies of all Open General Export Licences are also placed in the Libraries of the House.

Housing Associations

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to change insolvency rules covering housing associations. [63949]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Enterprise Bill proposes changes to insolvency regulation, which will affect housing associations to the extent that they fall within its scope.

However, as announced by my noble Friend yesterday during the second reading of the Enterprise Bill, we will be bringing forward express exclusions to ensure that the provisions of the Bill will not extend to registered social landlords.

Postal Services

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the (a) statutory and (b) commercial status of Royal Mail; and to which (i) Ministers and (ii) other persons it will be accountable. [65072]

Mr. Timms: Consignia Holdings plc is a company formed and registered under the Companies Act 1985. The shares in the company are owned by the Government. On 26 March 2001, all the property, rights and liabilities of the Post Office were transferred to this company. Consignia Holdings has one wholly owned subsidiary, Consignia plc, which is also a company formed and registered under the Companies Act 1985. This subsidiary is licensed to provide a universal postal service in the UK.

Under the Government's reform of postal services, Consignia Holdings plc and its subsidiary have been given greater commercial freedom than that enjoyed by the Post Office. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry holds a special share in Consignia Holdings plc and the Memorandum and Articles of Association sets out the areas where the special shareholder's consent is required by the company.

As a public limited company, Consignia Holdings plc is accountable to its shareholders. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (49,999 shares) and the Treasury Solicitor (as nominee of the Treasury) (1 share).

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what limit of (a) value and (b) weight is set for Consignia's monopoly status; for how long this status extends and under which legal provision; what recent discussions she has had concerning the move to unregulated and competitive postal services; when the change to open competition will take place; and under what statutory requirements. [65073]

Mr. Timms: Under the Postal Services Act (2000), the Postal Services Commission (known as Postcomm) was created, as an independent regulatory authority for the licensing of postal services. Postcomm administers a licensed area, broadly equivalent to the former Post Office statutory monopoly for letters weighing less than 350g and costing less than £1. In March 2001, Postcomm granted Consignia a licence to provide services in the licensed area.

Under the Act, it is for Postcomm to further the interests of users of postal services, wherever appropriate by promoting effective competition between postal operators, subject to its primary responsibility to ensure the provision of a universal postal service at a uniform tariff. Under its statutory powers Postcomm may introduce competition by issuing licenses or by recommending "further exemptions" or reductions to the licensed area.

In April 2001, Postcomm initially established an interim licensing policy pending a wideranging consultation exercise on how to introduce competition into the market. Postcomm has issued 10 other licences for niche services under this policy. Following the conclusion of its consultation Postcomm announced its decision on competition on 29 May 2002. The effect of that decision is to extend Postcomm's licensing policy to open the postal market to competition in three stages over four years. The first stage to open one third of the market will take effect from January 2003 with increased opportunities for competition in the licensed area and progression to full market opening by 1 April 2007.

Consignia

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions the Government have had with Consignia in relation to keeping open rural post offices. [66638]

Mr. Timms: The Government are committed to the maintenance of a nationwide network of post offices and placed a formal requirement on the Post Office in November 2000 to maintain the network and to prevent any avoidable closures of rural post offices. We are in regular contact with Post Office Limited about a range of issues relating to the future of the network.

The Government have invested £480 million in a modernisation programme to computerise the whole of the post office network. We have made available a £2 million fund to support volunteer and community initiatives to maintain or re-open post office facilities in rural areas where traditional services would otherwise close. Figures for end May 2002 showed that 64 applications—to a value of £500,000—had been assessed and approved and to that date payments of £231,000 had also been made.

In addition, we have received advice from the Postal Services Commission on transitional financial assistance for the rural network and proposals are being developed in the context of that advice.

Post Offices

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which post offices in the Spelthorne constituency Consignia is planning to close. [66494]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The programme to restructure the urban post office network has not yet started and I am advised by Post Office Limited that, until it does, there are no specific plans for post office closures in the Spelthorne constituency. When the programme starts it will be taken forward in consultation with individual subpostmasters, the community, local stakeholders and Postwatch. Under the Code of Practice, Post Office Limited is required to consult Postwatch on individual changes and is briefing it on the process envisaged for reaching decisions.

The objective of the urban network restructuring programme is to provide modernised and improved facilities which meet customers' needs and expectations and are in the right location for the local community.

Public Houses (Drink Measurement)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on her policy towards full pints of beer being served in pubs. [66522]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: In March the Department issued a consultation paper on revised proposals to tighten consumer protection against short measure draught beer and cider. The period for submitting comments on the proposals ended on 1 July and a statement will be made in due course.

Post Office Closures

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the post offices in the (a) Epsom and Ewell constituency and (b) United Kingdom which Consignia is proposing to close. [65703]

Mr. Timms: I am advised by Post Office Limited that no such lists exist. The programme to restructure the urban post office network has not yet started. When it does it will be taken forward in consultation with individual sub-postmasters, the community, local stakeholders and Postwatch. Under the Code of Practice, Post Office Limited is required to consult Postwatch on individual changes and is briefing it on the process envisaged for reaching decisions.

The objective of the urban network restructuring programme is to provide modernised and improved facilities which meet customers' needs and expectations and are in the right location for the local community.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what provision has been made for the evacuation of Mersea Island in the event of an emergency at Bradwell Power Station; and what estimate has been made about how long this would take. [64959]

Mr. Wilson: As with all UK civil nuclear sites, well developed and regularly tested arrangements for responding to an emergency at Bradwell Power Station are in place as part of the licensing requirements imposed by HSE's nuclear installations inspectorate. Detailed emergency plans are prepared for an area within the 2.4 km detailed emergency planning zone for Bradwell. Mersea Island is outside the detailed emergency planning zone for Bradwell; the boundary of this zone is defined in relation to the most significant release of radiation from an accident which can be seen through reasonably foreseeable scenarios and is derived from the safety case established for the site. Beyond this, plans must be capable of being extended to deal with larger, less likely events. This principle of extendibility is an important part of civil nuclear emergency response arrangements. Use is made of the general plans prepared by the police, local authority and other agencies for a wide range of events. These do not provide for the detailed estimation of evacuation times which would need to take into account the circumstances at the time: ie time of day, prevailing weather conditions and the state of the tide.

Bradwell Power Station ceased generating electricity on 31 March 2002 and will be decommissioned over the next few years. This process will reduce the radiological hazard.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the Government's policy is on the closure of nuclear power stations; and if they will pay for the disposal of nuclear waste from nuclear power stations. [66097]

Mr. Wilson: The operation of a nuclear power station is a matter for the relevant operator, subject to meeting the necessary regulatory requirements. The Government have already announced that, through the proposed Liabilities Management Authority, it will take on direct financial responsibility for the decommissioning and clean-up of BNFL's Magnox stations. Financial responsibility for the decommissioning of private sector nuclear power stations and the management of spent fuel and all associated wastes and materials is a matter for the operator concerned.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, when the liabilities of a nuclear power station exceed its assets, the Government will allow it to continue in business. [66102]

Mr. Wilson: If the liabilities of any company exceed its assets, it is a matter for the directors of that company to decide whether the company should continue trading. In addition, in the case of a nuclear power company operating on sites licensed under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965, the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate would continue to monitor closely the company's activities to ensure it continued to maintain its safety performance.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the Government's policy regarding building new nuclear power stations. [66105]

Mr. Wilson: In common with all generation options, the initiative for bringing forward proposals to construct new plant lies with the market and the generating companies. British Energy and BNFL have said they have no current plans for such proposals.

Office for Civil Nuclear Security

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry at which sites her Office for Civil Nuclear Security and HM Nuclear Installations Inspectorate have jointly conducted audits of plant security; and on what dates, involving how many personnel the audits were conducted. [63844]

Mr. Wilson: The Office for Civil Nuclear Security (OCNS), the independent security regulator and HSE's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII), the safety regulator have a close working relationship and undertook an immediate joint review of security and safety issues of all UK civil nuclear sites in the light of the terrorist attacks in the United States last September. In the light of that review, sites were visited either jointly or by the relevant Regulator depending on the functions of the site concerned, its complexity, and other relevant factors. Since 11 September inspectors from both regulatory bodies have undertaken joint reviews at Capenhurst, Dounreay, Sellafield and Springfields.

Liabilities Management

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the work of the Liabilities Management Authority. [66103]

Mr. Wilson: The Government's plans for the LMA will be set out in a White Paper to be published shortly.

BNFL

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the transfer of BNFL assets to LMA. [66104]

Mr. Wilson: The Government's plans for the transfer of BNFL's assets to LMA will be set out in a White Paper to be published shortly.

Draft Takeovers Directive

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals the Government have for the European Union Takeovers Directive; if she will make a statement on the current state of the draft Takeovers Directive; and if she will make a statement. [65712]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government are presently awaiting a new proposal from the European Commission.

Cefn Croes Wind Farm

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will place in the Library (a) reports and (b) advice she received relating to the Cefn Croes wind farm application in Ceredigion. [65515]

Mr. Wilson: The advice of the National Assembly for Wales has already been placed in the Libraries of the House. Under Exemption 2—internal discussion and advice—of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, I do not intend to publish the advice from the DTI officials to Ministers.

Renewable Energy Investment

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the promised £260 million in renewable energy investment has been made; to which projects it has been allocated; and how much electricity is expected to be produced by the projects by 2010. [65115]

Mr. Wilson: £260 million has been allocated to the following projects:

£55.5 million per annum for research and development
£74 million for Offshore Wind Capital Grants
£81.5 million for Bioenergy Capital Grants
£20 million for Photovoltaics
£10 million for Community and Household Capital Grants
£2.5 million for Planning Facilitation work
£10 million for Blue Skies Research
£5 million for Wave and Tidal development
£4 million for Net Metering, Storage and Control Technologies
£6 million for Photovoltaic Field Trials.

Of these projects, all are up and running except the Community and Household Capital Grants Scheme, which is in the design stage. It is expected that we will spend this year's £19 million on research and development and approximately £10 million on capital grants.

Most of the programmes are intended to support research, development and pre-commercial demonstration of renewable technologies. Only the Offshore Wind and Bioenergy Capital Grants programmes are expected to contribute to the 2010 target. These programmes will result in approximately 1,300 megawatts of capacity or 1.5 per cent. of electricity supply.

Copyright

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will review the laws of copyright, with special reference to (a) the position in North America, (b) the implications of the new EU directive and (c) the impact of the internet; and if she will make a statement. [65593]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 1 July 2002]: UK copyright law (the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988) has proved remarkably "future-proof" as regards the challenges of the internet and electronic commerce but some modifications will be needed to implement EU Directive 2001/29/EC on copyright and related rights in the information society. The directive is required to be transposed into national laws by 22 December 2002. There will be consultation as part of the process with interested parties.

Domestic Subsidies

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to her answer of 26 February 2002, Official Report, column 1128W, on domestic subsidies, by what date after the final date for the conclusions of negotiations her Department estimates export and trade distorting domestic subsidies will be phased out. [63429]

Mr. Morley: It is as yet too early in the WTO negotiations to forecast the likely scale and timing of reductions in these subsidies. The Government will continue to press for full and prompt implementation of the commitments made at Doha.

United Kingdom Petrol Stations

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many United Kingdom petrol stations are exempt from vapour recovery regulations by way of annual turnover falling below the exemption limit. [65247]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

In accordance with Directive 94/63/EC Stage I, petrol vapour recovery has been rolled out in the UK over the past seven years. The final stage in the implementation of the Directive is 31 December 2004. The controls will then apply to all petrol stations in the UK with an annual throughput greater than 100m^3. In 1998 it was estimated that this derogation would exempt approximately 136 sites in the UK. However, the total number of petrol stations in the UK since 1998 has decreased, from 13,758 to 13,043 in 2000. As petrol station closures often have a disproportionate impact on the smaller sites, it is likely that the number of petrol stations covered by the derogation has decreased since the data were gathered.

The directive also contains an option for member states to exempt larger sites, those with an annual throughput of less than 500m^3, if located in an area where vapour emissions are unlikely to contribute significantly to environmental or health problems. My Department and the devolved Administrations are currently looking at applying the derogation in the UK.

TRANSPORT

Railtrack

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when previous network management statements were published by Railtrack; [60649]

(2) what (a) statutory responsibility and (b) other responsibility Railtrack has to produce a network management statement. [60648]

Mr. Darling: Under condition 7 of its network licence as amended in September 1997, Railtrack is required to prepare and publish on or before 31 March in each year—or such other date as the Rail Regulator may specify—a statement detailing its plans for the maintenance, renewal and development of the network in Great Britain.

Entertainment Costs

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the cost was of the Department's 2001 staff Christmas Party; and how many people attended. [illegible]1664]

Mr. Jamieson: The former Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions held no departmental Christmas party.

Rail Franchises

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been spent by (a) his Department and (b) the Strategic Rail Authority in relation to (i) the re-letting of Chiltern railways franchise, (ii) the GNER Franchise Extension, (iii) the Island Line extension, (iv) the Midland Mainline Extension, (v) other franchise re-negotiations and (vi) all franchise renegotiations and extensions; and if he will make a statement. [64144]

Mr. Jamieson: The total so far spent by the Strategic Rail Authority on franchise renegotiations and extensions is approximately £10 million. A breakdown of that figure is not readily available.

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the EU directives relating to his Department which have been (a) amended and (b) repealed in 2002. [64946]

Mr. Jamieson: The following EU Directives have been amended:

"96/49/EC"—Directive on the approximation of the laws of member states with regard to the transport of dangerous goods by rail [Amended by Directive 2001/6/EC]

"94/55/EC"—Directive on the approximation of the laws of member states with regard to the transport of dangerous goods by road [Amended by Directive 2001/7/EC]

"96/96/EC"—Directive on the approximation of the laws of member states relating to roadworthiness tests for motor vehicles and their trailers. [Amended by Directive 2001/9/EC]

"96/98/EC"—Directive on Marine Equipment [Amended by Directive 2001/53/EC]

"97/68/EC"—Directive on the approximation of measures against the emission of gaseous and particulate pollutants from internal combustion engines to be installed in non-road mobile machinery. [Amended by Directive 2001/63/EC].

No EU Directives have been repealed.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the EU directives and regulations that have been implemented through his Department in 2002; and what was the cost of each to public funds. [64972]

Mr. Jamieson: The following Directives have been transposed, in full or in part, this year:

96/48—Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on the interoperability of the trans-European rail system.

2000/30—Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on technical roadside inspection of the roadworthiness of commercial vehicles circulating in the Community.

2000/39—Commission Directive 2000/39/EC of 8 June 2000 establishing a first list of indicative occupational exposure limit values in the implementation of Council Directive 98/24/EC on the protection of the health and safety of workers from the risks related to chemical agents at work.

2001/6—Directive 2001/6/EC of 29 January 2001, adapting for the third time to technical progress Council Directive 96/49/EC on the approximation of the laws of the member states with regard to transportation of dangerous goods by rail.

2001/7—Commission Directive 2001/7/EC of 29 January 2001 adapting for the third time to technical progress Council Directive 94/55/EC on the approximation of the laws of the member states with regard to transportation of dangerous goods by road.

2001/09—Commission Directive 2001/9/EC adapting to technical progress Commission Directive 96/96/EC on the approximation of the laws of member states relating to roadworthiness tests for motor vehicles and their trailers.

2001/53—Commission Directive 2001/531/EC amending Directive 96/98/EC on marine equipment.

2001/63—Commission Directive 2001/63/EC adapting to technical progress Directive 97/68/EC of the Parliament and of the Council on the approximation of measures against the emission of gaseous and particulate pollutants from internal combustion engines to be installed in non-road mobile machinery.

We have no central record of domestic legislation made in support of EU Regulations. Such information could be assembled only at disproportionate cost. Similarly, information about the costs of implementation is not readily available.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people are employed in his Department (a) full-time and (b) part-time to (i) monitor and (ii) liaise on European Directives; and if he will make a statement. [66314]

Mr. Jamieson: A number of areas of the Department are engaged at different times in monitoring and liaison of EU Directives. The number of staff involved therefore varies considerably, as does the amount of time individuals spend on EU business. One division of the Department, at present comprising 22 posts, is responsible for overall advice on European and international business.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many statutory instruments have been (a) introduced, (b) removed and (c) amended by his Department since 1 January; and what the (i) cost and (ii) saving has been in each case. [64635]

Mr. Jamieson: In the period from 1 January 2002 to 31 May 2002, my Department's predecessor (the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions) was responsible for making 80 general statutory instruments. A list identifying these has been placed in the Libraries of the House. Endorsed on each instrument is an Explanatory Note, which identifies any legislation revoked or amended by the instrument. The remainder of the information requested is not held centrally in a form which would enable it to be provided by my Department without incurring disproportionate costs.

Cycle Lanes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the average cost is of the provision is of a mile of a cycle lane. [65051]

Mr. Jamieson: Average costs are not available, but since cycle lanes use the existing carriageway of a road and are identified by markings and signs, costs are not high. The limitation in providing more cycle lanes on the carriageway will often be lack of sufficient road space to accommodate them.

Rail Accident Investigation

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what work has been conducted under HSE supervision for (a) Railtrack, (b) British Transport Police and (c) other rail industry companies and bodies in relation to accident investigation into the (i) Hatfield rail crash, (ii) Ladbroke Grove rail crash and (iii) Potter's Bar rail crash; who the contractor was in each case; what the nature of the work was; and if he will make a statement. [65368]

Mr. Jamieson: In addition to work undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive's (HSE) internal laboratory, HSE commissioned the following work from external contractors:

Contractor	Research
(i) Hatfield
Trimac Ltd.	Specialist Photographic Support
AEA Technology Rail	Assistance with investigation including on-site derailment investigation, track profile measurements and examination of vehicles.
AEA Consultancy	Advice on non-destructive testing.
Serco Rail-test	Practical non-destructive testing of rails.
Sheffield Testing Labs	Chemical analysis of steel samples. Machine and tensile test of rails.
(ii) Ladbroke Grove
Grant Fire Consultants	Review of existing fire standards and a review of the literature in respect of the behaviour of fires on porous ground.
Interek Testing	Testing of gas/oil samples.
Forensic Science Services	Paint analysis.
Astra Zeneca	Auto ignition temperature test of samples of gas/oil.
University of Sheffield	ICP analysis.
Garvic Development	Design advice related to fuel tank impact test.
IC Consultants	Technical support in respect of the failure of fuel tanks and of the collision dynamics.
(iii) Potters Bar
AEA Technology Rail	Assistance with investigations.

This information relates to the principal contractors only. A complete list of all the contractors involved could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Live Firing Exercises (Aircraft Activities)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport at what (a) height, (b) latitude and (c) longitude the KLM Fokker 70 aircraft was flying on 19 June when the MoD ordered a ceasefire during a live firing exercise on Salisbury Plain below it; and if he will make a statement. [65197]

Mr. Jamieson: I am advised by National Air Traffic Services (NATS) that the KLM Fokker 70 aircraft, en route from Amsterdam to Bristol on 19 June, was at a height of 17,000 feet, and was at latitude 51° 17' north and longitude 001° 51' west when the incident occurred. NATS has assured us that at no time was safety compromised or the aircraft in danger. Nevertheless, NATS are carrying out a full investigation into the incident as are the Civil Aviation Authority, the Government's safety regulator, in order to establish what happened and what lessons may be learned for the future.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport at what time on 19 June National Air Traffic Services at Swanwick was first informed that a KLM Fokker 70 aircraft flying from Amsterdam to Bristol was passing over a live Army artillery exercise on Salisbury Plain; and what action they took. [65198]

Mr. Jamieson: The incident occurred at 10:30 hrs BST on 19 June. The Fokker 70 was detected by the MOD's Boscombe radar. On detection, Boscombe immediately invoked the Clear Range Procedure to ensure that activity in the Danger Area ceased before the aircraft penetrated the airspace, and informed NATS. As the aircraft was approaching its Bristol destination, and firing in the Danger Areas had been suspended, NATS permitted the aircraft to complete its journey. NATS subsequently initiated a full investigation into the incident which is also being examined by the CAA.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what procedures are in place to ensure that National Air Traffic Services are informed of (a) military flying exercises and (b) artillery firing exercises in the vicinity of Salisbury Plain. [65195]

Mr. Jamieson: Civil/military co-ordination is well established in the UK: major military flying and artillery firing exercises at Army ranges such as those on the Salisbury Plain are pre-planned with involvement from National Air Traffic Services. Such exercises are notified to airspace users by means of Airspace Co-ordination Notices issued by the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA). The CAA also convey information about the activation of Danger Areas through the issue of British Islands Daily Nav Warnings. The two particular Danger Areas penetrated by the KLM Fokker 70 are active 24 hours a day and hence no notice of activation would be required. All Danger Areas are promulgated in the UK Aeronautical Information Publication and are shown on the aeronautical charts.

Departmental Waste

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of waste produced in his Department was (a) recycled, (b) composted and (c) re-used, broken down into (i) paper, (ii) plastics, (iii) aluminium cans and (iv) other in each year since 1997; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65692]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department was formed on 29 May. Prior to 1999–2000, waste data were only available for DTLR headquarters and some other main sites. More comprehensive data have been available since.

	Percentage recycled
1998–99	—
1999–2000	44
2001–02	51

Our policy aim is to achieve 70 per cent. rate of recovery or recycling by 2003–04.

Detailed information on waste streams is not available for the Department as a whole.

Recycling

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of (a) paper and (b) other goods purchased by his Department was recycled paper in each year since 1997; what the annual total cost of these purchases was; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65763]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department was formed on 29 May. Our policy is to buy recycled paper for all work not requiring specialist papers. The proportion of paper bought by DTLR that met the policy in respect of recycled content was:

	Percentage recycled
1998–99	50
1999–2000	52
2000–01	85
2001–02	94

Information on other recycled goods and cost is not available.

Press Releases

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what occasions press releases have been released on behalf of the Department by the Government offices for the regions since 7 June 2001; and if he will place copies of these in the Library. [66319]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government offices for the regions do not issue press releases on behalf of the Department for Transport, or previously for the former Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions.

European Transport White Paper

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with (a) European Commissioners and (b) the European Parliament on the European transport White Paper; and if he will make a statement. [66313]

Mr. Jamieson: The European Commission published its European transport policy White Paper in September 2001. The White Paper itself has no legislative or executive force at this stage, but it indicates areas where the Commission intends to initiate action over the next few years.

There have been discussions on this White Paper at the Transport Council on several occasions, but neither I nor other departmental Ministers have had specific discussions with the European Commission or the European Parliament.

Multi-modal Studies

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he will expedite the implementation of the findings of the 21 multi-modal studies set out in the 10-year transport plan to ensure that the infrastructure improvements identified therein are operational by 2010. [66009]

Mr. Jamieson: The multi-modal studies are developing strategies which go well beyond 2010. We will consider the recommendations of each study and agree an integrated programme of measures to be taken forward by the Highways Agency, Strategic Rail Authorities and local authorities.

Track Bed Maintenance

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent changes have been made to the (a) practice and (b) regularity of track bed maintenance on the railways; and if he will make a statement. [66309]

Mr. Jamieson: This is an operational matter for Railtrack. However, I understand from Railtrack that there have been no recent changes.

Variable Speed Limits

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what (a) guidance has been given by his Department to (i) the Highways Agency and (ii) local authorities and (b) legislation is in place covering variable speed limits; and if he will make a statement. [66007]

Mr. Jamieson: Section 84 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 as amended by section 45 of the Road Traffic Act 1991 provides for local authorities to create variable speed limits.

Similarly, sections 17(2) and (3) of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 provides for the Highways Agency to create variable speed limits on special roads.

Guidance on variable speed limits is contained in Circular Roads 2–92.

EU Public Service Requirements Regulation

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the European Commission on the EU Public Service Requirements Regulation; and if he will make a statement. [66315]

Mr. Jamieson: In July 2000 the European Commission published a proposal for a regulation concerning public service requirements and the award of public service contracts in passenger transport by rail, road and inland waterway. An amended proposal was published in February 2002. This proposal is intended to stimulate more efficient and attractive public transport through the use of regulated competition and other measures and to promote legal certainty for authorities and operators.

There have been discussions at, and progress reports to, the Transport Council on several occasions, but neither I nor other departmental Ministers have had specific discussions with the European Commission regarding this proposal.

Road Deterioration

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he will put in place to ensure that local authorities (a) halt the deterioration of the local road network by 2004 and (b) eliminate the backlog by 2010. [66011]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government are providing over £30 billion for local road maintenance over the period of the 10-year Transport Plan, an extra £9 billion (23 per cent. in real terms) above the funding levels in the previous 10 years.

Local authority road condition is monitored annually by Best Value Performance Indicators. DfT is also working with local authorities to develop more efficient management systems for carriageways, bridges and street lighting.

Road Pricing

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to implement road pricing in south-east England following the recent publication of the London Orbital multi-modal study. [66057]

Mr. Jamieson: There are no plans to do so.

Rural Transport

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what support for (a) rural transport partnerships and (b) community based projects in rural areas he has given in the last two years; and if he will make a statement; [66569]

(2) what support he has given to flexible transport in rural communities; and if he will make a statement. [66568]

Mr. Jamieson: Specific funding for flexible transport services in rural areas, such as demand responsive buses, dial-a-ride schemes and shared taxis, is available through my Department's Rural Bus Challenge and the Countryside Agency's Rural Transport Partnership and Parish Transport Fund programmes. The Rural White Paper published in November 2000 announced that £60 million, £32 million, and £15 million would be made available for these three programmes respectively over the period 2001–02 to 2003–04. Local authorities can also use their revenue support grant to fund flexible transport services.

Total spending on rural transport partnerships and other community-based transport projects in rural areas through the Rural Bus Challenge and Rural Transport Partnership programme in the last two financial years are as follows.

£ million

	Rural bus challenge	Rural transport partnership
2000–01	6.17	4.80
2001–02	11.03	6.96

The 2000–01 rural transport partnership figure includes funding for the Countryside Agency's rural transport development fund, which merged with its rural transport partnership programme in April 2001.

London Underground

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) for what reason a 95 per cent. public sector guarantee was given to the London Underground PPP; who will finance this guarantee, if invoked; and whether the guarantee consitutes a form of state aid to the PPP; [65487]

(2) what risk transfer to the public sector has occurred over the period of negotiations on the London Underground PPP; and for what proportion of responsibility for debt (a) the public sector and (b) the contractors are liable. [65483]

Mr. Jamieson: Negotiation of the contracts is a matter for London Underground. However, in general, it is common for the terms of a contract to change as a result of negotiation. Office of Government Commerce guidance states that the principle governing risk transfer is not to transfer all possible risks, but rather to allocate risk to whomever from the public or private sector is able to manage it at least cost. London Transport has sought to act in line with this guidance in the course of its negotiations with bidders for the London Underground PPPs.

I understand the contracts provide that, in certain circumstances where a private sector infrastructure company persistently breaches the contract and no alternative contractor can be found, London Underground can take control of the infrastructure company at a price that allows for 95 per cent. of approved third-party bank and bond debt to be repaid. None of the finance provided by the shareholders would be repaid. London Transport considers these contract provisions to be in line with its aim of optimising value for money overall, balancing the cost of raising finance against the need to provide the private sector with a strong incentive to meet contractual obligations to improve performance. London Underground's obligations under the PPP contracts will initially be backed by a guarantee from London Regional Transport. It is the Government's intention to transfer London Underground to Transport for London in line with the provisions of the GLA Act 1999, and London Regional Transport's guarantee will be transferred to Transport for London at the same time.

The Secretary of State also intends to issue a letter of comfort in relation to the London Underground PPPs. This is intended to clarify his role in relation to the Greater London Authority and Transport for London, including his intentions towards providing funding in respect of London Underground. This letter of comfort was reported to Parliament using the Minute procedure on 20 March 2002.

Whether these arrangements constitute state aid is a matter for the European Commission in the context of the Government's notification to the Commission on 12 April.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what estimate he has made of the public subsidy which will be necessary each year to fund the improvements made to the London Underground under the PPP; [65495]

(2) what estimate he has made of the shortfall over the first seven-and-a-half years of the London Underground PPP contract; and how this funding gap is to be met. [65481]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government will ensure that London Underground has sustained and secured funding to meet its contractual obligations to the infrastructure companies for delivering the massive increase in investment expected under the tube modernisation plans. I refer the hon. Member to the proposed letter of comfort that was reported to Parliament using the Minute procedure on 20 March 2002.

National Air Traffic Control Services

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the losses to British airlines and businesses caused by failures of the computer system at the new National Air Traffic Control Services. [64560]

Mr. Jamieson: No such estimate has been made of the losses caused to airlines and other businesses.

There have been three failures of computer systems at NATS' Air Traffic Control Centres this year. Two have occurred to the Flight Data Processing System at West Drayton and one was attributable to a faulty work station at the new centre at Swanwick.

A number of immediate actions have been taken, including a successful upgrade to the software in the system at West Drayton. NATS are confident that the problems that have caused these three system failures have been addressed.

Electoral Registration

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, Local Government and the Regions what plans he has to amend electoral registration forms issued by electoral registration officers to ensure that voters are informed that the details they provide may be recorded on police computers and other public sector databases. [59170]

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, Local Government and the Regions if he will make a statement about the impact of wider statutory disclosures of name and address details from the electoral roll on the willingness of individuals from (a) ethnic, (b) religious and (c) other minority groupings to register for the vote. [59171]

Yvette Cooper: I have been asked to reply.

The Government published on 13 May a policy paper and draft regulations on access to, and sale and supply of, electoral registers which proposes to restrict, rather than widen, such access, sale and supply. The draft regulations include a new specimen registration form and guidance notes which clearly state who may receive copies of the electoral registers and the purposes for which the information obtained will be used. The Regulations were laid on 27 June 2002. In addition, I understand The Electoral Commission intends to produce a leaflet explaining the effect of the regulations in more detail. It is important that all individuals are able to exercise their right to vote and can be reassured that appropriate procedures are in place to handle the information provided for registration.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Rio-Earth Summit (Implementation)

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps have been taken by the Government since the Rio Earth Summit in 1992 to (a) set goals on environmental protection and (b) improve eco-efficiency and resource productivity relating to sanitation issues; and what these (i) goals and (ii) improvements have been. [44365]

Mr. Meacher: The Government has set goals and secured improvements in the protection of the environment and the sustainable use of natural resources for both water supply and waste water disposal, both through international and European agreement and domestic regulatory requirements since 1992.

The measures under which this has been done include:

(i) the Drinking Water Directive, which sets minimum standards for the wholesomeness of drinking water supplies; this has been transposed into national legislation by the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 2000 which include some additional national standards;

(ii) The Environment Agency has published "Water Resources for the Future", which plans reductions in existing abstractions in England and wales of water totalling some 700Ml/day to reduce unsustainable abstraction by 2010;

(iii) the Urban Waste Water Treatment (England and Wales) Regulations 1994 set standards and deadlines for the treatment of sewage; I announced in March 1999 a further goal that all significant sewage discharges in England and Wales should receive at least secondary treatment by 2005; and

(iv) the Bathing Water Directive, under which a goal has been set for English beaches to achieve at least 97 per cent. compliance with the Directive's main mandatory standards by 2005.

Among the improvements achieved are:

(i) the level of compliance with standards in public drinking water supplies rose from 98.65 per cent. in 1992 to 99.83 per cent. in 2000;

(ii) in England, between 1990 and 2000, there has been a 10 per cent. increase in river lengths classified as good or fair chemical quality and an 8 per cent. increase in rivers of good or fair biological quality;

(iii) secondary treatment is now provided at 99 per cent. of sewage treatment works in England which serve population greater than 15,000; and

(iv) compliance with the Bathing Water Directive's main mandatory standards for beaches increased from 79 per cent. in 1992 to 98 per cent. in 2001.

Summary forward programmes of the measures required of water and sewerage companies to meet environmental and resource use goals in their operations and investment are set out once every five years in Ministers' guidance on the programmes of quality improvements for Ofwat's periodic review of water price limits. The guidance for the period 2000–05 was published in "Raising the Quality" in 1998.

Flood Defences

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 25 March, Official Report, column 728W, on flood defences, if she will make a statement on Article 33 of Council Regulation (EC) No 1257/99 of 17 May 1999 and its applicability to flood management in the UK. [51466]

Mr. Morley: The Rural Enterprise Scheme, which forms part of the England Rural Development Programme, implements rural development measures under Article 33 of Council Regulation 1257–99. That Article includes, among its 13 measures, scope for restoring agricultural production potential damaged by natural disasters (which could include some, not all, flood incidents) and introducing appropriate prevention measures.

Given the small scale of the EU Rural Development funds allocated to the UK, and the fact that the UK taxpayer would have to fund a significant proportion of the costs, careful targeting of the ERDP was necessary. The measures adopted under the Rural Enterprise Scheme reflect the range of regional priorities and targets identified following close consultation with statutory partners and stakeholders. They are wide-ranging in nature but also reflect the scheme's primary aim of helping farmers to adapt to changing markets and develop new business opportunities. The measure referred to above was not identified as a priority for support and therefore is not included in the scheme. The hon. Member will know from answers to previous questions, including that given to him on 15 November 2001, Official Report, columns 890–91W, the substantial investment in flood and costal defence made by the Government.

Correspondence

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many items of incoming mail (a) from hon. Members and (b) in total in each month since June 2001 have been (i) received, (ii) fully responded to, (iii) are held pending for response and (iv) are untraceable. [58116]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 21 May 2002]: The total number of letters received from hon. Members since June 2001 (as at 30 June 2002) stood at 11,393. We have responded in full to 9,609 letters and 1,784 letters are awaiting a response.

The breakdown by month of letters from hon. Members awaiting a response is:

Month	Received	Fully responded to	[illegible]nding a response
November 2001	846	770	76
December 2001	527	464	63
January 2002	1053	959	94
February 2002	1105	1011	94
March 2002	1377	1210	167
April 2002	1115	861	254
May 2002	1022	629	393
June 2002	737	94	643

Our database records details of all letters received from honourable Members. We are therefore unable to provide details of untraceable mail.

Providing similar information for all items of mail received in the department would only be available at disproportionate cost.

Tuna Fishing

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to ensure that fishing for tuna does not endanger the lives of other sea creatures. [60781]

Mr. Morley: During the United Kingdom's Presidency of the EU in 1998 we achieved the adoption of a ban on the use of drift nets in the tuna fishery. The ban came into effect on 1 January of this year. We look carefully at information relating to cetacean by catch in various fisheries. Research sponsored by DEFRA into the new designs of trawl nets to allow the escape of marine mammals may have benefits for the tuna trawl fishery in due course.

Departmental Grants

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which organisations which were in receipt of a grant from her in 1997–98 no longer are; what the annual saving is; which organisations which were not in receipt of a grant in 1997–98 now are; and what the annual cost is. [61394]

Mr. Morley: The aggregate figure for government grants to private organisations and individuals was £28.6 billion in 2000–01 (the last year for which full outturn data is available) compared with £24.8 billion in 1997–98. This includes Lottery grants, but excludes social security payments classified as grants in the national accounts.

The Department has only been in existence since June 2001, so does not have such historical information itself. Constructing it retrospectively would involve disproportionate cost.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much and what proportion of the departmental expenditure limit for 2002–03 had been spent by 31 May; what the figures were for 2001–02; and if she will make a statement. [61016]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 17 June 2002, Official Report, column 130W.

Staff Training

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much the Department has spent on staff training and development in each of the last five years. [61054]

Mr. Morley: Since the formation of this Department in June 2001 1.89 per cent. of annual running costs has been spent on staff training and development.

Ministerial Salaries

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the annual cost was of Ministerial salaries in her Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 2001–02. [60942]

Mr. Morley: The level of Ministerial salaries are recommended by the Senior Salaries Review Body. From May 1997, in this department there was 1 Cabinet Minister, at an annual salary of £43,991; 1 Minister of State, at an annual salary of £31,125; and 2 Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State, at an annual salary of £23,623 (Commons) and £43,632 (Lords). From June 2001, there was 1 Cabinet Minister, at an annual salary of £68,157; 2 Ministers of State, each at an annual salary of £35,356; and 2 Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State at an annual salary of £26,835 (Commons) and £60,961 (Lords).

Committee Mandates

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the mandate of the Advisory Committee on Livestock Products is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if she will list the items currently under its consideration; if she will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if she will make a statement. [61718]

Mr. Morley: The mandate of the Advisory Committee on Livestock Products is set out in Commission Decision 98/235/EC. The UK is not formally represented on the Committee; members are directly appointed by the Commission, drawn from across the EU, on the basis of their socioeconomic interests.

The Commission, together with member states, is currently conducting a review to bring existing legislation on the conduct of comitology committees into line with Council Decision 1999/468/EC, to 'simplify the requirements for the exercise of implementing powers conferred on the Commission'. As an obligation to this Decision, the Commission undertook to publish an annual report on the working of committees. The first report was deposited in the Libraries of both Houses on 26 February (Com (2001) 783 Final). As part of the review process, the UK Government has encouraged the Commission to produce and maintain an electronic database of every comitology committee, its agendas and recent actions, to be available through its website.

Free Range Eggs

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action her Department is taking to promote the production of free range eggs in the United Kingdom. [62903]

Mr. Morley: The Department recognises the importance of free range egg systems both in terms of consumer demand and as part of a general policy on the welfare of laying hens. However, the department is not currently involved in any direct promotion of free range eggs.

Noise Forum

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action she intends to take on the conclusions contained in publications issued by the Government and on behalf of the Government which were distributed at the United Kingdom Noise Forum's inaugural conference held on 20 May; and if she will make a statement. [62571]

Mr. Meacher: The 'Noise Incidence Study' (NIS) and 'Noise Attitudes Survey' (NAS), are the latest in a time-series of data on the levels of noise, and people's perception of noise.

The key finding from NIS is that the average noise levels measured during the daytime and evening have decreased to some extent.

The environmental (road, rail and air traffic) noise issues identified within NIS and NAS, will be addressed during the development of the National Ambient Noise Strategy currently being developed. Moreover, the highlighted problem of neighbour noise will be jointly targeted with the planned amendments to the Noise Act 1996, which will make it easier for councils to use additional powers to control domestic noise, and with the 'Neighbour Noise Communications Plan'. This will involve the characterisation of both noisemakers and noise sufferers so that a hard-hitting publicity campaign can communicate both how to deal with noise nuisance, and how to avoid creating it.

Additionally, the 'Review of European Legislation and Practices (2002)', has identified a variety of enforcement and control measures that my officials will be exploring in more detail. These include:

Integration of local authority efforts—the Amsterdam example given in the report appears to offer benefits

Mediation—mediation in Norway is cited as a model service

Education—further research is recommended into the effectiveness of education programmes, particularly in schools.

Frozen Peas

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will take steps to support the frozen peas industry and pea producers in East Anglia; and if she will make a statement. [62270]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 17 June 2002]: The production and processing of peas are undertaken in response to market demand. I have no plans to provide specific support either to producers or to processors.

Recycling

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many applications the Environment Agency has received for further fixed plant recycling sites in the UK in 2002. [62635]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency has received applications from ten companies for licences for the recycling of refrigerators and freezers.

Other plant for general recycling operate at sites across the range of the waste industry, including landfill sites, scrap yards, transfer stations, composting sites and other treatment sites. It is not possible to readily identify which applications have a component in respect of recycling plant.

Wild Fauna and Flora

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) when the EU Committee for the protection of species of wild fauna and flora by regulating trade is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement; [64829]

(2) when the EU scientific review group for the protection of species of wild fauna and flora by regulating trade is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64884]

Mr. Meacher: The next meeting of the Committee on Trade in Wild Fauna and Flora is on 30 July 2002. The Scottish Executive is not represented on the Committee, or the related Scientific Review Group, as the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES) is not a devolved matter. The July meeting will focus on agreeing a common position on proposals for the next Conference of CITES Parties, which takes place in Santiago, Chile in November. We are currently seeking views from our overseas territories and other interested parties on the merits of these proposals.

The next Scientific Review Group meeting is on 5 September 2002. The UK is represented on the Committee by scientific advisers from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee (fauna) and the Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew (flora). The Scientific Review Group was set up to examine scientific questions relating to the implementation of CITES within the EU. The meeting in September is likely to focus on preparations for the next CITES Conference.

EU Management Committee

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Management Committees of the common organisations of agricultural markets for natural fibres is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members; and if she will make a statement. [63932]

Mr. Morley: The Management Committee for Natural Fibres assists the European Commission in the operation of the common organisation of the market in flax, hemp, cotton and silkworms. It has met seven times over the last 12 months. The date for the next meeting has not been fixed. UK representation depends on the agenda items under discussion. Officials from the Scottish Executive and other devolved administrations attend as necessary in accordance with their interests.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the adaptation to scientific and technical progress of the Directive on water intended for human consumption is next due to meet; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; and if she will make a statement. [63948]

Mr. Meacher: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. John Bercow) on 10 June 2002, Official Report, column 915W-16W.

The Committee established under Article 12 of the Drinking Water Directive 1998 expects to meet again in November. During the past 12 months the Committee met in November 2001 and in April 2002.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Joint Meetings of Management and/or Regulatory Committee in the field of agriculture-agrimonetary questions is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64897]

Mr. Morley: There are no meetings scheduled for the Agrimonetary Management Committee.

UK representation on the committee is led by DEFRA although members of the devolved administrations are entitled to attend. Members of the Scottish Executive have not attended past meetings.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Management Committee of the Common Organisations of Agricultural Markets for Live Plants and Floriculture Products is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64896]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to written answer given to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 10 June 2002, Official Report, column 913W.

There is no set schedule of meetings for the Management Committee for Live Plants and Floriculture Products. UK representation on this management committee depends on the agenda items under discussion. No representative of the Scottish Executive has attended.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee on the Conservation of Natural Habitats and of Wild Fauna and Flora (habitat) is next due to meet; what the UK representation is on it; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64828]

Mr. Meacher: The Habitats Committee last met on 14 March 2002, and at that meeting it was decided the committee would next meet at a date to be arranged in November 2002. UK representation ordinarily consists of an official from my Department together with a scientific adviser from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee. However, wider representation on the committee depends on the agenda items under discussion. Officials from the devolved administrations attend as necessary in accordance with their interests. Officials from the Scottish Executive have attended all recent Habitats Committee meetings.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Management Committee of the Common Organisations of Agricultural Markets for Oils and Fats is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64886]

Mr. Morley: The EU Management Committee for Oils and Fats is next due to meet on 5 July 2002. UK representation on this management committee depends on the agenda items under discussion. Officials from the Scottish Executive and other devolved administrations attend as necessary in accordance with their interests. However, no representative of the Scottish Executive has attended the Management Committee for Oils and Fats.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee on Certificates of Specific Character for Agricultural Products and Foodstuffs is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64892]

Mr. Morley: The date of the next EU Regulatory Committee on Certificates of Specific Character for Agricultural Produce and Foodstuffs is unknown at this stage.

UK representation varies according to the agenda for each meeting and may include members of the Scottish Executive and other devolved administrations where there are items of sufficient interest. If Scottish Executive colleagues do not attend, they work closely with DEFRA officials to ensure that Scottish interests are fully taken into account.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the Adaptation to Technical and Scientific Progress of the Directive on Conservation of Wild Birds is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64911]

Mr. Meacher: The ORNIS Committee (the Committee for the Adaptation to Technical and Scientific Progress of the Directive on Conservation of Wild Birds) last met on 14 June 2002. No date has yet been fixed for the next meeting. The committee consists of representatives of the EU member states. UK representation depends on the items under discussion, but usually includes an official from my Department together with a scientific adviser from the Joint Nature Conservation Committee.

Officials of my Department involve the devolved administrations as fully as possible in discussions about the formulation of the UK's policy position on all EU and international issues which touch on devolved matters. In this respect officials rom the devolved administrations attend relevant meetings of the ORNIS Committee, as necessary, to support and advance the UK negotiating line that they will have played a part in developing. Officials from the Scottish Executive attended the last two meetings of the ORNIS Committee on 15 June 2001 and 14 June 2002.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Management Committee of the Common Organisations of Agricultural Markets for Seeds is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64895]

Mr. Morley: No date has been fixed for the next meeting of the EU Management Committee for Seeds. The committee consists of representatives of the member states. UK representation depends upon the agenda for each meeting and can include members of the Scottish Executive and other devolved administrations where they consider that there are items of sufficient interest. The Scottish Executive has chosen not to attend this committee in recent years.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Management Committee of the common organisations of agricultural markets for products processed from fruit and vegetables is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64893]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow), on 10 June, Official Report, column 911–12W.

The next meeting of the Processed Fruit and Vegetables Management Committee is scheduled for 16 July 2002. UK representation on this Committee depends on the agenda items under discussion. No representative of the Scottish Executive has attended.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Management Committee of the common organisations of agricultural markets for pigmeat is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64887]

Mr. Morley: The EU Management Committee of the common organisation of agricultural markets for pigmeat is next due to meet on the 9 July 2002.

UK representation on the EU's Pigmeat Management Committee depends on the agenda items under discussion. Officials from the Scottish Executive and other devolved administrations attend as necessary in accordance with their interests.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Management Committee of the common organisations of agricultural markets for hops is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64894]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given to the hon. Member for Buckingham on 10 June 2002, Official Report, column 916W.

There is no set schedule of meetings for the Management Committee for Hops. UK representation on this Management Committee depends on the agenda items under discussion. No representative of the Scottish Executive has attended.

Fishing

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is on the devolution of greater control of fisheries management within the 12 mile limits of the UK to the UK Government, the Scottish Parliament and the Northern Ireland Assembly. [64502]

Mr. Morley: The United Kingdom Government has devolved fisheries management within the whole of the Scottish Fisheries Zone to the Scottish Executive. The National Assembly of Wales has assumed responsibility for the territorial sea off Wales and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development is responsible for management of the territorial sea off Northern Ireland. In England the territorial sea remains the responsibility of Westminster. The 0–6 mile band off England and Wales continues to be managed by local authority Sea Fisheries Committees.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what her policy is on the Commission's proposal that there should be a 40 per cent. cut in the EU fishing fleet; [64538]

(2) if she will release the funds available from the EU for compensating UK fishermen when they are forced to reduce their effort through tie-ups and a reduction in days at sea. [64503]

Mr. Morley: We recognise that EU fleets are too large and that what is needed is a permanent reduction in tonnage. We therefore believe that where further cuts are needed, the priority must be to decommission vessels rather than to tie them up temporarily. If we return to present levels of fishing effort once stocks have recovered, we will simply recreate current problems of overfishing.

We have not yet however had the opportunity to question the Commission about the detail of their calculations. Nonetheless, they have made clear that they do not seek to impose cuts in fleet capacity on Member States. Their figures which detail fleet cuts by Member States are to be taken as purely illustrative. It will be for Member States to decide what measures to introduce in response to the decisions taken by the Council on reducing fishing effort. The scale of decommissioning will also depend on the decisions taken by fishermen in the light of the impact of these measures. Fisheries Departments in the UK have however already been running decommissioning schemes this year and we would want these taken account of in any necessary reductions which are ultimately agreed.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action she is taking to prevent the over-exploitation of fisheries in international waters and in the waters of third countries outside the EU where EU vessels are fishing. [64507]

Mr. Morley: We shall press for the EU to adopt a more sustainable and responsible approach to international fisheries as part of the reform of the common fisheries policy. In particular we shall be seeking improvements to the way the EU negotiates fishing agreements with third countries, in order to ensure the sustainable management of stocks.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action she intends to take to prevent the killing of dolphins and porpoises as a by-catch in UK waters. [64510]

Mr. Morley: Dolphin and porpoise by-catch around the UK occurs in waters where vessels from other member states fish extensively, so action is required at EU level to resolve the problem. This is why I have been pressing the Commission to take action on this issue, particularly now that observations we have commissioned have demonstrated a dolphin by-catch problem in the pair trawl fishery for bass off south-west England. I was pleased to see recently that the Commission proposals for the reform of the CFP refer to the introduction by the end of 2002 of measures to reduce cetacean by-catch. We shall be looking for positive action on this in the course of the reform negotiations: we also intend to continue funding trials of adaptations to fishing gear that could reduce dolphin and porpoise by-catch.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make it her policy that no public aid will be used for building new vessels and modernising existing ones other than in the case of safety improvements and quality production. [64504]

Mr. Morley: It is already Government policy that grants should not be paid for building new vessels or for modernisation that increases fishing effort. In the UK vessel grants are only paid for the adoption of sustainable catching methods and improvements to the quality of fish on board and working conditions.

EU Fisheries Scientific Research Centre

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether she expects the EU Fisheries Scientific Research Centre to be located within the UK. [64508]

Mr. Morley: The UK welcomes the importance placed on improving the quality of scientific advice for fisheries management in the Commission's recent communication on the reform of the common fisheries policy. In particular, we look forward to seeing the detailed action plan due to be published before the end of 2002. At this stage the proposal to develop a European Centre for Fisheries Assessment and Management is a long-term aim, one of many ideas to be explored during the course of the review. We feel confident, however, that the UK's fisheries scientists will continue to play a leading role in improving the quality of scientific advice available to fisheries managers.

EU Standing Forestry Committee

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Standing Forestry Committee is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64900]

Mr. Morley: The EU Standing Forestry Committee meets as and when business arises; the date of its next meeting has not been fixed as yet. The UK is represented on the committee by an official from the Forestry Commission, which reports to the forestry Ministers in England, Scotland and Wales.

EU Standing Committee on Agricultural Research

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Standing Committee on Agricultural Research is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64891]

Mr. Morley: The European Commission has not yet set a date for the next meeting of SCAR. Experts from the Scottish Executive have not attended recent meetings of SCAR (which have been relatively infrequent), though officials in DEFRA liaise with their Scottish counterparts. There is no bar to their attending as part of the UK delegation as their needs and interests arise.

Reservoirs

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the pending applications for reservoirs in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland, with the proposed nation to which the water will be supplied where different from the source; and if she will make a statement. [64710]

Mr. Meacher: In England and Wales, the Environment Agency is the statutory body with a duty to secure the proper use of water resources. The agency is not aware of any pending applications for new reservoirs in England or Wales. Nor are there any applications pending with the Scottish Executive, which presently has the same responsibility in Scotland.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what advice her Department is giving to local authorities about signing long-term contracts for waste disposal services during the period when her Department is reviewing its waste strategy; and if the advice warns against signing contracts which could prevent meeting (a) future recycling targets being developed as part of the Government's waste strategy review and (b) future targets being discussed in the European Union as part of the revision of the Packaging Directive. [63818]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 26 June 2002]: Government guidance on local authority waste targets and how they should plan to achieve them is set out in 'Guidance on Municipal Waste Management Strategies', published by DETR in March 2001. However, it is for local authorities to decide on the nature and timing of any waste disposal contracts. I would expect such contracts to be designed to provide sufficient flexibility to be able to take account of, and respond to, changed circumstances during the lifetime of the contracts, including any future statutory performance standards or new opportunities for increasing recycling and composting. The Government have issued no specific guidance on future targets in the context of the current review of its waste strategy or the revision of the Packaging Directive.

Trees

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps (a) have been taken and (b) are planned by her Department to increase the number of trees planted in the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement. [64786]

Mr. Morley: Forestry is a devolved matter. Our Forestry Strategy sets out our strategic priorities and programmes for forestry in England. Achieving a re-expansion of woodland cover is a key aim of that strategy, and is also one of our indicators of sustainable development.

We give grants for planting new woodland under the farm woodland premium scheme and the Forestry Commission's woodland grant scheme. We also provide support for new planting in the National Forest and the Community Forests. Over the seven year period of the England Rural Development Programme our target is to create 30,000 hectares of new woodland.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with Trees for London; and if she will make a statement. [64794]

Mr. Morley: I have not had any discussions with Trees for London.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what financial support for tree planting has been given by her Department in each year since 1997; and if she will make a statement. [64785]

Mr. Morley: Financial support for tree planting is made under the farm woodland premium scheme (FWPS) and its predecessor the farm woodland scheme (FWS); the Forestry Commission's woodland grant scheme (WGS); and the National Forest company (NFC) tender scheme.

Payments are as follows:

£ million

	FWPS/FWS	WGS	NFC
1997–98	4.726	8.985	1.418
1998–99	5.368	10.921	1.365

2000–01	6.060	10.821	1.994
2001–02	7.659	10.833	2.237

Department/EU Liaison

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many employees there are who (a) monitor and (b) liaise with EU commissioners and parliamentarians in (i) her Department and (ii) the Environment Agency, broken down into those who focus on these issues as their (A) main and (B) partial roles; and if she will make a statement. [64787]

Mr. Morley: The information requested is not held centrally by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Lamb

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much Scottish lamb has been exported to each member country of the European Union in each of the last five years. [65116]

Mr. Morley: The Overseas Trade Statistics for the UK do not separately identify exports of Scottish lamb. The table gives the volume and value of exports of total UK sheep meat to the rest of the EU in each of the last five years.

Public Buildings

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how her Department is meeting the objectives of the Better Public Buildings Initiative. [65071]

Mr. Morley: DEFRA has demonstrated commitment to the Better Public Buildings initiative by publishing an Action Plan on the Departmental intranet. The quality of the Department's limited programme of new projects is benchmarked against the objectives and commitments set out within it.

I have personally sponsored two projects, one of which has been entered for the Prime Minister's Better Public Building Award. Another recent project has been commended for its design by the Commission for Architecture and the Built Environment.

DEFRA will keep its Better Public Buildings Action Plan under review and proposes to adopt the Design Quality Indicator System for the measurement of overall design standards.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what inspections her officials have made of the motor vessel Kalifeh 1 to assess its suitability for the transport of live farm animals; when inspections were made; what the outcome was of the inspections; and what such inspections her officials will conduct. [65406]

Mr. Morley: The vessel mv Kalifeh 1 has been inspected twice by DEFRA officials to assess its suitability for the transport of live animals:

September 2001—Preliminary partial inspection at the request of and in conjunction with officials from the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, Northern Ireland, found some modification and repair was required in order to comply with legislative requirements

April 2002—Joint inspection with representatives of the French veterinary authority found that it was in compliance with EU and GB animal welfare in transport legislation.

The vessel was also inspected by the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, Northern Ireland before it was allowed to transport sheep from Northern Ireland in December 2001.

All specialist livestock vessels are inspected for their suitability to transport animals prior to the first transport of animals from GB. Additional spot checks are made as appropriate to the continued use of the vessel.

TB Infected Reactors

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the (a) minimum, (b) maximum and (c) average lengths of time it has taken to remove TB infected reactors from each county that has had a breakdown over the last year. [65010]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 June 2002]: The data requested are given in the table.

The (a) minimum, (b) maximum and (c) average lengths of time it has taken to remove TB-infected reactors from farms in each county that has had a breakdown, between 21 June 2001 and 20 June 2002

[2] Time between date of reading the tuberculin test and date of slaughter.

[3] These figures represent cases where animals became reactors in the month before the disruption of normal TB control procedures caused by foot and mouth disease.

Notes:

The TB-infected reactors reported are animals with a reaction to the tuberculin test that were compulsorily slaughtered and had samples submitted to VLA for microbiology. Provided that they (a) had lesions of TB visible at the slaughterhouse, and/or (b) VLA found the TB organism in the sample.

The time reported represents the number of days between reading the skin test and removing an animal from the farm. During this time, animals are valued and arrangements are made for transport, slaughter at an abattoir, etc.

Village Halls (Disabled Access)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with (a) the Association for Communities in Rural England and (b) rural community councils on the subject of the impact of disability legislation on village halls. [65027]

Alun Michael: I have not been asked for such discussions. I am sure that individual rural community councils and their Association, with which I have regular contact, are well aware of the legislation which was put in place some seven years ago. The direct responsibility will be with the owners of specific facilities which will include independent village hall committees or, in some cases, parish or town councils or local authorities.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on what help is being made available to village hall committees to cope with the implications of new disability legislation. [65026]

Alun Michael: The relevant legislation is not new and it is some seven years since the passage of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. Time was allowed for organisations to meet the requirements of the Act.

Since December 1996 it has been unlawful for service providers to treat disabled people less favourably for a reason related to their disability. And from 1 October 1999 service providers have been required to make reasonable adjustments to account for disabled people's needs such as providing extra help or changing the way they provide their services.

From 2004 organisations such as village halls will have to make "reasonable adjustments" to ensure access for disabled people. In any proceedings under the Act, the costs and practicability of any adjustments would be considered in relation to a service provider's ability to pay. The extent to which the adjustment actually improves access to the service and the importance of the service to disabled people would also be taken into account.

A large number of village halls in England already have access and facilities for disabled people although there are older halls that fall short of the requirements of the Act.

There are a number of funds which can assist where appropriate, in addition to the community's own resources, fund raising and any assistance from the parish or town council. Local authorities that can help will include district, county and unitary authorities, depending on the arrangements in a particular locality. The Countryside Agency's Village Hall Loan Fund, administered by Action with Communities in Rural England can provide loans towards improvements for village halls. Loans are available over a period of up to five or eight years but may be longer in special cases where the need for an extended period is substantiated.

The Countryside Agency also can offer assistance to village halls through the community service grants scheme delivered through the Vital Villages programme.

It can help fund an alteration/extension of a village hall or other community building where this provides a new or extended service to the community.

Other sources of public funding include regional development agencies, the Community Fund and the Sports Council. Many organisations achieve the necessary improvements through a mixture of funds including fund raising, commercial or personal sponsorship, parish council and local authority funding and contributions from other public funds as a result of expanding the activities available if improvements expand the suitability and use of the facilities, for instance for sport, or education or training for young people.

Water Courses

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if he will extend the remit of the Environment Agency to include responsibility for critical ordinary water courses to main rivers. [64804]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 June 2002]: We recently consulted on a Review of Flood and Coastal Defence Funding including a number of options for streamlining the service. These included the possibility of transferring to the EA responsibility for watercourses presenting the most significant flood risk. We have received nearly 300 responses to the consultation, and will be considering these and our conclusions through the summer and autumn.

Chrysotile Asbestos

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the policy of her Department is on the use of chrysotile asbestos in environmental projects for which her Department is responsible. [65054]

Mr. Meacher: The Asbestos Prohibitions Regulations 1985 were amended in 1999 to ban the marketing, supply and use of chrysotile from 24 November 1999, with a few limited exceptions where there is no substitute material. Directive 1999/77/EC requires the marketing, supply and use of chrysotile to be completely banned from 1 January 2005. Therefore all derogations/exemptions issued for chrysotile under the 1985 Regulations will cease to apply from that date, apart from a general exemption for research and analysis for all types of asbestos. This Department's policy on the use of chrysotile is in accordance with these legal requirements.

Refrigerators

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many refrigerators have been dumped at rubbish disposal centres in the United Kingdom in the last 12 months. [65052]

Mr. Meacher: The figures for refrigerators left at civic amenity sites are not held centrally.

Bovine TB

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the payment structure is for the Government's compensation scheme for dead bovine TB-infected cattle; and what the time scale is for payment of the compensation. [65687]

Mr. Morley: It is Government policy to pay 100 per cent. of market value, with no upper limit, for cattle that are compulsorily slaughtered under TB control measures.

The Government recognise that compensation for animals slaughtered should be paid promptly. We are aware of some delays in payment, in some areas, due to the priority given by Animal Health Offices to clearing the backlog of TB testing after the foot and mouth disease outbreak.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many confirmed TB herd incidents there have been in 2002, broken down by month, in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Herefordshire and (d) Worcestershire. [65686]

Mr. Morley: The information is not available in the format requested. The figures for the Hereford and Worcester Animal Health Region are given as a total. Individual totals for the separate counties are not yet available. The table details the information requested.

Confirmed new TB incidents

	England	Wales	Hereford/ Worcester
January	46	7	8
February	101	27	12
March	177	35	32
April	108	29	15
May	114	17	10

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much money has been spent on (a) testing and (b) investigating TB in cattle in (i) Gloucestershire and (ii) the UK in each of the last four years for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement. [66510]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The information requested is not available on a UK-wide basis. Total expenditure on TB controls, including testing, and research in GB between 1998–99 and 2000–01 is set out in the table. The information is not available by county.

Prior to 1998–99 a different method was used to collate the statistics. Therefore we are unable to provide expenditure for four years except at disproportionate cost.

Figures for 2001–02 are not yet finalised.

Breakdown of the Government's expenditure on tackling TB in cattle

Expenditure category	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
TB controls, including TB testing	16.8	27.1	20.8
Research including badger culling trial, other research and Veterinary Laboratory Agency contracts	8.0	11.1	15.1
Total	24.8	38.2	35.9

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how long, on average, it has taken in the last year for which figures are available to compensate a farmer whose cattle have contracted bovine TB in (a) Gloucestershire and (b) England; and if she will make a statement. [66512]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The average time taken to pay compensation to a random sample of farmers whose cattle have contracted bovine TB in Gloucestershire is approximately ten and a half weeks. The same information for all TB breakdowns in Gloucestershire, or for England as a whole, is not readily available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

The Government believe that compensation for animals slaughtered should be paid promptly. We are aware of payment delays in some areas due to pressure of work generated by increased bovine TB testing in order to reduce the backlog.

Are You Doing Your Bit? campaign

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the Are You Doing Your Bit? campaign. [65728]

Mr. Meacher: The effectiveness of the "Are You Doing Your Bit?" campaign has been assessed by surveys of public awareness and attitudes before and after periods of advertising. As "Are You Doing Your Bit?" funds were contributed last year to rural support during the foot and mouth disease outbreak, no advertising or assessment has been carried out by the Department.

Abandoned Cars

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many abandoned cars there have been in each year since 1997; and if she will make a statement. [65640]

Mr. Meacher: Local authorities are responsible for dealing with abandoned vehicles and the Department currently holds no central records of the number of vehicles abandoned each year. However, we estimate that some 350,000 were abandoned in the United Kingdom in 2000.

Information on the number of abandoned vehicles removed by local authorities has been collected for the first time in the Department's 2000–01 Municipal Waste Management Survey which will be published this summer.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many members of her Department have been employed in its regulatory impact unit in the past five years; and if she will make a statement. [65967]

Mr. Morley: Since the creation of DEFRA on 8 June 2001 there have been four people working full time in the Better Regulation Unit. The unit is supervised by a member of the senior civil service who is also engaged on other duties.

It is the job of Departmental Regulatory Impact Units to establish and promote the principles of good regulation in their Departments. The staff in each unit work closely with the officials responsible for developing policies within their Department and the Regulatory Impact Unit within Cabinet Office. They focus on those regulations that impact on business, charities, and the voluntary sector.

Curry Report

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received from interested parties regarding the implementation of the proposals contained in the Curry report; and if she will make a statement. [66520]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The Government's discussion document "Sustainable Food and Farming: Working Together" invites views on how to take forward issues identified in the Policy Commission's report on the future of farming and food. Approximately 250 responses have been submitted, supplementing representations made during the extensive process of stakeholder engagement conducted recently. These responses are being analysed and will help inform the construction of a Strategy for Food and Farming in England, to be published this autumn.

Animals Diseases (North and South Korea)

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what checks are carried out on (a) people and (b) animals travelling from (i) North and (ii) South Korea to test for diseases related to animals. [66514]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Targeted checks on passengers are determined by risk. We alerted enforcement officers to the outbreak of foot and mouth disease in South Korea. We received veterinary advice that there was no significant risk of travellers bringing back the virus provided rules on personal imports of animal products were observed. We hold central information on products seized. We do not hold central information on all checks that are undertaken.

Veterinary checks and tests are carried out in accordance with EU legislation on imports of registered horses from South Korea and for captive birds from North and South Korea. Imports of non-registered horses from South Korea and all horses from North Korea are not permitted. Imports of all other animals from North and South Korea are not permitted.

CAP (Support Payments)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many farms in the Scottish Borders receive (a) available support payments and (b) livestock support payments from CAP schemes in excess of £200,000 per year. [66047]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The payment of Common Agricultural Policy subsidies to farmers is a devolved matter and hence information in relation to such payments to farms in the Scottish Borders is a matter for the Scottish Executive.

Kyoto Protocol

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress the UK has made with regard to the Kyoto Protocol. [66642]

Mr. Meacher: The UK completed ratification of the Kyoto Protocol with all other EU member states on 31 May. In order for the Kyoto Protocol to enter into force, it must be ratified by at least 55 countries, including developed countries accounting for at least 55 per cent. of this industrialised group's emissions in 1990. We hope it will enter into force as soon as possible although in practice this is now unlikely before early 2003. The UK remains committed to the Kyoto Protocol as the framework for taking forward global action to tackle climate change. Our target under Kyoto is to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions by 12.5 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2008–12. UK emissions were returned to 1990 levels by 2000 and we are well on course to meet our Kyoto target.

EU Directive 1999/74/EC

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what economic assessment she has made of recent proposals to bring forward implementation of EU Directive 1999/74/EC. [66349]

Mr. Morley: A full regulatory impact assessment concerning implementation of council directive 1999/74/EC into domestic legislation has already been laid before the House. A partial regulatory impact assessment will form part of the forthcoming consultation on the proposal to ban enriched cages from 2012.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions and representations she has had regarding implementation of EU Directive 1999/74/EC. [66350]

Mr. Morley: Since the public consultation on implementation of EU Directive 1999/74/EC into English legislation, Ministers and officials have regularly met with stakeholders to discuss the way forward and will continue to do so.

Nitrate Vulnerable Zones

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what economic assessment she has made of her proposals regarding the establishment of nitrate vulnerable zones in England; and what estimates she has made of the cost of the implementation of an (a) 100 per cent., (b) 80 per cent. and (c) 55 per cent. nitrate vulnerable zone in England. [66351]

Mr. Meacher: A partial regulatory impact assessment (RIA) was published in the consultation document "How should England implement the 1991 Nitrates Directive?" in December 2001. This estimated the net annual cost to the agricultural industry of applying action programme measures as £32 million for the whole country approach and £23 million for the discrete area nitrate vulnerable zone approach.

As the Secretary of State announced on 27 June, the Government have decided to pursue the discrete area nitrate vulnerable zone approach. Since the consultation we have refined the map to identify more precisely the land draining into each nitrate-polluted or eutrophic water. We also published a revised regulatory impact assessment, which reworked the implementation costs for the refined NVZ area and also took into account comments made in response to the consultation. The revised estimate is £20 million per year.

Foot and Mouth

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent changes have been made to the European Union's policy on vaccination-to-live relating to foot and mouth; and what research she has recently commissioned on tests to differentiate between vaccinated and infected animals. [66149]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 July 2002]: No recent changes have been made to the European Union's policy on vaccination in relation to foot and mouth disease.

DEFRA are currently in the process of approving a project to develop a test using non-structural proteins to distinguish between vaccinated and infected animals, and are examining its feasibility for use on a herd basis to detect exposed animals. Following on from this, a study will be undertaken to examine what would be an appropriate sampling regime to detect infection in vaccinated herds exposed to infection. However, at present, the test is not internationally recognised as a validated test.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will make a statement on her Department's involvement with the European Parliament's foot and mouth investigation; [65030]

(2) what liaison there has been with representatives of the EU during the Parliament's investigation into the foot and mouth outbreak in the United Kingdom. [65008]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 June 2002]: DEFRA Ministers and officials have already met the European Parliament Temporary Committee into Foot and Mouth Disease. Nick Brown and Jim Scudamore met the Committee on 25 and 26 March and Lord Whitty and myself met the Committee on 8 April. The Secretary of State plans to meet the Committee on 12 September 2002.

The DEFRA Inquiry Liaison Unit has maintained contact with and supported the Secretariat of the European Parliament Temporary Committee throughout.

Energy

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the estimated (a) level and (b) cost of energy use in her Department and associated agencies was in each year since 1997; what proportion of energy was generated from renewable sources; and if she will make a statement. [65949]

Alun Michael: For details of the breakdown of costs of energy purchases for each English Government Department for the years 1997–98 to 1999–2000, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 19 March 2002, Official Report, column 268W. However, for convenience the data, without the footnotes, and supplemented by the respective level of energy consumption, are reproduced herein.

The Government are keen to encourage the use of renewable energy on its estate and a significant step forward was made with the agreement, in May 2001, of the following renewable energy target across Government:

> "All Departments will ensure that, by 31 March 2003, at least 5 per cent. of their electricity comes from renewable sources that are exempt from the climate change levy, or from self-generation, provided this does not entail excessive cost. This will rise to at least 10 per cent. supply from such sources by 31 March 2008, but will be reviewed after 31 March 2003 to take account of market conditions following the introduction of renewables obligation.
> The review of 2003 will include consideration of increasing or bringing forward the target."

Progress by individual Departments is partly dependent upon the expiry date for their current energy contracts. However, all central Government Departments in England report that they are in the process of considering how they will go about purchasing renewable energy or are considering self-generation options.

Details of renewable energy purchases can be found in the Green Ministers Reports, copies of which are in the Library of the House, or through http://www.defra.gov.uk/environment/greening/minister/grmin.htm. However, for convenience the relevant data are reproduced in the tables.

Energy costs and details of renewable energy purchases for 2000–01 and 2001–02 will be published in the next Green Ministers Report in autumn 2002.

Note:

In a few cases figures were revised from one report to another. The figures here are the latest published. The energy consumption figures are as purchased; therefore they are unadjusted for weather and floor area changes. The energy use figures in the table consist of a mix of electricity and heating fuels which have very different unit prices. Total expenditure will, therefore, depend on the total mix of fuels as well as individual prices.

CABINET OFFICE

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the EU directives and regulations that have been implemented through his Department in 2002; and what was the cost of each to public funds. [64998]

Mr. Alexander: The Cabinet Office has not been responsible for implementing any EU Directives or Regulations in 2002.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the EU directives relating to his Department which have been (a) amended and (b) repealed in 2002. [64949]

Mr. Alexander: Cabinet Office Ministers were responsible for negotiating a Directive to amend the Equal Treatment Directive (76/207EC) which was undertaken by co-decision and was settled in Council on 13 June. The Cabinet Office has not been responsible for repealing any EU Directives in 2002.

Consultation Guidance

Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what evaluation has been made of the impact of the How to Consult your Users guide; and if he will make a statement. [65796]

Mr. Alexander: The Cabinet Office has no plans to evaluate the impact of 'How to Consult Your Users'. Improving service delivery and policy making through consultation with users continues to be an important priority for the Government. The Office for Public Services Reform works with and encourages Government Departments and public agencies to conduct and act upon customer satisfaction surveys to ensure that the voice of the customer is central to service delivery. The Centre for Management and Policy Studies is also developing a 'consultation toolkit' to help policy makers across Government to consult more effectively on policy. The impact of the Code of Practice on Written Consultation will be evaluated from the end of this year.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many members of his Department have been employed in its Regulatory Impact Unit in the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [65963]

Mr. Alexander: I have been asked to reply.

The Cabinet Office's Regulatory Impact Unit had the following complement of staff over the last five years:

Year[1]	Number of staff[2]
1997–98	50
1998–99	53
1999–2000	53
2000–01	58

[1] 1 April to 31 March.

[2] Employed at 31 March.

The Regulatory Impact Unit in the Cabinet Office also works closely with departmental Regulatory Impact Units. It is the job of departmental Regulatory Impact Units to establish and promote the principles of good regulation in their Departments. The staff in each unit works closely with the officials responsible for developing policies within their Department. They focus on those regulations that impact on business, charities, and the voluntary sector.

Castle Award

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if his Department has applied for a Castle award for equal pay. [65221]

Mr. Alexander: The Cabinet Office has applied for a Castle award for producing a comprehensive Equal Pay Guide for Departments and agencies. The guide will help towards meeting the Government's commitment that all Departments and agencies would undertake an equal pay review and have in place any necessary action plans by April 2003. It draws on best practice in the public and private sectors.

Annual Leave

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the average annual leave entitlement is for staff in his Department in 2002. [64648]

Mr. Alexander: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Mr. Leslie) on 4 February 2002, Official Report, column 708W.

Information about average leave entitlements could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Weir: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what discussions he has had on emergency planning with local authorities along the route from Dounreay to Drigg regarding the dangers posed by moving nuclear waste by road. [65112]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

Specific requirements concerning emergency planning are contained in The Radioactive Material (Road Transport) Regulations 2002. These place duties on consignors and carriers to have appropriate emergency procedures in place. The nuclear operators have in place an emergency response scheme, RADSAFE, which is regularly exercised in co-operation with the emergency services and local authorities.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what assessment he has made of the implication of moving nuclear waste from Dounreay to Drigg by (a) road and (b) rail. [65110]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

Such transport would be subject to stringent safety requirements, based upon the international "Atomic Energy Agency's Regulations for the Safe Transport of Radioactive Material" as required by (a) The Radioactive Material (Road Transport) Regulations 2002 and (b) The Packaging, Labelling and Carriage of Radioactive Material by Rail Regulations 1996.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what discussions he has had on emergency planning with the Scottish Executive regarding the dangers posed by moving nuclear waste by (a) road and (b) rail from Dounreay to Drigg. [65111]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

Specific requirements concerning emergency planning are contained in (a) The Radioactive Material (Road Transport) Regulations 2002 and (b) The Packaging, Labelling and Carriage of Radioactive Material by Rail Regulations 1996. These place duties on (a) consignors and carriers and (b) train operators, facility owners and rail infrastructure controllers, to have appropriate emergency procedures in place. The nuclear operators have in place an emergency response scheme, RADSAFE, which is regularly exercised in co-operation with the emergency services and local authorities.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Disclosure of Interests

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what rules apply to the disclosure of interests on the part of those serving on public bodies which are responsible to her Department. [56453]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: All advisory and executive non-departmental public bodies are required to adopt a board members' code, based on guidance produced by Cabinet Office, and they should have registers of interests. The definition of interests is ultimately for individual Departments since they are best placed to decide what might be thought to influence members on their NDPBs. The following list shows the NDPBs sponsored by this department and in each case indicates the relevant Code.

The Adult Learning Inspectorate (ALI) "Code of Practice for Board and Committee Members" is available on request from ALI and will shortly be available on the body's website.

The British Educational Communications and Technology Agency (Becta) "Board Members Code of Practice" is available on request from the Chief Executive's Office.

The Construction Industry Training Board (CITB) "Code of Best Practice for Board Members of CITB" is available on request from the CITB Board Secretary.

The Engineering Construction Industry Training Board (ECITB) "Code of Best Practice for Board Members of ECITB" is available on request from the ECITB Board Secretary.

The Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) "Code of Best Practice for Board Members of the HEFCE" is available on the HEFCE website.

Investors in People UK Ltd (IiP UK) have adopted the Cabinet Office model Board Members' Code.

The Learning and Skills Council (LSC) "Code of Conduct" can be viewed at the Council's Coventry office.

The National College for School Leadership (NCSL) have adopted the Cabinet Office model Board Members' Code.

The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) "Code of Practice for Members of the QCA" is available on request and will shortly be placed on the body's website.

The School Teachers' Review Body (STRB) "Code of Conduct" is held by the Secretary.

The Sector Skills Development Agency (SSDA) is a newly formed NDPB established from 1 April 2002, it currently has a draft "Code of Practice for Board Members".

The Student Loans Company (SLC) "Code of Best Practice for Board Members" is held by the Company Secretary.

The Teacher Training Agency (TTA) "Conduct of the TTA's Business" is available on request, a synopsis is available on the TTA website.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much and what proportion of the departmental expenditure limit for 2002–03 will be accounted for by staff costs; what the figures were for 2001–02; and if she will make a statement. [61024]

Estelle Morris: Figures for 2002–03 are unavailable because staff costs are dependent on pay negotiations that are currently under way. The figures for 2001–02 including OFSTED (taken from the 2002 Departmental Report—Cm 5402) are:

staff costs, £140 million;

Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL), £19,471 million;

staff costs as a proportion of DEL, 0.7 per cent.

Primary Schools

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will investigate the effects on primary schools league tables resulting from children who have been registered for year 6 SATS being subsequently unable to sit them through (a) illness and (b) unauthorised absence. [65204]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 24 May 2002, Official report, column 662W.

Nationally, in 2001, the percentage of pupils absent from the Key Stage 2 tests for each subject was:

Subject	Percentage
English	1
mathematics	1
science	2

School Visits

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) if she will list the schools she has visited since she became Secretary of State; [65086]

(2) how many of the schools she has visited in England and Wales are unsatisfactory; [65087]

(3) what criteria she has used to decide which of the schools she has visited are unsatisfactory; [65088]

(4) if she will list the schools she has visited that are unsatisfactory; [65089]

(5) what her estimate is of the total number of schools in England and Wales that are unsatisfactory. [65090]

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which secondary comprehensive schools she has visited since 1997; and which were unsatisfactory. [65399]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 1 July 2002]: My right hon. Friend has visited 33 schools in England since becoming Secretary of State last year. These schools are as listed. She also visited many schools in her previous ministerial posts between 1997 and 2001. Two of the schools she has visited as Secretary of State were designated by Ofsted as requiring special measures because they were failing to provide pupils with an acceptable standard of education. Just under 300 schools in England—less than 1.3 per cent. of the total—are currently designated by Ofsted as requiring special measures. A further 2.4 per cent. of schools are designated by Ofsted as having serious weaknesses.

Extended School Programme

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what progress has been made with her Department's extended school programme. [66166]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: We are encouraging all schools to extend the services they offer for the benefit of pupils, their families and the wider community. The Education Bill, currently before Parliament, will establish a clear legal framework for schools wanting to provide extended services. We intend to publish guidance later this year to help schools and their partners develop this approach. We also intend to support a number of pathfinder projects to demonstrate a range of patterns in different settings. We will evaluate these projects and disseminate good practice.

Overseas Trained Teachers

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what investigation she carries out into those agencies which are supplying overseas trained teachers for employment in British schools; [66629]

(2) what help is available to overseas trained teachers who have found employment in British schools for familiarisation with the education system; and for what period this lasts; [66630]

(3) if she will make a statement on whether overseas trained teachers are subject to normal qualified teacher status procedures; [66631]

(4) what the cost has been to the British education system of employing overseas trained teachers in each year since 1999. [66632]

Mr. Miliband: Employment agencies in Great Britain are regulated under the Employment Agencies Act 1973 and associated regulations, which are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. The DTI Employment Agency Standards Inspectorate enforces the legislation and investigates complaints about the conduct of agencies.

Induction arrangements for new teachers are the responsibility of the recruiting school or local education authority. Many provide such training and support networks. Those in London will, in future, be further supported by the new Recruitment and Retention Unit in the Government office for London.

In order to teach in a maintained school in England it is generally necessary to hold Qualified Teacher Status (QTS). Current regulations do not allow for the automatic recognition of teaching qualifications gained abroad, unless the teacher is a national of a member state of the European Economic Area (EEA). The Education (Teachers) Qualifications and Health Standards Regulations 1999 (as amended) allow schools to appoint overseas trained teachers without QTS in three circumstances: as trainees on an employment based route; as a temporary teacher in a school or a number of schools for up to four years without QTS; as 'instructors'—persons offering particular skills who may be appointed when no qualified teacher with such skills is available.

The information about costs is not collected centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions in the last 12 months the requirement to engage in a competitive tendering process has been waived by his Department due to national security obligations under paragraph 6(h) of the supply regulations. [62821]

Jane Kennedy: None.

North Belfast

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many juveniles have been prosecuted since 1 July 2001 arising out of disturbances in North Belfast. [62643]

Jane Kennedy: The information requested is not available at this time due to a database upgrading exercise being undertaken which should be concluded by late summer 2002.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of his Department have been employed in its regulatory impact unit in the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [65973]

Jane Kennedy: None.

Organised Crime Task Force

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Organised Crime Task Force's second annual threat assessment. [65737]

Jane Kennedy: I congratulate the Organised Crime Task Force, on their first year's work. Much has been achieved—the figures in the second annual threat assessment and strategy documents speak for themselves—but we are under no illusions that there is much more to be done. Fighting organised crime will be a long and hard struggle. This year, as it was last year, the priority areas for concerted multi-agency effort are extortion, drugs, oils-related fraud, tobacco and alcohol duty evasion and money laundering. In addition, we have added two new strategic priority areas: the trade in counterfeit goods, as this has an on-going potential to affect investment in Northern Ireland; and armed robbery, which is on the increase here, while declining elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

No one should doubt that we have the resources and determination to pursue it to the utmost. The publication of the threat assessment and strategy for dealing with organised crime in Northern Ireland, shows that the agencies involved have made an impressive start.

Ministerial Accommodation

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what publicly owned accommodation is made available to him in his official role; how many nights he has been in residence at each of these properties in the last 12 months; and what the total cost is of maintaining each of these properties. [55103]

Dr. John Reid: Accommodation in Hillsborough Castle is made available to me as a residence while in Northern Ireland. The Castle is also Her Majesty the Queen's residence in the province, is used as a conference centre, hosts charity fund raising events and is open to the public.

Between April 2001 and March 2002 I stayed there for 144 nights and between March 2002 and May 2002 I have stayed for 29 nights.

The total running costs for Hillsborough Castle for the last financial year were £1.1 million.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diversity Agenda

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives he has undertaken since 7 June concerning the Diversity Agenda at his Department. [64823]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The FCO continues to work on the implementation of its diversity strategy, "Investing for Tomorrow", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The strategy was refreshed earlier this year and incorporates duties under the Race Relations (Amendment) Act 2000. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, also discussed diversity issues when he met Trade Union representatives on 24 June.

Zimbabwean Police

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the end use monitoring undertaken by his Department of the use of the Land Rover Defender vehicles provided to the Zimbabwean Police as part of a DfID funded project. [65036]

Mr. MacShane: This Department has taken a close interest in the use made by the Zimbabwe Republic Police of Land Rovers partly funded by HMG. Prior to the general elections in early 2000, we registered our strong concern with the Zimbabwean Home Minister that they were being used for political ends. The lack of a satisfactory response led to the decision taken by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for International Development, to suspend further deliveries in May 2000.

Gujarat

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent disturbances in the Gujarat region of India. [65405]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We share my hon. Friends' concerns over the recent communal violence and deaths in Gujarat. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has been in regular contact with the Governnment of India on the situation in Gujarat, including during his most recent visit to India on 29 May, when he raised this with Mr. Advani, the then Indian Minister for Home Affairs. He raised the case of the four British nationals who were attacked by a mob on 28 February and urged that those responsible be brought to justice. The Government of India have themselves strongly condemned the violence in Gujarat, and have given assurances, which we welcome, that they will take action to bring to justice perpetrators of all the killings and violence. My right hon. Friend has also met the families of the four British nationals who were attacked during the violence, and raised their cases with the Government of India during his 29 May visit.

Poland

Mr. David: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about German land claims in that part of Poland ceded by Germany in 1945. [65591]

Peter Hain: The administrative borders between Poland and Germany were drawn up as part of the Potsdam Agreement in 1945 pending a final delimitation of borders at a peace settlement. No peace settlement was ever concluded. The borders between Poland and the Federal Republic of Germany were confirmed by the 1990 Treaty of Final Settlement with Respect to Germany signed by the Allied powers and the then two German states. They were confirmed in bilateral treaties agreed by Poland and the Federal Republic of Germany in November 1990 and June 1991.

Carpathian Initiative

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support the Government are providing to the Carpathian Initiative; and if he will make a statement. [65709]

Peter Hain: The Department for International Development has contributed £180,000 to a project in Miercurea Ciuc, Romania to promote sustainable economic regeneration through public/private partnerships. The implementing agencies for this project are the Romanian Environmental Partnership Foundation and the Polish Environmental Partnership Foundation, both of which have links with the Carpathian Initiative. However, HMG provides no direct funding support to the Carpathian Initiative.

MI6

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at what level, and under what circumstances, it can be decided within MI6 that information held may not be seen by Ministers. [65153]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 2 July. 2002]: The Secret Intelligence Service carries out its functions under the Intelligence Services Act 1994 under my authority. The Act provides for the Chief of SIS to be appointed by the Secretary of State and imposes a duty on the Chief to ensure that there are arrangements, which I approve, for securing that no information is obtained by SIS except so far as is necessary for the proper discharge of its functions. I can foresee no circumstances in which information could be withheld from Ministers given these statutory responsibilities.

Communications (Interception)

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that, where a foreign security agency is asked by a UK body authorised to carry out interception of communications on its behalf relating to a UK citizen, there shall be a requirement for permission to be sought as if the interception were to be carried out by the UK body itself. [65157]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 2 July 2002]: In so far as the agencies for which I have responsibility undertake interception activities, this is consistent with the requirements of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 and the Intelligence Services Act 1994. It is not government policy to comment on any intelligence arrangements that might exist between the UK and other countries.

Government Communications Headquarters

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what circumstances GCHQ facilities are used to (a) monitor and (b) intercept communications involving United Kingdom nationals where the communication originates or terminates outside the United Kingdom. [65651]

Mr. Straw: It is a long-standing practice of this Government and previous Administrations not to comment on the activities of the intelligence services. The interception of communications is governed by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 and overseen by the Interception of Communications Commissioner. GCHQ, like any other Government agency empowered to apply for a warrant under the Act, may intercept "external communications" (as defined by the Act) if the conditions required for the issuing of a warrant set out in Sections 5, 8 and 15 and 16 are met.

Kenya

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has collated about the Government of Kenya's proposals to change the law allowing an extension of the term of the Kenyan Parliament. [66050]

Mr. MacShane: On 18 June some KANU MPs called for extension of the current Parliament to allow time for the constitutional review to be completed and for the new constitution to be passed into law before the next general election. An extension would require Parliament to pass a constitutional amendment. To date Parliament has not debated the issue.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Kenya about the need for free and fair parliamentary elections there. [66049]

Mr. MacShane: The need for free and fair elections features regularly in our contacts with the Kenyan Government and officials.

Visa Applications

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visa applications from Arab countries have been rejected in each month since September 1999. [65233]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Figures for the number of applications refused between September 1999 and May 2002 in Arab countries are listed in the table.

Child Abduction

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what agreements there are with other states regarding international child abduction by a parent. [66261]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Hague Convention on the civil aspects of international child abduction seeks to return children who have been abducted abroad to their country of habitual residence, where issues of custody and contact can be resolved through the courts. There are prescribed criteria and processes for returning children under this convention. The Hague Convention is in force between the UK and 54 other countries world wide. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is exploring the possibility of establishing bi-lateral agreements with countries that are not members of the Hague Convention.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with European and US counterparts regarding international child abduction by a parent. [66260]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Member states of the European Union and the United States are all Parties to the Hague Convention on International Child Abduction. The Lord Chancellor's Department is the lead Department for cases of child abduction to and from Hague Convention countries. In March 2001, the Special Commission of the Hague Convention on International Child Abduction formally met, as it does every four years. The purpose of the Special Commission is to discuss the operation of the Convention. Representatives from the US attended the Commission, as did all EU member states.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance his Department provides in cases of abduction of a child by one of the parents from the UK to another country. [66259]

Mr. MacShane: The Hague Convention is the international instrument covering cases of child abduction. Cases of child abduction involving countries which are party to the Hague Convention are dealt with by the Lord Chancellor's Department in England and Wales. The Scottish Executive and the Northern Ireland Courts Service deal with their own cases. The FCO can become involved in Hague Convention cases where diplomatic intervention may be of assistance to families.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is the lead Department for cases in countries which are not Party to the Hague Convention. In non-Hague Convention cases, there is no prescribed formula to facilitate the return of an abducted child. Therefore, parents must initiate proceedings in the local courts (and often also in the UK courts) for the return of their child. Consular staff, both in London and at our embassies and high commissions overseas, are able to assist parents in this procedure by, for example, helping them find a local lawyer, arranging welfare visits and attending court hearings as the legal process progresses.

Senegal

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the renewal of the fisheries protocol between the European Union and Senegal. [66095]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

The new protocol on fisheries between the EU and Senegal was initialled by both parties on 25 June. The details of this protocol will not be known until the Commission has made its presentation to member states at the External Fisheries working group in Brussels on 3 and 4 of July, when we shall examine them carefully. We wish to ensure that such agreements take proper account of environmental and developmental concerns, an issue which we have raised before and which we intend to pursue as part of the reform of the common fisheries policy.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much and what proportion of the departmental expenditure limit for 2002–03 had been spent by 31 May; what the figures were for 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [61009]

Mr. MacShane: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given him by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 17 June 2002, Official Report, column 130W.

Convention on the Future of Europe

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the status is of those members of the Convention on the Future of Europe who were appointed by Governments which have subsequently lost office; and if he will list the members of the Convention who were appointed as (a) representatives of Governments which have subsequently lost office and (b) representatives of national parliaments who have lost their seats since the Convention's membership was first established, in respect of both (i) the member states and (ii) candidate countries. [66093]

Peter Hain: Representatives appointed to the Convention by the governments of Member States and Accession Countries do not have to be members of their governments. It is therefore up to each government whether to keep or replace its representative. There have been four changes of government (France, Portugal, the Netherlands and Hungary) and six elections since the inauguration of the Convention.

The French and Dutch government representatives have so far remained unchanged. Prof Ernani Lopes has succeeded Joao Vallera as the Portuguese government representative, and Laszlo Kovacs has succeeded Janos Martonyi as Hungarian government representative. One parliamentary representative to the Convention has lost his seat, Alain Barrau. It is not yet clear what decision the French Parliament will take.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what correspondence he has received from the International Association of Young Marianas with particular reference to the Convention on the Future of Europe; when he last met representatives from that body; what his policy is towards continuing funding of it by the European Union; what the target audiences of its publications have been; what assessment he has made of the compatibility of their use in schools and universities with the requirements in the Education Act 1996 for balance in the provision of information; and if he will make a statement; [66121]

Peter Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 27 June 2002, Official Report, column 1026W.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Child Support

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what limit there will be on the pension contribution of a non-resident parent in calculating the assessment under the new Child Support Agency formula. [35373]

Malcolm Wicks: The new calculation will allow for 100 per cent. of any contributions to an Inland Revenue approved occupational, or personal pension scheme. The Inland Revenue sets limits on the percentage of income that can be contributed to a pension scheme; these depend on the contributor's earnings and the date they joined the scheme.

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, pursuant to the answer of 20 May ref 57511 on pensions, what the latest years for which estimates are available on a basis consistent with that used in the 1998 Pensions Green Paper to provide estimates for 1998 are for (a) GAD and DWP data on state spending on pensions and (b) ONS estimates of the size of private pensions in payment; and what the estimates are in both cases. [58805]

Mr. McCartney [holding answer 23 May 2002]: Table A shows the proportion of pension income coming from the state and private sources in each year from 1997–98 to 1999–2000. State pension income corresponds to benefit income as defined in the PI Series. Private pension income corresponds to the sum of occupational pension income and investment income in the PI Series. The percentage figures in Table 1 are derived directly from the average gross income totals in Table 1 of the PI Series (1999–2000).

Table A: Proportion of pension income coming from state and private sources

Percentage

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
State pension income	58	56	57
Private pension income	42	44	43

Note:
All figures rounded to nearest 1 per cent.

State pension income corresponds to PI definition of 'Benefit Income', which includes national insurance benefits received by the elderly, income-related benefits and disability benefits.

Private pension income corresponds to the sum of occupational pension income and investment income. The latter includes income from annuities, personal pensions, property, stocks and shares, as well as income from savings.

For further information on PI methodology and definitions see Section 5, page 10 of Pensioners' Incomes Series (1999–2000).

As the PI Series shows, pensioners also receive income from earnings and 'other' sources. For reference, therefore, it is also possible to estimate the proportion of retirement income comes from state and private sources. This is done in Table B. As with Table A, the proportions here are derived directly from the average gross income totals in Table 1 of the PI Series (1999–2000).

Table B: Proportion of retirement income coming from state and private sources

Percentage

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000
State retirement income	53	51	52
Private retirement income	47	49	48

Note:
All figures rounded to nearest 1 per cent.

State retirement income corresponds to PI definition of 'Benefit Income', which includes national insurance benefits received by the elderly, income-related benefits and disability benefits.

Private retirement income corresponds to the sum of occupational pension income, earnings, 'other' income and investment income. Investment income includes income from annuities, personal pensions, property, stocks and shares, as well as income from savings. 'Other' income includes private benefits such as those from Friendly Societies, and the income of any dependent children, as well as other miscellaneous sources of income.For further information on PI methodology and definitions see Section 5, page 10 of Pensioners' Incomes Series (1999–2000).

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if the National Pensioners Convention is among the organisations he is proposing to consult regarding the draft National Strategy report on pensions; and when the consultation is to take place. [64673]

Mr. McCartney: The National Pensioners Convention is one of a range of organisations which the Department for Work and Pensions has regular contact with. These organisations have been invited to a meeting in July concerning the National Strategy Report.

Computers

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what measures are (a) in place and (b) under discussion in his Department in order to ensure compliance with the WE Directive. [60745]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Trade and Industry (Mr. Wilson) on 12 June 2002, Official Report, 1266W.

Benefit Sanctions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Heath), of 20 May 2002, Official Report, column 29W, what research has been undertaken by his Department into the effects of benefit sanctions; and if he will place a copy of each title in the Library. [63675]

Malcolm Wicks: The research carried out by the Department into the effects of sanctions is listed. Copies of the research reports are available in the Library.

Staff Training

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much the Department has spent on staff training and development in each of the last five years. [61069]

Mr. McCartney: Data on expenditure on staff training and development are available only for the last three years. The Department was created in June 2001. The figures for the two earlier years have been collated from data sources in the former Employment Service and Department of Social Security.

	Expenditure (£ million)	Percentage of running costs
1999–2000	81.145	3.19
2001–02	97.319	3.76

The figures include trainee and trainer costs, management and administration overheads, and spend on external training provided through Departmental contracts. Costs for accommodation where Departmental estate has been used are not included. (In addition to formal training, staff are developed by a variety of other means.)

The Department is committed to the principles of Investors in People. It considers that effective investment in training and development is essential in equipping staff with the skills and knowledge necessary to meet Government goals and deliver modern services.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to change the practice of allowing local authorities to make direct payment of housing benefit to registered social landlords; and if he will make a statement. [63464]

Malcolm Wicks: We recognise that direct payments of housing benefit to registered social landlords can be both efficient and convenient. However, it has often been argued that routinely paying benefit to the landlord rather than to the tenant whose entitlement it is, can inhibit tenants' choice and discourage personal responsibility. Therefore, although there are no immediate plans to change the current system, it is an issue that we will continue to keep under close review.

New Deal

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans there are to increase the financial incentives to employers who employ and retain young people under the New Deal programme. [63757]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: There are no current plans to do so. However we have taken steps to increase both financial and training flexibilities for employers within the New Deal for Young People. Employers, especially small businesses, taking part in the programme have welcomed this increased flexibility.

Employers have a direct input into the programme through the National Employment Panel. This group (formerly known as the New Deal Task Force) was formed in 1997 to ensure that employers, and other key customers, have a strong and permanent voice within the Department.

This co-operative approach has contributed to the success of the New Deal. Nearly 95,000 employers have signed up, half of whom have never participated in an employment programme before. Many more have taken on New Dealers without formally signing up for the programme, and still more have helped to support New Deal in other ways by providing training or advice on the design of the programme.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average period of payment was for claimants of incapacity benefit at 31 March. [64329]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Information regarding the average duration of incapacity benefit claims at 31 March 2002 will not become available until early 2003. For the latest available information, I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave him on 26 April 2002, Official Report, column 472W.

Annual Leave

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average annual leave entitlement is for staff in his Department in 2002. [64642]

Mr. McCartney: The average annual leave entitlements in the year 2002 will be:

Staff in the grades AA to HEO 27 days per year

Staff in grades SEO to UG6 30 days per year.

The annual leave allowance for members of the Senior Civil Service is set by the Cabinet Office and continues to be 30 days.

Winter Fuel Payment

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many widowed women over 60 wrongly received a reduced level of winter fuel payment for the 2001–02 winter, owing to a mistaken assessment of two people living in the household in (a) Scotland and (b) the UK; and how many are awaiting receipt of the full payment. [65377]

Mr. McCartney: Information available shows that 172 widows, identified through receipt of Widows Pension, had to be paid an additional £100 because they were the only eligible member of their household. One of these payments was in Scotland.

Industrial Injuries Benefits

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) men and (b) women received the principal contributory industrial injuries benefits in each year since 1972. [65293]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The main industrial injuries benefit is Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit. This is a tax-free, non-contributory benefit payable to people who have become disabled as a result of an accident at work or as a result of an industrial disease.

Details of the number of recipients of this benefit by gender since 1972 are in the table.

Benefit and Tax Credit Payments

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether benefit and tax credit claimants will be allowed to choose between (a) a card account at the Post Office, (b) a basic bank account and (c) another type of bank account, in order to continue to receive their benefit and tax credit payments; and whether the information available to benefit and tax credit claimants will include clear description of each of these options and will set out their advantages and disadvantages. [65260]

Malcolm Wicks: Yes.

The Department and the Inland Revenue will be providing customers with all the information they will need (including details of the respective features of each type of account) to choose the account which is most appropriate for them.

Around 85 per cent. of our customers already have access to a suitable account for receiving payments of benefits and tax credits. While we anticipate that most people will choose to have their money paid into an existing account or open a basic bank account, no one will be prevented from opening a card account at the Post Office if they wish.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Committee Mandates

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the mandate of the Committee for the European Refugee Fund is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if he will list the items currently under its consideration; if he will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [58455]

Beverley Hughes: The mandate for the Committee for the European Refugee Fund is set out in the Council Decision 2000/596/EC, OJL 252, 6.10.2000, that adopted the programme, and is available in the Library. The Committee meets three times a year on average.

The United Kingdom (UK) representation usually consists of a member of the UK representation to the European Union plus a Home Office official from the Refugee Integration Unit. The Commission refunds travel and subsistence costs for one official from the UK for each Committee meeting. Up to three additional representatives can attend, and their expenses are met from the Home Office subsistence allowance. The purpose of the Committee is to monitor the implementation of the European Refugee Fund across the member states.

The Council decision contains a reporting mechanism under which the Commission evaluates the implementation of the European Refugee Fund and submits a report to the Council and European Parliament. The reports are publicly available on the internet. In addition, details of projects selected for funding within the UK allocation of the fund are made available in the form of a written parliamentary answer on an annual basis.

Fingerprints/DNA Samples

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which organisations have access to (a) fingerprints and (b) DNA samples held by the police. [64245]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 25 June 2002]: Under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 (as amended) retained fingerprints and DNA samples can be used only for purposes related to the prevention or detection of crime, the investigation of an offence or the conduct of a prosecution. Fingerprints and DNA samples, and the profiles derived from them, which are held by or on behalf of police forces in the United Kingdom and Islands, may be accessed only by relevant law-enforcement authorities. Relevant law-enforcement authorities are listed in section 63A of the 1984 Act. They are:

(a) a police force[1];

(b) the national criminal intelligence service;

(c) the national crime squad;

(d) a Public Authority (not falling within paragraphs (a) to (c)) with functions in any part of the British islands which consist of or include the investigation of crimes or the charging of offenders;

(e) any person with functions in any country or territory outside the United Kingdom which

   (i) correspond to those of a police force, or

   (ii) otherwise consist of or include the investigation of conduct contrary to the law of that country or territory, or the apprehension of persons guilty of such conduct;

(f) any person with functions under any international agreement which consist of or include the investigation of conduct which is

   (i) unlawful under the law of one or more places,

   (ii) prohibited by such an agreement, or

   (iii) contrary to international law, or the apprehension of persons guilty of such conduct.

[1] The reference to a police force is a reference to any of the following:

(a) any police force maintained under section 2 of the Police Act 1996 (c 16)(police forces in England and Wales outside London);

(b) the Metropolitan police force;

(c) the City of London police force;

(d) any police force maintained under or by virtue of section 1 of the Police (Scotland) Act 1967 (c 77);

(e) the police service of Northern Ireland;

(f) the police service of Northern Ireland Reserve;

(g) the Ministry of Defence police;

(h) the Royal Navy regulating branch;

(i) the Royal Military police;

(j) the Royal Air Force police;

(k) the Royal Marines police;

(l) the British Transport police;

(m) the States of Jersey police force;

(n) the salaried police force of the Island of Guernsey;

(o) the Isle of Man constabulary.

Immigration Applications

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress with the processing of immigration applications made under the Regularisation of Overstayers Scheme; and if it is expected that the assessment of all applications made under that scheme will be completed by April 2003. [64565]

Beverley Hughes: During the last financial year (2001–02) a sift of all outstanding applications made under the Regularisation Scheme for Overstayers was successfully completed, yielding a total of 1,033 easily identifiable grants under existing policy concessions.

During the current financial year more detailed consideration is being given to the remaining cases. To date, 282 further grants have been identified, along with 81 refusals; 10,990 cases remain to be fully considered. The team assigned to dealing with these cases is currently under expansion, and individual caseworker output is gradually increasing with experience. It is anticipated that all applications made under the scheme will be assessed by April 2003.

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the EU directives relating to his Department which have been (a) amended and (b) repealed in 2002. [64954]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: None of the European Union directives relating to the Home Office have been amended or repealed in 2002.

Public Protection Panels

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what criteria members of the public will be chosen for the strategic boards overseeing the multi-agency public protection panels; and if he will make a statement. [64589]

Hilary Benn: The multi-agency public protection arrangements exist to protect members of the public from potentially dangerous sexual and violent offenders in communities across England and Wales. I announced last week that [illegible] Government wanted members of the public to be represented in these arrangements.

Adverts will be appearing in the press in the five areas which will be piloting this scheme (west Midlands, south Wales, Cumbria, Durham and Surrey), asking for members of the public to apply to sit on the strategic boards scrutinising and managing this work in their areas.

Lay members will not be required to have formal educational qualifications but are expected to have:

(i) an ability to understand complex information in written and numerical form;

(ii) an interest in community and social issues with a track record of involvement in them;

(iii) an ability to make appropriate decisions based on the available information;

(iv) a capacity for emotional resilience, retaining sensitivity while dealing with tragic or painful situations. In particular, this includes an ability to understand the needs and feelings of victims of crime;

(v) an ability to understand the complexity of human behaviour;

(vi) good social skills and the ability to work effectively with people in groups and in formal meetings;

(vii) an awareness of and commitment to equality and diversity;

(viii) an ability to challenge constructively the views and assumptions of senior professionals; and

(ix) an ability to maintain confidentiality appropriate to the circumstances and local protocols.

In each of the areas in which this development is being piloted, lay members will be recruited using these criteria through a formal assessment procedure designed and administered by an occupational psychologist. Elected representatives and relevant professionals are not eligible for selection. All candidates will be subject to the usual criminal history checks and anyone who has committed a sexual or a violent offence, or any other offence not spent under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 will also not be eligible. We hope to make the first appointments later in the summer.

Criminal Records Bureau

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons are employed in the Criminal Records Bureau. [64835]

Hilary Benn: The number of staff employed by the Criminal Records Bureau is 871 with a further 117 seconded from other agencies and/or employed on contractual terms.

Asylum Seekers

Tony Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to increase support for asylum seekers to full income support rates; and if he will make a statement. [57997]

Beverley Hughes: The full national asylum support service support package is broadly equivalent to income support. Support for asylum seekers can include fully furnished accommodation. The costs of this together with associated utility bills and council tax are met centrally. Support levels for children here as part of an asylum seeking family are identical to the personal allowances for children in families on income support.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is entitled to provide asylum support to persons who have won their asylum appeals but where the period since their asylum appeal was disposed of exceeds 28 days; and if he will make a statement. [60539]

Beverley Hughes: In accordance with section 94(3) of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 and Regulation 2 of the Asylum Support Regulations 2000 (as amended), the national asylum support service support should end 28 days after an appeal is disposed of if it is successful and 21 days if it is not.

Asylum Seekers Accommodation Centres

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had with BAA Lynton regarding the use of the former RAF Turnhouse site for an asylum seeker accommodation centre. [42733]

Beverley Hughes: The Home Office, through its agent, has been in discussion with the British Airport Authority Lynton regarding the former Royal Air Force Turnhouse site, initially on the availability of the site and subsequently as to the potential for using the site as an accommodation centre.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what voluntary activity away from the sites of asylum accommodation centres he considers appropriate for residents of such centres; and if he will make a statement. [59277]

Beverley Hughes: We expect most purposeful activity to take place on site at accommodation centres. Opportunities for voluntary activity away from the sites will depend upon local circumstances in exactly the same way as such voluntary activity is available to and taken up by asylum seekers who do not live in accommodation centres. Residents of accommodation centres will not be compelled to undertake voluntary work away from the sites.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what contingency plans he has for the use of the facilities if the evaluation of the asylum accommodation centres show the centres are not performing satisfactorily; [59072]

(2) how he will evaluate the performance of asylum accommodation centres; and how long after the opening of the centres the evaluation will be completed. [59071]

Beverley Hughes: We set out the likely criteria for evaluating accommodation centres in the White Paper published on 7 February 2002 (Cm. 5387). We are still considering the details of the evaluation process.

We expect the trial centres to be successful. If in the light of the evaluation of the trial there is a need to modify any aspect of the centres, we will address that at the time.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Department of the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs about compensation arrangements for residents living adjacent to Throckmorton airfield as a result of the combined impact of the foot and mouth disease burial site and the proposed asylum accommodation centre. [57345]

Beverley Hughes: My officials have had discussions with the Department of the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA) officials in connection with the proposed accommodation centre at Throckmorton airfield, near Pershore, Worcestershire. We do not anticipate grounds for compensation of this nature.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many private sector sites have been offered to his Department for the proposed asylum accommodation centres; and for what reasons such sites are not being given further consideration. [57344]

Beverley Hughes: All sites, which have emerged as potentially suitable for accommodation centres, are being given consideration. In addition to the sties we have identified ourselves, a number have been put forward by potential bidders. We will not be putting into the public domain details of such sites unless and until they are considered to be a serious prospect for the siting of an accommodation centre.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 12 June 2002, Official Report, column 1308W, on asylum seekers accommodation centres, when he will place in the Library the documentation for the bidders conference. [66144]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 2 July 2002]: A copy will be placed in the Library shortly.

Marina Brookes

John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to take a decision on the application for indefinite leave to remain of Marina Brookes (Home Office ref: B1099565). [56522]

Beverley Hughes: The application was decided on 15 May 2002 and notification sent by first class recorded delivery on the same day.

Sex Offenders

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) who is notified of plans to allocate sex offenders allocated to areas other than those of their known offending; [42190]

(2) by what criteria and on what authority sex offenders are allocated to areas other than those of their known offending; [42189]

(3) what arrangements are put in place to monitor the movements of known sex offenders who are allocated to areas other than those of their known offending; [42192]

(4) when he will reply to the questions on sex offenders tabled on Wednesday 6 March, Ref. 42191. [44446]

Hilary Benn: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to her by my hon. Friend the Member for Stretford and Urmston (Beverley Hughes) on 19 March 2002, Official Report, column 285W. I apologise for the delay in responding.

Extradition

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Czech citizens have been extradited over the last four years; how many of them were Roma; and for what kinds of offences. [64858]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth [holding answer 1 June 2002]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Surrenders to Czech Republic
1998	—
1999	—
2000	1
2001	4
Total	5

On information available, only one of those fugitives (who did not contest his extradition) was of Roma origin. Those concerned stood accused variously of theft, burglary, robbery and deception.

Road Traffic Offences

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with (a) the police, (b) the Lord Chancellor and (c) the Crown Prosecution Service on raising the tariff for serious road traffic offences. [65023]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 27 June 2002]: We are currently reviewing penalties for all road traffic offences. On 19 December 2000 we published a consultation paper. The paper dealt with the court sentencing powers for a wide range of road traffic offending including serious offending. The consultation exercise ended in March 2001. We are currently in the final stages of producing the Government's response to the consultation exercise on road traffic penalties. We hope to publish this shortly.

This was an interdepartmental review involving officials from the Home Office, Lord Chancellor's Department, and the Department for Transport in which the views of the Lord Chancellor, the police and the Crown Prosecution Service were taken into account.

Bail Information

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation areas in England and Wales operated bail information schemes in the last year for which figures are available; in how many cases information on bail was provided to the courts, broken down by probation area; and in how many of these cases the court ordered conditional bail. [65424]

Hilary Benn: 36 areas provided bail information schemes to courts in 2001–02, although schemes in some areas will have been targeted at specific courts or court sittings and some courts within those areas will not have benefited from access to a scheme. The National Probation Directorate is currently considering how the overall scope of bail information schemes can be extended to provide courts with greater access to a scheme and to further develop the effectiveness of the bail information process. Work to identify qualitative performance measures will begin later this year.

A return showing the numbers of bail information reports prepared in 2001 is in the table. Consideration of a bail information report will be only one of a range of factors which courts take into consideration when considering whether to order conditional bail and records are not kept of the number of such orders where a bail information report has been presented.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment his Department has made of the likely future level of scientific procedures on animals; [65081]

(2) what estimate his Department has made from applications for licences to perform scientific procedures on animals of the level of duplication in such procedures; [65082]

(3) what estimate his Department has made of the reduction in the number of scientific experiments on animals that has been achieved as a result of information sharing; [65080]

(4) what targets his Department has set for reducing the number of scientific procedures performed on animals. [65079]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The use of animals in experiments and other scientific procedures is strictly regulated by the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 which is widely regarded as the most rigorous piece of legislation of its type in the world. It offers a high level of protection to animals while recognising the need to use animals in research. It also requires the latest ideas and technology to be taken into account when deciding whether the use of animals is justified.

The licensing system is demand led and the 1986 Act provides no mechanism by which to set absolute limits on the number of animals used. The Act requires that project proposals are assessed on a case-by-case basis and that licences are only granted where the benefits outweigh the costs and where there are no alternatives which either replace animal use entirely, reduce the number of animals needed, or refine the procedures to minimise suffering (the 3Rs). We must also be satisfied that the procedures are likely to achieve the stated objectives.

The number of animal procedures carried out reflects the state of science and industry in the United Kingdom and developments in science rather than being an indicator of the effectiveness of the 1986 Act. The Home Office will, however, continue to implement its overall strategy to minimise the numbers of animals used by the rigorous application of the 3Rs.

It is not possible to predict accurately the amount of scientific research and regulatory testing using animals which is likely to take place in future. However, there are indications that in most areas use of conventional animals will continue to decline, but that new molecular biology techniques are opening up new areas of genetic research which will lead to an increase in the use of genetically modified (GM) animals. In addition, new regulatory requirements, for example, the proposed European Union Chemicals Strategy, have the potential to increase the use of animals for human health and safety purposes.

There is no information readily available to indicate the reduction in scientific procedures using animals achieved through sharing of information. The Government believe, however, that sharing of scientific research data is self-evidently in the interests of refining ad avoiding duplication of procedures, and remains committed to promoting such sharing by any practical means. To this end, in August 2000, we announced an inter-departmental concordat on data sharing. The concordat commits United Kingdom regulatory authorities to help resolve legal and other obstacles and encourage data sharing between clients and thereby reduce animal tests. Progress in implementing the concordat is currently under review.

A programme of work involving the use of animals would not be licensed under the 1986 Act if it were known that it would entail unnecessary duplication of earlier work. Apart from some cases where there is need for deliberate replication of earlier work, in order to validate the original findings, we have no evidence that duplication of animal use takes place.

Private Finance Initiative

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answers to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Laws) of 18 December 2001, Official Report, columns 237–38W, and 24 October 2001, Official Report, column 288W, concerning the private finance initiative, what the main areas of savings are leading to the cost savings indicated for the (a) Ryehill, (b) Dovegate, (c) Forest Bank, (d) Parc, (e) Lowndham Grange and Altcourse prisons; and if he will make a statement. [65416]

Hilary Benn: The same main elements in savings have been accrued from each of the seven prisons designed, constructed, managed and financed by the private sector. The main elements are threefold: construction costs, operational costs and risk transfer.

Youth Offending

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to tackle persistent youth offending. [66587]

Hilary Benn: We have given the courts new secure remand and tagging powers for 12 to 16-year-olds who repeatedly offend on bail. Both started in the 10 street crime priority areas on 22 April. Tagging started in the rest of the country on 1 June 2002 and secure remands will start there on 16 September 2002.

We have also: delivered the Youth Justice Pledge by halving the time taken from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders; funded the Youth Justice Board's intensive supervision and surveillance programmes for the most prolific offenders; and introduced the detention and training order for persistent and more serious young offenders.

As a result of our youth justice reforms results published in June 2002 for the first group of young offenders dealt with in July 2000 show that the reconviction rate fell by 14.6 per cent. They exceeded the Public Service Arrangement target of a 5 per cent. reduction in juvenile reconviction rates by 5 per cent. by March 2004.

Shop Crime

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the estimated annual losses were to businesses in the Portsmouth, South constituency due to shop crime in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [64480]

Mr. Denham: The Home Department does not collect information about losses as a result of shop crime. The number of offences of theft from shops recorded by the police in Hampshire for the 12 months ended 31 March 2001 was 9,674, which is 5 per cent. less than the previous year. It is not possible to identify offences relating only to the Portsmouth, South constituency.

The survey of crime affecting retailers and manufacturers announced by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 23 April 2002 will provide up-to-date information on crimes against retailers including estimates of losses incurred. The results are expected to be available next spring.

Yarl's Wood

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of those who were detained at Yarl's Wood are detained (a) in a prison and (b) in an immigration detention centre; and if he will make a statement; [66622]

(2) how many of those who were detained at Yarl's Wood (a) have subsequently been removed from the UK and (b) have since been granted refugee status or exceptional leave to remain; and if he will make a statement. [66623]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Information about the number of detainees who have been removed is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by an examination of individual case files.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the search of the Yarl's Wood site has been completed; and whether fatalities have been discovered. [66612]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Bedfordshire police completed their controlled clearance of the Yarl's Wood site on 24 May 2002. They are continuing with the forensic examination of the materials removed. To date, no evidence of fatalities has been found.

Hard Cases Fund

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications have (a) been made and (b) been successful to the hard cases fund; and if he will make a statement; [66609]

(2) whether the hard cases fund used to support asylum seekers in exceptional circumstances is cash limited; and if he will make a statement; [66610]

(3) what a grant made under the hard cases fund consists of; and if he will make a statement. [66611]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Hard case support is provided under section 4 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. This allows the Secretary of State to provide, or arrange for the provision of, facilities for the accommodation of certain classes of person. It is policy to provide full board accommodation. There is no facility to make any subsistence payments. It is open to anyone who believes they have a case for support under section 4 to apply for it.

It is not possible to provide information on the number of applications received and accepted as this information is not routinely collected and to produce accurate figures would require a manual examination of all files held by the relevant section of the National Asylum Support Service (NASS). This could be done only at disproportionate cost.

West Midlands Police

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of police officers in each ethnic group resigned from the West Midlands police force in each of the last two years. [45328]

Mr. Denham: I am sorry not to have provided an earlier answer. The information in the table has been provided by the chief constable of the West Midlands police (Sir Edward Crew QPM). The force has apologised for the delay in supplying it.

The information provided covers the last two full years for which it is available (1999–2000 and 2000–01). The table shows the number of officers from each ethnic group who resigned, the number of resignations as a proportion of the total number of officers in that ethnic group and the proportion of total resignations by ethnic group.

Resignations

	White	Black Caribbean	Black other	Indian	Chinese	Other	All

Crime and Policing (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the levels of crime and police resources in (a) North Wales, (b) Dyfed-Powys, (c) South Wales and (d) Gwent police areas in each year since 1997. [63966]

Mr. Denham: Crime in England and Wales fell by 21 per cent. between 1997 and 2000 (British Crime Survey 2001). Total recorded crime in Wales fell 16.5 per cent. between 1996–97 and 2000–01, taking account of changes in counting rules. Recorded crime in Wales since 1996–97 is set out in the table.

1996–97
Dyfed-Powys	19,282	–4.6
Gwent	38,296	14.8
North Wales	41,691	–1.8
South Wales	151,371	–0.8
1997–98
Dyfed-Powys	17,994	–4.3
Gwent	47,043	–0.8
North Wales	38,658	–7.9
South Wales	128,811	–4.2
1998–99 (new rules)[1]
Dyfed-Powys	24,588	–0.8
Gwent	58,738	–0.7
North Wales	43,848	–5.4
South Wales	134,820	–6.1
1999–2000
Dyfed-Powys	23,709	–3.6
Gwent	60,132	2.4
North Wales	44,606	1.7
South Wales	127,040	–5.8
2000–01
Dyfed-Powys	22,878	–3.5
Gwent	56,728	–5.7
North Wales	47,708	7.0
South Wales	111,131	–12.5

[1] Denotes crimes recorded using the expanded offence coverage and revised counting rules which came into effect on 1 April 1998.

Government revenue grant for Welsh police forces since 1997 is set out in the table. This is provision for all policing activity, including crime.

£ million

	Dyfed-Powys	Gwent	North Wales	South Wales
1997–98	42.1	56.5	60.8	137.3
1998–99	42.4	58.2	61.5	141.0
1999–2000	43.1	60.7	63.8	143.8
2000–01	45.8	63.3	66.5	147.3
2001–02	50.7	66.7	72.4	156.4
2002–03	52.3	68.7	74.0	161.9

Provision includes Home Office principal formula police grant, crime fighting fund and rural policing grant and Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions (DTLR) revenue support grant and national non-domestic rates.

Under DTLR floors and ceilings arrangements, all forces were guaranteed a minimum increase in police and DTLR grants of 2.3 per cent. for 2002–03. Floors and ceilings are not applied by the National Assembly for Wales, but to ensure North Wales benefited from a minimum increase of 2.3 per cent, the Home Secretary agreed to make a special payment to North Wales police authority of £362,000. Crime fighting fund and rural policing grants are outside this arrangement.

Figures for 2002–03 are not directly comparable with 2001–02 owing to the change in funding arrangements for the National Crime Squad/National Criminal Intelligence Service. On a like-for-like basis the comparable figures in 2001–02 for Dyfed-Powys, Gwent, North Wales and South Wales are £50.2 million, £65.8 million, £71.5 million and £154.3 million respectively.

Police Officers

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers there are in (a) the Lancashire constabulary, and (b) the Ribble Valley constituency. [63529]

Mr. Denham: The information has been provided by the Chief Constable of Lancashire (Mrs. Pauline Clare, CBE). I am told that it is not possible to provide the number of police officers in the Ribble Valley as the constituency is split between the central and eastern divisions and these divisions each cover other areas as well as parts of the constituency. Police numbers for both divisions are provided.

The table sets out police and civilian support staff strength for the force and for the central and eastern divisions for 31 January 2002. Lancashire constabulary had 69 more officers in January than in March 1997 and strength was at record levels.

	Number of police officers[1]	Number of civilian support staff[1]
Lancashire constabulary	3,316	[2]1,409
Central division	347	125
Eastern division	544	179

[1] Strength figures are full-time equivalents

[2] Civilian staff numbers are the latest available and are as at 30 September 2001

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were employed in England and Wales as at 1 June. [64834]

Mr. Denham: The latest available information on police numbers is for 31 January 2002 when there were 128,748 officers. This is 3,066 more than in March 2001 and is a record number of police officers.

The increase in police strength reflects the impact of the Crime Fighting Fund (CFF), which is enabling forces in England and Wales to recruit 9,000 officers over and above previous recruitment plans in the three years to March 2003.

Belmarsh Prison

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to ensure that keys are not taken out of HMP Belmarsh; what the cost was of the recent incident when keys left the prison; and if he will make a statement. [65253]

Hilary Benn: The Director of High Security Prisons has instructed the governor of Belmarsh, as well as the governors of the other high security prisons, to review the operation of their key management systems including the recently introduced key fob alarm system so as to ensure they prevent the removal of any keys from their prisons. Governors have been asked to report any possible deficiencies in the system, in order to enable required remedial action to be taken as soon as possible. The governor of Belmarsh has commissioned a disciplinary investigation into the recent incident at his prison.

The cost of replacing the locks necessary as a result of the key being taken out of Belmarsh would normally have been approximately £55,000, but as the specification for the key has been upgraded since original installation at Belmarsh, the opportunity was taken to install the upgraded key at this time. This work incurred an additional cost of approximately £18,000, bringing the total cost to £73,000.

New Prisons

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will pay insurance for new prisons in England and Wales. [65423]

Hilary Benn: Insurance for new prisons in England and Wales designed, constructed, managed and financed by the private sector will be paid for by the contractor as part of the contract price.

Prison Building

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the delay in signing the contract for the building of a privatised prison at Ashford (Middlesex). [66493]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 2 July 2002]: There has been a delay in signing the contract for the new prison at Ashford due to problems arising from insurance. Discussions are continuing between the contractor and the Prison Service with a view to solving these problems.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Civil Courts

Phil Sawford: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many courts he expects will (a) close and (b) be downgraded as a result of the proposals to modernise the civil courts; and which courts will be affected. [65417]

Yvette Cooper: Under the Courts and Tribunals Modernisation Programme the Court Service is developing new ways of delivering services to users. The current proposals involve introducing hearings in 37 locations which currently do not have a county court and closing one county court, Shoreditch.

The purpose of this programme is a strategic consideration of the existing network of courts to increase the number of places where cases are heard. The effect of this will be the establishment of primary hearing centres as the principle venues for hearings supported by a network of full and part-time local hearing venues ensuring access to justice across England and Wales. All those courts which will operate as local hearing venues will continue to provide hearings for their local communities. Detailed plans are still being developed, and will depend on the funding available following the Government's spending review. They will also be subject to public consultation.

The tables included in our report on "Modernising the Civil and Family Courts", show the detail of our proposal for the civil and family court network of the future. The report was published on 23 May and copies are in the Libraries of both Houses.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many courts will close to the public as a result of her proposals to modernise the civil courts. [65278]

Yvette Cooper: Under the Courts and Tribunals Modernisation Programme the court service is developing new ways of delivering services to users. This includes a strategic consideration of the existing network of courts. Current proposals involve holding part-time hearings at 37 new venues and closure of only one county court, Shoreditch. Detailed plans are still being developed, and will depend on the funding available following the Government's spending review. They will also be subject to public consultation.

Details of the emerging strategy for the court estate were published in the "Modernising the Civil and Family Courts" report which was published on 23 May 2002 and placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Criminal Justice (Timeliness Targets)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what further timeliness targets have been identified; which criminal justice departments are involved in this activity; and when an announcement will be made concerning the timeliness targets. [59340]

Yvette Cooper: We are working with the Home Office, Crown Prosecution Service and Youth Justice Board on targets for all adult defendants in the magistrates courts and for all defendants in the youth court, charged with crime. When these are settled an announcement will be made.

Youth Courts

Kate Hoey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans the Department has to reduce the number of trials in youth courts that are adjourned. [60325]

Yvette Cooper: The Lord Chancellor wrote to all youth panel chairs in May 1997, encouraging them to scrutinise all request for adjournment by questioning and probing the reasons advanced in support. In response to the call from Government to speed up case management in our courts the Magistrates' Association produced a training course on effective case management entitled "Can We Get On Please". The Youth Court Bench Book issued in September last year to all youth justices includes a section on case management, an adjournment guide and check list. Sample surveys of cases in the youth court suggest that the proportion of defendants who had the case against them adjourned fell from 78 per cent. in 1997 to 74 per cent. in 2001.

Kate Hoey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans the Department has to take measures to discourage the tactical not guilty plea in youth courts. [60328]

Yvette Cooper: My Department has been involved in an interagency review of measures to reduce delay in the magistrates courts generally. One of the outcomes of this review was that last year the Justices' Clerks' Society and the Law Society both reminded their members of the need to draw to the attention of defendants the fact that in reaching a sentence the bench will take into account a timely plea of guilty. Further work is under way in respect to the Auld review.

Voting Methods

Ian Lucas: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate she has made of the additional cost of holding an all-postal ballot in a nationwide election or referendum. [64311]

Yvette Cooper: No estimate has been made of the cost of holding a nationwide election or referendum by all-postal ballot.

Queen's Counsel

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many persons applied to take silk in the last five years; and what percentage were successful. [64831]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The table shows the total number of applicants for silk in the last five years and the percentage of total awards made (excluding Honorary Silk):

	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002
Total applicants	511	553	506	456	429
Total awards[1]	60	69	78	77	113
Percentage of applicants granted the award of Queen's Counsel	11.74	12.48	15.4	16.9	26.3

[1] Excl. Honorary Silk

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when feedback is given to persons who apply for silk who are not successful. [64833]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Applicants who have been unsuccessful in their application for silk may receive feedback at any time following publication of the list of successful candidates.

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the EU directives relating to his Department which have been (a) amended and (b) repealed in 2002. [64943]

Yvette Cooper: There have not been any.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the EU directives and regulations that have been implemented through his Department in 2002; and what was the cost of each to public funds. [64993]

Yvette Cooper: The Council Regulation (EC) No. 44–2001 of 22 December 2000 on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters entered into force on 1 March 2002. Its impact on public funds is minimal.

Freedom of Information

Norman Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on plans to allow access to information about the environmental activities of business; and if this will extend to state-owned interests. [61119]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

We will shortly be consulting the public on proposals to replace the Environmental Information Regulations 1992 (SI 3240) as amended in 1998 (SI 1447).

The new regulations will apply to public authorities and to some private bodies performing public administration functions in relation to the environment. They will include exemptions for certain categories of information, including information which is commercial in confidence.

When a public authority receives a request for information, that authority must decide whether they regard the environmental information requested as a matter of commercial confidentiality. If they are satisfied that an exemption applies, then under the new Environmental Information Regulations, they will also apply the public interest test.

Decisions as to whether information is commercial are subject to challenge in a court of law. In accordance with the new proposals the information commissioner will be able to consider whether public authority is following good practice and examine appeals against any refusal to supply information.

Family Proceedings (Contact Orders)

Margaret Moran: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list each target set for his Department to increase the number of contact orders in family proceedings for each year since 1997. [66044]

Jacqui Smith: I have been asked to reply.

The Department of Health has no such targets.

HEALTH

Northwick Park Hospital

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of improvements in service at Northwick Park hospital since 1999; and if he will make a statement. [48897]

Mr. Hutton: Several assessments have been made at Northwick Park recently by the winter and emergency services team (WEST), the patient environment and action team (PEAT) and the commission for health improvement (CHI).

WEST visited the trust on 13 December last year and were pleased to see a number of developments and innovation projects. These included:

The relocation and expansion of the medical assessment unit

The production of a performance improvement programme with local partners over the winter period leading to increased social care and acute medical bed capacity and a revised escalation policy

The development of rapid access specialist clinics

Improvements to bed management and site management.

The trust has recently received a London modernisation award for the cardiology team as a result of the work to reduce delayed transfers.

PEAT carried out its latest visit on 10 April this year and Northwick Park hospital has shown continued improvement in the hospital environment and now has green light status.

The CHI completed its report on 23 October 2001 and found many areas of good practice particularly around the multidisciplinary collaborative care team and the ambulatory care and diagnostic service.

Mount Vernon Hospital

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what inspections of Mount Vernon hospital have taken place by NHS agencies in the last five years; and if he will publish their conclusions. [48905]

Mr. Hutton: Since 1999, Mount Vernon hospital has received two visits from the patient environment and assessment team (PEAT) and a routine clinical governance review by the commission for health improvement (CHI).

The PEAT results were published for the August 2000, March 2001 and August 2001 inspections and are available under the Hillingdon Hospitals National Health Service Trust at: http://www.cleanhospitals.com/national_results/index.asp?menuID=nationalresults.

The CHI report will be published shortly.

Ambulances

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average response time for emergency ambulances was for each hospital in Lancashire in each year since 1997. [53107]

Jacqui Smith: Information about emergency calls to the ambulance service is not available specifically for each hospital in Lancashire. Information about Lancashire Ambulance National Health Service Trust and all other ambulance NHS trusts, about the number of emergency calls and the proportion of emergency calls resulting in an ambulance arriving at the scene of the reported incident within the Government's target response times is contained in the Department's Statistical Bulletin "Ambulance Services, England 2000–01". A copy of the bulletin is in the Library and available at www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0115.htm.

EC Decisions

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the effects of Commission Decision 18 of 27 June 2001, 2002/155/EC, OJ L54 of 25 February 2002, on current practice. [57897]

Mr. Hutton: Decision 183 of the Administrative Commission on social security for migrant workers concerned the interpretation of the provisions of Regulation (EEC) 1408–71 relating to maternity care. Its effect is that health care services required in connection with pregnancy or childbirth shall be regarded as an immediately necessary benefit, provided on the basis of EU Form E111, during a temporary stay in another member state. This applies up to the beginning of the 38 week of pregnancy, provided that the reasons for the temporary stay are other than medical. From the 38 week, EU Form E112 concerning travel specifically for medical care, will be required.

Current practice in the UK is to issue Form E112 for pregnant women wishing to receive ante-natal care or give birth in another member state. Guidance to this effect is contained in the Department's leaflet "Health Advice for Travellers" (available in the Library). We expect to issue a suitably revised version of the leaflet in the late summer.

In respect of women from other member states presenting in the UK, current UK practice is already broadly in line with Decision 183 but guidance to the NHS will be amended as necessary.

Mixed Sex Wards

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 14 May 2002, Official Report, column 624W, on mixed sex wards, how many mixed sex wards there are in the NHS. [60817]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not available in this format as compliance is measured on a trust by trust basis rather than on an individual ward level.

The reasons for measuring at the trust level is because hospital wards generally care for both men and women. To provide the required levels of privacy and dignity for patients, wards are split into single sex bays, or single rooms, or otherwise configured to provide adequate segregation of gender. It is the responsibility of each National Health Service trust to determine the most appropriate configuration to meet their specific requirements.

The Department has set three objectives which trusts must meet to be deemed compliant. These objectives refer to single sex accommodation and not single sex wards.

The target set is for three objectives to be achieved in 95 per cent. of trusts by December 2002.

The three objectives are:

To ensure that appropriate organisational arrangements are in place to secure good standards of privacy and dignity for hospital patients;

To achieve the Patient's Charter standard for segregated washing and toilet facilities across the NHS; and Provide safe facilities for patients in hospitals who are mentally ill which safeguard their privacy and dignity.

Trusts are required to re-assess and report their position annually. This information has been collected through health authorities. Separate validation programmes are undertaken to ensure that information provided is robust and reliable.

This is a very challenging target and we are working with the NHS to provide professional and technical support to ensure progress towards meeting this target continues.

Guidance on maintaining privacy and dignity was issued to the service in 1997.

NHS Foundation Hospitals

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date the first NHS foundation hospitals will be identified. [61443]

Mr. Lammy: The first wave of foundation trusts will be selected from among the cohort of national health service acute trusts that achieve three-stars in the performance ratings to be published in July. At this time we will publish a prospectus setting out how NHS trusts can apply for foundation status and the criteria that will be used to assess applications. Decisions on the first NHS Foundation Trusts will be made in the autumn, although their establishment will be subject to legislation.

Social Service Departments

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will amend the terms of the capacity grant paid to social service departments so that social services departments that perform well do not receive less than those with an average or poor performance; and if he will extend the time covered by the capacity grant; [63095]

(2) if he will review the terms of the capacity grant paid to social service departments to ease the situation with regard to delayed discharges from hospital; and if he will extend the present capacity grant from one year only. [63482]

Jacqui Smith: All local councils with social services responsibilities have received a share of this grant to improve services for those discharged from hospital. In 2001–2 and 2002–3 we have targeted extra resources on those councils with particularly severe problems in providing the range of services needed, and they have had more challenging targets for reducing delayed discharge. This approach has delivered over 1,000 hospital beds no longer occupied by people awaiting discharge by March 2002.

For the future we intend to legislate to make councils responsible for meeting the costs to the national health service of delayed discharges where councils' intervention could prevent the delay, drawing on the experience of similar approaches in Scandinavia. Local councils that meet their responsibilities in reducing delayed discharges will not be disadvantaged. They will have the money to pay for patients in the NHS if they are delayed inappropriately or in the community if they are discharged appropriately.

Intermediate Health Care Services

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent developments have taken place in the Greater London area in intermediate healthcare services. [63591]

Mr. Hutton: The thirty-two primary care trusts in London along with their social services departments and partner agencies are responsible for planning and commissioning intermediate care services. The local implementation teams for the older peoples national service framework are overseeing this process. Each care community in London has an intermediate care co-ordinator and most have a wide range of Intermediate care services, both beds and community places which they are working to ensure are co-ordinated to meet their local needs. A London wide network for these co-ordinators facilitates the sharing of good practise across London.

Twelve capital projects in London have between them been allocated £10 million as part of the £66 million capital funding for intermediate care in 2002–3 and 2003–4. These schemes will be developed over the next two years and will by April 2004 have significantly increased the number of intermediate care beds available across London.

NHS (Surveys)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to introduce surveys similar to the NHS inpatients' surveys conducted this year for (a) outpatients and (b) other NHS organisations; and if he will make a statement. [64482]

Mr. Lammy: The first inpatient survey, as announced in the NHS Plan, has been completed. It is anticipated that the roll-out programme presently being established, will be extended to cover outpatients. The programme will also provide information about the patient experience across primary care and within areas covered by national service frameworks.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital trusts have conducted NHS in-patients' surveys this year as part of the national programme outlined in the NHS Plan; what the total cost of this exercise has been; and if he will make a statement. [64483]

Mr. Lammy: 176 hospital trusts undertook the first national health service in-patients' survey earlier this year to directly inform local service development and improvement. In line with the policy on devolution, individual trusts were responsible for running and funding their own surveys and cost of the survey will vary from trust to trust. This was a local exercise and we do not have information on the total cost of the surveys nationally.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the results of the NHS in-patients' surveys conducted this year will be made available to the public; in what format they will be available; if patients will be able to compare ratings for their local hospital with other hospitals; and if he will make a statement. [64484]

Mr. Lammy: The in-patient survey results will be made available to the public over the summer. The Department is also publishing the next set of hospital performance ratings in the summer and this will enable patients to compare the performance of national health service trusts.

The in-patient survey results will be published locally by trusts and will be one of the features covered within the new patient prospectus, which will be published by primary care trusts in the autumn and delivered to every household.

NHS Employees

Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was received by health authorities in each year since 1988 as a consequence of agreements with financial services companies to market their products to NHS employees. [64312]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not held centrally.

National Service Framework

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will set out his proposals for the national service framework for eyes, ears, teeth and feet. [64513]

Jacqui Smith: The national service framework (NSF) programme currently includes frameworks for mental health (1999), coronary heart disease (2000) the (national) cancer plan (2000), older people (2001) and diabetes standards (2001). The diabetes NSF delivery strategy is due to be published in 2002 and work is in hand on NSF for renal services, children's services and long-term conditions.

These frameworks amount to a significant programme of quality improvement across the national health service. We have no plans to amend the programme at present.

Ashworth Hospital

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the terms of reference are for the education service within rehabilitation at Ashworth Hospital; and what targets have been established for the service. [64621]

Jacqui Smith: The terms of reference for the patients education department are:

> to develop a needs led service with regular curriculum reviews focusing on content and methods of delivery > to ensure the clinical agenda is met in education activities by strengthening its interface with the care services.

The rehabilitation service review completed in November 2000 recommended twenty-one action points, including the three key points outlined below, all of which have been implemented.

> Integration of the rehabilitation service with the clinical service
> Extension of on-ward rehabilitation service to meet individual patient needs.
> All rehabilitation services, including the education service, to become an integral part of the care programme approach.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many lecturers were retained by Ashworth Hospital in each of the last five years; and how many patients there were in Ashworth Hospital in each of the last five years. [64619]

Jacqui Smith: The number of lecturers retained by the hospital and numbers of patients in the hospital's care in each year for the last five years is shown in the tables. The data provided for the current year reflects the change in the lecturers' contracts, in line with National Health Service terms and conditions.

Year	Full time Lecturers	Sessional Lecturers	Patients
1997–98	9	11	440
1998–99	7	13	419
1999–2000	7	10	417
2000–01	5	7	408

Year	Full Time Lecturers	Part Time Lecturers	Patients
2001–02	5	5	402

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the timescale is of the rehabilitation service review at Ashworth Hospital. [64620]

Jacqui Smith: The rehabilitation service review was completed in November 2000 and its recommendations have been implemented in stages. The final stage, which brought the terms and conditions of the lecturers in the patient education department into line with the National Health Service, was implemented in December 2001.

Prescription Pre-payment Certificates

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the cost of allowing the purchase of the prescription pre-payment certificate on a monthly basis at one twelfth of the annual cost; and if he will make a statement. [64594]

Mr. Lammy: If prescription pre-payment certificates were available on a monthly basis at one twelfth of the current annual cost, the monthly rate would be little more than a single prescription charge, which would be attractive to people on all levels of income. In addition to the costs of collecting the payments and pursuing payment from patients who defaulted on their payments, there would be a considerable loss of charge income and a risk of very significant additional costs to the drugs bill. There would also be additional workloads for doctors if people who currently pay individual prescription charges sought prescriptions for medicines which they currently purchase.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the cost of including prescription pre-payment certificates within the scope of the health benefits low income scheme; and if he will make a statement. [64595]

Mr. Lammy: The cost would depend on the extent of the reduction in the pre-payment certificate (PPC) fee offered through the national health service low income scheme and the number of people who currently purchase PPCs who sought and were entitled to help in this way. Additionally, there could be a loss of charge income and significant additional costs to the drugs bill if people who currently pay individual charges obtained a PPC via this route for prescriptions for medicines and other items which they currently purchase.

Prescriptions

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received regarding people on low incomes and their ability to afford their prescriptions; and if he will make a statement; [64593]

(2) if he will review the arrangements for providing financial assistance in paying for necessary medication for patients; and if he will make a statement. [64596]

Mr. Lammy: As a result of wide ranging exemption arrangements in England, around 50 per cent. of the population do not pay prescription charges and around 85 per cent. of prescription items are dispensed free of charge. Financial assistance in paying for medication is available to recipients of income support, income based jobseeker's allowance, many recipients of working families' tax credit and disabled person's tax credit and people who hold a national health scheme low income scheme exemption certificate for full help.

We receive representations from time to time about the ability of people on low incomes to pay for their prescriptions, but we have no plans to change the arrangements other than in the light of changes to the tax credit arrangements.

Care Homes

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the new regulatory impact assessment for the national care standards for care homes for younger adults will be published. [65035]

Jacqui Smith: The regulatory impact assessment for care homes was placed in the Library on 21 January 2002.

Carers

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress towards implementing the national carers strategy requirement that general practitioners should have procedures in place to identify carers by April. [65105]

Jacqui Smith: Improvements in general practitioners (GPs) computer systems completed at the end of March 2002 mean that all GPs are able to record, as part of patient records, details of whether a person is a carer. They are encouraged to do so in order to facilitate the process of sign-posting carers to relevant services.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to publish the performance framework indicator for the number of carer assessments; if he will ensure that the assessments evaluate the proportion of carers assessed at the point of hospital discharge; and if he will make a statement. [65102]

Jacqui Smith: The performance indicator for 2000–01 for the number of informal carers receiving an assessment as a proportion of the total number of clients and carers receiving assessments was published in October 2001. Details of where assessments took place are not available.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the criteria against which progress in implementing the national carers strategy is monitored; by what means progress is reported to the House; and when progress was last reported. [65101]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 9 July 2001, Official Report, column 344W. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Public Health (Ms Blears) summarised recent progress on implementing the national strategy for carers in a debate on 12 June 2002, Official Report, column 273WH.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the timetable for the establishment of a fund to support the development of carers services under the Carers and Disabled Children Act 2000. [65056]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 17 June 2002, Official Report, column 152W.

Primary Care Trusts

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many primary care trusts had chief executives in post on 1 April, who were professionally qualified as general practitioners, dentists, pharmacists or opticians. [54714]

Mr. Hutton: Of the primary care trust chief executives in post on 1 April 2002, 12 were professionally qualified as general practitioners, dentists, pharmacists or opticians.

Neurology

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 24 June 2002, Official Report, column 740W, regarding long-term health, if he will invite the (a) Neurological Alliance and (b) Association of British Neurologists to participate in the external reference group; and if he will make a statement. [65127]

Jacqui Smith: Nominations for membership of the external reference group (ERG) have been received from a wide range of stakeholders. We will consider these before appointing the group later this year. The multi-disciplinary nature of ERGs is the key to developing national service frameworks that deliver realistic improvements in services so members of the group are expected to be drawn from health and social care professionals and managers, service users and carers, voluntary organisations and representatives from other partner agencies.

NHS Direct

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many telephone calls have been received by NHS Direct from people living in Portsmouth; and if he will make a statement. [65369]

Mr. Lammy: Information about calls from people living in Portsmouth has only recently been collected. The NHS Direct Hampshire & Isle of Wight site handled around 28,000 calls from people living in Portsmouth in the six months to 1 April 2002.

Mental Health

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the need for additional qualified staff to implement proposals in the draft Mental Health Bill; and what measures are being put in place to ensure that an adequate number of people with the necessary experience and qualifications are available. [65452]

Jacqui Smith: The financial and human resource consequences of the proposals in the draft Mental Health Bill have been estimated and are being considered as part of the spending review process.

We are acting to increase the workforce available generally to mental health services. A workforce action team (WAT) was established to look at workforce, education and training issues of the mental health workforce. A mental health care group work force team has been established to take forward the recommendations of the WAT report.

Now that the draft Mental Health Bill has been published, we will take forward plans to work with the professional bodies and other key national organisations on the implementation of the Bill, including workforce matters.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many lay members of mental health tribunals had previously been users of mental health services. [65795]

Jacqui Smith: Members of the mental health review tribunal are judicial officers appointed by my noble Friend the Lord Chancellor. No information is held on whether applicants have or have not been users of mental health services.

Radiographers

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to improve retention of radiographers in the NHS in London; and if he will make a statement; [60873]

(2) what estimate he has made of the impact on the NHS of resignations of radiographers in the Greater London region in the last year. [60872]

Mr. Hutton: The NHS plan set targets to increase the NHS workforce. This will include radiographers throughout the country and within London. We recognise that a well-motivated workforce, able to balance their work and domestic responsibilities, will provide a better service to patients.

The regional co-ordinator been seconded from the service since November 2000, to take forward the recruitment, retention and returner initiatives in the field of radiography and the other allied health professions (AHP).

In 1999 Ministers launched the Improving Working Lives Standard (IWL) designed to enable staff to balance their home and work responsibilities as part of this work. A combined AHP and healthcare scientist retention campaign is currently being developed and will be launched in the summer. In addition, the HR strategy for AHPs was accompanied by a booklet called "Building Careers". The booklet illustrates the varied careers available to staff within AHP and the vital contribution they make to patient and client care.

The Department does not collect information on the number of resignations of radiographers both in London and the rest of the country.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter to him dated 3 May from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. A Starkie. [61689]

Mr. Milburn: A reply was sent on the 2 July.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 15 May from the right honourable Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mrs. Greenhalgh. [66206]

Mr. Milburn: A reply was sent on 2 July.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letters from the honourable Member for Maidenhead of 19 February and 25 April regarding a constituent, Mrs. Preston on the MMR vaccine and autism. [66346]

Ms Blears [holding answer 2 July 2002]: A reply was sent on 3 July.

Free Influenza Injections

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many free influenza injections have been given to pensioners in each quarter since the scheme was launched; and if he will make a statement. [65583]

Jacqui Smith: Flu immunisations are carried out between October and December each year.

In 2000–01 4,965,370 aged 65 and over received their free influenza immunisation and 5,113,036 received their immunisation in 2001–02.

Disability Equipment Services

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department has taken in response to the recommendations made in the Audit Commission's Fully Equipped report on the provision of disability equipment services for older and disabled people; and if he will make a statement. [66263]

Jacqui Smith: Following up its 2000 report 'Fully Equipped', the Audit Commission published 'Fully Equipped 2002' on 27 June 2002. The latter recognises the steps the Government took in response to the first. As an initial response to the new report, I am asking the national support team for the integration of community equipment services to review its action plan in the light of the Commission's recommendations and to produce commissioning guidelines for community equipment services by the autumn. Since the first report was issued the process of modernising hearing aid services has progressed to the point that about a third of the country will be benefiting from a modernised service, including the provision of digital hearing aids, by the end of this financial year. Work is also underway to spread good practice across the country's wheelchair services.

The report affords a welcome opportunity to: remind health and social services of the importance of orthotic, prosthetic, community equipment, wheelchair and audiology services; encourage commissioners of these services to act upon the recommendations; and highlight the importance of using appropriately the additional funding the Government made available for community equipment services.

Work-place Health

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the role of the Health Department Agency will be with respect to workplace health. [66686]

Ms Blears: The health development agency (HDA) is a special health authority, working to improve the health of people and communities in England, in particular, to reduce health inequalities. In partnership with others, it gathers evidence of what works, advises on standards and develops the skills of all those working to improve people's health.

Employment is a major health determinant. The focus for this year's work on employment and health will be exploring the evidence for the health impacts of changes in work status such as unemployment, incapacity, or retirement.

A website for supporting standards for workplace health interventions and well-being is currently being constructed by the HDA. The site will provide a tool for employers and managers of businesses and public sector organisations to address workplace health in a sustainable manner based on the needs of staff and the capacity of the organisation. Furthermore, the site will act as a portal to other workplace health-related websites spanning human resource and general management, equality issues, occupational health, health and safety, environmental impact and corporate social responsibility. The website will go live during 'Health and Safety Week' in October 2002.

The HDA works closely with the Department of Work and Pensions, and has been asked to act in an advisory capacity on specific projects. The HDA also advises the Department and the Health and Safety Executive as required on public health issues.

Cancer

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support is given to cancer patients during their treatment. [66359]

Ms Blears: As part of the implementation of the NHS Cancer Plan we are developing a supportive care strategy. The strategy will ensure that people affected by cancer are able to access the right professional support, treatment and help, from when cancer is first suspected through to death and into bereavement. As part of the strategy, the National Institute of Clinical Excellence (NICE) has been asked to develop and publish evidence-based guidance on supportive and palliative care. The initial NICE findings will be available from autumn 2002 and will include guidance on psychological and social support for patients and carers.

University Hospital Coventry and Warwickshire NHS Trust

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement as to whether the NHS will be making an enhancement to the pension arrangements for the chief executive of the University Hospital Coventry and Warwickshire NHS Trust when he retires; and how much this will amount to. [46820]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 10 April 2002]: The chief executive of the University Hospital Coventry and Warwickshire National Health Service Trust resigned voluntarily and I am advised that the trust will not be making an enhancement to the pension arrangements.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether pressure was put on the chief executive of the University Hospital Coventry and Warwickshire NHS Trust by (a) Ministers and (b) the NHS executive to resign. [46823]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 10 April 2002]: I am advised by the University Hospital Coventry and Warwickshire National Health Service Trust and officials at the NHS West Midlands regional office that the chief executive of the trust resigned voluntarily.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement as to whether the NHS will be paying (a) redundancy pay, (b) compensation and (c) an ex-gratia payment to the Chief Executive of the University Hospital Coventry and Warwickshire NHS Trust when he retires; and how much this will amount to. [46819]

Mr. Lammy*[holding answer 10 April 2002]:* The chief executive of the University Hospitals Coventry and Warwickshire NHS Trust is an employee of that organisation. The terms of his leaving his employment are for the trust board to determine within employment law and with regard to the Department's guidance.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement as to whether the Chief Executive of the University Hospital Coventry and Warwickshire NHS Trust will be offered another post within the NHS following his retirement. [46821]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 10 April 2002]: Executive appointments within the national health service are a matter for the employing body concerned. All appointments should be made on merit and should take into account relevant factors that might bear upon the capability of candidates.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost to date is in (a) salaries paid, (b) management costs and (c) other related costs arising out of the suspension of consultants at the University Hospital Coventry and Warwickshire NHS Trust. [46818]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 10 April 2002]: The total cost incurred by the University Hospitals Coventry and Warwickshire NHS Trust in regard to the suspension of Mr. Barros D'Sa is £219,563. This cost includes elements relating to the salary of the suspended consultant, costs of locum cover, the setting up of an Inquiry Panel in accordance with HC(90)9, legal and court costs and mediation meeting costs.

The approximate cost incurred by the trust in regard to the suspension of Miss Briony Ackroyd to date is £467,387 based on legal costs, locum costs and salary.

The approximate cost incurred by the trust due to the suspension of Dr R K Mattu is £57,000 based on legal costs, locum costs and salary.

Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who the members of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation are; and what their institutional and commercial affiliations are. [53896]

Ms Blears [holding answer 2 May 2002]: The information requested is available in the Library.

Smallpox Vaccine

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he was informed, at the time of signing the contract with Powderject, that (a) the manufacturing would be sub-contracted to a further company and (b) it would be undertaken outside the UK. [54659]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 8 May 2002]: Yes. The Department knew in advance of awarding the contract that PowderJect would not be the direct manufacturer and that the vaccine would be manufactured in Germany by PowderJect's partner company, Bavarian Nordic.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons the Powderject contract for smallpox vaccines was handled as a matter of national security; and if he will make a statement. [54655]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 8 May 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for North Durham (Mr. Jones) on 15 May 2002, Official Report, column 727.

Public Appointments

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken to encourage disabled people to stand for public appointments. [56147]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 13 May 2002]: The Government are committed to encouraging people from all sections of society to participate in public life, particularly those from under-represented groups. Specific goals and objectives to increase the number of disabled candidates appointed to public bodies which come under the auspices of the Department were included in 'Public Bodies: Opening up Public Appointments 2002–2005' a copy of which is in the Library.

Mental Health (Young People)

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the Secretary of State for the Home Department to discuss child and adolescent mental health services for young offenders; and if he will make a statement on future mental health provision for young offenders. [56322]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 14 May 2002]: Ministers last met to discuss child and adolescent mental health services at a bi-lateral ministerial meeting on 6 February. The main focus of provision is the ongoing programme to improve the availability and quality of child and adolescent mental health services in accordance with the national development strategy, backed by £85 million of targeted funding, 1999- 2002. The aim is for all local services to be able to respond appropriately to the range of mental health demands from young people, including those arising within the youth justice system, for example through the work of youth offending teams. Good progress is also being made to provide (by means of conversion of an existing facility) a new 24-bedded unit for young people with severe mental health problems requiring treatment in conditions of security. This is part of new arrangements for the national commissioning of adolescent forensic mental health services, including also central revenue support for the two existing national health service units and the assessment of further requirements for secure places. Mental health provision for young offenders will also be considered under the relevant strand of the planned children's national service framework on which work has recently started.

Folic Acid

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Food Standards Agency will report its findings on the results of mandatory fortification of flour with folic acid. [57822]

Ms Blears [holding answer 21 May 2002]: The Food Standards Agency Board considered the issue of folic acid and the prevention of disease at their open meeting on 9 May 2002. A note of the discussion has been placed on the agency website at www.food.gov.uk/multimedia/pdfs/paperfsa020601.pdf.

The agency will shortly write to UK health ministers with advice arising from the discussion.

Psychiatric Care

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to encourage people to train in psychiatric care. [59573]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 24 May 2002]: The mental health care group work force team has set up a sub-group on recruitment and retention. The purpose of the sub-group is to encourage more people to work in mental health.

We also encourage medical staff to develop more rounded experience, and include an element of psychiatry in their training. Psychiatry is already a core part of the training of trainee doctors. The requirements for the new social work qualification, being introduced in 2003, requires students to undertake specific learning and assessment in a number of key areas including mental health.

Ashford and St. Peter's Hospitals NHS Trust

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much extra funding will be made available to the Ashford and St. Peter's Hospitals NHS Trust to enable it to implement its franchise plan; [66491]

(2) how many extra (a) beds and (b) staff will be provided by the implementation of the Ashford and St. Peter's Hospitals NHS Trust franchise plan. [66490]

Ms Blears [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The franchise plan for Ashford and St. Peter's Hospitals National Health Service Trust does not make any commitment to extra staff and beds. The plan makes proposals for improving recruitment at the trust to ensure existing vacancies are filled. It also states that a review of the provision of services between the two sites will take place to ensure resources are used effectively.

No additional funding will be provided centrally to the trust to implement the plan.

Ashford (Middlesex) Hospital

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when Ashford (Middlesex) Hospital accident and emergency department was downgraded to an emergency department. [66489]

Ms Blears [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The merger of Ashford and St. Peter's hospitals in 1998 to create the Ashford and St. Peter's hospitals national health service trust provided an opportunity to review clinical service provision between the two hospitals. This was necessary to ensure the safe delivery of services in the light of internal and external priorities, such as junior doctors' hours, increasing sub-specialisation and clinical governance. For this reason the decision was taken, after public consultation, to treat all surgical and trauma emergencies at St. Peter's hospital and maintain an emergency unit at Ashford hospital. This came into effect on 2 October 2000.

Teenage Pregnancy

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the teenage pregnancy rate in Burnley was at the latest date for which figures are available. [65545]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Pike, dated 3 July 2002:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question asking what the teenage pregnancy rate was in Burnley at the latest date for which figures are available. I am replying in his absence.(65545)

The latest available figures are for 2000. In that year the under 18 conception rate for Burnley CD was 49.0 per 1,000 female population aged 15–17.

TRANSPORT

Railways

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the ORR with regard to enforcement orders following breaches of the network licence; and if he will make a statement. [66605]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The Regulator has made no such representations. The Regulator has identified a number of areas where Railtrack is currently not complying with the requirements of Condition 7 of its Network Licence. These are detailed in his statement published on 27 June 2002 on the proposed acquisition of Railtrack PLC by Network Rail Limited. The statement explains what regulatory action is being taken in respect of each area of non-compliance and sets out the Regulator's expected approach to the regulation of Network Rail.

London Underground

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much (a) Metronet and (b) its sponsors are due to be paid in (i) development costs, (ii) risk capital costs, (iii) financial and legal advice costs and (iv) bank and loan insurance costs by London Underground upon signing of contracts; what independent assessment (A) has been and (B) will be made of the validity of Metronet's financial claims; whether Tube Lines and its sponsors will be entitled to further payments beyond money it is due to receive in success fees; and if he will make a statement. [64684]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 27 June 2002]: London Underground will make payments to the infrastructure companies in line with the service they deliver. Both the preferred bidders, Metronet and Tube Lines Group, have developed their bids on the basis that over the lifetime of the contracts they will recover the costs they incur in enhancing and maintaining the Tube, plus associated finance costs, including a return on their direct financial investment—the level of this return will depend on the level of service delivered. Their bids also allow for their recovering the sums they have invested in developing their bids. This is perfectly normal commercial practice. Such sums include costs incurred directly by the bidders, costs associated with raising finance and fees paid to their financial, legal and other advisers.

These costs will be verified by London Underground before they can be recovered by the bidders. The Government would risk undermining London Underground's commercial position if they were to prejudge the results of this verification by estimating the level of such costs that might ultimately be recovered.

Green Minister

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who his Department's green Minister is; when they (a) have attended and (b) plan to attend meetings of the Green Ministers' Committee; what the outcomes of meetings were for his Department's activities; and if he will make a statement. [65990]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster) on 26 June 2002, Official Report, column 882W. I am the Department for Transport's Green Minister and was appointed to ENV(G) on 24 June 2002.

Following the General Election in June 2001, the previously informal Green Ministers Committee was upgraded to a Cabinet Sub-Committee of ENV and it is established practice under exemption two of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. Therefore I cannot relate progress or outcomes by my Department to anything that has been discussed.

Track Renewals

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research (a) has been conducted and (b) is planned (i) by and (ii) for his Department and the Strategic Rail Authority on the impact on track renewals of (A) increased train weights and (B) increased volume of rail traffic on the network; and if he will make a statement. [66308]

Mr. Jamieson: This is an operational matter for the railway industry primarily Railtrack with the train operating companies, freight operating companies and the rolling stock companies. The industry created in May 2001 the Wheel Rail Interface Steering Authority (WRISA) to provide a cross industry forum to advise on matters such as this.

Roadworks

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information has been collated, (a) by and (b) for (i) his Department and (ii) the Highways Agency regarding roadworks taking place over the next 12 months; what the cost is of each contract; and if he will make a statement. [66212]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department does not collate information on local authority schemes.

Work on the motorway and trunk road network is the responsibility of the Highways Agency. Small scale works are delivered by the Agency's managing agents and term maintenance contractors. Larger works are delivered through individual contracts but because these are still being planned in detail, the Agency cannot say how many individual contracts there will be nor what the value of those contracts will be.

But overall, in the financial year 2002–03 the Agency plans to spend some £740 million on maintaining the motorway and trunk road network. This compares to £692 million last year, which included the resurfacing of 1793 lane kilometres of carriageway and remedial works on 487 bridges. A further £242 million will be spent this year on schemes to make better use of the existing network. This compares to £190 million last year, which included completion of 164 safety local network management schemes.

In addition, the Agency will spend some £700 million in 2002–03 on delivering the Government's Targeted Programme of Improvements.

NATS

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what services NATS provides to aircraft outside controlled airspace. [65739]

Mr. Jamieson: Outside controlled airspace there is no requirement on NATS to provide a control service, but certain services may be available including:

1. Flight Information Services providing aeronautical information relevant to the safe conduct of the flight, including meteorological information and the status of navigation aids provided by NATS;

2. Radar Information Services providing pilots with information on the position of other aircraft;

3. Radar Advisory Services providing information on actions to avoid potential conflicts; and

4. NATS also supports emergency related services operated by the Ministry of Defence and participates in the Lower Airspace Radar Service (LARS).

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the right of NATS to refuse to provide IFR to an aircraft outside controlled airspace while charging for that service. [65740]

Mr. Jamieson: Under the terms of its licence from the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA), NATS is not required to provide the full range of air navigation services from all units, and issues such as capacity, radar performance and weather may influence the ability of controllers to provide a service.

10-Year Plan

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the priority projects in the 10 year plan which he estimates will be completed by 2010. [65738]

Mr. Jamieson: The 10 Year Plan makes clear that decisions on individual projects will flow from the plans and programmes of a range of delivery agencies, subject to the normal decision-making and appraisal processes.

Roads (At-Work Accidents)

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will request the Health and Safety Commission to include among its targets contained in the Revitalising Health and Safety strategy a requirement to reduce the number of at work accidents each year on the roads. [66668]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government and the Health and Safety Commission set out long term strategic targets for health and safety in the Revitalising Health and Safety Statement of June 2000, after extensive consultation. The targets are deliberately broad based covering all occupational health risks, other than work related traffic accidents. These are included within the Governments Road Safety Strategy which aims to reduce all deaths and serious injuries on our roads by 40 per cent. by 2010. There are no plans to revise the Revitalising targets at the current time.

Road Safety

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the trend of (a) fatalities and (b) serious injuries in traffic accidents in towns and cities over the last five years. [65637]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The provisional results for 2001 indicate that there were 1,409 deaths on roads in Britain with a speed limit of 40mph or less, which generally indicates they are in built-up areas. This was five less than in 2000 but more than in 1998 and 1999, and 61 (4.1 per cent.) less than in 1997. The number of serious injuries on such roads has reduced each year since 1997. The 22,742 serious injuries in 2001 was 14 per cent. less than in 1997.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent research he has carried out with regard to the potential costs and benefits of the use of 20 mph zones in urban areas; and if he will make a statement. [66626]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The financial cost of a 20mph zone is dependent on the size of the zone and the type of traffic calming measures implemented to achieve the desired speed reduction.

A TRL report, "Review of traffic calming schemes in 20mph zones" (TRL Report 215), published in 1996, found that the average annual accident frequency fell by around 60 per cent. Child pedestrian and child cyclist accidents fell by around 70 per cent. and 48 per cent. respectively. This gives an overall reduction of 67 per cent. for all child accidents.

In addition, a well designed 20mph zone can be instrumental in improving the quality of life for local people by protecting them from inappropriate speed.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what control the Government have over the sale of the CTRL to LCR; and if he will make a statement. [66501]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The Government have no controls with which they could require the sale of Railtrack's interests in CTRL to London and Continental Railways (LCR) and Network Rail. They do have various controls over LCR's financing arrangements some of which are relevant to the sale.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of section 1 of the CTRL is complete; on what date it is (a) due to be and (b) expected to be (i) completed and (ii) open; and what its expected final cost is. [66500]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Section 1 is currently 87 per cent. complete. It is expected to be completed in September 2003, and should be ready and able to run Eurostar services in October 2003, which is within schedule.

It is expected to be completed within its £1.9 billion budget.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the estimated value is of the Channel tunnel rail link owned by Railtrack. [66600]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: London and Continental Railways (LCR) and Network Rail have made a combined offer of £375 million for Railtrack's interests in the Channel tunnel rail link. This is the estimated value which has emerged from negotiations between the parties.

Network Rail

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the funding necessary to operate the railway network as a going concern; and if he will provide a breakdown. [64366]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 25 June 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the Statement made to the House by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, on 27 June 2002 Official Report, column 971, about Network Rail.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he was notified by the Office of Fair Trading that the Network Rail proposal will not be referred to the Competition Commission. [66536]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The Office of Fair Trading has yet to put its recommendation to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry as to whether or not the Network Rail proposal should be referred to the Competition Commission.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what mechanism the board Network Rail will be held accountable to the members of Network Rail. [66541]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Network Rail will be run on a commercial basis and members will have rights similar to shareholders. These include approving the appointment of directors and holding them to account, ensuring high standards of corporate governance, receiving regular reports on company performance and attending general meetings.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what date the bridging loans for Network Rail will (a) commence and (b) are due for repayment. [66551]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 13 of the Statutory Contingent Liability minute laid before Parliament on 27 June 2002.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the budgeted level of funding available to Network Rail from the Government to cover future liabilities and unexpected expenditures. [66599]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made to the House by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State on 27 June 2002, Official Report, columns 971–73.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the proposed modifications to the notes in connection with the Network Rail proposal; and if he will make a statement on the note holders passing a resolution to authorise the modification of the terms and conditions of the notes. [66538]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: This is a matter for Network Rail.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the proposed modifications to the bonds in connection with the Network Rail proposal; and if he will make a statement on each class of bondholder passing a resolution to authorise the modification of the terms and conditions of the bonds. [66537]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: These are matters for Network Rail.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the banks involved in the bridging finance for Network Rail; [66546]

(2) if he will publish the terms of the loans associated with the bridging finance for Network Rail. [66547]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The banks providing bridging finance for Network Rail are listed in the annex to the draft comfort letter entitled "Network Rail Bridging Finance", which was presented to the House on 27 June with a minute detailing non-statutory contingent liabilities in support of Network Rail Ltd. Details of the bridge financing are a matter for Network Rail.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the organisation structure of Network Rail. [66548]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: This is a matter for Network Rail.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the status of railway safety will be under the Network Rail structure. [66640]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 3 July 2002]: Railway Safety would be acquired by Network Rail from Railtrack Group PLC. It is Network Rail's intention to hold Railway Safety as a separate subsidiary pending its replacement by the new rail industry safety body. The Rail Regulator is now consulting on the establishment of such a body.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will be publishing a revised version of (a) the SRA plan and (b) the 10-year plan to take into account the change from Railtrack to Network Rail. [66550]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Our Directions and Guidance to the SRA require it to publish an updated Strategic Plan in January 2003. We are intending to publish a progress report on the 10-year plan in due course.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the new (a) statutory powers and (b) other powers that he has over the management of the rail network under the Newtrack Rail arrangements. [66595]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will have no new statutory or other powers over the management of the rail network as a result of Network Rail's proposals.

Railtrack

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he authorised the change in control of Railtrack; and if he will publish the authorisation. [66604]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Network Rail has not yet asked my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to authorise the change of control.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assurances have been given that the existing employment rights, including pension rights, of employees of Railtrack plc will be safeguarded by the sale of Railtrack plc to Network Rail. [66498]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Network Rail has stated publicly that the existing terms and conditions, including pension rights, of Railtrack PLC employees will be safeguarded.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish information required by Railtrack Group in order to enable it to identify whether adjusting post balance sheet events have occurred that would require amendments to the figures reported on 27 June by Railtrack Group. [66533]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: This is a matter for Railtrack Group and its auditors, taking account of the sale and purchase agreements entered into by Railtrack Group with Network Rail and with London and Continental Railways (LCR).

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether Railtrack Group is required to purchase section one of the CTRL at its net cost. [66530]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Railtrack Group is obliged to purchase section one of the CTRL at the actual out-turn construction cost including financing costs and net of Government grants received.

Strategic Rail Authority

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the SRA's expenditure for the last year, including their provisions for liabilities and charges and (b) the SRA's budget for 2002–03, including budgeted provisions for liabilities and charges. [66597]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The SRA's expenditure for 2001–02 will be set out in its annual report which will be laid before the House in due course. The Government's 2002–03 spending plans for railways are summarised in the 2002 annual report for the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions.

Halcrow

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what fee was paid to Halcrow for the SWARMMS report. [66755]

Mr. Jamieson: The total cost of the London to South West and South Wales Multi-Modal Study (SWARMMS) is £1.812 million (excluding VAT). This figure includes the cost of producing the final report.

Rural Transport

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Government have met their target to have a rural transport partnership in every rural county in England. [66823]

Mr. Jamieson: A rural transport partnership has now been established by the Countryside Agency in every predominantly rural county and unitary authority in England.

Risk Assessments

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans the Government have (a) to ensure that UK companies comply with the terms of the European framework directive 89/391 and (b) to remove the proviso, as far as is reasonably practicable in respect of risk assessments from the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974. [66683]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The Government will continue to take a range of measures to ensure compliance with the framework directive, including guidance on the legislation implementing the directive, and enforcement of the legislation in proportion to risks to people's health and safety.

The term

> 'so far as is reasonably practicable' is key to the risk control system embodied in UK health and safety legislation. The Government have no plans to remove it.

Car Use

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to encourage workers to make less use of their cars to travel to work. [66866]

Mr. Jamieson: In February 2001 we awarded 111 bursaries to 84 local authorities at a cost of £9 million over three years, to fund travel plan co-ordinators to work with schools and businesses on the development of local measures to reduce reliance on the car. We have also set up a programme of free site-specific advice from a panel of consultants to assist schools, businesses and other organisations in developing their travel plans. We also commission guides, seminars and other forms of advice and support. In addition local authorities have powers under the Transport Act 2000 to introduce a levy on work place parking, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State.

Public Transport Costs

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the average cost of (a) community transport and (b) public bus services was in (i) 1991, (ii) 1994, (iii) 1997 and (iv) 2000, broken down by region. [66786]

Mr. Jamieson: Information on community transport schemes is not held centrally.

On public local bus services the average cost to the passenger, in terms of pence per journey in each of the years, in each Government Office Region, is summarised.

	Pence per passenger journey[1]
Government region	2000–01	1997–98	1994–95	1991–92
London	50	50	50	46

Committee Mandates

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, Local Government and the Regions what the mandate of the Advisory Committee on the development and reconversion of regions is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if he will list the items currently under its consideration; if he will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [56770]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 15 May 2002]: I have been asked to reply.

The mandate for this Committee is set out in Article 48 of Council Regulation (EC) 1260/1999 laying down general provisions on the Structural Funds. The Committee acts as a Management Committee and deals with issues arising from the implementation of the Structural Funds and particularly the European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) under 12/60/1999 and related Regulations. The Committee is also mandated to act as a consultative committee to establish and revise the list of areas eligible under Objective 2, discuss the Community Support Frameworks and Single Programming Documents for Objectives 1 and 2, and discuss issues arising from the allocation of technical assistance to the programmes.

The Committee has met nine times over the last 12 months. My Department, which has co-ordinating responsibility for the Structural Funds in the UK, sends one representative to the Committee. Other Departments with responsibility for the ERDF, and the Devolved Administrations, are also invited. On average the UK's representation is three officials. It is not possible to calculate the cost to public funds of the Committee without incurring disproportionate cost.

The Committee is currently discussing a range of issues linked to implementation of the Structural Funds, particularly simplification of administration while retaining accountability and transparency.

Together with member states, the Commission is currently conducting a review to bring existing legislation on the conduct of comitology committees into line with Council Decision 1999/468/EC, to

> "simplify the requirements for the exercise of implementing powers conferred on the Commission".

As an obligation to this decision, the Commission undertook to publish an annual report on the working of the Committees. The first report was deposited in the Libraries of both Houses on 26 February (COM(2001)783 Final).

As part of the review process, the UK Government have encouraged the Commission to produce and maintain an electronic database of every comitology Committee, its agendas and recent actions, to be accessible through its web site.

Housing Benefits

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints about housing benefits were received by the local government ombudsman in 2001–02, broken down by area. [64122]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

Housing benefit complaints received by the local government ombudsman in 2001–02 broken down by Government regions were;

North West—252

North East—27

Yorkshire and Humber—263

East Midlands—96

London—1,802

East of England—84

West Midlands—268

South East—105

South West—99

Total—2,996.

The distribution of these cases between offices of the local government ombudsman was as follows:

London—1,097

Coventry—1,050

York—849.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Campaigners for Fair Trade

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations she has received from Campaigners for Fair Trade since 19 June; and if she will make a statement. [64559]

Ms Hewitt*[holding answer 3 July 2002]:* The creation of a free and fair trading system is at the heart of the Government's international trade policy. My Department has received 242 representations on fair trade since 19 June.

General Agreement on Trade in Services

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her Department's policy is on the inclusion of water in the General Agreement on Trade in Services. [64718]

Ms Hewitt: In principle, my Department believes that no service sector should be excluded from the General Agreement on Trade in Services a priori. This includes water collection, purification and distribution services. Water as a natural resource is not a service and is not covered by the GATS.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the guarantee put up by the ECGD for investment in the power generating sector (a) was used fully, (b) was recovered by the ECGD, (c) is still owed to the ECGD and (d) is counted as foreign debt; and which countries have had that debt in each year since 1992–93. [63096]

Ms Hewitt: The following table lists for financial years 1992–93 onwards; the countries where ECGD has supported projects recorded in the civil power and civil energy sectors, the original value of the guarantee(s), the amount of those guarantee(s) still at risk, and claims outstanding in respect of those projects. Amounts at risk are not owing to ECGD but represent amounts which have not yet fallen due for payment.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what work is being carried out by (a) the Government and (b) external organisations on behalf of the Government concerning the Export Credits Guarantee Department that quantifies the value of contracts entered into by the ECGD on (i) an option pricing approach and (ii) a pricing model using the approach commonly used to price credit derivatives. [66552]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 3 July 2002]: With a view to following best practice, ECGD reviews regularly its approach to measuring, modelling and pricing risk, with advice from external organisations where appropriate, but has no plans to engage in work corresponding to the areas specified in the question.

Arms Exports

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the level is of debt owed by developing countries to the Export Credits Guarantee Department as a result of UK defence-related sales. [62037]

Ms Hewitt: For business underwritten by ECGD since 1991, the following amounts are outstanding in respect of ECGD claims payments in cases involving exports of defence equipment. Information on claims on business underwritten before 1991 is not held on a sectoral basis. Amounts outstanding on Algeria and Indonesia have been rescheduled through the Paris Club.

Market	Claims Outstanding (as at 31 March 2002)
Indonesia	488

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations have been made to her Department regarding the increases of national debt in (a) India and (b) Pakistan due to the importation of weapons from the United Kingdom in (i) each year since 1999 and (ii) January to June 2002. [65431]

Nigel Griffiths: The Department of Trade and Industry's Export Control Organisation has received representations regarding the export of arms and other items controlled for strategic reasons to India and Pakistan from a number of different sources, including Members of Parliament and the general public. It is not possible to say whether any of these concerned increases in national debt in India and Pakistan, as the information requested is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she takes to assess conformity with the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports during the evaluation of arms export licence applications. [65432]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

The Government announced the consolidation of the UK national export licensing criteria with those in the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports in a statement by my right hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Peter Hain) on 26 October 2000, Official Report, column 199–203W. We assess all applications on a case-by-case basis against these consolidated criteria. In doing so, we take account of reliable evidence, including, for example, reporting from diplomatic posts, relevant reports by international bodies, intelligence and information from open sources and non-governmental organisations. In addition, the EU Code of Conduct requires member states to inform partners of licence refusals under the EU Code through the circulation of denial notifications. The code requires member states to consult partners before approving a licence for a transaction refused by those partners. This helps further to ensure conformity within the EU when assessing export licence applications.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Guildford (Sue Doughty) of 24 June 2002, Official Report, column 684W, on arms exports, which countries received export credit guarantee coverage for arms sales in each of the last five years; and how much export credit guarantee coverage each country received. [66556]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The table shows for financial years 1996–97 to 2000–01, the markets where ECGD has provided support for the export of defence equipment and the maximum liability of the guarantees issued for each market.

Trade Partners UK

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what role Trade Partners UK has in connection with defence equipment exhibitions in the UK and overseas; and if she will make a statement. [66554]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 3 July 2002]: Government support for defence related exports remain the responsibility of the Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO). Trade Partners UK activities support DESO where appropriate in overseas markets. Support for defence equipment exhibitions overseas is available through Trade Partners UK's Support for Exports and Seminars Abroad (SESA) and Inward Missions schemes.

Defence Equipment (Export Credits)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the outstanding amounts of ECGD guarantees were in respect of defence equipment, broken down by country, for financial year 2001–02. [62711]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 19 June 2002]: The table lists amounts outstanding as at 31 March 2002 in respect of ECGD guarantees for exports of defence-related equipment. These figures, which are net of sums already repaid, are made up of future maturities (amounts yet to fall due for payment) and claims outstanding. Claims outstanding are in respect of business underwritten from 1991 onwards as ECGD does not hold claims information on cases supported before this date on a sectoral basis.

Engineering

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to tackle the gender inequality in salaries for (a) full time and (b) part time employees in the engineering sector. [63662]

Ms Hewitt: The Government are already taking a number of steps to further reduce the pay gap between men and women which currently stands at 18 per cent., for full-time workers, down from the figure of 20 per cent. in 1997.

As well as the introduction of the national minimum wage and the provisions in the Employment Bill, the Fair Pay Champions and Castle Awards are helping to spread good practice on equal pay. All Government Departments are committed to carrying out a pay review by March 2003 and we are also taking forward recommendations from the Kingsmill Report.

80 per cent. of Britain's 6 million part-time workers are women. The Part-Time Workers Regulations, introduced in July 2000, ensure that part-timers are no longer treated as second class citizens. The regulations establish a minimum standard of fairness for part-timers so that they can no longer be treated less favourably than the full-timers they work alongside. The regulations cover conditions such as pay, pensions, training and holidays.

The Equal Opportunities Commission is developing practical tools for employers wishing to investigate their pay systems such as an Equal Pay Review model; a Code of Practice, Guidance Notes and an Opportunity Now/Equal Pay Forum.

I have no separate proposals to tackle gender inequality in salaries for professionals in the engineering sector where figures in the year 2000 showed that the gender pay gap was also 18 per cent.

Industrial Support

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how the methodology her Department uses to allocate industrial support resources, including staff and direct financial investment, takes into account the growth potential of industrial sectors. [63805]

Ms Hewitt: Following the DTI review, we are strengthening our analytical capability to ensure our resources are targeted on those parts of the economy which will contribute most to driving up UK productivity and competitiveness and where our support will make the greatest difference. In deciding resource allocations a range of factors is considered, including growth indicators.

Amraf Training Plc

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent action she has taken in respect of Amraf Training plc. [65496]

Ms Hewitt: None.

A winding-up order was made against Amraf Training plc on 30 May 2002 following the company going into administration. The administrators were subsequently appointed to be the joint liquidators.

The Official Receiver at Southend-on-Sea is investigating the causes of the company's failure, but the investigations are at an early stage. Matters of concern may be addressed to her at: 4th Floor, Central House, 8 Clifftown Road, Southend-on-Sea, SS1 1AB.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what payments were made to Amraf Training plc in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02 for the provision of training courses. [65494]

Ms Hewitt: We have identified no payments made by the Department of Trade and Industry to Amraf Training plc.

False Accounting

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action her Department is taking to ensure that examples of false accounting in the USA are not repeated in the UK; and if she will make a statement. [66775]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The UK has well-developed and internationally respected arrangements for setting and enforcing accounting and auditing standards, both of which are vital to the preparation of company accounts which show a 'true and fair' view. There were substantial changes for the better to both accounting and auditing standards during the 1990s.

It would be unwise, however, to conclude that serious concerns over particular company accounts could not arise in the UK, or that more regulation can prevent all possibilities of false accounting.

There are a number of relevant actions in hand, which build on the existing position. A group, which I chair together with my hon. Friend, the Financial Secretary, was formed in February to co-ordinate the response of key regulators to the issues for accounting, auditing and aspects of corporate governance raised initially in the aftermath of Enron. The group will produce an interim report by the end of July.

In addition, the Government will publish shortly their response to the company law review, which made a number of relevant recommendations to improve company reporting. The Government have also set up a review of the role and effectiveness of non-executive directors under Derek Higgs, which is expected to report around the end of the year.

It is also important, as we move with our EU partners to adopt international accounting standards for 2005, that none of the strength of existing UK requirements is lost. The Government therefore welcome the leading role which the UK Accounting Standards Board is playing in the development of international standards; and the determination of the International Board under Sir David Tweedie to ensure that there are rigorous international standards in place by 2005.

Investment (Coventry)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action the Government have taken to attract businesses to Coventry since 1997. [66160]

Ms Hewitt: Over the last five years more than 270 companies have invested in Coventry for the first time, creating over 11,400 jobs. Coventry is home to more than 130 overseas-owned companies which have taken advantage of the many opportunities offered by the City.

Growth in value-added R&D activity has seen major investment and modernisation from companies such as Yachiyo, Denso, Edscha, Eu-Matic, Mission Foods, Peugeot, Jaguar and others which have all benefited from the wide employment opportunities in the area, and received support from local, regional and national Government schemes. Eu-Matic's investment was the first inward investment announced under the new Labour Government in 1997 and their 132,000 sq ft, purpose-built factory on seven acres at Coventry Business Park was completed in January 1999. This £17 million investment was supported by a Regional Selective Assistance grant of £2.5 million.

Other investments have seen a new HQ for AAH Pharmaceuticals, new investment from a Mexican company, Mission Foods, EPMB, and a major expansion at Peugeot. Jaguar and Denso are among many other examples.

Much of the city is eligible for Objective 2 funding. Other European funding via "Rechar" programmes have benefited Kersley Colliery and the "Retex" (textile industry) programme has added to major reinvestment by the public sector in regenerating large parts of the area.

Brownfield site regeneration has been an area of major success in the city with former major employment sites now housing new inward investors and investment from the city's university at the Technopark and the Coventry business park. Growth in the city's and sub-region's ICT sector has seen over 40,000 people now employed in 1,300 companies in this sector, helping diversify the area away from traditional manufacturing.

The creation of a science park, and a Technocentre housing centres for incubator units, innovation, and many small start-up companies, have all been supported by public sector partnerships working with others. Other examples of such developments include Binley development. Nearly 50 acres have been developed for commercial use in the city, including the private sector-led Prologis park.

DTI's Small Business Service has ensured that in the last year nearly 2,000 local businesses have received advice and support. Also, almost 2,000 people have benefited from training to raise the local skills threshold. Additionally, some £1.5 million worth of funding from the Skills Development Fund has been allocated to Coventry for projects such as a purpose-built centre for the delivery of engineering training.

Advantage West Midlands, the west midlands regional development agency, is supporting Coventry and its sub-region's desire to promote the area as a High Technology Corridor. Substantial investment from the Rover task force resource will be used for HTC projects e.g. through the establishment of an ICT Skills Taskforce and an associated skills training scheme.

Part of the city falls within Advantage West Midlands' Coventry-Nuneaton Regeneration Zone, which aims to connect areas of need to opportunities, working with many local partners in the community, voluntary and education sectors. This will receive considerable funding from Government.

Community investment has been supported by approximately £12 million via the Government's Neighbourhood Renewal Programme, including developments at Hillfields and Wood End, and some £55 million under the New Deal for Communities. £37 million has been provided via the Single Regeneration Budget Programme in the same period.

Coventry has benefited from substantial other funding from a number of Government schemes, including Sure Start and the Children's Fund, along with over £50 million from the national lottery.

Employment is at its highest since the mid 1980s, with 142,000 employed in the city compared with 118,000 in 1992. While there have been some shifts in employment between sectors (telecoms and aerospace have suffered recent downturns), the changing nature of Coventry's economy has meant that unemployment has remained at 3.7 per cent. for several years, only slightly above the regional average of 3.5 per cent. The strong sub-regional partnership between agencies operating across the area, such as Jobcentre Plus, the Chamber, LSC, city council, Advantage West Midlands and Regional Supply Office, has ensured that when downsizing situations arise, the partnership is able to deploy the necessary tools to assist companies in a number of practical ways. This has been reinforced with Government funding via the Rapid Response Fund and other training and development initiatives.

More than 20,000 students are expected to graduate from the two universities this year assisting business and individuals gain qualifications and training across many sectors.

Through these significant interventions the Government have worked hard to achieve some important improvements in the regional economy, and to support the strong lead which local partners have shown to promote the industrial growth and diversification of Coventry and its sub-region since 1997.

UK Atomic Energy Authority

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to her statement of 28 November 2001, Official Report, column 992W, on the UK Atomic Energy Authority, when the White Paper on arrangements for managing public sector civil nuclear liabilities will be published. [67725]

Mr. Wilson: The White Paper "Managing the Nuclear Legacy—A Strategy for Action" is being published today. Copies are available in the Library and the Vote Office.

The White Paper sets out plans for radical changes to current arrangements for the clean up of the public sector civil nuclear legacy including the creation of a new body—the Liabilities Management Authority—responsible to Government and with a specific remit to ensure that clean up is carried out safely, securely, cost effectively and in ways which protect the environment for the benefit of current and future generations. It makes clear the Government's determination to drive clean up forward systematically and progressively using the best available skills to get the job done and, through competition, to promote the development of the supply chain and skills base required to sustain the clean up programme over the long term. It also underlines our commitment to ensuring that management arrangements are open, transparent and command public confidence. Implementing legislation will be brought forward at the first available opportunity.

In the interim, a Liabilities Management Unit (LMU) has been established in the DTI to drive forward the clean up work and to prepare the ground for the LMA. Membership of the LMU is drawn from the private and public sectors. The appointment of Bechtel as partner contractor adds international experience to the LMU, reflecting the Government's intention to ensure that the best skills are brought to bear on legacy clean up.

In line with the commitment to openness and transparency, the Government have consulted widely with stakeholders in the preparation of the White Paper and would welcome views on the proposed new arrangements and the way in which they should be implemented. Views should be submitted to the Department by 18 October. Contact details are provided in the White Paper.

Enterprise Bill

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice her Department acted upon when deciding on paragraph 75 of the draft Enterprise Bill in relation to the three month limit for the appointment of an administrator. [66688]

Miss Melanie Johnson: During consultation on the White Paper: "Productivity and Enterprise: Insolvency: A second chance", concerns were expressed that lack of a fixed timetable in administration resulted in uncertainty for creditors and costly delays. These concerns were mainly expressed by practitioners who specialise in smaller cases because the costs of running a lengthy administration can be a significant barrier to entry into administration.

Annual Leave

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the average annual leave entitlement is for staff in her Department in 2002. [64658]

Ms Hewitt: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible with the information for the year ended 31 July 2002. This will enable comparison with the information given in my reply of 8 February 2002 to his earlier question on this subject.

Castle Award

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if her Department has applied for a Castle Award for equal pay. [65224]

Ms Hewitt: The Department of Trade and Industry has not applied for a Castle Award this year.

Ministerial Visits

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) overseas visits by Ministers in her Department and (b) visits to Ministers in the UK by overseas Government Ministers and officials have taken place in each of the last three years in which UK arms sales have been discussed. [65263]

Ms Hewitt: Department of Trade and Industry Ministers regularly meet with their overseas counterparts and with other senior officials to discuss a range of issues surrounding UK commerce and exports. Inevitably these have occasionally touched upon defence export opportunities. Details of such discussions are not however held centrally.

Broadband

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much her Department has (a) committed to and (b) spent on broadband access in rural areas in each of the last four years. [61173]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 13 June 2002]: Promoting broadband access in rural areas is a legitimate use of Government funds in pursuit of economic development objectives as long as it is in line with the guidelines for each fund. It is possible that some expenditure has been made from a variety of funding streams including European Structural Funds, Regional Selective Assistance and the Regional Development Agencies' Strategic Programme.

The Department has made available a £30 million fund to help the Regional Development Agencies and devolved Administrations develop innovative schemes to extend broadband networks. In the first year of this fund (Financial Year 2001–02) the Department transferred £3 million of this fund to the recipients. Many projects funded from this will contribute in whole or in part to rural broadband access.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether broadband will be available in rural areas. [64276]

Mr. Timms: Through ADSL, cable and wireless technologies, broadband is available to around 66 per cent. of the population, including in some rural areas, and we expect this proportion to increase. Satellite technology can make broadband available almost anywhere. Our strategy, set out in the December 2001 UK Online Annual Report, includes a number of actions to help make the broadband market more extensive and competitive, including measures to stimulate broadband supply.

In addition, I announced last week that from the autumn there will be:

> a new network of dedicated regional broadband advisers co-ordinated by the DTI, with the aim of increasing both availability and take-up of broadband in the regions;
> a new team of procurement experts in the Office of Government Commerce (OGC), providing hands-on support and advice to enable smarter public sector buying of broadband; and, > new framework agreements between the Office of Government Commerce (OGC) and suppliers. This will enable public sector organisations to buy broadband quickly and efficiently, without having to negotiate terms and conditions for each purchase while ensuring value for money.

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives her Department has to extend the availability of broadband internet provision to rural Wales; and if she will make a statement. [65061]

Mr. Timms: On 26 June I announced a new broadband team and network of dedicated broadband advisers to help boost roll-out and take-up of broadband across the UK, including in Wales.

The Government have also made available the £30 million UK Broadband fund to help the English Regional Development Agencies and the devolved Administrations develop innovative schemes to extend broadband access. The Welsh Assembly Government will receive £2.67 million and will be using the money to:

> Link up all educational facilities, libraries and adult learning centres with broadband services to allow the public to access broadband services; and
> Support a project that will pilot the use of broadband wireless technology at the soon to be deregulated 2.4 GHz frequency in North West Wales.

In addition, the Welsh Assembly Government is developing its own broadband strategy, based upon the findings of their Ubiquitous Broadband Infrastructure Study, and continues to support a number of initiatives across Wales that are designed to bring affordable broadband access within the reach of many more people.

Postal Services

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps the Government are taking to ensure that a full range of postal services is maintained. [66636]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The Government laid down the universal postal service obligation in primary legislation in the Postal Services Act 2000. The legislation says that the obligation consists of a service provided at an affordable price determined by a public tariff uniform throughout the UK and includes the delivery each working day to the home or premises of every individual in the UK and a collection each working day from access points. Under the Act it is the primary duty of the Postal Services Commission (known as Postcomm) to exercise its functions in the manner which it considers is best calculated to ensure the provision of a universal postal service and it currently requires Consignia, in the licence, to provide the universal postal service.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial assistance the Government have given to Consignia since 1997. [66637]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The Government have shown a strong commitment to maintaining postal services through a variety of schemes which have been predominantly designed to support the Post Office network and to explore possible new income streams.

The Government contributed £480 million to the capital cost of the Horizon project which computerised the whole network. We have also made available a £2 million fund to support volunteer and community initiatives to maintain or reopen post office facilities in the rural areas where traditional service would otherwise close. Figures for the end of May showed that applications to the value of £500,000 had been assessed and approved and to that date, payments of £231,000 had been made. Government provided £25 million for the "Your Guide" pilot in Leicestershire and Rutland which trialled the concept of post offices as one stop shops for government information and services.

Following the announcement in January agreeing in principle to a compensation package for the urban network restructuring programme, the Government will make available up to £210 million for the compensation and investment package for urban offices, subject to state aid and parliamentary approval.

In line with the Government's commitment to the maintenance of a nationwide network of post offices, proposals for the rural network are being developed in the context of advice on transitional financial assistance from the Postal Services Commission.

In terms of supporting the mail business, the Government have not provided financial assistance for specific projects but, as announced to the House on 13 June, the need for the company to restructure has led to the Government agreeing the basis of a financing package which will allow the restructuring to go ahead. The £1.8 billion of investments on the Balance Sheet will be held by the group holding company as reserves. It will be available to back the investment required in the mails business, to implement the renewal programme and to support the nationwide network of post offices, subject, where necessary, to the relevant state aid clearances.

Law Society

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what support she is providing to the Law Society to facilitate the prompt reform of those solicitors practice rules identified as anti-competitive by the Director General of Fair Trading; and if she will make a statement. [66478]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I have been asked to reply.

Reform of the solicitors practice rules and removal of anti-competitive restrictions therein are matters for the Law Society to take forward. Where there are restrictions in legislation relating to the regulation of solicitors they fall to Government to consider. As has already been announced, the Government are planning to consult before the summer break on those issues which fall to them arising from the DGFT's report.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions her Department has had with the Law Society in the past 12 months on employed solicitors advising the public, fee-sharing and referral fees; and if she will make a statement. [66477]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I have been asked to reply.

Officials from both the Lord Chancellor's Department and from the Department of Trade and Industry have separately held meetings with the Law Society. The DTI has discussed competition issues generally. The LCD has discussed progress relating to those matters highlighted in the Director General of Fair Trading's report "Competition in Professions". The issue of employed solicitors advising the public is one of the matters to be considered in the Government's consultation paper planned for release before the summer break.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Grammar Schools (Kent)

12. Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills based on benchmark tables as defined in the autumn package, 2001, how many of Kent and Medway's grammar schools fall in the bottom quartile of performance expectations of schools; and how many would be expected to fall in that bottom quartile if they performed to the average level of grammar school performance. [64407]

Mr. Miliband: The benchmark tables allow comparisons between schools in a number of ways. On the basis of the percentage of pupils achieving 5+A*-C, none of the Kent and Medway grammar schools falls in the lower quartile for all schools. I am also aware of the research commissioned by my hon. Friend from Professor Jesson of the University of York, which argues that 17 of Kent and Medway's grammar schools fall in the bottom quartile of performance, seven more than Professor Jesson believes should be expected.

Further Education (Funding)

13. Andy Burnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement about future resources for the further education sector. [64408]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: By next year funding for FE will have risen by 26 per cent. in real terms since 1997. The Learning and Skills Council's funding rates for programmes delivered by FE sector colleges are increasing by 2.5 per cent. in cash terms for the 2002–03 academic year, above the current rate of inflation. We are looking to the current spending review to deliver the resources needed to meet the Government's ambitions for further education in 2003–04 and beyond.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what her Department's estimate is of the performance-related pay shortfall from the original budgeted announcement for further education staff in the colleges in Leeds. [45370]

Margaret Hodge: My Department does not publish data on the numbers of lecturers in individual colleges who are receiving particular payments under the Teaching Pay Initiative (TPI). This is because the distribution of TPI payments to teachers within individual colleges is properly a matter for the management of those colleges and their staff. However, distribution of TPI funds from the Learning and Skills Council to colleges is being monitored, and TPI is being evaluated at a national level. I am able to make the following information available.

For sixth form colleges, the size of TPI payments to individual teachers is prescribed as part of the initiative; the formula is the same as that applying to school teachers. The original announcement stated the Government expected that about two-thirds of teachers in sixth form colleges would qualify for payments of £2,000.

For general further education (FE) colleges, the size of payments to individual teachers is not prescribed as part of the initiative. In the original announcement the Government expected that over two thirds of teachers in general FE colleges would qualify for payments of up to £2,000, with 10 per cent. receiving career structure and initiative payments of up to £4,000. However, the announcement made it clear that colleges would have the flexibility to determine the precise levels of payments.

This is the first year of TPI and we are currently evaluating its impact on colleges. The Sixth Form Colleges' Employers' Forum estimates that, nationally, 84 per cent. of sixth form college teachers have already received payments of £2,000 in 2001–02. For general FE colleges, although no comparable figures are available, indications nationally are that progress has been much more gradual. The first case study evaluation report is due from the Association of Colleges in April.

In Leeds, seven general FE and one sixth form college, have been allocated a total of £1,007,749 TPI support in 2001–02 as follows:

Leeds College of Art and Design—£83,422

Leeds College of Music—£49,498

Joseph Priestley College—£72,539

Leeds College of Building—£67,693

Leeds College of Technology—£102,195

Thomas Danby College—£162,238

Notre Dame Sixth Form College—£130,553.

In 2002–03 allocations to each college will increase by between 25 per cent. and 50 per cent. Further increases to the TPI budget are planned for 2003–04. These increases will enable colleges to extend TPI payments to teachers who meet the criteria for the first time. The increases should also enable general FE colleges to review the size of payments offered to individual staff and to consolidate these payments where they have not already done so.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many post-16 students went on to further education in (a) Burnley and (b) Lancashire in 2001. [65544]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Data on the percentage of students staying on in full-time education are not calculated for areas smaller than LEAs as reliable estimates cannot be made.

The percentage of 16 and 17-year-olds in full-time education in Lancashire LEA, which includes the constituency of Burnley, in 1999–2000, the latest year for which figures are available, is set out in the table:

Lancashire LEA, 1999–2000

Percentage

Age	Full-time education	Part-time education
16	66	8

Participation rates by LEA are published in an annual statistical bulletin, "Participation in Education and Training by Young People Aged 16 and 17 in Each Local Area and Region, England".

23. Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps she is taking to improve recruitment and retention of further education lecturers. [64418]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: We are investing more than £300 million in the Teaching Pay Initiative (TPI). TPI is an important initiative designed to help modernise further education (FE) pay arrangements and to recruit, reward and retain teachers and lecturers as part of the drive to improve teaching and learning.

Alongside TPI, we are piloting Training Bursaries for students training to be FE teachers. From the autumn of 2002, we will also introduce Golden Hello payments and, subject to the approval of Parliament, a scheme to pay off, over time, the student loans of new teachers in FE shortage subject areas.

Neighbourhood Nurseries

15. Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the provision of neighbourhood nurseries under the neighbourhood nursery initiative. [64410]

Margaret Hodge: The neighbourhood nurseries programme is making real progress. The first neighbourhood nurseries have now opened, and the pace of development is encouraging some 32,000 places are currently under development. 36 per cent. of these first nurseries are linked to Sure Start and 32 per cent. are on school sites.

School and Business Links

16. Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps she is taking to support links between schools and business. [64411]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: We welcome links between schools and business, which help raise pupils' achievement, motivation and attendance, and prepare them for adult and working life.

We have allocated £25 million this year to fund a range of activities, through local Learning and Skills Councils contracting with Education/Business Links Consortia. These include professional development placements for teachers, work experience and mentoring for young people, and enterprise activities.

Excellence in Cities

18. Mr. Rammell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the development of the Excellence in Cities programme. [64413]

Mr. Miliband: Excellence in Cities covers 58 local authority areas and their secondary schools. It also includes Excellence Clusters and selected primary schools. With new ways of working based on effective partnerships the programme is already making an impact. Overall standards are rising faster in EiC schools than elsewhere. We are determined to secure and extend these gains by helping all EiC partnerships to perform at the level of the best.

Autistic Children

19. Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on provision for schooling of children with autism. [64414]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Children with autism, along with others with special educational needs, should receive the schooling their learning difficulties call for. The SEN Code of Practice gives statutory guidance to schools and local education authorities in identifying needs and making suitable provision. Forthcoming guidance from the Department's Autism Working Group will help providers plan and make good quality provision for children with the condition.

Collegiate Academy (Birmingham)

20. Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment she has made of Birmingham LEA's proposals for a collegiate academy. [64415]

Mr. Miliband: We judged the Birmingham proposal to be an interesting model of collaborative practice between secondary schools, well worth supporting. The intention of the collegiate academies is to raise standards and broaden curriculum choices for students through the schools working together in a very structured way. If they prove successful, they could provide a useful model for other clusters of schools to adopt in order to maximise the benefits of school diversity.

This is a pathfinder project, so by its nature is untested. The Department has commissioned research to evaluate the pathfinder project over the next three years. Their first report is expected in October this year. In addition the Birmingham LEA will evaluate the collegiate academies in partnership with Warwick University.

After-school Clubs

21. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action she is taking to improve the regulation of after-school clubs. [64416]

Margaret Hodge: Last year we transferred responsibility for the registration and inspection of under 8s child care, including after-school clubs, from local authorities to the Office for Standards in Education (Ofsted). At the same time we introduced National Standards and there is a specific set of criteria covering out of school care. A national scheme will bring improvements to the regulation of after-school clubs, not least a more consistent approach across England. Earlier this year we consulted on proposals for a scheme for certifying child care providers' suitability to look after older children, and we will be looking carefully at the results of that consultation as these proposals are taken forward.

Adult Literacy and Numeracy

22. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what measures she is taking to increase basic literacy and numeracy skills for adults. [64417]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Government are fully committed to improving the literacy, language and numeracy skills of adults. The Prime Minister launched Skills for Life, the national strategy for improving adult literacy and numeracy in England in March 2001. Since then, we have introduced a new national teaching and learning infrastructure of standards, curricula, teacher training and national tests in literacy and numeracy nationally to help increase standards and learner achievement. There have been three bursts of national promotion activity to increase demand for basic skills provision. These have led to over 100,000 calls to the national information hotline. Demand is also being stimulated among employers with a toolkit of advice and materials to ensure low skilled employees have opportunities to improve their skills. We have completed a series of pilots to test innovative pedagogical approaches and financial incentives for learners and employers. A new national research and development centre, led by the London University's Institute of Education, has begun investigating best practice in the UK and internationally. Our target is that 750,000 adults improve their literacy and numeracy by 2004. Between April 2001 and January 2002, more than 124,000 adults were helped to gain literacy and numeracy qualifications.

Child Care

24. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans there are to improve the provision of child care places for the under-fives. [64419]

Margaret Hodge: The Department for Education and Skills has responsibility for the development of child care places in England through the National Childcare Strategy. The Strategy is carried forward at a local level by Early Years Development and Childcare Partnerships (EYDCPs) that have been established in every local education authority area in England and are tasked with providing and supporting good quality, affordable child care in their respective areas.

More than 175,000 new pre-school child care places[1] have been created since 1997 and EYDCPs have plans to create approx. 140,000 new pre-school places over the next two years.

Many of these places will be created through the Neighbourhood Nurseries programme, a key component of the Government's wider Neighbourhood Childcare Initiative. Launched in January 2001, the initiative aims to create 45,000 new nursery places for children from birth to school age and 25,000 childminding places in the most disadvantaged areas of England.

Since September 1998 all four-year-olds have had access to a free part time early education place for the three terms before they become of compulsory school age.

In addition, we have also increased the number of three-year-olds accessing a free early education place from 34 per cent. in January 1997 to more than 66 per cent. in March 2002. From September 2004 all three-year-olds will have access to a free early education place.

[1] Pre-school child care places include day care places lasting for three and a half hours or more per day and places with childminders.

School Discipline

25. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent assessment she has made on the impact of disciplinary problems on standards in schools. [64420]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: In his annual report for 2000–01 Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools reported that standards of behaviour were unsatisfactory in one secondary school in 12 and one primary school in 50. He added that unsatisfactory behaviour in some secondary schools had undermined efforts to raise standards, and that such behaviour and negative attitudes towards work were significant problems in half of the secondary schools making poor progress in raising attainment.

We have provided extensive support to schools to tackle disruptive behaviour and help improve standards, including funding for over 1,050 Learning Support Units, guidance on discipline and exclusion policies, and guidance on developing effective anti-bullying strategies. In addition, the £66 million made available through this year's Budget will fund a programme of focused support for schools in the 34 LEAs facing the toughest challenges of behaviour and criminality.

We will also extend the availability of Parenting Orders, so that these can cover parents of pupils excluded for violence or persistent serious disruption.

Truancy

27. Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the long-term social and economic costs of truancy, particularly in communities of high deprivation. [64422]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Government are fully aware of the consequences of truancy, especially of its links with educational underachievement, unemployment, homelessness and in particular crime.

We are continuing to tackle this issue through a number of initiatives. These include nationally co-ordinated truancy sweeps and the investment of £66 million in the Behaviour Improvement Programme which is being funded in those local education authorities identified as having high truancy and high crime rates.

It is important that parents and local communities are encouraged to see the importance of regular attendance and share responsibility for preventing truancy.

30. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action she proposes to reduce the level of truanting taking place with parental consent. [64425]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: We have introduced a higher penalty for those parents who know that their child is not attending school and taken no reasonable steps to secure their attendance. We are examining ways in which the Government can support the prosecution process by sharing information and guidance.

Magistrates can now impose Parenting Orders as a means of underlining parents' responsibility for their children's behaviour and providing parents with structured help and support.

We have also introduced truancy sweeps which can help to identify parents who are not taking their child's attendance seriously. These send the strong message to parents and the wider community that children should be in school.

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of children of secondary age were absent from school due to (a) authorised and (b) unauthorised absence in each of the years 1996–97 to 2001–02 in (i) foundation, (ii) voluntary aided, (iii) voluntary controlled, (iv) community, (v) specialist, (vi) city technology college and (vii) grammar schools. [65400]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The information requested is shown in the table.

Percentage of half days missed due to (a) authorised and (b) unauthorised absence in secondary schools in England

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01

(vii) Grammar schools	0.1	0.1	0.1	0.1	0.1

Note:

Information for 2001–02 is not yet available.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what her estimate is of the change in (a) school truancy and (b) school exclusions between 1998 and 2002; and if she will make a statement. [66284]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The information requested for schools in England is as follows:

(a) School truancy	1997–95	2000–01
Percentage of half days missed due to unauthorised absence	0.7	0.7

(b) Permanent exclusions from school	1997–98	2000–01[1]
Primary schools[2]	1,539	1,460
Secondary schools[2]	10,187	7,410
Special schools[3]	572	340
Total	12,298	9,210

The truancy and exclusion data are collected by academic year therefore the latest figures available are for 2000–01.

Schools Education

28. Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on funding for schools education. [64423]

Mr. Miliband: Since 1997–98 recurrent funding per pupil has risen by an average £670 (24 per cent.) in real terms: by 2003–04 it will have increased by over £760 in real terms.

31. Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the future of funding for schools education. [64426]

Mr. Miliband: We will be consulting on proposals for a new system of school and LEA funding over the summer, starting by mid-July. We aim to create a simpler, more transparent and fairer formula that reflects fairly, on the basis of up-to-date evidence, the needs of authorities in different parts of the country.

Primary Schools

29. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when she next expects to meet governors of state primary schools to discuss the burden of paperwork. [64424]

Mr. Miliband: Ministers meet school governor representatives from time to time to discuss a range of issues. The Secretary of State does not have any meetings currently arranged with governors of state primary schools specifically to discuss paperwork.

Roger Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many reception places are available at each primary school in Merton, broken down by parliamentary constituency; and how many applications there have been in each case for the school year 2002–03. [R] [66777]

Mr. Miliband: Information on places available by year group and the number of applications to schools is not collected centrally.

Student Support

32. Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans she has to consult with universities over the new system of student support. [64427]

33. Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when she intends to publish a consultation document outlining options for a new system of student support; and if she will make a statement. [64428]

Margaret Hodge: The review of higher education student funding is still under way. We will make an announcement when the review is complete, at which time there will be opportunity for the universities and others to comment.

School Buildings

34. Colin Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much money has been allocated for new school buildings and renovations in the current financial year; and if she will make a statement. [64429]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Government support for capital investment in schools in England for 2002–03 is over £3 billion. We allocate most of this funding to schools and local education authorities (LEAs) by needs related formulae, so that they can prioritise investment in line with locally agreed Asset Management Plans. We do not collect information on the spread of capital investment between new buildings and renovation.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what Government funding has been given to each London education authority to improve and upgrade school buildings in each of the last three years. [65049]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The table sets out the amount of funding we have allocated to each London education authority to support capital expenditure in the last three years. This funding was provided for the improvement, renovation or replacement of school buildings.

Notes:

1. Allocations comprise of capital grant and credit approvals, including Private Finance Initiative (PFI) credits for school buildings.

2. The total allocation for 2000–01 includes £9 million of PFI credits.

3. The total for 2000–01 also includes £610.8 million announced for New Deal for Schools 4, which was available for use in 2000–01 and 2001–02.

4. The total allocation for 2001–02 includes £84.2 million of PFI credits.

5. The total allocation for 2002–03 includes £298.1 million of PFI credits.

6. All allocations include funding allocated direct to schools within each LEA.

Individual Learning Accounts

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the moneys owed to course providers following the closure of the individual learning account scheme. [64409]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Following the closure of the individual learning account (ILA) programme on 23 November 2001, at the end of June £16.8 million of claims from 267 registered learning providers has been withheld pending the results of investigations.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what payments (a) have been claimed, (b) have been paid, (c) are outstanding and (d) are in dispute with ILA providers in each month since August 2001. [60231]

Mr. Ivan Lewis [holding answer 10 June 2002]: The amounts claimed, paid and withheld at the end of each month from August 2001 to 28 June 2002 are set out in the following table. The amounts in the withheld column relate to those claims from registered individual learning account (ILA) providers which are subject to validation checks and/or investigation. The claims withheld are those which are in dispute.

At the time of closure on 23 November a total of £19.4 million relating to learning episodes confirmed on the ILA centre system was awaiting payment and therefore outstanding. Following validation checks payments for eligible learning relating to this amount were subsequently made in December and January.

ILA programme rules allowed bookings to be made six months in advance of the learning episode, so booked learning could be confirmed up to and including 22 May 2002. A paper-based claims and payment system was introduced in January 2002 to allow providers to confirm and claim for delivery of this advanced booked learning. Claims, payments and amounts withheld are reflected in the table. In addition an estimated sum of £5.6 million remains unclaimed relating to advance booked learning by providers who cannot be invited to claim until all investigations are complete.

School Fire Safety

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make it a requirement that all new schools and extensions should be fitted with fire sprinkler systems. [64304]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Since April 2001, all new construction work at schools has been subject to approval under the Building Regulations. The Building Regulations do not require the installation of fire sprinkler systems in new school accommodation and the Department does not intend to seek such a change.

With regard to fire safety, projects will not be approved unless they are designed in accordance with the 2000 edition of Approved Document B (Fire Safety), which accompanies the regulations. The Department's guide 'Fire Safety' includes information on sprinklers. It states that, though expensive to install, sprinklers can be worthwhile in areas where the risk of arson is high. In these circumstances their use can help minimise the loss of valuable course work and teaching materials, and prevent major disruption to the life of a school.

Teacher Vacancies (Portsmouth, South)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many vacancies, unfilled with permanent staff, in secondary schools there are in the Portsmouth, South constituency; how many there were in 1997; and if she will make a statement. [66467]

Mr. Miliband: The number of vacancies for full-time teachers in maintained secondary schools in Hampshire were:

Vacancy numbers

	January 1997	January 2001
Former Hampshire	33	n/a
Hampshire	n/a	85
Portsmouth	n/a	36
Southampton	n/a	27

This is the most recent available information.

Hampshire local authority was affected by the local government reorganisation (LGR) on 1 April 1997, when it became three authorities; Portsmouth, Southampton and Hampshire. Figures for 1997 are for the Hampshire local authority prior to LGR.

Information on teacher vacancies by constituency is not held centrally.

Specialist Schools

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) failing schools and (b) schools under special measures have (i) applied to and (ii) become specialist schools since the specialist schools scheme came into operation. [65504]

Mr. Miliband: Under section 13(9) of the School Inspections Act 1996, special measures are required to be taken in relation to a school if the school is judged to be

> "failing or likely to fail to provide pupils with an acceptable standard of education".

The number of schools judged to be (a) failing and consequently (b) under special measures at the time of their applications to become specialist schools is four. All of these applications were unsuccessful.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many schools applied for specialist school status in the latest round; how many of these applications were accepted and in which specialisms; if she will list the successful schools; and if she will make a statement. [66276]

Mr. Miliband: 282 schools applied for designation in one of the eight specialisms in March 2002. I have today announced 160 new designations taking the total number of specialist schools operational from September 2002 to 992. From September there will be specialist schools in 97 per cent. of local education authorities in England responsible for the education of over 1 million young people. Today's announcement puts us well on course to reach our target of at least 1,500 specialist schools by 2005. The successful specialist school applicants announced today are as listed in the table.

Pupil Rolls

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many secondary schools in England have pupil rolls (a) below 600, (b) between 601 and 1,000, (c) between 1,001 and 1,500 and (d) over 1,500; [65526]

(2) how many primary schools in England have pupil rolls (a) below 200, (b) between 201 and 400, (c) between 401 and 600 and (d) above 600. [65527]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is shown in the table.

Maintained primary and secondary schools: number of schools by size of school[1]—England—As at January 2002 (provisional)

Size of school[1]	Number of schools
Primary
Up to 200	8,070
201 to 400	8,258
400 to 600	1,485
601 and over	145
Secondary
Up to 600	596
601 to 1,000	1,397
1,001 to 1,500	1,221
1,501 and over	239

MLD and SLD Schools

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many places there are in schools for (a) MLD and (b) SLD pupils in England and Wales; and what information she has collated on the demand for places in (i) MLD and (ii) SLD schools in England and Wales. [65675]

Margaret Hodge: Information is not collected on the available places for children with particular categories of special educational needs in England. The majority of children with special educational needs are educated in mainstream schools which respond to the unique needs of each of their pupils. Special schools will also commonly include a diverse range of pupils within a broad spectrum of need.

Since the Education Act 1981, schools have not been required to return information about pupils' special educational needs categorised by disability or learning difficulty. We are now looking into the feasibility of collecting this information.

The responsibility for planning of school places, including for pupils with special educational needs, rest with local education authorities. Information about the demand for placed in MLD and SLD schools is not therefore collated centrally.

In Wales, such matters are for the Welsh Assembly. However we understand that the position is the same.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many members of her Department have been employed in its Regulatory Impact Unit in the past five years; and if she will make a statement. [65966]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: From 1997 to 2002, the Department has employed the following numbers of staff in its Regulatory Impact Unit:

1997–98: Approximately half the time of a full-time member of staff (with line management support when necessary)

1998–99: Approximately half the time of a full-time member of staff (with line management support when necessary)

1999–2000: Approximately half the time of a full-time member of staff (with line management support when necessary) up to 31 December 1999, and, one full-time member of staff (with line management support when necessary) from 1 January 2002

2000–01: One full-time member of staff (with line management support when necessary)

2001–02: One full-time member of staff (with line management support when necessary)

From 2002: One full-time member of staff (with line management support when necessary).

It is the job of the departmental Regulatory Impact Unit to establish and promote the principles of good regulation in the Department. The unit works closely with the officials responsible for developing policies in the Department and the Regulatory Impact Unit within the Cabinet Office. It focuses on those regulations that impact on business, charities, and the voluntary sector.

Careers Advice

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what advice is made available at school to pupils who do not wish to continue into further education and want to enter work. [66157]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: School pupils receive advice on their post-16 choices from three main sources:

> a curriculum-led programme of careers education during school years nine, 10 and 11;
> Impartial advice on learning and career choices from a Connexions Personal Adviser or Careers Adviser;
> Careers information products such as the "It's Your Choice" workbook for students in year 10 or 11 and the "Working In" series of booklets that provide information on working in particular occupations.

Careers education enables young people to develop the skills needed to understand and evaluate the post-16 options open to them. This is supported by impartial advice and guidance from a Connexions Personal Adviser or Careers Adviser. The Connexions Service is being established to provide integrated advice, guidance and support to 13 to 19-year-olds on a range of issues, including advice on learning and careers. It is currently live in 28 out of 47 local Learning and Skills Council areas in England. The Careers Service provides advice in those areas not yet covered by Connexions.

While the primary focus of connexions Personal Advisers and Careers Advisers is to encourage young people to stay in education or learning, they also provide advice on vocational and work related options for post-16 learning, including Modern Apprenticeships. Their help includes a job matching service to help young people find and retain a suitable job. They work with both young people and employers to ensure that, wherever possible, young people start a job with training and that employers are aware of their responsibilities under the Right to Time Off for Study or Training regulations.

Teachers

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many teachers were teaching in English schools in each year from 1979–80 to 2001–02; and if she will make a statement. [66269]

Mr. Miliband: The numbers of full-time equivalent[1] teachers in regular service[2] in the maintained schools sector in England in January of each year since 1980[3] are in the table:

[1] Part-time teachers have been converted to an estimate of their full-time equivalence and added to full-time numbers.

[2] Excludes occasional teachers.

[3] Teachers in Sixth Form Colleges were included in the survey prior to 1993; these have been removed by estimation to provide this consistent time series excluding Sixth Form Colleges.

	Number
1980	444,000
1981	435,000
1982	425,500
1983	419,100
1984	414,900
1985	409,000
1986	404,600
1987	404,900
1988	402,400
1989	397,100
1990	397,600
1991	394,800

1997	399,200
1998	397,700
1999	401,200
2000	404,600
2001	410,200
2002[1]	419,600

[1] Data for January 2002 are provisional

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans she has to specify a minimum level of non-contact time for teachers who are teaching the core subjects of maths and English; and if she will make a statement. [66274]

Mr. Miliband: Consultation on the recommendations in the School Teachers' Review Body's report on teacher work loads came to an end yesterday. The Department's consultation letter of 8 May said that my right hon. Friend would consult again on practical measures as appropriate in the light of this initial consultation. For the time being the Department is evaluating the initial consultation responses. Further consultation is likely to take place in the early autumn.

Nurture Groups

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans she has to provide funding for a nurture group for each English primary school; and if she will make a statement. [66271]

Mr. Miliband: Funding of £174 million has been available during 2001–02 for schools and LEAs to deal with problems of poor behaviour. Many schools have used this funding to develop early intervention work, including nurture groups, for vulnerable children.

School Budgets

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans she has to give schools greater flexibility over allocating moneys received from central Government. [66272]

Mr. Miliband: The Government have already simplified the operation of the Standards Fund, by far the largest specific grant for education. Since April 2001 schools have had more freedom to move funds between the different Standards Fund activities; separate auditing of the Standards Fund is no longer required; and the spending period for the Standards Fund was extended from 12 months to 17 months to give schools even more flexibility in planning expenditure. The Government also committed to make more transparent the local government funding system, as set out in the local government White Paper.

Standard Spending Assessment (Somerset)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans she has to increase the level of the standard spending assessment per pupil in Somerset to the average such figure for England; and if she will make a statement. [66273]

Mr. Miliband: We intend to commence consultation on detailed options for a new education funding system shortly, which will run over the summer. We will take decisions in time for the local government finance settlement and implement the new system in 2003–04. At this stage it is not possible to say how individual authorities will be affected by the new system.

Value-added League Tables

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether value-added league tables are available for all schools; and if she will make a statement. [66283]

Mr. Miliband: This year, we intend to publish value-added measures in the secondary school performance tables of progress made from Key Stage 2 to Key Stage 3 and from Key Stage 3 to GCSE/GNVQ for all secondary schools. We are also conducting a pilot programme for measures of progress made from Key Stage 1 to Key Stage 2 for primary schools, with full publication planned for 2003. We aim to pilot a measure of value-added between Key Stage 2 and GCSE/GNVQ in 2003, and between GCSE/GNVQ and A/AS level in 2004, prior to full publication the following year.

Education Action Zones

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many education action zones exist; where they are; and if she will make a statement. [66285]

Mr. Miliband: There are 73 Statutory Education Action Zones. The table indicates where they are located:

School Admissions

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what mechanisms she has to guarantee fair admissions in the secondary school system as restructured according to her plans. [66364]

Mr. Miliband: The Education Bill will place a duty on LEAs to co-ordinate the admissions process for their area. Every admission authority in that area will have a duty to comply with the agreed co-ordination scheme for their area. The scheme will set out a common timetable for local admissions, and ensure that all parents state their preferred schools on a single form and are made a single offer of a school place on the same day. This will be fairer than the current system—where some parents may hold multiple offers of places, while others have none. All maintained schools and academies will be part of these local schemes. Admission forums will be responsible for monitoring the admissions process in their area, to check that it operates in the best interests of children and parents.

School Leavers

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many pupils left school or formal education at the age of 16 years as a proportion of the total cohort in each local authority area, in each year from 1990–91 and 2001–02; and if she will make a statement. [66277]

Mr. Miliband: The proportions of 16-year-olds who were not in full-time education in each year 1990–91 to 1999–2000, by local education authority, are given in the following table. Some of these will of course be involved in part-time education or work based learning.

The participation rates by LEA are taken from an annual statistical bulletin, 'Participation in Education and Training by Young People Aged 16 and 17 in Each Local Area and Region, England'. The year 1999–2000 is the latest for which figures are available.

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much money was spent by the relevant pension fund on paying pensions to retired (a) teachers and (b) university staff in 2001–02; if she will estimate the corresponding amounts to be spent in (i) five years' time, (ii) 10 years' time, (iii) 20 years' time and (iv) 30 years' time; if she will estimate in each case the proportion of such liabilities which will arise from (A) unfunded pension schemes and (B) pre-funded pension schemes; and in the case of pre-funded schemes, if she will estimate the value of the corresponding pre-funded funds in each of these years. [66561]

Mr. Miliband: The projected expenditure on pension benefits in respect of members of the teachers' pension scheme for the years in question is shown in the table. The teachers' pension scheme, which covers schools, further education establishments and the "post 1992" university sector, is an unfunded scheme.

Academic staff in the "pre 1992" universities are generally members of the universities superannuation scheme. This is a fully funded private sector scheme. Non-academic staff in all universities can be members of one of a number of private sector funded schemes or the funded local government pension scheme depending on the pension arrangements made by individual universities.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Sentence-review

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Solicitor-General, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Isle of Wight, 30 April 2002, Official Report, column 635W, if she will provide equivalent figures for each year between the coming into effect of the legislation and April 2001. [55080]

The Solicitor-General: The following table shows the number of offenders whose sentences were referred by the Law Officers to the Court of Appeal as unduly lenient sentences from 1989 to 1999 and the decisions of the Court of Appeal. Records maintained by the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers for this period do not distinguish between cases referred to the Law Officers by the CPS, members of public or hon. Members. Nor do the records show how many were not eligible for referral because they were received by the Law Officers out of time.

The records for 2000 onwards are more detailed. They are being reviewed and I shall, by the end of July, write to the hon. Member and place an answer in the House of Commons Library.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Private Members' Clubs

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Minister for Women what recent research she has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated which assesses discriminatory treatment experienced by women at private members' clubs open to both men and women. [66876]

Ms Hewitt: There has been no formal assessment of discriminatory treatment experienced by women members of mixed sex private clubs.

We have consulted interested parties. For example, the Club and Institute Union (CIU), which represen[illegible] 2 million club members and to which the vast majority of "working men's clubs" belong, reports that of their 2680 clubs, some 60 per cent. still deny their female members full rights.

Child Benefit Reductions

Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister for Women what assessment she has made of the effect on women's incomes of reducing child benefit for parents whose children truant. [57955]

Ms Hewitt: The Government are considering a number of measures to combat truancy. We are therefore looking at ways of ensuring parents meet their responsibilities in bringing up their children.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Beer Sales

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee how much beer was sold to the House in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02. [65238]

Mr. Dennis Turner: During the 12-month period from April 2000 until March 2001, the House of Commons Refreshment Department purchased 61,096 pints of draught beers and lagers and a total of 18,831 bottles of beers and lagers. During the 12 months from April 2001 until March 2002, the Department purchased 53,568 pints of draught beers and lagers and 15,228 bottles.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Pensions Simplification

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when the Pickering report on pensions simplification will be published. [68396]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Alan Pickering's report will be published on Thursday 11 July and placed in the Library. Copies for hon. Members will be available in the Vote Office and the report will be published on the Department's internet site at www.dwp.gov.uk.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, pursuant to his answer of 19 April 2002, Official Report, column 1213W, on the Child Support Agency, if he will place copies of the OGC Gateway reviews in the Library. [53078]

Malcolm Wicks: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Todd, dated 3 July 2002:

> The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in replying to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency promised a substantive reply by me.
> You ask if, pursuant to the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions answer of the 19th April, Official Report column 1213w on the Child Support Agency, if he will place copies of the two OGC Gateway reviews in the Library.
> I do not think that it is appropriate to do so. The strength of the OGC Gateway review process is that it is speedy and generates robust, unvarnished opinion and advice. This is invaluable and I would not wish to see an awareness that a report may become public, to constrain the reviewers willingness to provide advice in this way.
> This concern is recognised in the code of practice on access to government information. This exempts from disclosure, inter alia "information whose disclosure would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion, including: internal opinion, advice, recommendation, consultation and deliberation". Against that background I am sorry but I am unable to reply positively to your request.

Benefits Decision Reviews

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions under what circumstances a Minister will decide to review a decision taken by decision makers on benefits; and if he will make a statement. [55581]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 10 May 2002]: Decisions on applications to change decisions are made on behalf of the Secretary of State by decision makers who are suitably trained and experienced. The Department has put in place a structured and transparent system for dealing with such applications. Claimants can lodge an appeal to an independent tribunal if they disagree with the decision of the decision maker.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners in (a) the north-west, (b) Lancashire and (c) Burnley have claimed the minimum income guarantee, and in each case how many claims have been awarded in the last 12 months. [65548]

Mr. McCartney: The information requested is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is shown in the table:

Area	Number of MIG claims
Burnley parliamentary constituency	3,000
Lancashire	35,400
North-west GOR	244,300

Income Support Computer Software

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in receipt of (a) pension, (b) income support and (c) both have had their payment delayed as a result of the income support computer software being unable to calculate payment due to increases in retirement pension; if such problems in making payments had been anticipated; if similar failures in processing payments are expected at the beginning of the next financial year; and if he will make a statement. [58032]

Mr. McCartney: We are not aware of any delay in payments of (a) retirement pension, (b) income support or (c) both as a result of the income support computer software being unable to calculate payment due to increases in retirement pension.

Asylum Seekers

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) if he will make a statement on the mechanism by which the Benefits Agency issues guidance to its offices on working with the Immigration and Nationality Directorate to ensure that the issuing of national insurance numbers, NASS 35 documents and asylum decision letters are co-ordinated; [61958]

(2) if he will make a statement on the mechanism by which the Benefits Agency has informed its offices of the provision allowing access to documentation directly from NASS if an asylum seeker wishing to have access to mainstream benefits has not received his or her NASS 35 document through the post. [61959]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Procedural bulletins issued routinely to all staff provide guidance on the handling and processing of claims from successful asylum seekers. The transition for asylum seekers moving from National Asylum Support Service support to benefits is, like any claim to benefit, subject to the relevant evidence requirements being satisfied. In some cases this can lead to delays although every effort is made to keep that delay to a minimum.

A procedural bulletin was issued to all income support and jobseeker's allowance processing staff in December 2001, informing them of new procedures designed to minimise delays in assessing claims to benefit from successful asylum seekers. Where an asylum seeker has reported that they have not received their NASS 35 form, staff are instructed to send a fax to NASS requesting that another one is issued within 48 hours. The NASS 35 provides details of the level of support the person has received from the National Asylum Support Service and the date when the support ceased. This information is necessary so that full rate benefit can be paid. The new procedure was introduced in consultation with the National Asylum Support Service.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he intends to reply to the letter to his predecessor dated 7 May from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Ms Winifred Lang. [66207]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I replied to my right hon. Friend on 28 June 2002.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he will reply to the letter to him dated 7 May from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mrs. Abdul Kader. [61691]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I replied to my right hon. Friend on 3 July.

Young Disabled People

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what representations he has received concerning the impact on young disabled people of the change from severe disablement allowance to incapacity benefit; and what action he is taking to mitigate this, with particular reference to (a) the low income scheme for health charges and (b) non-dependent deductions from housing benefit. [65797]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: We have reformed severe disablement allowance (SDA) in order to provide more support to young people disabled early in life who have never had the opportunity to work. Existing SDA recipients under the age of 20 on 6 April 2001 were automatically transferred to long-term incapacity benefit (IB) in April 2002, making them up to £28.10 per week better off. We estimate that around 175,000 young people will benefit from the change over time.

We have received some representations from hon. Members and a small number of letters from the public about the change.

Depending on their circumstances, young disabled people receiving IB can qualify for help with NHS charges (for example, prescriptions, dental treatment, sight tests, money-off vouchers for glasses, wigs, fabric supports and help with the cost of travel to hospital for NHS treatment) on the grounds of low income. We recognise that some will no longer have automatic entitlement to this help but many in this group will already be considerably better off as a result of the changes we have introduced and it would be unfair to treat these people differently to other IB recipients.

Non-dependant deductions are made where a housing benefit recipient has another adult living in the household who could reasonably be expected to make a contribution towards the rent. The level of deduction depends upon the income and other circumstances of the non-dependant adult.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Listed Places of Worship

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what money was taken from the English Heritage budget in 2001 to fund the listed places of worship grant scheme. [64609]

Dr. Howells: English Heritage redirected £2 million in grant in aid in the financial year 2001–02, from the existing Joint Places of Worship (JPOW) Scheme. For 2001–02 only, the Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) agreed to allocate an additional £5 million to the JPOW scheme. English Heritage and the HLF have jointly agreed a revised repair grant scheme for places of worship in England for 2002–03 which is currently expected to make grants totalling £21 million available for this financial year.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many members of her Department have been employed in its regulatory impact unit in the past five years; and if she will make a statement. [65962]

Dr. Howells: Departmental responsibility for regulatory impact issues has been located in various central units over the past five years. The number of posts in the relevant unit has been as follows:

1997–98: five full-time posts
1998–99: five full-time posts
1999–2000: six full-time posts
2000–01: four and a half full-time posts
2001–02: six and a half full-time posts.

Subtitling

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent discussions her Department has had with the film industry over subtitled films for deaf people. [65529]

Dr. Howells: The Department has discussed disability issues, including the provision of subtitled films for deaf people, with the Film Council and the Cinema Exhibitors Association. The Film Council has provision for sub-titled films in its new specialised distribution and exhibition strategy and the Cinema Exhibitors Association is also working towards more subtitled films for the deaf with the provision of new equipment. The Department has also liaised with the audiovisual industry, for example via the Broadcasters Disability Network and the British Video Association, as well as with organisations representing those with hearing difficulties in order to promote the availability of sub-titled material throughout the audiovisual sector.

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how she plans to ensure that the quality standards for television subtitling are maintained once the regulatory requirements for television subtitling are extended to digital cable and satellite in future communications legislation. [66252]

Dr. Howells: The draft Communications Bill gives OFCOM a requirement to produce, publish and from time to time review, a Code relating to provision of television services for the deaf and visually impaired and the means by which such services should be promoted. The Code will include guidance on the technical standards to be attained for subtitling, as the current Code produced by the Independent Television Commission does. The Code applies to the services listed in subsection (9) of Section 203 of the draft Communication Bill.

Green Minister

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport who her Department's green minister is; when they (a) have attended and (b) plan to attend meetings of the Green Ministers' Committee; what the outcomes of meetings were for her Department's activities; and if she will make a statement. [65987]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Blackstone is the Minister with responsibility for green issues at the DCMS. This Parliament the Green Ministers Committee has been reconstituted as the Cabinet Sub-Committee of Green Ministers, ENV(G), under the Chairmanship of the Minister for the Environment. It is established practice under exemption two of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees.

Overseas Tourist Offices

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many tourist offices the UK has overseas; where they are located; and what plans she has to extend the UK tourist offices overseas. [66084]

Dr. Howells: The British Tourist Authority is responsible for marketing Britain overseas as a tourist destination. It has 30 offices overseas located in Austria, Germany (Frankfurt, Berlin), Switzerland, Belgium, Netherlands, Denmark, Finland, Norway, Sweden, France, Ireland, Italy, Portugal, Spain, Australia, New Zealand, Hong Kong, Japan, Singapore, India, United Arab Emirates, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, USA (New York, Chicago, Los Angeles), Canada, Brazil and Argentina. We have no plans to extend these offices but the BTA keeps this matter under review.

Regional Television

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations she has received from ITC on ITC's new Charter for Broadcasting in the Nations and Regions. [66448]

Dr. Howells: The Independent Television Commission kept the Department informed of progress as they negotiated the Charter for Broadcasting in the Nations and Regions with the ITV companies.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what her policy is in respect of promoting and encouraging regional television; and what further plans she has in this respect. [66447]

Dr. Howells: The Government's policy is to retain and strengthen the regional dimension to public service broadcasting to ensure that it continues to meet the needs of different communities and cultural interests. The draft Communications Bill contains detailed provisions designed to achieve this.

Under the Bill, Channel 3 companies will have targets for programmes produced in the regions for the regions, programmes made regionally for national audiences and investment in programme production in the regions. They will also have targets for the provision of high quality regional programmes, including news, a sufficient proportion of which will have to be shown at or around peak time. OFCOM will be required to publish a review of the regional obligations in each Channel 3 licence whenever ownership changes hands and to change licence conditions to meet any concerns arising.

Channel 4 will have targets for programme production and investment in the regions. Obligations in this area will also be applied to the BBC, through the Agreement with the Secretary of State.

Television Licence

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many pensioners over 75 years old in (a) the North West, (b) Lancashire and (c) Burnley receive free television licences. [65546]

Dr. Howells: TV Licensing, which administers the free television licence scheme for the BBC as Licensing Authority, is not able to provide geographical breakdowns of the number of free licences issued. However, estimates based on the 1991 Census indicate that there were approximately 368,000 people aged 75 or over in the North West Government Office Region, 97,000 in Lancashire and 6,400 in the Burnley constituency.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many prosecutions undertaken by Television Licensing in each of the last five years resulted in a custodial sentence; and what was the length of the sentence in each case. [65460]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 1 July 2002]: Custodial sentences are not available for television licence evasion, the maximum penalty being a fine. However, custodial sentences can be imposed for non-payment of such a fine. The number of people in England and Wales received into prison for non-payment of fines for TV Licence evasion, by sentence length and year, in each of the last five years was as follows:

Sentence Lengths	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001
Up to and including three months	235	167	180	37	28
GT 3 LE six months	1	2	—	—	—
GT 12 LE 18 months	—	1	—	—	—
GT 18 months LE three years	—	—	—	1	—
Total	236	170	180	38	28

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the estimated (a) level and (b) cost of energy use in her Department and associated agencies was in each year since 1997; what proportion of energy was generated from renewable sources; and if she will make a statement. [65958]

Dr. Howells: The Department did not retain details of energy levels until 2000–01. Energy costs since 1997–98, and levels from 2000–01 are as follows.

Year	kilowatt hours	£000
1997–98		311
1998–99		107
1999–2000		133
2000–01	3.9	146
2001–02	[1]2.6	112

[1] Reflects release of a building

The Department has not bought from renewable sources in the past but is planning buy a proportion of energy from such sources when contracts are re-let later in the year.

Figures for the Royal Parks Agency are:

Year	kilowatt hours	£000
1997	7.9	311
1998	7.9	305
1999	6.5	313
2000	7.6	247
2001	7.3	211

Note:

None of the energy consumed in the above periods by the Royal Parks Agency was procured from renewable sources.

Digital Television

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions she has had with the BBC about their bid for a multiplex licence. [65459]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 1 July 2002]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no discussions with the BBC about their bid. This is a matter for the ITC.

The Dome

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the names and amounts paid by (a) sponsors and (b) contributors to the Dome who did not make confidentiality a condition of their donation; and (i) how much money and (ii) how many donations remain subject to confidentiality. [65570]

Dr. Howells: Official sponsors of the Millennium Experience were: Boots (supported by L'Oreal and Roche), BskyB, BT, City of London (a consortium of Corporation of London, Barclays, CGU, NatWest, Prudential), Ford, Manpower, Marks and Spencer, McDonalds and Tesco.

Official partners were: BAA, BAE, British Airways, Camelot and Marconi.

Official suppliers were: 3Com, Coca-Cola, Compaq, Daily Mail, Kodak, Mars, Thames Water, Typhoo and Walls.

Sponsorship for the Faith zone came from the Laing Family Trusts, the Hinduja Foundation and other Christian trusts including the Jerusalem Trust.

Other contributors, in various ways, were: De Beers, Halifax, London borough of Greenwich, Reuters and Woolwich.

The total amount of sponsorship obtained by the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) was £120 million cash and value in kind, not including direct funding by BT and Ford of the costs of their zones or extra funding for marketing and promotion spent by a number of sponsors over and above the requirements of their contracts. Actual payments of cash and value in kind following negotiations are subject to various confidentiality requirements of the contracts and agreements between the NMEC and contributors.

DEFENCE

Entertainment Costs

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for 1997–98 and for each subsequent financial year, including the current year to date, the amount spent by (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) its non-departmental public bodies on (i) food and (ii) alcohol, indicating how much was spent on guests, and how much in respect of (A) Ministers and (B) staff, broken down to show how much was provided directly by his Department and how much reclaimed. [34446]

Dr. Moonie: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Part-time Employees

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and what proportion of the staff of his Department are part-time employees. [47154]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 10 April 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 10 April 2002, Official Report, column 49W, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Cabinet Office (Mr. Leslie).

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of his Department have been employed in its Regulatory Impact Unit in the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [65964]

Mr. Ingram: As a non-regulatory Department, the Ministry of Defence does not have a dedicated Regulatory Impact Unit. Five years ago the MOD's focal point was a civilian in the MOD Procurement Executive (now Defence Procurement Agency). From early 1999 issues relating to regulatory impact have been addressed by two civilian members of staff, as part of their wider remit to assess the potential impacts of EU legislation on the Ministry of Defence.

Services (Foreign Nationals)

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many foreign nationals are serving in the (a) Army, (b) Royal Navy, and (c) Royal Air Force; which countries they were recruited from; and how many were in each service in 1995. [55447]

Mr. Ingram: The number of foreign nationals serving in the Army in 2002 and 1995 by country is shown on the following table.

There is no nationality marker held on the Personnel Record of Service for the Naval Service although information on ethnicity and religion is held.

The RAF holds some information on 'not British' personnel, however, data are not accurate enough to provide a reliable estimate.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the decision made on 22 May by the Pensions Appeal Tribunal to oblige the Government to accept the diagnosis of Gulf War Syndrome in the case of a former member of the UK armed forces. [60332]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 13 June 2002]: The Pensions Appeal Tribunal's decision in the recent case involving "Gulf War Syndrome" is specific to that case. It does not set a legal precedent for other war pension claims. The Tribunal found that the Ministry of Defence had failed to show beyond reasonable doubt that "Gulf War Syndrome" was not attributable to service. However the overwhelming consensus of medical and scientific opinion is that the symptoms reported by some Gulf veterans do not constitute a discrete disorder. It would be wrong to interpret from the Tribunal's finding that "Gulf War Syndrome" does exist.

The fact that there is, at present, no proper basis for recognising "Gulf War Syndrome" as an appropriate diagnostic label does not prevent a Gulf Veteran getting a war pension. A war pension can be paid for any disablement provided that a causal link to service is accepted.

Chinook

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his assessment is of the level of airworthiness of the RAF Chinook HC2 fleet at the time of the fatal accident on the Mull of Kintyre on 2 June 1994. [64563]

Mr. Ingram: In November 1993, the Chinook Mk 2 fleet had been given an interim Controller Aircraft (CA) release, permitting the aircraft to be operated at a maximum all-up weight of 18,000 kg. This would have enabled the aircraft to be safely operated on one engine. On 1 March 1994 this weight limit was increased to 22,700 kg when using under-slung-loads. The fleet was given these flight clearances as the Ministry of Defence had no doubts about its safe operation.

Hawk T1

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations his Department has received concerning the time required to convert the Hawk T1 trainer into a weapons delivery system; [65426]

(2) what representations his Department has received regarding the capacity of the Hawk T1 to deliver (a) air-to-surface munitions and (b) nuclear air-to-surface munitions; and if he will make a statement. [65428]

Mr. Hoon: The Hawk aircraft has been an exceptionally successful export in both its training and operational roles. The Ministry of Defence does not have available records of representations made on these issues over the years. No Hawk aircraft have been converted to deliver nuclear air-to-surface munitions.

RNAS Yeovilton

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that the training and experience of helicopter pilots at RNAS Yeovilton is up to date. [65199]

Mr. Ingram: A multi-level system exists to ensure that all helicopter aircrew are sufficiently trained to carry out any mission that they may be called upon to undertake.

All helicopter crews initially pass through the military flying training system where standards are set and monitored by the tri-service Central Flying School.

Crews in operational squadrons are monitored by the squadron training officer, who ensures that all crews maintain flying currency in accordance with the flying training directive produced by the Assistant Chief of Staff Aviation.

While in squadron service all crews undertake periodic examinations and flying tests to confirm their proficiency. The Naval Flying Standards Flight, made up of senior, experienced instructors external to the units and squadrons, visits squadrons and examines all aircrew, producing written reports on their capability.

Lynx

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the expected service life is of the Lynx Mark 8. [66033]

Mr. Ingram: The Maritime Lynx Helicopter Force based at RNAS Yeovilton operates both the Mk 3 and Mk 8 Lynx aircraft. Both variants are managed as one fleet. The Maritime Lynx was introduced into service in the mid-1970s. At current flying rates, the bulk of the fleet will reach its specified airframe fatigue life limits in 2008, however, the first airframe will be withdrawn for disposal in 2004. The intention is to replace both the Mk 8 and Mk 3 aircraft with the Surface Combatant Maritime Rotorcraft.

MOD Police

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those locations where more than five MOD police personnel are based. [65715]

Mr. Ingram: The following locations have a permanent complement of more than five Ministry of Defence police officers.

[1] The complement at this site is currently the subject of consultation with the Defence Police Federation. In the meantime, however, some officers from Corsham are being detached on a temporary basis to help reduce overtime where it is currently high.

[2] Site due to close.

[3] MDP complement due to be withdrawn.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to reduce the number of MOD police. [65717]

Mr. Ingram: The overall strength of the Ministry of Defence police is kept under constant review to ensure that the staffing levels of the force match the tasking requirements. This will involve both the creation and the discontinuance of posts at different locations, and, where appropriate, the transfer of personnel.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many MOD police there were in (a) 1997 and (b) on the latest date for which figures are available. [65716]

Mr. Ingram: The strength of the force on 31 May 1997 was 3,807 officers and 3,338 on 31 May 2002.

Submarines

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many fleet submarines are at sea. [66029]

Mr. Ingram: As of 2 July [illegible]002 we had six fleet submarines operationally at sea, and one at sea conducting sea trials. The remaining five are either in extended periods of maintenance, or at extended readiness.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Tomahawk armed SSNs will be operational in this and each of the next five years. [66035]

Mr. Ingram: On current plans, the number of Tomahawk-capable SSNs which will be operational in this and the next five years are as follows:

Year	Number
2003	4
2004	4
2005	5
2006	6
2007	6

This does not take into account maintenance periods.

Munitions Depots

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the area is of the munitions depot at West Dean, Wiltshire; and what percentage is (a) buildings, (b) roads and hard standing, (c) farmland, (d) woodland and (e) designated as a SSSI. [65714]

Mr. Ingram: The Defence Munitions Depot, Dean Hill has a total area of some 236 hectares (583 acres). Building development is of low density and disbursed across the whole site. There are 1.3 hectares of underground storage within the hillside and approximately five hectares of buildings. These are connected by an infrastructure of roads, rail, services and bonded storage which is contained within a footprint of approximately 75 hectares or 31 per cent. of the total. 36 per cent. of the site is let for agricultural purposes, while woodland constitutes 15 per cent. The site of special scientific interest (SSSI) extends to some 43 hectares or 18 per cent. of the total, and it should be noted that part of the woodland is within the SSSI.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of (a) stored munitions and (b) engineering and munitions maintenance work is carried out at Dean Hill for each of the three armed services. [65732]

Mr. Ingram: 48 per cent. by volume of the munitions stored at Dean Hill are held in support of the Navy and 52 per cent. in support of the RAF. However, munitions stocks held at Dean Hill represent less than four per cent. of munitions stored by Defence Munitions on behalf of all three armed services.

In the last year, 49 per cent. of engineering and munitions maintenance work at Dean Hill was carried out in support of the Navy and 51 per cent. in support of the RAF. Again, however, this represents about four per cent. of the processing capacity within Defence Munitions.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the criteria used to decide which munitions depot to dispose of; and if he will list the depots against which Dean Hill competed. [65733]

Mr. Ingram: An internal rationalisation study, known as Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 (DMRS 2), started in 2001, and examined the best utilisation of Defence Munitions (DM) facilities throughout the United Kingdom. An earlier study (DMRS 1) had already recommended two other site closures at DM Welford on Berkshire and DM Smalmstown near Carlisle in 2000.

Even after the impact of the closure of the Welford and Smalmstown sites has been taken into account, DMRS 2 confirmed that spare capacity remains in DM's explosives storage and processing capacity.

The DMRS 2 team examined munitions storage, processing and supply issues. Most of DM's eight principal depots cover a variety of these outputs. The study drew these elements together to determine how the necessary capacity could most efficiently be retained. Taking all of these elements into account, it was concluded that only the capacity and facilities provided by the DM Depot at Dean Hill, near to West Dean village in south Wiltshire, was not critical to the delivery of DM's outputs. The other Defence Munitions depots are required either for the volume of explosives storage and processing capacity they offer and/or have specialised (often unique) facilities to outload and issue munitions to customers.

All eight Defence Munitions depots were included in the review. Apart from DM Dean Hill, these are DM Beith in Ayrshire, DM Crombie in Fife, DM Glen Douglas in Dunbartonshire, DM Gosport in Hampshire, DM Kineton in Warwickshire, DM Longtown in Cumbria and DM Plymouth in Devon.

Married Quarters

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 25 June 2002, Official Report, column 749W, on married quarters, what criteria are used to assign standards to service families accommodation. [66230]

Mr. Ingram: The Defence Housing Executive (DHE) uses a Standard for Condition rating system. Properties are categorised as being Standard 1, 2, 3 or 4 according to points for each of a number of attributes including bathroom and kitchen facilities, electrical sockets, building fabric, safety, and energy efficiency. A property is graded Standard 1 for Condition (SIFC) only if all the attributes are assessed as being at Standard 1.

Forces Manpower

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there is full manning of the (a) Royal Air Force and (b) Royal Navy; and if he will make a statement. [66293]

Mr. Ingram: The RAF is in broad manning balance. However, shortfalls remain in a number of branches and trades. The RAF aim is to meet the Public Service Agreement (PSA), so that full manning against the requirement within a tolerance band of +1/–2 per cent. will be achieved by March 2004. The naval service will not now reach its PSA target of full manning within a tolerance band of +1/–2 per cent. in 2004, but it is determined to do so by 2005 and work continues on measures to achieve this.

Non-munition Stocks

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the book value of non-munition stocks was in (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) April 2001; and if he will make a statement. [66294]

Mr. Ingram: Information was not presented on a Resource Accounting basis until financial year 1999–2000. Consequently, the information sought for 1997 and 1998 is not available. The opening and closing balances for non-munition stocks in financial year 2000–01[1] were:

Financial year 2000–01[1]	£ million
Opening balance	[2, 3]5,295
Closing balance	[2, 3]4,573

[1] The Departmental Resource Accounts for 2000–01 were the subject of NAO qualification.

[2] Figures are book values after deducting provisions from gross stock values.

[3] Figures are subject to normal Modified Historic Accounting indexation, and are rounded to the nearest whole.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Harold Shipman

James Purnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has set a tariff in the case of Harold Shipman. [67644]

Mr. Blunkett: I do not usually comment on the tariff decided in individual life sentence prisoner cases. However, I recognise that Harold Shipman's crimes raise issues of particular public concern and I therefore intend to depart from my usual practice in this case. Harold Shipman was convicted in January 2000 on 15 counts of murder. I extend my deepest sympathies to the families and friends of the victims. These were the most heinous of offences and the grossest breach of the duty of trust he owed as a doctor to the victims all of whom were trusting patients. Taking all the circumstances into account I have decided that nothing less than a whole life tariff should apply in this case.

British Overseas Citizens

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of British overseas citizens who hold no other nationality. [67224]

Beverley Hughes: Following representations made during passage of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Bill about the continuing difficulties faced by British Overseas Citizens who have no other nationality, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has decided that those British Overseas Citizens who currently do not hold, and have never given up another nationality will be given an entitlement to register as British citizens. We are doing this to address the situation which left those people concerned with no right of abode in any country. An amendment to this effect will be made to the Bill at Report Stage in the House of Lords. Applicants will be dealt with at our posts overseas and will not need to meet any United Kingdom residence requirements. There will be no deadline for applications.

Fireworks

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional steps he plans to take to restrict the use of fireworks. [66875]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given yesterday by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Motherwell and Wishaw, Official Report, column 218.

Rural Awareness

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when his Department will establish rural targets and monitoring as part of overall rural proofing measures as set out in the Countryside Agency's report "Rural Proofing in 2001–02"; [54409]

(2) when his Department will introduce measures to raise rural awareness through staff (a) training, (b) development and (c) secondments as part of overall rural proofing measures set out in the Countryside Agency's report "Rural Proofing in 2001–02"; [54419]

(3) when his Department will implement proofing and checklist measures as part of overall rural proofing measures set out in the Countryside Agency's report "Rural Proofing in 2001–02". [54435]

Beverley Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle) on 20 May 2002, Official Report, column 82W.

Road Traffic Penalties

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the results of the consultation on road traffic penalties. [64283]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 25 June 2002]: We are currently in the final stages of formulating the Government's response to the consultation exercise on road traffic penalties.

Voluntary Sector

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 April 2002, to the hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin), Official Report, column 703W, on Government funding of the voluntary sector, how the voluntary sector has been defined for the purpose of the estimates; and whether some categories of non-governmental organisation have been excluded from this definition. [65038]

Beverley Hughes: The definition used for the purposes of the estimates is the same as that published in the report on Central Government Funding of Voluntary and Community Organisations 1982–83 to 1999–2000 (annexe B, page 23) ISBN 1 84082 636–3, copies of which are available in the Library.

Some categories of non-governmental organisation are excluded under this definition, i.e. universities, non-departmental public bodies, political parties, informal groups and self-help groups directly run by clinicians.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 April 2002, to the right hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin), Official Report, column 703W, on Government funding for the voluntary sector, if he will break down the figure for (a) other state sources, by type of statutory body, (b) lottery funding by lottery distributor, (c) local government by local authority, (d) central Government by department and (e) European funds by Directorate-General; and in the case of (e), what EU funding for the voluntary sector is given in the other member states. [65037]

Beverley Hughes: The full information requested on a breakdown of funding to the voluntary sector from all these sources is not routinely collated by Government and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information on central Government funding by Department was published in the report on Central Government Funding of Voluntary and Community Organisations 1982–83 to 1999–2000 (pages (4–5) ISBN 1 84082 636–3, copies of which are available in the Library.

Dumped Vehicles

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the steps the police take to track down the owners of dumped vehicles. [66515]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The police and local authorities have a joint responsibility for the removal of abandoned vehicles and taking action as appropriate against their owners. When a vehicle is reported or discovered apparently abandoned on the highway, the police will carry out a number of checks to ensure it is not stolen, illegally parked, or causing an obstruction or danger. If it is, removal of the vehicle will be arranged as soon as possible. Once the vehicle is removed, the police will take steps to identify the last registered keeper of the vehicle via a search of vehicle keepership information on the police national computer.

Where an apparently abandoned vehicle is not of police interest, details are forwarded to the local authority, which has responsibility for its removal and ultimate disposal. The Government have recently introduced tough new measures to help local authorities deal more effectively with the problem of abandoned vehicles, including improved access to the Driving Vehicle Licence Agency (DVLA) vehicle records.

Policy Appraisal

Sandra Gi[illegible]y: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has established a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment; and what progress has been achieved. [66606]

Beverley H[illegible]hes [holding answer 2 July 2002]: In 1998, the Home Office, Department for Education and Skills (DfES) [illegible] the Cabinet Office Women's Unit issued Policy Appraisal for Equal Treatment (PAFET) guidelines to all Government Departments. PAFET covers the responsibility officials have for assessing how their work is likely to affect different groups and to take action to ensure this is taken into account from the beginning of the policy process and its evaluation.

Guidance has been circulated to all senior managers at Grade 7 level and above within the Home Department to ensure that the effects of any policy changes on all sections of the population are considered at the earliest stage of policy development.

In addition, as a result of the Race Relations (Amendment) Act 2000, listed public bodies are now required to consult on the potential impact of new policies, and to monitor existing policies, to ensure that there is no differential and adverse impact on people from minority ethnic communities.

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the EU directives and regulations that have been implemented through his Department in 2002; and what was the cost of each to public funds. [64975]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: No European Union directives and regulations have been implemented through the Home Office in 2002.

Plain Clothes Allowance

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if [illegible] will make a statement on the proposal to remove the plain clothes allowance to CID officers; and whether he intends to introduce measures requiring police officers to contribute payments towards the cost of their uniforms. [30114]

Mr. Denham: The Police Negotiating Board (PNB) reached agreement on 9 May 2002 on a package of modernising reforms to police pay and conditions of service. The PNB is the statutory negotiating body for police pay and conditions of service, on which all the main police organisations are represented, including the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Association of Police Authorities, the Superintendents' Association and the Police Federation.

One of the reforms agreed is to reduce the plain clothes allowance on 1 April 2003 to half its current rate of £258 and then to abolish it altogether on 1 April 2004. That change has to be seen in the context of all the changes, which include an increase in the basic salary for all federated ranks' officers of £402 a year from 1 April 2003 and a shortening of the federated ranks' pay scales, resulting in faster progression to the top of the scales. Once they have spent a year at the top of the scales, federated ranks officers will be eligible for a new competence-related payment of £1,002 a year, with at least 75 per cent. of those eligible expected to get the payment. In addition, under a new special priority payment scheme to target extra pay at those officers at the sharp end of policing, officers in qualifying posts will receive annual payments of between £500 and £3,000 normally, up to £5,000 exceptionally.

The PNB Agreement does not require officers to contribute to the cost of their uniforms.

Youth Justice

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many cases involving young people as defendants have been thrown out of magistrates courts in each month in (a) 1999, (b) 2000 and (c) 2001; [58891]

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the recent trend in court cases involving young people which (a) are adjourned and (b) do not end in a conviction. [58890]

Hilary Benn: The information requested for 1999 and 2000 is contained in the table, except for statistics of cases that are adjourned which are not collected centrally.

[1] Under section 23(3) Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, adjourned 'sine die' etc.

[2] Discharged under section 6 Magistrates Courts Act 1980 (when examining Justices decide that there is insufficient evidence on which to commit the defendant for trial).

[3] No evidence offered, not proceeded against or charge withdrawn.

[4] Under section 9 Magistrates Courts Act 1980 (when the court, after hearing the evidence, decide the defendant is not guilty).

[5] Staffordshire police were only able to submit sample data for one week in each quarter for persons proceeded against in magistrates courts in 2000. Although sufficient to estimate higher orders of data, estimates derived from these data are not robust enough at a monthly level and have been included in the totals only.

Communications Interception

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to allow (a) the police and (b) other regulatory or investigatory agencies of the state to intercept the e-mails and internet communications to internet websites of private individuals; and if he will make a statement. [62053]

Mr. Blunkett: Authority to intercept communications can only be given by the Secretary of State personally. Where the warrant is the result of a request for assistance made under an international mutual assistance agreement and where the subject or premises to which the interception relates appear to be outside the United Kingdom, authority may be given by a senior official. Such authority can only be given to those persons specified in Section 6(2) of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000. They are:

the Director-General of the Security Service;

the Chief of the Secret Intelligence Service;

the Director of the Government Communications Head Quarters;

the Director-General of the National Criminal Intelligence Service;

the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis;

the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary (now the Police Service of Northern Ireland);

the chief constable of any police force maintained under or by virtue of section 1 of the Police (Scotland) Act 1967;

the Commissioners of Customs and Excise;

the Chief of Defence Intelligence; and a person who, for the purposes of any international mutual assistance agreement, is the competent authority of a country or territory outside the United Kingdom.

Authority can only be given where the Secretary of State is satisfied that the interception is necessary:

(a) in the interests of national security;

(b) for the purpose of preventing or detecting serious crime;

(c) for the purpose of safeguarding the economic well being of the United Kingdom;

(d) in circumstances where he would issue a warrant under (b) above, to give effect to an international mutual legal assistance agreement.

The interception of communications is subject to oversight by the Interception of Communications Commissioner.

The Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Interception of Communications: Code of Practice) Order 2002 was laid before Parliament on 8 May 2002. The Code of Practice sets out in further detail the procedure, safeguards and oversight regimes governing the lawful interception of communications in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to ensure that individuals are protected from invasion of privacy and personal rights when the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 is extended. [62675]

Mr. Blunkett: The Government recognise the need to balance respect for personal privacy with legitimate measures to protect the public, especially in the context of rapidly developing technology.

I have therefore decided to bring forward new proposals in this area in the autumn after consultation over the summer.

The aim of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 is to provide greater security, clarity and regulation of these activities. First the Act is intended to ensure that:

> public authorities who have been added can only access communications data for one of the specified purposes in the Act;
> such access will have to be proportionate to what it seeks to achieve;
> use of the power will be subject to oversight by the Interception of Communications Commissioner; and > anyone who thinks their data has been wrongly accessed will have the right to complain to the Investigatory Powers Tribunal.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what he will do to warn users of the Internet that the Government will be monitoring them. [62676]

Mr. Blunkett: There is no question of general monitoring of users of any means of communication in the United Kingdom (UK) including the internet. An agency listed in section 6(2) of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 which applies for authority to intercept communications must identify either one person or a set of premises as the interception subject. Authority must be given in each case by the Secretary of State personally and will not be given except when the Secretary of State is satisfied that the interception is necessary for a specified purpose and proportionate to what is sought to be achieved. The purposes are the prevention and detection of serious crime, the protection of national security and safeguarding the economic well-being of the United Kingdom. The fact of an individual interception is not, of course, disclosed to the target.

With regard to communications data (i.e. not the content of a communication but data related to it), the aim of Chapter II of Part 1 of RIPA is to provide greater security, clarity and regulation of this activity as well as to introduce proper procedures for oversight and complaints.

In relation to implementation of this part of the Act, I will be bringing forward new proposals in the autumn following detailed public consultation in order to secure public confidence that arrangements balance respect for personal privacy with legitimate measures to protect the public.

HMP Holloway

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether staff at HMP Holloway were permitted to watch the England against Nigeria football match on 12 June; and if visits to prisoners continued during this period. [64501]

Hilary Benn: There were no special arrangements made for prison staff at Holloway to watch the England against Nigeria football match. The prison arranged for all prisoners to be unlocked in time for the match, so that they could either watch it in their cells or on association. Some staff came in early to enable this to happen. Staff supervising association will have been able to watch the match with prisoners.

The match had no impact on visits as domestic visits do not occur on weekday mornings at Holloway. Visits on the afternoon of 12 June were slightly delayed due to staff shortages and the need to train a new drug dog.

Brixton Prison

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers working in Brixton between 1996 and April 2002 who had previous military experience had served in Northern Ireland. [65440]

Hilary Benn: Information on the earlier careers of prison staff is not held in the form required by the question and could only be obtained by asking individuals. As previously explained to my hon. Friend in a written answer from my hon. Friend the Member for Stretford and Urmston (Beverley Hughes) on 11 June 2002, Official Report, column 1243W, this would involve examining around 1,300 files and interviewing several hundred staff, many of whom no longer work for the Prison Service. This could be carried out only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Service

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which prisons in England and Wales have been opened since January 1992; and when they first received prisoners. [66232]

Hilary Benn: The Prison Service records a prison's opening date as the date from which the prison receives its first prisoners. Since January 1992, 20 prisons have opened in England and Wales. These prisons are listed in the table.

Prison	Opening date
Elmley	February 1992
Bullingdon	March 1992
Wolds	April 1992
Holme House	May 1992
Woodhill	July 1992
Highdown	August 1992
Lancaster Farms	March 1993
Blakenhurst	May 1993
Doncaster	June 1994
Buckley Hall	December 1994
Eastwood Park	March 1996
Colchester	February 1997
Weare	July 1997
Parc	November 1997

Prison	Opening date
Altcourse	December 1997
Lowdham Grange	February 1998
Ashfield	November 1999
Forest Bank	January 2000
Rye Hill	January 2001
Dovegate	July 2001

Ashfield, Buckley Hall and Lowdham Grange are new establishments built on former prison sites. Eastwood Park was reopened following a major refurbishment after being closed in December 1992. Colchester opened in 1997 as a young offender institution. The establishment piloted a high intensity training camp regime and closed when the pilot finished in February 1998.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in England and Wales have a whole life tariff. [66233]

Hilary Benn: There are at present 23 people in custody in England and Wales with whole life tariffs.

Parole Licences

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals in the last 12 months had their licences revoked and were consequently recalled to prison in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [66616]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 2 July 2002]: During the 12 month period ending 31 May 2002, 4,773 determinate prisoners and 19 life sentence prisoners were recalled to prison using the Secretary of State's powers to revoke a prisoner's licence pursuant to sections 38(a)(1) and 39 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Prisoner Costs

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average annual cost is of accommodating a person in (a) a prison and (b) a youth offender institution; and if he will make a statement. [66624]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The table gives the annual average establishment cost per place in 2001–02 by category of prison. Figures are expressed in resource terms and exclude capital expenditure and headquarters overheads.

Average annual establishment cost per prison place 2001–02

Male closed young offender institution	20,732
Male open young offender institution	20,075
Category B	22,497
Category C	18,463
Dispersal	34,365
Female closed	24,795
Female local	31,310
Female open	21,220
Male juvenile	27,452
Male local	26,878
Male open	17,438
Male remand centre	32,474
Semi open	20,224
Average all establishments	23,500

People Trafficking

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the extent of the trafficking of women and children in the UK. [66152]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 3 July 2002]: Forming an accurate estimate of the levels of trafficking in people is problematic given the reluctance of the victims of trafficking to report to the police. There is currently no accurate, reliable data in existence within the United Kingdom (UK) or the European Union. A Home Office research study, "Stopping Traffic" (Police Research Series 125, published in 2000), indicated that there was intelligence to suggest that some women and children are trafficked into the UK for the purposes of sexual exploitation. This was estimated at between 140 and 1,400 per year but it was impossible to make a more accurate assessment of numbers. The report concluded that there was no evidence to suggest that this was on a large scale compared with other European countries.

The Immigration and Nationality Department Intelligence Section (INDIS) and the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS) produce confidential monthly assessments and annual threat assessments for Reflex, our multi-agency task force on organised immigration crime. These assess the extent of organised immigration crime, which includes the trafficking of women and children, as it impacts on the UK. Reflex is led by the National Crime Squad and brings together all the key agencies involved in combating the problem, including INDIS, NCIS, the security and intelligence agencies and key police forces including the Met, Kent and the British Transport police.

Wolvercote Clinic

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if a decision has been made about the future location of the Wolvercote clinic; and if he will make a statement on the provision of residential treatment of sex offenders living in the community. [67645]

Hilary Benn: In the interests of public protection, I have commissioned the national probation service to undertake a national review of the provision of residential treatment for sex offenders. This will encompass the work of the Lucy Faithfull foundation, which runs the Wolvercote clinic in Epsom.

I have also decided not to proceed with the relocation of the Wolvercote clinic to Silverlands.

The Wolvercote clinic will cease to operate at Horton hospital in Epsom following the sale of the site. Contingency plans will be implemented for the nine remaining residents so that they can complete their treatment on a non-residential basis, and for those under licence or supervision, formal contact with the authorities will continue.

Kevin White Centre (Waiting Times)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many patients (a) are awaiting treatment and (b) have had to wait for treatment at the Kevin White centre in Merseyside in the last year; and how long the waiting period is on average in each case. [64616]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Figures are not available on the numbers waiting for treatment (or the average waiting time of each case) at the Kevin White centre for 2000–01.

The following figures provide an illustration of current access to the unit:

during April and May 2002 a total of 42 people were admitted into the Kevin White Unit; of the 18 people who entered treatment in May 2002, 15 had been waiting less than two months, with only three waiting between three and five months.

The Government set up the National Treatment Agency last year with the objective of increasing the capacity, quality and effectiveness of drug treatment in England. Since then the NTA has:

established waiting time targets for drug treatment;

piloted a co-ordinated system of treatment delivery in eight areas (this aims to integrate all support services); and promoted the shared-care approach to enable GPs to work more effectively with specialist services and drug users in their areas.

In June 2002, the NTA issued its third paper providing national guidance to Drug Action teams, commissioners and service providers on managing and reducing waiting times for specialist drug treatment.

Detox Units

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are waiting for places in detox centres in the north west. [64615]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The information requested is not centrally held. From information provided by the 22 Northwest Drug Action Teams (DATs) in treatment plans submitted to the National Treatment Agency (NTA) in January this year, the mean waiting time for access into treatment for in-patient detoxification services and residential rehabilitation in the Northwest is as follows:

In-patient Detoxification Services

December 2001:

Priority—average 4.3 weeks (range 0–20 weeks)

Non-priority—average 13.7 weeks (range 0–52 weeks)

December 2002 Forecast:

Priority—average 3.5 weeks (range 0–10 weeks)

Non-priority—average 8.8 weeks (range 2–40 weeks)

Residential Rehabilitation:

December 2001:

Priority—average 5.0 weeks (range 0–24 weeks)

Non-priority—average 9.5 weeks (range 0–43 weeks)

December 2002 Forecast:

Priority—average 3.4 weeks (range 0–8 weeks)

Non-priority—average 4.7 weeks (range 0–13 weeks).

The NTA's priority is to reduce waiting times for treatment. It aims to enable practitioners, managers and commissioners to achieve measurable and sustainable reductions in waiting times, in line with NTA targets.

The NTA programme will achieve this by equipping local stakeholder teams, at DAT level, with the confidence, knowledge and skills to identify the main causes of avoidable waiting and to implement shared action plans to redress these.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) drug rehabilitation and (b) detox units there are in the north west of England. [64614]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: There are 17 specialist residential rehabilitation units in the North West of England for people recovering from problems with drug use. Non-residential rehabilitative support is available from a large number of community drug teams offering a comprehensive service over most of the region.

Three of the 17 units also offer detoxification services. Additionally, there are three specialist in-patient detoxification units in the north west of England.

Many drug users undergo in-patient detoxification in non-specialist beds within existing psychiatric care systems.

As above, community based detoxification is widely available across the region.

Drug Misusing Offenders

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the level of repeat offending by drug misusing offenders was in (a)1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 2001; and if he will make a statement. [66289]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The New English and Welsh Arrestee Drug Abuse Monitoring (NEW-ADAM) research programme currently provides estimates of repeat offending by drug misusing offenders for the purpose of tracking the drugs strategy. Repeat offending drug misusing offenders are defined as the proportion of arrestees who are using heroin and/or cocaine and/or crack at least once a week and who have offended at least twice a month in the last 12 months. The proportion of arrestees falling within the definition of repeat offending drug misusing offenders category was 15 per cent. for the financial year 1999–2000 (the first year of data collection). This only represents an interim figure from eight fieldwork sites. A summary of the full, two-year data from 16 sites (1999–01) is due be published later this year.

We are currently reviewing the drugs strategy targets and progress against them, including those concerning drugs and crime, to ensure we still have the right balance and focus. As part of this review, researchers in the Home Department are undertaking work to improve our ability to track changes over time in drug-related crime.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Bill of Rights

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his policy on a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland. [58366]

Mr. Browne: In accordance with the Northern Ireland Act 1998, the then Secretary of State commissioned the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission to "consult and advise on the scope for defining, in Westminster legislation, rights supplementary to those in the European Convention on Human Rights, to reflect the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland". I understand that the Commission is currently considering submissions made to it following the publication last September of its consultation document 'Making a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland' and expects to report to me in 2003. The Government's position remains that we will not reach any policy conclusions on the scope for a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland until that report has been received.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

LNM Holdings

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if the Government approved International Finance Corporation support for LNM Holdings in its acquisition of the Czech Nova Hut Steelworks. [65662]

Clare Short: The Board of the International Finance Corporation (IFC), of which the British Government is a member, has not considered any proposal for financial support for LNM Holdings in its acquisition of the Czech Nova Hut Steelworks.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations have been received in relation to the EBRD financing of LNM Holdings' acquisition of the Nova Hut Steelworks. [65663]

Clare Short: None.

Malawi

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's actions during the famine in Malawi. [66869]

Clare Short: Since October 2001 my Department has committed over £23 million to help the people and Government of Malawi deal with the food crisis. Our assistance has supported the supply of agricultural inputs to help increase domestic food production, access to employment income from public works, and supplementary feeding programmes for children under five and mothers. These activities have been carried out in partnership with local NGOs, UN agencies, EU and Malawi Government departments. Included in the above sum is £10 million which I announced last month for Malawi as a contribution to the international response to the regional crisis. It will also be used for food imports, agricultural inputs and feeding programmes for vulnerable groups.

My officials in Malawi are playing a leading role in the Malawi national task force and working groups responsible for development of a comprehensive, long-term national food security strategy.

Sudan

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what deliveries of humanitarian assistance have been made to the Nuba Mountains since the ceasefire was signed. [65656]

Clare Short [holding answer 3 July 2002]: According to UN sources in Khartoum, over 1,600 metric tonnes (mt) of food aid has been delivered to government controlled areas of the Nuba Mountains and 1,800 mt to areas controlled by the Sudan Peoples Liberation Army. In addition, United Nations (UN) agencies and other and international non-government organisations are actively implementing relief programmes in both areas.

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of recent reports of displacement of civilians in Western Upper Nile, Sudan. [65657]

Clare Short [holding answer 3 July 2002]: Fighting in Western Upper Nile continues and it has not been possible to accurately ascertain the extent of displacement of civilians in the region.

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made towards setting up mechanisms for monitoring the ceasefire in the Nuba Mountains, Sudan. [65655]

Clare Short [holding answer 3 July 2002]: An international monitoring unit has been established as part of the Joint Military Commission under the Nuba Mountains ceasefire agreement. Norwegian Brigadier General Wilhelmson heads the 95 strong Joint Monitoring Mission which comprises international monitors and representatives of the Government of Sudan and the SPLA. The UK has provided the vice chairman of the Joint Military Commission, four monitors to the international monitoring unit and US$ 1 million to help meet the costs.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her Department's policy in respect of the section 8 orders being carried out in Zimbabwe. [65679]

Clare Short: We believe there is a strong case for land reform in Zimbabwe. However we strongly deplore the way in which the Zimbabwe Governments fast track process is being implemented.

Section 8 orders are a part of a deeply flawed process that is not supported by the British Government or the international community.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to discuss with EU colleagues proposals to stabilise Zimbabwe's farming industry. [65682]

Clare Short: We have been active in promoting an international coalition, including the EU, to bring to bear whatever pressure is possible on the ruling party to change its ruinous economic policy. In the meantime, we are exploring proposals with non-governmental organisations to help small scale farmers revive maize production in the next growing season.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on assistance (a) offered and (b) proposed for assisting farmers in Zimbabwe. [65684]

Clare Short: Neither the UNDP nor the Abuja processes have resulted in a plan for sustainable land reform. In the absence of a credible Government programme, we are considering with non-governmental organisations how we can help poor farmers in the communal areas to increase food production, which has been so badly affected this year by drought, the failing economy and ill-conceived fast track land reform.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what funding her Department has allocated in 2002–03 for projects in Zimbabwe; and if she will list them. [65683]

Clare Short: The original allocation made for Zimbabwe in 2002–03 was £12 million. The following projects are being funded from this figure (most have been or will be funded over several years):

	£ million
UN Humanitarian Assistance and Recovery Programme	6
Support for UN Relief and Recovery Unit	0.086
NGO Supplementary Feeding Programme	4

Empowerment of Farm Worker Communities	1.6

We have recently increased spending in the southern Africa region to assist with the current food crisis, and Zimbabwe will benefit from additional support through the UN World Food Programme, and through non-governmental organisation feeding and agricultural recovery programmes.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate she has made of the number of families in Zimbabwe who have been moved from their homes as a result of section 8 orders. [65678]

Clare Short: It is difficult to obtain accurate information. According to the Commercial Farmers' Union about 2,900 farm owners have received section 8 orders and most of these will be legally required to leave their homes in the first half of August. However many may choose not to do so at this point while further legal avenues are being explored. Farm workers are also at risk of losing their only income and their home with the change of farm ownership. There are around 300,000 farm workers affected by the land reform programme which with their families affects perhaps two million people. While we do not know exactly how many of them have already been forced off farms, we are working with the farm workers' organisations and the UN World Food Programme to monitor their situation and meet their immediate humanitarian needs.

Oxfam

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she last met the Chairman of Oxfam. [66333]

Clare Short: I have not recently met Rosemary Thorp, the current chair of Oxfam. However I do regularly meet with Barbara Stocking, the Director of Oxfam, alongside other Heads of major NGOs.

Poverty Reduction Strategy

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to the answer of 16 May 2002, Official Report, column 753W, which countries have a poverty reduction strategy that exhibits characteristics of strategic processes for sustainability. [65500]

Clare Short: There is no internationally-agreed system for monitoring the extent to which poverty reduction strategies exhibit characteristics of strategic processes for sustainability. The 'characteristics' of strategic processes for sustainability are broadly the same as the agreed 'principles' of strategic processes for sustainability. The challenge is to ensure that strategies adhere to these principles.

The following 13 countries have agreed formal Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers (PRSPs) with the World bank: Albania, Bolivia, Burkina Faso, Guyana, Honduras, Mauritania, Mozambique, Nicaragua, Niger, Tanzania, Uganda, Vietnam and Zambia.

A further 33 have interim PRSPs, which set out a road-map for reaching a full PRSP:

Armenia
Azerbaijan
Benin
Cambodia
Cameroon
Cape Verde
Central African Republic
Chad
Cote D'Ivoire
DR Congo
Djibouti
Ethiopia
Gambia
Georgia
Guinea-Bissau
Guinea
Kenya
Kyrgyz Republic
Lao PDR
Lesotho Macedonia
madagascar
Malawi
Mali
Moldova
Mongolia
Pakistan
Rwanda
Sao Tome and Principe
Senegal
Sierra Leone
Tajikistan
Yemen.

Full details of these can be found at www.worldbank.org. Other developing countries have poverty plans, though the sustainability of these is difficult to quantify. Some display more sustainable characteristics than others. My Department, together with partner governments and the rest of the international community, works to ensure they provide the framework for sustainable development.

UN World Food Summit

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many people attended the UN World Food Summit in Rome in June from (a) her Department and (b) other UK Government Departments; and what the total cost of the visit was. [66223]

Clare Short: The World Food Summit: five years later event in June was attended by (a) seven people from DFID and (b) four from DEFRA. The total travel and subsistence costs were £6,250.00. There were also three non-officials on the delegation whose costs wee not met from public funds.

UN Summit on Children

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many people attended the UN Summit on Children in New York in May from (a) her Department and (b) other UK Government departments; and what the total cost of the visit was. [66221]

Clare Short: The delegation to the United Nations General Assembly Special Session on Children comprised eight people from DFID, including Hilary Been, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, 11 people from other UK Government Departments and six people from the UK Mission in New York. Not all invoices have been received but the total cost of the visit will be in the region of £75,000.

In addition other Government Departments financed attendance by one NGO representative and two young people at an approximate cost of £15,000.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the estimated (a) level and (b) cost of energy use in her Department and associated agencies was in each year since 1997; what proportion of energy was generated from renewable sources; and if she will make a statement. [65957]

Clare Short: The information requested is as follows:

	Gas (Kw/H)	Electricity (Kw/H)	Oil (litres)	Total cost (£)
1996–97	3,078,904	2,837,540	n/a	212,935
1997–98	3,065,[illegible]3	3,037,780	9,892	227,056
1998–99	3,271,499	3,105,217	11,233	211,036
1999–2000	3,694,801	3,078,375	11,744	185,826
2000–01	3,180,602	2,895,150	11,679	187,857
2001–02	3 279,018	3,018,021	15,378	221,941

n/a = Not available

The contract for our electricity supply in London has recently expired. Our new agreement sets out that 10 per cent. of our supply is from renewable sources. We will look to establish a similar arrangement for our East Kilbride office when the current contract expires next year.

South Africa (Discussions)

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions she has had with the Government of South Africa regarding the humanitarian situation in (a) Malawi, (b) Mozambique, (c) Zimbabwe, (d) Zambia, (e) Lesotho and (f) Swaziland. [66177]

Clare Short: DFID officials are in touch with the Government of South Africa and with Grain South Africa. South Africa is participating in World Food Programme and SADC discussions on the humanitarian situation in the region.

South Africa's transport corridors are essential for moving food supplies to inland countries in the region. The South African Government has recently worked with WFP on an assessment of the routes.

South Africa could also be affected by movements of people from areas of food shortage.

Trafficking

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to prevent people trafficking in (a) West Africa and (b) central and eastern Europe. [66183]

Clare Short: Combating people trafficking is part of a wider set of issues related to the vulnerability of poor people to the interests of national and international traffickers. It is an international problem requiring co-ordinated action. DFID's goal is to eliminate the poverty and social injustice that creates the conditions where such abuse can flourish. With other Government Departments, we are supporting the efforts of Governments and international agencies to strengthen social protection policies and justice systems in line with the international treaty framework covering these issues.

We are also supporting efforts such as Anti-slavery International's work with civil society in West Africa to stop the trafficking of children for domestic work, and the International Organisation for Migration's programme of training for agencies helping trafficked women in the Balkans.

Ghana

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her Department is doing to support cocoa producers in Ghana. [66187]

Clare Short: DFID has provided a bank guarantee to secure finances for the Day Chocolate Company (33 per cent. owned by Kuapa Kokoo—a Ghanaian smallholder cocoa farmer's union). Our support aims to develop new opportunities for mainstreaming fair trade chocolate into the United Kingdom large-scale multiple retail market. The products are Divine, Darkly Divine and Dubble. This represents a major advance in fair trade marketing.

DFID is also supporting a substantial portfolio of research developing integrated pest management and biological control solutions for a variety of key cocoa pests and diseases. These technologies are particularly critical in view of the move towards organic productions.

We are also supporting the Government of Ghana's (GoG) plans to improve rural infrastructure by installing steel bridges on feeder roads in rural areas of western and central regions—the main cocoa growing regions. Most of the current log bridges have deteriorated to the extent that they cannot carry loaded vehicles and, as a result, there is limited access to markets and social services. The goal of the project is to improve the livelihoods of the people living in the targeted areas by providing physical access, all year round, to markets, schools and hospitals/clinics. DFID has committed £8.5 million to this project and so far 28 bridges have been constructed, with a further 37 envisaged.

Central and Eastern Europe

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of her Department's funding has been allocated to countries in central and eastern Europe in each of the last five years. [66188]

Clare Short: Figures on DFID spending broken down by country are available in "Statistics on International Development", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The relevant tables for the figures requested are Table 7.4 "Bilateral Aid by Country (Europe)" which shows DFID spend in each country in Europe for the last five years and Table 3 "Gross Public Expenditure on Aid" which shows DFID expenditure split between bilateral and multilateral channels for the last five years.

Corruption

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to combat corruption in (a) Malawi, (b) Mozambique, (c) Zimbabwe, (d) Zambia, (e) Lesotho and (f) Swaziland. [66179]

Clare Short: The six countries are all signatories to the Southern African Development Community Protocol against corruption, which outlines comprehensive measures to prevent, detect, punish and eradicate corruption in the public and private sectors.

Working with governments and other development organisations, our programmes provide a range of assistance depending on the particular needs of each country. This addresses both enforcement action against corruption, such as effective anti-corruption agencies, and preventive measures, such as strengthening public sector financial management and supporting civil society to promote transparency and accountability in public life.

Malawi and Zambia benefit from £2 million DFID support for a World Bank Institute anti-corruption programme in 14 countries.

In Mozambique and Zambia we are working with the World bank to survey the extent of corruption and to support efforts to develop a national anti-corruption strategy which involves all key stakeholders. In Lesotho we are working with the Government to design a justice sector programme which will include the establishment of an anti-corruption unit.

In Malawi and Zambia we have helped to establish anti-corruption commissions and have provided assistance to build up their management systems and capability to conduct preventative and investigative activities.

In Malawi, Mozambique, Zambia and Lesotho we are supporting efforts to strengthen financial controls and administrative systems in government.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her policy is on using 0870 telephone numbers for inquiries by the public to the Department and its agencies. [66193]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development does not have a general policy on the use of 0870 telephone numbers for inquiries by the public. Instead, and in line with promoting the widest possible access to its Public Enquiry Point, DFID provides an 0845 number for UK callers.

The cost range for callers using the 0845 number is 3.95p (peak) to 1p (weekends), compared with 7.91p (peak) to 2p (weekends) for an 0870 number.

GATS Talks

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her priorities are in respect of the forthcoming GATS talks. [66559]

Clare Short: The current negotiations on the GATS offer developing countries the potential to gain access to new markets overseas and to benefit from more efficient and competitive services at home. One of my key priorities for the GATS talks is to ensure that developing countries are able to participate fully in the negotiations. To this end, my Department is working with the UN Conference for Trade and Development (UNCTAD) on a £350,000 project to strengthen developing country involvement in the services negotiations in Geneva. We are also working with other donors and international organisations to find the best way of providing technical assistance to developing countries to carry out an impact assessment of the requests made of them.

More generally, my officials are working closely with the Department for Trade and Industry (DTI) and other Government Departments to ensure that UK and EC policy on trade in services takes development considerations into account. In the recently agreed EC requests of other WTO Members, for example, requests to least developed countries have been mainly limited to 3–5 sectors, with a focus on sectors where liberalisation is most likely to contribute to development. The requests also make clear that the EC recognises the importance of liberalisation being underpinned by domestic regulatory frameworks designed to ensure the achievement of public policy objectives.

Burundi

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the policy of the World bank and IMF towards Burundi. [66325]

Clare Short: The IMF have been in regular dialogue with the Government of Burundi in recent months and will be undertaking a further mission to Burundi in July to progress negotiations on an emergency post-conflict facility, which we hope will be in place this autumn. The World Bank's Transitional Support Strategy for Burundi was agreed in March, involving support for demobilisation and reintegration, HIV/AIDS prevention and agricultural development, and a further Economic Rehabilitation Credit is under preparation. We remain in close touch with both institutions about their plans.

Great Lakes Region

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what level of development aid her Department has made available to (a) Burundi and (b) other countries in the Great Lakes Region in the last five years. [66324]

Clare Short: Over the past five years, my Department made the following levels of development aid available to Burundi, and other countries in the Great Lakes region:

£ million

	Burundi	Dem. Rep. Congo	Rwanda	Uganda
1997–98	1.6	6.9	6.2	47.9
1998–99	0.3	0.5	13.6	52.5
1999–2000	0.9	1.3	14.4	81.2
2000–01	1.5	3.1	32.8	86.2
2001–02	[1]0.5	[1]5.5	[1]26.9	[1]66.6

[1] These figures are provisional. Final disbursement figures will be available in November when the 2002 edition of DFID's 'Statistics on International Development' will be published.

Green Ministers

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development who her Department's Green Minister is; when they (a) have attended and (b) plan to attend meetings of the Green Ministers Committee; what the outcomes of meetings were for her Department's activities; and if she will make a statement. [65984]

Clare Short: Our Green Minister is Sally Keeble MP. She was appointed to the ENV (G) Committee on 29 May.

Following the general election in June 2001, the previously informal Green Ministers Committee was upgraded to a Cabinet Sub-Committee of ENV and it is established practice under exemption two of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. Therefore I cannot relate progress or outcomes by my Department to anything that has been discussed.

Recycling

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of (a) paper and (b) other goods purchased by her Department was recycled paper in each year since 1997; what the annual total cost of these purchases was; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65766]

Clare Short: The following table shows my Department's costs for paper and paper products since 1997. The recycled element of the figures up to last year are for recycled paper only; other recycled products were obtained but were not separately recorded or identified. since May of this year, 98 per cent. of paper used by my London office is recycled and therefore this proportion will now increase significantly. Other recycled paper products, particularly envelopes where available, will be purchased in future. Further trials of recycled paper are currently being carried out in our East Kilbride office.

	Cost of paper and paper products
1997	57,658 of which 199 was recycled paper only
1998	62,790 of which 235 was recycled paper only
1999	48,249 of which 99 was recycled paper only
2000	93,439 of which 2,179 was recycled paper only
2001	67,447 of which 1,289 was recycled paper only
2002	28,327 of which 2,527 was recycled paper only

Health Care Reform Programmes

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial support her Department is giving to health care reform programmes in 2002–03 in (a) Tanzania, (b) Zambia, (c) Ghana and (d) Bangladesh. [65757]

Clare Short: In Tanzania we plan to disburse up to £11.8 million to the health sector development programme during 2002–03 to support health sector reforms.

A further £4.76 million will be spent on technical assistance projects to support improved approaches to managing malaria, increasing access to and quality of reproductive health care, and better evidence based planning for public health services.

Commission on Macroeconomics and Health

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money was provided by her Department in 2001–02 to the Commission on Macroeconomics and Health. [65755]

Clare Short: My Department provided £693,073 in 2001–02 to support the Commission on Macroeconomics and Health.

Overseas Financial Aid

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action her Department is taking to ensure that overseas financial aid is used for development purposes. [65735]

Clare Short: My Department continuously reviews and assesses mechanisms for the delivery of, and accounting for, UK development funds in order to minimise the risks of misuse.

Financial aid to developing countries through direct Budget support is provided after a thorough evaluation of public financial management and accountability systems against specific benchmarks, and risks have been assessed in a systematic way.

DFID set out the arrangements in detail in a guidance note for staff in March 2002, "Managing Fiduciary Risk When Providing Direct Budget Support". A copy is being placed in the Library.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what evidence her Department has collated over the last 12 months that overseas financial aid has not been used for development purposes. [65731]

Clare Short: My Department has no such evidence.

EU Aid

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) if she will make a statement on the outcome of the EU summit in Seville with respect to aid; [65190]

(2) whether EU development aid may be tied to asylum policies following the conclusions reached in the Seville summit. [65189]

Clare Short: The conclusions of the European Council meeting in Seville (20–21 June) dealt with three issues relevant to international development.

First, as part of the EU's continuing preparations for enlargement, it was agreed that the work of the Development Council should be merged into a new General Affairs and External Relations Council which will also deal with foreign policy, military and security policy, foreign trade and humanitarian aid. The Government will be discussing working arrangements for this new Council over the next few weeks in order to ensure effective handling of the European Community's development programmes.

Second, in their discussions of asylum and immigration, Heads of State and Government agreed that closer economic cooperation, trade expansion, development assistance and conflict prevention were all means of promoting prosperity and reducing the underlying causes of migration flows. It was also agreed that, in dealing with countries that do no cooperate in combating illegal immigration, measures taken by the European Union should not jeopardise EU development objectives.

Third, Heads of State also endorsed the EU position for the World summit on Sustainable Development in Johannesburg and stressed the Union's willingness to continue playing a leading role in the preparation of the summit.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much EU aid will be used to support poor countries' efforts to comply with the EU's asylum policy in each of the next three years. [65194]

Clare Short: There has been no change in the objectives of the EC's development programmes. A separate budget line was established in 2001 to fund migration-related activities in third countries. Euro 10 million was committed through that budget in 2001 and Euro 22.8 million was provided for 2002. This budget is not used in pursuit of the EC's development policy. The amount available for this budget is decided on an annual basis and figures for the next three years are therefore not available.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the steps she has taken to ensure that the European Union devotes more of its resources to the poorest countries. [64690]

Clare Short: In 2000, only 38 per cent. of EC aid was spent in low income countries compared to 70 per cent. a decade before. In November 2000 we secured adoption of an EC development policy which, for the first time, makes poverty reduction the central objective of EC development programmes. This new policy calls for priority in resource allocation to be given to low income countries and we continue to work for agreement on the budget allocations to implement this policy and have the greatest impact on poverty reduction. In particular we are working for an increase in allocations for Asia. We welcome the positive steps that have been taken to reform EC development assistance. This should help improve the rate of programme implementation, of particular importance to the African, Caribbean and Pacific countries where many of the world's poorest people live. But much remains to be done to improve the poverty focus and effectiveness of EC development assistance.

United Nations Development Programme

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the progress of the work of the United Nations Development Programme in crisis prevention and recovery. [64976]

Clare Short: Crisis prevention and recovery has been identified as one of the six core practice areas within the UNDP mandate. The former Emergency Response Division which deals with these issues was upgraded to a Bureau in November 2001 and now has greater authority to engage in the inter-agency processes such as the Executive Committee on Peace and Security, and to develop its role in peace building in relation to that of the UN Department for Political Affairs. These are very welcome developments, through which UNDP is attempting to realise the "untapped" potential of the organisation in crisis and conflict situations, as noted in the Report of the Panel on UN Peace Operations (the Brahimi report), published in August 2000.

My Department has observed that strategy and policy development over the past 12 months is starting to deliver demonstrable benefits at the country level. UNDP's transition recovery programme, developed in the aftermath of the earthquake in Gujarat in January 2001, is a positive example of a community-led recovery process which builds on local traditions and capacities. UNDP has also played a key role in drafting the UN's five-year strategy for mine action. The pivotal role of UNDP is clearly recognised by the relevant players in this field, since it has been tasked to lead on 10 of the 40 strategic objectives.

Crucially, UNDP is also beginning to develop policy and tools to deliver conflict-sensitive development programmes. My Department is encouraging UNDP to incorporate conflict assessment into planning and management processes such as the common country assessment and the UN development assistance framework.

However, there is still a considerable amount of progress to be made, before UNDP's role in crises and conflicts will be universally accepted and welcomed by the United Nations family and the broader international community. It is essential that UNDP capitalises on the opportunities which now present themselves and focuses on successful implementation at the country level across the full range of technical areas. My Department will continue to work with UNDP's Bureau for Crisis Prevention and Recovery and encourage a continued focus on improving delivery at the field level.

Performance Targets

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the (a) cost and (b) saving has been from the Department's pursuit of Service Delivery Agreement targets in each year since they were introduced. [61642]

Clare Short: Performance against DFID's Service Delivery Agreement (SDA) is reported on annually in our departmental report, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. The SDA forms an integral part of DFID's systems. Separate analysis of costs and savings from the pursuit of SDA targets could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what has been the (a) cost and (b) saving from the pursuit of the Department's Public Service Agreement targets in each year since they were introduced. [61043]

Clare Short: Performance against DFID's Public Service Agreement (PSA) is reported on annually in our departmental report, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. The PSA forms an integral part of DFID's systems. Separate analysis of costs and savings from the pursuit of PSA targets could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Emerging Africa Infrastructure Fund

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial support her Department gave to the Emerging Africa Infrastructure Fund in 2001–02. [67000]

Clare Short: My Department provided US$38.5 million (equivalent to £26,708,788) to the Emerging Africa Infrastructure Fund (EAIF) during 2001–02.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the peace process in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [66184]

Clare Short: The various technical and economic agreements reached at the recent Inter-Congolese Dialogue at Sun City represented some progress towards a settlement of the conflict in the DRC, but the key agreement on an inclusive transitional government has not yet been achieved. We are working actively within the UN and directly with the parties concerned to help promote an inclusive agreement, which will be an essential basis for agreeing a constitution and planning elections. We also need to make progress on DDR and a halt to the arming of negative forces so that the security of Rwanda and Burundi can be improved and a phased withdrawal of foreign forces agreed. I plan to visit Kinshasa at the end of July to discuss these issues further with President Kabila and explore what more the UK can do to help.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action has been taken by (a) the United Kingdom Government and (b) the international community as a result of the UN Panel investigation into illegal exploitation of mineral resources in the Democratic Republic of Congo published in November 2001. [65559]

Clare Short: The November 2001 report was the second produced by the UN Panel on resource exploitation in the DRC. At the request of the Panel, the UN Security Council took note of the report and recommended that the Secretary General grant an extension of the Panel's mandate for a further six months to prepare a final report which is due in August. It is anticipated that this will provide an updated assessment of the situation and make recommendations to the UN and international community on specific actions which should be taken to help end the illegal exploitation of the natural resources and other forms of wealth of the DRC. We shall study the final report carefully and participate fully in the Security Council's deliberations on its recommendations. In the meantime, the UK has encouraged the Governments of countries mentioned in the Panel's reports to take the allegations seriously and investigate the activities of the individuals and organisations named therein.

Small Arms Strategy

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the share of the Global Conflict Prevention Pool's Small Arms Strategy that has been spent. [64688]

Clare Short: In partnership with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Ministry of Defence, my Department has established a UK Small Arms and Light Weapons Reduction Programme under the Global Conflict Prevention Pool. Over the three years from 2001–02 to 2003–04, we will allocate £19.5 million to UN agencies, regional organisations, Governments and non-governmental organisations seeking to develop and implement local, national, regional and international measures to combat small arms problems. During financial year 2001–02, £3.4 million was spent of an allocated £4.35 million. The under spend has been carried over to the current financial year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Sales

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his policy is on arms sales to (a) India and (b) Pakistan between December 2001 and June 2002; and if he will make a statement. [65409]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There has been no change in our policy on arms sales to India or Pakistan between December 2001 and June 2002. All relevant export licence applications for India and Pakistan are considered on a case-by-case basis against the Consolidated EU and national arms export licensing criteria, and in the light of the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Mr. Andrew Love) by my hon. Friend, the Member for Exeter (Mr. Ben Bradshaw), on 15 March 2002, Official Report, column 1296–98W.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the United Kingdom's arms export policies in calming tensions between Pakistan and India between December 2001 and June 2002; and if he will make a statement. [65410]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: All relevant export licence applications for India and Pakistan are considered on a case-by-case basis against the Consolidated EU and national arms export licensing criteria, and in the light of the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Mr. Andrew Love) by my hon. Friend, the member for Exeter (Mr. Ben Bradshaw), on 15 March 2002, Official Report, column 1296–98W. The consolidated criteria clearly set out our commitment to take account of the risk that exports might be used for external aggression.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he has undertaken (a) to assess and (b) to prevent the diversion of arms to terrorist organisations in Pakistan. [65408]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government focus their efforts on assessment of potential end-use at the export licensing stage, including where needed through checks made by our Posts overseas. Carrying out effective risk assessment on end-users before making the export licensing decision is the best way of preventing arms from falling into the wrong hands. Nevertheless, the Government remain committed to carrying out end-use monitoring in those circumstances where this will genuinely add value to our efforts to minimise the risk of misuse and diversion and where such monitoring is practicable. And our overseas posts have standing instructions to report on reports of misuse of any UK-origin defence equipment. We take these reports into account in our assessment.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations his Department received regarding (a) increases in Pakistan's (i) offensive and (ii) defensive weapons capabilities in each month from November 2001 to May 2002 and (b) his Department's assessment as to their effect on relations between India and Pakistan; [65412]

(2) what representations his Department received regarding (a) increases in India's (i) offensive and (ii) defensive weapons capabilities in each month from November 2001 to May 2002 and (b) his Department's assessment as to their effect on relations between India and Pakistan. [65411]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have received numerous representations on India and Pakistani weapons capabilities in the last eight months. We do not record separately whether the representations distinguish between offensive and defensive weapons.

As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary said in the House on 25 June 2002, Official Report, column 728, as long as there are one million men under arms on either side of the Line of Control, the risks of a conflict remain significant.

India

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress he has made with the Government of India on bilateral training initiatives in counter-terrorism. [66173]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by the then Parliamentary Secretary my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Ben Bradshaw) to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Stephen Pound) on 13 May 2002, Official Report, column 456W.

Chemical Weapons

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 2002, Official Report, column 293W, whether the term income refers to cash available from contributions to (a) the OPCW Secretariat and (b) the agreed budget of the OPCW; by when the major budgetary contributors to the OPCW budget finished paying their contributions in each of the last five years; (i) what the role of the Head of Administration in the OPCW is and (ii) from which country this post-holder came in 2001; if he will make a statement on the monthly statements made by Mr. José Bustani covering the operational programme; if he will make a statement regarding the use of the term unrealistic; whether the revised budget of the OPCW addresses the concerns over the previous OPCW budget proposals referred to; how many member states of the OPCW there were in each of the last five years; what the UK Government's estimate is of the frequency of inspections (A) proposed for the major budgetary contributors to the OPCW under the budgetary proposals referred to and (B) for the major budgetary contributors to the OPCW under the current budgetary proposals; and if he will make a statement on the action of the Conference of States Parties in the handling of the staff grading review referred to. [65259]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The term income referred to the income of the OPCW from the usual three sources: contributions from member states in accordance with assessments adopted by the Conference of States Parties; payments by declared possessors of chemical weapons in respect of costs incurred by the OPCW in verifying chemical weapons destruction; and interest on cash deposits held.

We do not have precise information on the timing of payments by member states. Our understanding is that all the major contributors paid their assessed contributions by mid-year in each of the past five years.

The Head of the Administrative Division of the OPCW supervises the work of the budget and finance branch, the human resources branch, the information systems branch, the procurement and support services branch and the training and staff development branch. The post was vacant throughout much of 2001: it was occupied by a US national early in the year, and succeeded in September by another US national.

The OPCW Secretariat, through much of 2001, issued monthly statements on income and expenditure. The Director-General included commentary on the operational programme in his statements to Executive Council meetings and in separate briefings of delegations through the year, where he outlined the cuts to the operational programmes he believed were needed to keep within anticipated income; and reported on progress in delivering what remained of the operational programmes. The Executive Council, on receipt of these reports, requested further authoritative information; requested specific proposals to deal with problems identified; expressed concerns about proposed cuts in operational programmes; authorised the use of all available cash to finance credible levels of verification activity and international co-operation and assistance.

The first draft of the 2000 budget proposed 12 per cent. growth over 1999; 2001 draft proposed 17 per cent. growth over 2000; 2002 draft proposed 24 per cent. over 2001; and the preliminary draft put to ABAF (Advisory Body on Administrative and Financial matters) in respect of 2003 proposed 29 per cent. growth over 2002. During these years, the norm in most international organisations was zero growth, and OPCW member states regularly made clear each year their belief that the draft budget should much more closely reflect the financial and political reality, so as to provide a sound basis for negotiations.

At Entry-into-Force on 29 April 1997, there were 87 States Parties. At 31 December 1997—105; 31 Dec 1998—121; 31 Dec 1999—128; 31 Dec 2000—141; 31 Dec 2001 (and today)—145.

OPCW industrial inspection targets are in many respects randomly selected by the Technical Secretariat, so it is not possible to estimate with any accuracy the likely frequency of inspections to be faced in any country or group of countries. Previous budget proposals have provided an indication of numbers of inspections planned for the various categories of industrial facilities subject to declaration and inspection. The current budget proposal for 2003 under consideration in the Executive Council makes comparable projections based on current risk assessments which, if implemented, we estimate would tend to provide a more global coverage by the OPCW. If total inspection numbers remain broadly the same as in past years, as is currently forecast, this shift in emphasis could perhaps slightly reduce inspection frequency in 2003 for some of the major contributors, relative to what might have been expected from budget projections in previous years.

The Director-General, in August 1998, published a grading review conducted by an outside consultant, together with his intended actions in respect of the review, including his decision to implement, effective 1 January 1999, all the grade changes recommended. In October 1998, the Director-General noted to the Executive Council his understanding that some member states had reservations about the funding needed to implement the grading recommendations. In November 1998, the Conference of States Parties decided that the reclassification of posts involved should be discussed and decided by States Parties at a later stage, and requested the Director-General meanwhile not to implement the study. The Conference of States Parties in July 1999 reiterated its request to the Director-General not to implement the 1998 staff grading review, and requested him to initiate a new classification study once terms of reference were approved by the Executive Council. In June 1999, OPCW staff members filed complaints with the Administrative Tribunal of the International Labour Organisation, an action joined later by a total of 89 staff. The Tribunal concluded that, in August 1998, the Director-General had had the competence for classification of posts, and that the re-classification announced should therefore have proceeded on 1 January 1999. The concern of many States Parties was that the basis of the grading review was open to question, the Director-General's decision to implement it was premature, and he had no budgetary authority to incur the significant additional costs that would arise.

Since the recent change in leadership the situation at the OPCW has improved with indications that better staff morale and planning are leading to greater efficiency and effectiveness.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 2002, Official Report, column 294W, if there is a role for member states of the OPCW in approving the transfers of funds referred to; and if he will make a statement on the (a) reasons given for the loss of confidence referred to and (b) late payments by member states of the OPCW. [65275]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The OPCW Financial Regulations provide for transfers of appropriated funds between programmes. Transfers of up to 10 per cent. of the original appropriation may be made by the Director-General, and reported to the Executive Council; transfers over 10 per cent. may be made only with the prior concurrence of the Executive Council. All transfers should be reported to the Conference of States Parties.

The loss of confidence in the former Director-General by a significant number of members of the OPCW Executive Council we believe arose largely from the financial and administrative concerns noted in the answer I gave to my hon. Friend on 18 June 2002, Official Report, columns 293–294W. There was also a perception among many Executive Council members that the former Director-General took an unnecessarily confrontational approach in his dealings with the Executive Council, to the detriment of the effective functioning of the OPCW, and contrary to the supportive role envisaged in Article VIII of the Chemical Weapons Convention.

As at 31 May 2002, 19 States Parties had outstanding sums due in respect of 1997 assessed contributions, totalling about £114,000 or 0.5 per cent. of that year's budget. The figures for 1998 are 29 States Parties, £177,000 (0.5 per cent.); for 1999, 31 States Parties, £50,000 (0.2 per cen[illegible] for 2000, 28 States Parties, £76,000 (0.3 per cent.); for [illegible] 50 States Parties, £590,000 (1.7 per cent.). So far in 2002, [illegible] 18 June, 76 States Parties have paid their 2002 assessed contributions in full and another 13 have made part payments totalling £34.75 million (95.6 per cent. of the budget). 56 States Parties have yet to pay any of their assessed contributions for 2002, amounting to £1.625 million (4.5 per cent. of the budget). The UK pays in full and on time, and takes every opportunity to urge all States Parties to do likewise.

Oman

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit Oman. [64822]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no plans to visit Oman.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to protect the interests of United Kingdom nationals engaged in legal action in Zimbabwe. [65244]

Mr. MacShane: Our consular staff in Harare will provide support and assistance where they properly can, but in all such cases, as elsewhere in the world, British citizens are advised to seek local legal advice on how best to pursue their case.

Iraq

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the medicines and medical equipment that are on the dual use list of banned imports to Iraq. [65558]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is no list of banned imports to Iraq. The Goods Review List, introduced by UN resolution 1409, contains dual-use items whose export to Iraq is subject to UN Security Council approval. It is not a denial list. Before approving Goods Review Listed items for export, the UN Sanctions Committee, drawing on expert advice from the UN Monitoring Verification and Inspection Commission (UNMOVIC) and the IAEA, will decide whether the military risk of allowing the Iraqi regime to have the listed items outweighs their humanitarian benefits. The Goods Review List is a publicly accessible document, the contents of which are available on the UN website at www.un.org/Departments/oip/index.html.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Nations organisations in Iraq are present on the same basis as they routinely operate in countries where there is a non-military UN presence. [65557]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: United Nations organisations are present in Iraq in support of the UN's Oil for Food humanitarian programme. FAO, UNICEF, UNDP and WHO also operate country programmes, as they do elsewhere.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the purpose for which each United Nations-related organisation is present in Iraq. [65556]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: United Nations-related organisations are present in Iraq for the following purposes:

Support to the UN Oil for Food programme:

WFP (food sector)
WHO (health, nutrition, water and sanitation sectors)
FAO (agriculture sector)
UNDP (electricity sector)
UNICEF (education, nutrition, health sectors)
UNESCO (education sector)
UNOPS (demining, water and sanitation sectors)
Habitat (housing, resettlement sectors)
ITU (telecommunications sector)
UNGCI (security for UN personnel in northern Iraq).

Country programmes:

FAO, UNICEF, UNDP and WHO also operate country programmes, the funding and activities of which are separate from the work these agencies do under the Oil for Food programme.

UNIKOM:

Monitoring the demilitarized zone along the Iraq-Kuwait border.

British Nationals (Prisoners)

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on when it is Her Majesty's Government's policy to support officially a plea for clemency on compassionate grounds from a British national imprisoned overseas. [67699]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Decisions on whether to support an application for clemency are taken at ministerial level. When considering an application for clemency on compassionate grounds, Ministers will, as a general rule, mirror the policy applied by the UK prison services when considering applications for early release on compassionate grounds submitted by prisoners in the UK. Each application for support will be considered on its merits on a case-by-case basis.

Ministers would not normally support a plea for clemency on compassionate grounds if a Prisoner Transfer Agreement exists between the UK and the sentencing state and a transfer to the UK could be completed within a reasonable time frame. In such circumstances, any request for early or temporary release on compassionate grounds could then be made to the appropriate UK prison authority.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Public Appointments

Keith Vaz: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the public appointments he has made since 7 June 2001. [66365]

Mr. McNulty: Since 7 June last year Ministers have made the following appointments or re-appointments to the non-departmental public bodies currently sponsored by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mayoral Management

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether local authorities must first obtain the consent of their electorate by a referendum before they proceed to a mayoral management system. [65996]

Mr. Raynsford: The Local Government Act 2000 specifies three models of executive arrangements, two of which involve a directly elected mayor. The Act, together with regulations made under it, provides that if a local authority proposes to move to or from either of the mayoral models, they must first obtain the consent of their local electorate in a referendum.

Elected Mayors

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which authorities have indicated that they wish to proceed to elected mayors. [65995]

Mr. Raynsford: To date, 28 local authorities have held referendums under the Local Government Act 2000 on whether or not to adopt executive arrangements that involve a directly elected mayor. Eleven of these referendums produced a result in favour of a system with an elected mayor. Of these, seven (Doncaster, Hartlepool, Lewisham, Middlesbrough, Newham, North Tyneside, and Watford) held their first mayoral election on 2 May this year, and the remaining four (Bedford, Hackney, Mansfield, and Stoke-on-Trent) will hold their first mayoral election on 17 October 2002. Corby borough council have also recently advised us that they will be holding a mayoral referendum later this year, following receipt of a valid local petition.

Regional Government

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the cost of introducing regional government in each English region; and if he will make a statement. [65860]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 24 May 2002 to the hon. Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key), Official Report, column 624W.

Local Government Workers

Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps he is taking to guarantee the conditions of local government workers where they have been transferred to the private sector. [64340]

Mr. Raynsford: The Secretary of State for Transport, Local Government and the Regions announced on 26 March measures to ensure fairness for all staff working on local authority contracts, including those transferred out of local government as a result of an outsourcing of a service.

In broad terms, the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 (as amended) (TUPE) protects employees' terms and conditions (except in relation to future occupational pensions) when the business in which they work is transferred from one employer to another, and the business retains its identity.

The measures we have announced include a commitment to legislate to make statutory within local government the provisions in the Cabinet Office 'Statement of Practice on Staff Transfers in the Public Sector' and the annex to it, 'A Fair Deal for Staff Pensions'. This will ensure that local authority contracting exercises are conducted on the basis that TUPE will apply, unless there are genuinely exceptional circumstances, and that transferees' pension benefits will be protected. New statutory guidance to local authorities will also set out a package of measures which will ensure that new joiners taken on to work beside transferees on local government contracts will be treated fairly.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Webb: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list for each English local authority, the level of spending on (a) education and (b) social services expressed as a percentage of the SSA for that service in that authority in 2001–02. [65091]

Mr. Raynsford: The information has been placed in the Library of the House.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much each local authority in England and Wales with social services responsibilities (a) spent on personal social services and (b) was allocated for personal social services by standard spending assessment in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [65202]

Mr. Raynsford: Figures for England have been placed in the Library of the House. Figures for Wales are the responsibility of the National Assembly for Wales.

Capital Receipts

Chris Grayling: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on plans to distribute capital receipts from local authority housing sales via a central pool. [65671]

Mr. McNulty: Last December's local government White Paper—"Strong Local Leadership—Quality Public Services"—set out our intention to introduce arrangements to pool a proportion of future housing capital receipts arising in debt-free authorities for use to finance new housing investment where the need is greatest. The change, which will be introduced alongside other changes to the local government capital finance system, will bring the treatment of debt-free authorities in line with the arrangements that apply to other authorities. We will be consulting on the detailed operation of the pooling shortly.

Single Regeneration Budget

Ms Shipley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the nominal Single Regeneration Budget's lifetime expenditure on physical regeneration will be. [66240]

Mr. McNulty: 1,027 schemes under the six rounds of the Single Regeneration Budget stand to receive over £5.7 billion of SRB grant over their lifetime of up to seven years, many of which include physical regeneration activities. However, due to the holistic, multiple-objective nature of the majority of these schemes, it is not possible to say how much of SRB funding is available by specific activity including physical regeneration.

Deprivation

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the rank is of each local authority that has undertaken a full or partial transfer since 1997 under (a) the 1998 Index of Local Deprivation and (b) the Indices of Deprivation 2000, in each year. [64393]

Mr. McNulty: The table sets out those authorities who have undertaken full or partial transfer since 1998 by their rank on the extent measure of the Index of Local Deprivation 1998 and the Indices of Deprivation 2000. The extent measure shows the proportion of the local authority's population living in one of the 10 per cent. most deprived wards in England. It should be noted that the extent measure is one of the four measures of deprivation in the ILD and one of the six district measures in the ID 2000.

Housing (Older People)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will publish the choice and quality in housing for older people guidance strategy that has been conducted with the Department of Health; and if he will make a statement. [65058]

Mr. McNulty: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) on 27 June 2002, Official Report, column 1034W.

Temporary Accommodation

Margaret Moran: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what further measures he is taking to increase supply of temporary accommodation to replace the use of bed-and-breakfast for the homeless. [65184]

Mr. McNulty: In March 2002 we announced a £35 million programme to help local authorities ensure that by March 2004 no homeless family with children is in bed-and-breakfast hotels (B&B) for more than six weeks.

On 17 June 2002 almost £25 million was allocated to 44 high B&B using local authorities to assist them reduce numbers in B&B. The funding is being used on a range of initiatives to procure alternative temporary accommodation to B&B and on measures to prevent homelessness occurring. We are now working with the next 40 or so highest using B&B authorities to see how we can assist them in reducing numbers.

In addition, all local authorities will benefit from the changes the Department for Work and Pensions has recently made to housing benefit subsidy levels which make local authority leasing of self-contained temporary accommodation much more financially viable than B&B hotels.

Home Valuations

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the impact upon home purchasers of the practice of district valuers reviewing the effect of improvements on value only after a sale takes place. [64375]

Mr. Raynsford: Dwellings are only revalued following improvements when the property is subsequently sold. This is so that people are not deterred from improving their home because their council tax might increase. The reassessment may lead to a property being moved to a higher council tax band. However, this is not always the case. No assessment has been made of the impact upon home purchaser.

Social Housing Targets

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has made to meet the 2010 social housing targets if tenants vote against large scale voluntary stock transfers; and if he will make a statement. [64391]

Mr. McNulty: The Government have substantially increased the resources provided to local authorities for housing investment to support delivery of the commitment on decent social housing. Where an authority is unable to fund the works necessary to bring its housing up to a decent standard by 2010 from its own resources and those provided through the Major Repairs Allowance and the Housing Investment Programme, there are three options for additional funding:

transfer the housing to a housing association which can access private finance; qualify for additional funding by establishing a high performing arms length management organisation; acquire additional resources through the Private Finance Initiative.

The planned ending of direct control of local authority borrowing will also allow increased investment where an authority can meet the additional borrowing costs.

It is for local authorities to decide with their tenants which investment option to pursue and we have extended the role of the Community Housing Task Force to help them with this. If stock transfer is rejected by tenants, then clearly the authority needs to consider which of the other options will enable it to deliver.

Right to Buy

Chris Grayling: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether housing associations retain funds raised as a result of the exercising of the right to buy. [65672]

Mr. McNulty: The right to buy can be exercised only by those few housing association tenants who are secure tenants of non-charitable housing associations. Any sale proceeds that remain after the deduction of expenses, outstanding loan debt and the recovery of any grant for the original provision of the property, may be retained and spent on purposes permitted by legislation for an association registered with the Housing Corporation.

Former local authority tenants of housing stock that has been transferred to registered social landlords retain a Preserved Right to Buy. The transfer arrangements will normally contain a sharing agreement aimed at giving the local authority a share of sales receipts.

Tenants of registered social landlord properties built or acquired with public funds since 1 April 1997 have a right to acquire their rented home under the Housing Act 1996. The Housing Corporation provides the registered social landlord with a grant to cover the discount offered to the tenant for right to acquire sales and the landlord retains all proceeds of such disposals. The legislation requires the proceeds to be placed in a separate fund—the Disposal Proceeds Fund—and the Housing Corporation directs the registered social landlord to use the proceeds to provide replacement housing for rent.

Equity Release Schemes

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to promote equity release schemes to assist with disrepair in the owner-occupied housing sector. [65720]

Mr. McNulty: The Regulatory Reform (Housing Assistance) (England and Wales) Order 2002 was approved by Parliament on 28 May and will come into force very shortly. It will allow local authorities to develop equity release schemes for housing renewal. This Order contains a new power enabling local authorities to provide assistance to owner-occupiers for the repair, improvement or adaptation of their properties. Such assistance can be provided in a variety of ways including grants, loans or equity release schemes. It replaces the powers contained in the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996 which allowed local authorities to make renovation grants available to homeowners.

Empty Homes

Mr. Pike: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will announce the money being allocated to Burnley to tackle the problem of empty homes as part of the East Lancashire Housing Renewal pathfinder project. [65551]

Mr. Raynsford: We announced on 16 May that we were making available £25 million from the Capital Modernisation Fund to assist low demand pathfinder projects in vital preparatory work, in equal shares of £2.66 million (£1 million will be retained centrally for collective monitoring and evaluation). That funding will, importantly, not be distributed to individual local authorities but to the pathfinder project as a whole. We are considering the case for further investment to tackle low demand, over and above that which local authorities and others already devote to tackling the problem, in the spending review.

Fire Brigades Union

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he last met representatives from the Fire Brigades Union; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement. [65994]

Mr. Raynsford: Responsibility for the Fire Service transferred to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on 29 May 2002. The Deputy Prime Minister has not met with representatives of the Fire Brigades Union.

Refurbishment

Ms Walley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the refurbishment projects that (a) are in progress and (b) will start within the next six months; and what action is being taken to ensure that these will procure certified timber. [59764]

Mr. Alexander: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Oldham, West and Royton (Mr. Meacher) set out the Government's policy on timber procurement in his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Colin Burgon) on 28 July 2000, Official Report, column 948W.

The Ripley Building and Kirkland House are currently being refurbished by the Cabinet Office. The Cabinet Office is working closely with Balfour Beatty, the main contractor, to seek to ensure that all timber for this project, that has not yet been ordered, is procured in accordance with that policy. A full investigation into timber procurement matters on this project has been undertaken by the Cabinet Office. A report of the findings of the investigation is due to be published shortly.

As part of some wider electrical and rewiring and redecoration works under way in Admiralty House, one new hardwood timber door is being procured. This is being procured from an independently-certified sustainable source.

In May 2002 the Cabinet Office entered into a private finance initiative contract with Initial Style Conferences Ltd. (ISC) for a rolling programme of construction and refurbishment works to the Sunningdale Park estate. The terms of the contract require ISC to purchase timber or timber products which are compliant with the Government's policy on timber procurement relevant at the time. The Cabinet Office will provide the details of the timber procurement policy relevant at any particular time and work with ISC to ensure their compliance with it.

The refurbishment of the National Crises Management Centre is due to commence within the next six months. The contract specification for this will include a clause stating that all timber used in the project should be procured in accordance with the Government's policy on timber procurement current at the time. The Cabinet Office will be responsible for providing details of the policy to the contractor and will work with them to help ensure their compliance with it.

Ombudsman System

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to bring forward legislation to reform the ombudsman system. [63978]

Mr. Alexander: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have made clear that they intend to bring forward legislation to replace the existing arrangements with a more unified ombudsman body when parliamentary time allows.

Fire Stations

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many fire stations have been (a) opened and (b) closed since 1995. [65521]

Mr. Raynsford: Based on annual returns to HM Fire Service Inspectorate, the number of fire stations in each fire authority area in England and Wales at 1 January for each year from 1995 to 2002 is set out in the table. On the basis of these returns, 10 fire stations have opened and 14 closed since 1 January 1995. However, these figures do not reflect instances where the opening of a fire station is balanced by the closure of another in the same fire authority within the same calendar year.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which local authorities have undertaken full or partial transfers of their local authority housing stock in each year since 1997. [64392]

Mr. McNulty: There have been 57 full and 39 partial large scale voluntary transfers (LSVT) of local authority housing stock undertaken by 73 authorities since 1997. The table shows which authorities have undertaken full or partial LSVT since 1997.

HEALTH

Intermediate Care Beds

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many extra (a) intermediate care beds and (b) non-residential intermediate care places have been introduced since the publication of the National Plan. [47827]

Jacqui Smith: The results of a survey in autumn 2001 for national health service intermediate care in England indicated that good progress has been made towards meeting the NHS Plan targets.

While audited figures for 2001–02 will not be available for another eight weeks or so, we expect on the basis of last year's survey that around an additional 2,400 intermediate care beds and 6,200 non-residential intermediate care places will have been provided, compared to year 1999–2000, which was the baseline used in the NHS Plan.

Rural Awareness

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when his Department will introduce measures to raise rural awareness through staff (a) training, (b) development and (c) secondments as part of overall rural proofing measures set out in the Countryside Agency's report Rural Proofing in 2001–02; [54418]

(2) when his Department will establish rural targets and monitoring established as part of overall rural proofing measures as set out in the Countryside Agency's report, Rural Proofing in 2001–02; [54408]

(3) when his Department will have rural proofing embedded in policy-making procedures as set out in the Countryside Agency's report, Rural Proofing in 2001–02. [54430]

Ms Blears: The Department is committed to introducing a process of rural proofing as set out in the Rural White Paper (2000). I have taken careful note of the recommendations in the report of the Countryside Agency, and will take them fully into account in further implementing rural proofing throughout the Department.

MMR Vaccine

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made with plans to launch a national advertising campaign to promote the MMR vaccine. [57455]

Ms Blears: Through frequent and extensive market research studies, it is clear that parents want clear, consistent advice based upon the facts about MMR. The Government's efforts have therefore focused on ensuring both parents and health professionals have access to scientifically accurate information about the vaccine. The leaflet 'MMR—the facts' has been updated. To supplement this an information pack for parents containing factsheets, website references, a list of published research and a glossary of terms has been developed. The availability of this information pack, through NHS Direct, is being advertised in the national and regional press.

Prescription Fraud

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of fraudulent exemption claims for prescriptions were submitted by pharmacists in (a) 1998, (b) 1999, (c) 2000 and (d) 2001. [61974]

Mr. Lammy: The responsibility for detecting fraudulent claims for prescriptions submitted by pharmacists has lain with the Prescription Pricing Authority for each of the years referred to.

The number of cases where they have detected potential fraud is detailed in the table:

	Number of referrals
1998	3
1999	2

In March 2002 it was decided, in order to put in place more effective arrangements, that the national health service counter fraud service should take over this area of work. This is likely to take place late in 2002.

The table represents the number of investigations carried out, where the pharmacist has received the prescription charge from the patient and then submitted the prescription for payment as exempt. The majority of these referrals were identified during samples for targeted checks on patient claims to exemptions, and may not be representative of all patient exemption claims as a whole.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to reduce the waiting times of elderly patients and mental health patients on the Isle of Sheppey. [61814]

Ms Blears: The Government are committed to improving services for the elderly and mentally ill. National service frameworks have been published for both mental health services and those for older people, setting out new standards of care with targets for delivery.

I understand that Swale Primary Care Trust is currently considering options to improve waiting times for elderly and mentally infirm patients and also to improve access to mental health services.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of the in-patient hospital waiting list in (a) March 1997, (b) December 2001, (c) March 2002, (d) June 2002 and (e) the latest date for which information is available; and if he will make a statement. [66286]

Mr. Hutton: The table shows published figures for the number of patients waiting for elective admission at national health service trusts in England at month end. Figures for April 2002 are the latest available. Data for June will be published on 9 August.

Patients waiting for elective admission: NHS Trusts, England

Month end	Number
March 1997	1,158,004
December 2001	1,050,221
March 2002	1,035,365

Department of Health form KH07

Scrapie

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the final results of the research being carried out for the Food Standards Agency of the Veterinary Laboratories Agency into the level of scrapie infectivity after intestine processing for sausage casings to be (a) completed and (b) published. [64113]

Ms Blears: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that work funded to date by the agency on sheep intestines has shown that not all the tissues that are most likely to contain scrapie infectivity are removed by the casings manufacturing process. A contract to carry out work to quantify the risk reduction has not yet been awarded. Such work is likely to involve bioassay and may take some time to complete and publish.

BSE

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he expects the European Commission's country by country assessments of the geographical bovine spongiform encephalopathy risk of small ruminants (a) to be sent to this Department and (b) to be published; [64110]

(2) what representations he has made to the European Commission about the time scale for the completion and publication of the country by country assessment of the geographical bovine spongiform encephalopathy risk of small ruminants; [64111]

Ms Blears: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency, that the agency's board endorsed a report on BSE and sheep from a core group of stakeholders at its meeting in Armagh on June 13. The report contained a recommendation that the agency should request that European Commission accelerate the provision of country by country BSE risk categorisation for small ruminants. The agency has formally registered the report with the Commission, but does not yet have information on the time scale for the completion of the risk categorisation.

Committee Mandates

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the mandate of the EU Advisory Committee on cancer prevention is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the United Kingdom representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if he will list the items currently under its consideration; if he will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [63635]

Ms Blears: The Europe Against Cancer (EAC) programme was set up under Article 129 of the Maastricht Treaty. The programme has a management committee made up of representatives from each member state. The management committee has met once in the last year. The costs to public funds were minimal, meetings last one day, the Commission pay the travel costs of nominated representatives, UK departments are required to pay subsistence and UK travel costs.

The programme is currently funding eight projects: European network of cancer registries; European prospective investigation into cancer and nutrition; European network on smoking prevention; European network on young people and tobacco; European cervical cancer screening network; European breast cancer network; education, science and quality assurance in radiotherapy and a project to evaluate the European code against cancer.

The overarching European public health action programme of which the EAC programme is one part ends on 31 December 2002. The new European public health action programme has been agreed under conciliation procedures and is expected shortly.

Together with member states, the Commission is currently conducting a review to bring existing legislation on the conduct of comitology committees into line with Council Decision 1999/468/EC, to

> "simplify the requirements for the exercise of implementing powers conferred on the Commission".

As an obligation to this decision, the Commission undertook to publish an annual report on the working of committees. The first report was deposited in the Libraries of both Houses on 26 February 2002 (Com (2001) 783 Final.

As part of the review process, the UK Government have encouraged the Commission to produce and maintain an electronic database of every comitology committee, its agendas and recent actions, to be accessible through its website.

Disease Statistics

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on the collection of statistics on mobility and mortality rates of various conditions and diseases. [63661]

Ms Blears: The Department makes use of the following information on mortality and morbidity, in particular to support the NHS Plan, "Our Healthier Nation" and work on health inequalities.

Mortality statistics are the responsibility of the registrar general who is also director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS). The cause of every death is certified either by a doctor who attended the deceased in his last illness, or a coroner. ONS codes the diseases, injuries and external causes from the certificate and selects the underlying cause using the current revision of the international classification of diseases, published by the World Health Organisation. Since January 2001, the Tenth Revision (ICD-10) has been used. Prior to that, the Ninth Revision was in use from 1979. Mortality statistics are published by ONS in electronic and paper form and are used by the Department, other Government Departments, the national health service and academic researchers.

The Department collects and uses a wide range of data on morbidity according to the condition of interest and the context of the question to be answered

Data sources in the Department and the ONS include population surveys (such as the health survey for England, general household survey) and health services data (such as hospital episode statistics and the Royal College of General Practitioners Weekly Returns Service). Data sources include administrative sources and ad-hoc surveys according to the particular issues. Some sources have general health information and others focus on specific conditions (eg cancer registration, psychiatric morbidity survey). Further details of these and other sources are available on the Department's and ONS websites, www.doh.gov.uk/public/stats1/htm, www.nationalstatistics.org.uk/.

NHS Dentistry

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS (General Dentist Services) dentists there were per 100,000 population in (a) England, (b) each NHS region and (c) each health authority in each year since 1997. [64536]

Mr. Hutton: The total number of general dental service (GDS) dentists per 100,000 population in (a) England, (b) each national health service region and (c) each health authority is shown in the table at 30 September for the years 1997 to 2001.

The total number of GDS dentists covers principals on a health authority list, their assistants and vocational dental practitioners.

[2] ONS 1997 to 2000 mid year population estimates based on the 1991 census. ONS 2001 mid year population estimates are not yet available, mid year 2000 population estimates are used to calculate the number of dentists working in the GDS per 100,000 population in 2001.

[3] Three HAs: Cambridge and Huntingdon, East Norfolk and North West Anglia were replaced by two HAs: Cambridge and Norfolk in April 1999.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action is being taken to improve access to NHS dentistry in the Portsmouth, South constituency; and if he will make a statement; [65374]

(2) how many NHS-registered dentists there were in the Portsmouth, South constituency in 2001; and if he will make a statement. [65373]

Ms Blears: Hampshire and Isle of Wight health authority has advised me that there are plans to develop a school of dental hygiene and therapy within Portsmouth university. Proposals to use this facility as a dental access centre are under consideration.

Information on the number of national health service dentists in the former Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and south-east Hampshire health authority area is shown in the table. Information is not available by constituency.

Number of dentists working in the NHS in the Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and south-east Hampshire health authority at 30 September 2001

	Number
GDS dentists[1]	238
Salaried service of GDS	0
PDS dentists only[2]	11
Salaried community dentists[3]	30
Hospital salaried dentists[3]	30
Total	305

[1] The general dental service (GDS) includes principals on a health authority list, assistants and vocational dental practitioners.

[2] The personal dental service (PDS) covers dentists working in the PDS who are not working in the GDS.

[3] Figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

Notes:

1. The number of NHS dentists includes GDS dentists, dentists working in the salaried services of the GDS, hospital and community dentists and PDS dentists.
2. The figures are on a headcount basis rather than whole time equivalent (wte) and take no account of part-time working.
3. Dentists working in more than one dental service are included in each service apart from dentists working in both PDS and GDS who are counted in the GDS only.
4. Dentists working solely in private dentistry are not covered in these figures.

Doctors (Specialist Posts)

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to take steps to allow doctors to have experience gained in associate specialist posts taken into account in their progression to consultancy level; and if he will make a statement. [64613]

Mr. Hutton: We have consulted on proposals to amend the European Specialist Qualifications Order (1995), to enable the Specialist Training Authority of the Medical Royal Colleges to take training, as well as qualifications, into account when assessing doctors for entry to the specialist register. There was strong support for our proposals from the medical profession and the amended legislation is currently being prepared. The proposed amendment is designed to facilitate entry to the specialist register for doctors working in the national health service, and may be of benefit to doctors in the non-consultant career grade posts.

We did not specifically consult on the inclusion of experience gained outside formal training posts, as criteria for entry to the specialist register, for the current amendment. However, some responses to consultation indicated that we should consider the inclusion of experience. We accept that there needs to be a proper debate about the issue and we are considering taking forward work to look at the appropriateness of including experience in the longer term. We would not introduce retrospectively approved experience as a criterion for entry to the specialist register without a full debate and consultation about the appropriateness of this with the medical profession.

Child Care

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what child care provisions or schemes are made available to NHS staff. [64932]

Mr. Hutton: A national survey of national health service child care provision, undertaken early in 2001, found that 114 NHS trusts provided nursery facilities for their staff. The NHS child care strategy aims to develop a further 150 on-site nursery schemes by 2004, and over £70 million has been made available for this. 60 new nursery schemes were funded last year and a further 30 have had funding allocated already this year. In addition, we expect all new build hospitals to include an on-site nursery in its plans.

We are expanding the NHS child care strategy to cover other forms of child care and to ensure that all staff groups are included. We have pledged additional funding for NHS child care, building up to £100 million, to do this. Many NHS trusts already provide holiday play schemes and other forms of child care support, and we want to ensure that all NHS organisations help meet their staff's child care needs. In addition, all staff will have access to an NHS child care co-ordinator by April 2003, and we are providing funding to pump-prime these posts. Over 70 child care co-ordinators are already working in the NHS, developing local child care strategies, and providing advice and support to parents working in the NHS. A number of NHS trusts also provide child care vouchers to their staff.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals within England provide creche facilities for their staff. [64929]

Mr. Hutton: A national survey of national health service child care provision, undertaken early in 2001, found that 114 NHS trusts provided nursery facilities for their staff. The NHS child care strategy aims to develop a further 150 on-site nursery schemes by 2004, and over £70 million has been made available for this. 60 new nursery schemes were funded last year and a further 30 have had funding allocated already this year. In addition, we expect all new build hospitals to include an on-site nursery in its plans.

Variant CJD

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the Portsmouth, South constituency have been diagnosed with a probable variant CJD; what treatment they are receiving; and if he will make a statement. [64727]

Ms Blears: Information is not collected at constituency level. The National CJD Surveillance Unit has advised me that there have been two cases of definite or probable vCJD where patient was resident in Hampshire at death and five cases of definite/probable vCJD resident in Hampshire at onset of symptoms. Currently there are no patients diagnosed with definite/probable vCJD in the county. Information is not held centrally on the care individual patients received.

Drug Rehabilitation Programmes

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding has been given to drug rehabilitation programmes in the Portsmouth, South constituency in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [64590]

Ms Blears: The information requested on funding given to drug rehabilitation programmes in the Portsmouth, South constituency is not held centrally. More information on local drug rehabilitation services will be available from the Drug Treatment and Advice Service.

Orphan Drug Law

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the effect has been of the Orphan Drug law on (a) hospitals and (b) patients in the Portsmouth, South constituency; and if he will make a statement. [64726]

Ms Blears: No assessment has been made centrally of the effect of the European Union Orphan Drug regulations on the Portsmouth, South constituency.

The Orphan Drug regulations are vital to encourage drug companies to produce clinically tested medicines for disorders that affect a very small number of people. Without the regulations these drugs would not be available.

Cardiac Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment he has made of the impact of prescribing practice relating to statins on the risk of a second heart attack to people aged 60 years and over; and if he will make a statement. [65074]

Ms Blears: We have not made a recent assessment of the impact of statin prescribing practice on the risk of second heart attack in people aged over 60.

There is a well established evidence base drawn from several trials for the benefit of statin therapy in preventing further events in patients with established coronary heart disease (CHD). This evidence underpins the guidance on prescribing of statins contained in the national service framework (NSF) for CHD, as amended by the Chief Medical Officer's Update 29 (February 2001). It recommends that people with clinical evidence of CHD should be prescribed statins to lower their cholesterol level to below 5.0mmol/l or reduce total serum cholesterol by about 20–25 per cent., whichever would result in the lowest level. Equivalent figures for LDL cholesterol would be 3.0 mmol/l or by 30 per cent. reduction, whichever results in the lowest level.

An underlying principle of the NSF that services and treatments should be accessible to everyone on the basis of need, irrespective of age, gender, race, culture, religion, disability, sexual orientation or where people happen to live.

Health Professionals

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many applications there were to train as a (a) general practitioner, (b) social worker, (c) physiotherapist and (d) special therapist in (i) London and (ii) England and Wales in each of the last five years, broken down by (A) health authority and (B) region. [65060]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not held centrally.

Irradiated Goods

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the safeguards in place to prevent the sale of irradiated goods in the United Kingdom; and what regular monitoring takes place in this regard. [65107]

Ms Blears: The sale of irradiated foods in England are strictly controlled by the Food (Control of Irradiation) Regulations 1990, as amended by the Food Irradiation Provision (England) Regulations 2000. Similar legislation applies in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The enforcement of these is the responsibility of local authorities. Periodic checks are carried out to ensure that irradiated foods are not being incorrectly marketed and action taken where necessary.

For example, in a recent survey by the Food Standards Agency a number of dietary supplements were found to contain non-approved irradiated ingredients and the companies concerned were told to withdraw the affected products. A copy of the survey report has been placed in the Library.

Food Labelling

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce measures to require the labelling of all food sold for human consumption in the United Kingdom to contain clear details of genetically modified contents. [65108]

Ms Blears: The Genetically Modified and Novel Foods (Labelling) (England) Regulations 2000 require foods containing genetically modified material, such as DNA or protein, to be labelled. Equivalent provisions apply in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to require labels to identify food substances, colourings and additives which could result in hyperactive behaviour among children and young people. [63031]

Ms Blears [holding answer 27 June 2002]: European Union rules already require the labels of pre-packed foods to declare their ingredients, including additives such as colourings, although some exemptions do apply. Amendments currently under discussion would remove a number of these exemptions, including the 'compound ingredient rule' which exempts ingredients of ingredients making up less than 25 per cent. of the food. The Food Standards Agency is supporting plans for early discussions aimed at removing the ingredient listing exemption for alcoholic drinks. It is also pressing for an early review of the justification for the remaining exemptions, especially those which apply to additives used as processing aids or which do not have a technological function in the final food.

General Practitioners

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will issue detailed guidance notes on financial support towards costs GPs incur as owner-occupiers or leaseholders of premises used to provide NHS general practice services. [65878]

Mr. Hutton: For general practitioners (GPs) who work under the national framework for general medical services (GMS), detailed guidance on funding premises is contained in the statement of fees and allowances. Guidance for GPs who work under locally agreed contracts for personal medical services is included in

"Personal Medical Services: Comprehensive Guidance". Guidance on the new flexibilities announced on 19 April 2002, will be issued soon. Further guidance will be issued in due course on any further changes to premises arrangements which may be proposed as part of the new GMS contract currently being developed by the national health service confederation and the British Medical Association.

Domiciliary Community Care

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the Government are doing to ensure that councils' policy on charging for domiciliary community care is in line with the national guidance by (a) 1 October 2002 and (b) 1 April 2003. [66154]

Jacqui Smith: Monitoring of the implementation of this policy is being carried out by the Department's social services inspectorate, as part of a wider in-year monitoring programme. Councils have been asked to indicate the stage of preparation reached at 31 May 2002, in implementing the policy. Results are currently being processed. We propose to repeat the monitoring in autumn 2002 and spring of 2003.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are in place to ensure that local authorities consult users of domiciliary community care services when deciding on their charging policy. [66153]

Jacqui Smith: The guidance "Fairer Charging Policies for Home Care and other non-residential Social Services", issued in November 2001, requires councils to consult users and carers when deciding their charging policy. The guidance is issued under Section 7 of the Local Authority Social Services Act 1970 and is legally binding.

Mental Health

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 21 May 2002, Official Report, column 310W, when the next bilateral ministerial meeting between health and education to discuss child and adolescent mental health is to take place. [66846]

Jacqui Smith: I have no current date to meet ministerial colleagues at the Department for Education and Skills to discuss child and adolescent mental health. Officials in the Department regularly meet with their counterparts at the Department of Education and Skills to discuss this topic. The last time they met was Thursday 27 June.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 21 May 2002, Official Report, column 310W, whether the training of teachers in mental health issues was discussed at the bi-lateral ministerial meeting; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting and work to be taken forward. [66845]

Jacqui Smith: At the meeting we discussed the broad issues surrounding health and education and the interface. The training of teachers in mental health issues was not discussed in specific detail.

Primary Care

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 20 May 2002, Official Report, column 159W, what research the Department has commissioned into CAMHS in primary care; and if he will place the preliminary, emerging and final results in the Library. [66841]

Jacqui Smith: A joint research study into child and adolescent mental health services (CAMHS) in primary care was commissioned from teams at the national primary care research and development centre, University of Manchester, the academic department of child and adolescent psychiatry, Imperial College, London and the department of psychiatry, University of Manchester. Their final report will be available for release shortly and I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Lister Hospital, Stevenage

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are for capital development of the Maxilla/Facial, Orthodontic and Restorative Department at the Lister Hospital, Stevenage. [66766]

Mr. Lammy: Further work is being undertaken by East and North Hertfordshire National Health Service Trust with respect to capital development of the maxilla/facial, orthodontic and restorative department at the Lister Hospital. This will be presented to a future stakeholder meeting.

Nurses

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he plans to amend the draft Nurses' Agencies Regulations to (a) reduce the level of financial disclosure and (b) reduce the number of appraisals of nurses' overall performance; [66794]

(2) for what reasons it is necessary to conduct an agency providing nurses' services in a different office from one providing domiciliary care; [66792]

(3) when he expects to lay the Nurses' Agencies Regulations before Parliament; [66843]

(4) what account will be taken of experience in establishing the management ability of the owner or manager of a nurses' agency; [66789]

(5) what plans he has to make amendments to the draft Nurses' Agencies Regulations prior to laying them; [66793]

(6) what requirement as to health and safety audit he intends to impose on nurses' agencies in respect of patients' homes prior to commencement of care; and if he will make a statement as to how this will operate in cases of urgency; [66790]

(7) what plans he has to allow the National Care Standards Commission to have access to the premises of nurses' agencies at night. [66791]

Jacqui Smith: The Nurses Agency Regulations and National Minimum Standards are being finalised in the light of responses to the consultation exercise. We will lay the regulations before Parliament as soon as possible.

Several of the issues raised are under active consideration in response to the consultation.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards there are for the privacy of medical records of the managers and owners of the nurses' agencies produced to the authorities for the purpose of showing fitness to run an agency. [66788]

Jacqui Smith: The National Care Standards Commission is subject to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1998.

Chiropody

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 24 June 2002, Official Report, column 735W, on chiropody, whether the shift in policy focus referred to has led to service reductions; and if he will make a statement. [66849]

Jacqui Smith: We are not aware that the shift in policy focus from professionally-led guidance to patient-led services has led to service reductions. Shifting the balance of power has placed increasing emphasis on involving frontline staff including chiropodists and podiatrists, and consulting with users and carers to ensure services meet the needs of the local population. Primary care trusts (PCTs) are responsible for ensuring the right services are delivered to the right people at the right time.

To assist PCTs meet this increasing demand for national health service chiropody/podiatry services, we are committed to recruiting more allied health professionals (AHPs), which include chiropodists/podiatrists, through the NHS Plan target of over 6,500 extra AHPs, and as extended and stated in the "Delivery Plan", there will be 30,000 extra therapists and scientists over the September 2001 baseline by 2008.

Pershore Community Hospital

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have been treated at the Minor Injuries Unit of Pershore Community Hospital in the last 12 months. [66862]

Mr. Lammy: Between May 2001 and May 2002 (latest available figures) the number of patients treated at Pershore community hospital minor injuries unit was 4,132.

Source:

South Worcestershire Primary Care Trust.

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost of running the Minor Injuries Unit of Pershore Community Hospital has been in the last 12 months. [66861]

Mr. Lammy: In the last financial year the running cost of the minor injuries unit at Pershore Community Hospital was £57,000.

Source:

South Worcestershire Primary Care Trust.

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been taken to find substitutes for staff whose illness has caused the closure of the minor injuries unit at Pershore community hospital. [66864]

Mr. Lammy: I am advised that south Worcestershire primary care trust is actively seeking substitute nursing staff with appropriate qualifications and experience in minor injuries from the in-house nursing bank, national and local nursing agencies and an advertising campaign.

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff have been affected by illness resulting in the closure of the minor injuries unit at Pershore community hospital; and for how long there has been a shortage of staff resulting in its closure. [66865]

Mr. Lammy: Two staff with clinical expertise in minor injuries went on long-term sick leave at the same time. Following this the minor injuries unit was temporarily closed by South Worcestershire Primary Care Trust on 1 June 2002, on the grounds of clinical safety.

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how long he estimates that the minor injuries unit of Pershore community hospital will be closed. [66863]

Mr. Lammy: I am advised that, due to staff shortages, the minor injuries unit of Pershore community hospital was closed on 1 June 2002. The unit will reopen when nursing staff with appropriate experience and qualifications in minor injuries are recruited or when the existing staff, currently on long-term sick leave, return. This temporary closure is being reviewed by the South Worcestershire Primary Care Trust on a weekly basis.

Special Envoy

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the targets for the Government's special envoy for the national health service. [63815]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 24 June 2002]: The remit of the Government's special envoy for the national health service is to:

promote British medicine and the opportunities for internationally trained doctors to work in the national health service;

support and promote the development of the NHS international fellowship scheme at home and abroad, including assisting in the recruitment and selection of fellows; work closely with the Department, the NHS, medical royal colleges and other stakeholders to enable fellows to make a valuable contribution to patient care and to get the best out of their clinical practice experience in the UK.

Stem Cell Research

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the Government's response to the House of Lords Select Committee report of Session 2001–02 on Stem Cell Research. [67646]

Ms Blears: The Government's response to the House of Lords Select Committee report on Stem Cell Research is published today as CM 5561, and copies have been placed in Library.

TREASURY

Departmental Consultation

Keith Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many matters his Department has consulted outside lawyers; and what the total cost is of the fees charged in the last 12 months. [65379]

Ruth Kelly: This information is not held centrally, and could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

BBC World Service

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received as part of the spending review with regard to funding for the BBC World Service. [65752]

Mr. Boateng: I have received a number of representations in connection with the funding of the BBC World Service in the 2002 spending review.

Buildings Insurance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost of buildings insurance to his Department was (a) before and (b) after 11 September 2001. [66930]

Ruth Kelly: In the case of Inland Revenue and HM Customs and Excise, the Departments have never insured their own properties. Following the transfer of departmental properties under STEPS, the PFI contractor (Mapeley) is required to insure them as part of PFI risk transfer. The cost of insurance is subsumed within the overall facility price payable under the STEPS contract.

In the case of the Treasury, the issue of buildings insurance only arises in the case of Allington Towers, for which HMT pay insurance under the terms of their lease. The cost covering the period November 2000 to October 2001 was £14,980; for November 2001 to October 2002 it is £17,342.

Public Service

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how the Government are meeting their commitment to report regularly on the progress made in delivering the targets for public service improvement as set out in Cm 4011; and if he will make a statement; [66281]

(2) if he will make a statement on his Department's assessment of the success of other Departments in meeting the public service agreement targets set out in December 1998; and if he will make a statement. [66280]

Mr. Boateng: Departments publish performance against their public service agreement targets in their departmental reports and, from this year, in autumn performance reports. Annex A2 on page 67 of HM Treasury's departmental report included an overall analysis of performance against the 1998 targets.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what responsibilities (a) his Department, (b) the Contributions Agency and (c) the Department for Work and Pensions have for ensuring collection and prompt payment by employers of national insurance contributions, including those with contracted in pension schemes; and if he will make a statement on efforts being made to ensure compliance by employers. [65798]

Dawn Primarolo: The functions of the Contributions Agency were transferred to the Inland Revenue from 6 April 1999. The Contributions Agency ceased to exist at that point and the Department for Work and Pensions no longer have any responsibility in relation to the collection of national insurance contributions.

Employers pay over national insurance contributions either monthly or quarterly to the Inland Revenue. The Board of Inland Revenue's Annual Report shows that, in the tax year 2000–01, on average 89.7 per cent. of employers paid within a week of the due date.

The Inland Revenue encourage all employers to make payment electronically via the BACS system which reduces the time taken to clear funds through the banking system.

Where payment is delayed the Inland Revenue take a series of steps to collect that payment. This will begin with a simple phone call and, if the employer still fails to pay, may result in recovery action being taken either by means of distraint or by action in the courts.

The Inland Revenue also act to ensure that all employers comply with their obligations. Employers are subject to regular inspections of their records by Inland Revenue officers. During the year 2001–02 the Inland Revenue carried out over 43,000 of these Employer Compliance Reviews and identified over £257 million of unpaid tax and national insurance contributions.

Financing for Development Conference

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people attended the Financing for Development conference in Monterrey in March from (a) his Department and (b) other UK Government Departments; and what the total cost of the visit was. [66222]

Clare Short: I have been asked to reply.

The Monterrey Conference was attended by eight people—including myself—from DFID and 21 people from other UK Government Departments. Not all invoices have yet been received, but the total cost of the visit will be in the region of £150,000.

OECD PISA Survey

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the conceptual difference is in the science and maths questions asked in the OECD (a) TIMSS and (b) PISA surveys; [65132]

(2) when the OECD PISA 2000 technical report will be published. [65136]

Mr. Miliband: I have been asked to reply.

The OECD report, "Knowledge and Skills for Life", published in December 2001, made the distinction as follows. The assessment materials in the Third International Mathematics and Science Study (TIMSS), which was conducted in 1995 by the International Association for the Evaluation of Educational Achievement (IEA) among students in international grades 3–4, 7–8 and the final year of secondary school, and repeated in 1999 among students in the eighth grade only, were constructed on the basis of an analysis of the intended curriculum in each participating country, so as to cover the core material common to the curriculum in the majority of participating countries. The assessment materials in PISA 2000 covered the range of skills and competencies that were, in the respective assessment domains, considered to be crucial to an individual's capacity to fully participate in, and contribute meaningfully to, a successful modern society.

We understand from OECD that the web version of the PISA technical report is likely to be available in July and the published version in August.

Heavily Indebted Poor Countries

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of the HIPC initiative; and what steps he is taking to enhance the debt management capacity of HIPC in order to meet the UN development goals. [66874]

John Healey: The UK continues to press to ensure that the HIPC (heavily indebted poor countries) initiative provides a sustainable exit from debt. Of the 42 HIPCs, 26 countries have already qualified for debt relief amounting to US$62 billion in total. We therefore welcome the recent announcement of an extra US$1 billion for this aim at the G8 summit in Kananaskis and the statement by G7 leaders on specific measures to deliver on the promise of the enhanced HIPC initiative. The leaders agreed to take action to secure the participation of all creditors, to complete the financing of the initiative and to address the issue of debt sustainability at completion point.

To enable HIPC countries to develop their expertise on debt and debt management, the Department for International Development provided £2.5 million and has committed a further £1.5 million to co-fund the HIPC Capacity Building Programme, which provides technical assistance to these countries.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Committee Mandates

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the mandate of the Advisory Committee on Agricultural Product Health and Safety is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if she will list the items currently under its consideration; if she will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if she will make a statement. [61714]

Mr. Morley: The mandate of the Advisory Committee on Agricultural Product Health and Safety is set out in Commission Decision 98/235/EC. The UK is not formally represented on the committee; members are directly appointed by the Commission, drawn from across the EU, on the basis of their socioeconomic interests.

The Commission, together with member states, is currently conducting a review to bring existing legislation on the conduct of comitology committees into line with Council Decision 1999/468/EC, to 'simplify the requirements for the exercise of implementing powers conferred on the Commission'. As an obligation to this Decision, the Commission undertook to publish an annual report on the working of committees. The first report was deposited in the Libraries of both Houses on 26 February (Com (2001) 783 Final). As part of the review process, the UK Government have encouraged the Commission to produce and maintain an electronic database of every comitology committee, its agendas and recent actions, to be available through its website.

Standstill Rule (Cumbria)

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent representations she has received on the 20-day standstill rule in Cumbria. [64879]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 June 2002]: Industry organisations and individual farmers have made a number of representations on the impact of the 20-day standstill both in Cumbria and elsewhere. Ministers and officials are in dialogue with industry representatives about the veterinary justification for the rule and its economic impact.

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the practical implications of the 20-day standstill order on agricultural shows in Cumbria. [64878]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 June 2002]: There is firm veterinary and scientific advice in support of a 20-day standstill, both to improve the prospect of detecting disease on infected premises before animals move off, and to slow the rate of spread of any undetected disease.

Animals moving to a show are subject to a 20-day standstill prior to their first move to a show. Animals trigger a 20-day standstill on the whole farm when they return from a show, unless they are kept in approved isolation premises for 20 days. I am aware that a number of show organisers across the country have taken steps to adjust their schedules so as to work with the standstill rules.

Mains Water

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what percentage of domestic residences in England and Wales have no connection to mains water. [62415]

Mr. Meacher: The 1996 English House Condition Survey showed that 1.1 per cent. of dwellings were not connected to a main water supply. Information from the Welsh Assembly Government is that the 1998 Welsh House Condition Survey showed that 1.3 per cent. of homes were without access to mains water.

Camels

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what restrictions exist on the movement of camels. [64803]

Alun Michael: Camelids are susceptible to foot and mouth disease (FMD), although less so than some other species. Based on veterinary advice, movements of camelids have therefore been subject to conditions set out in a general licence under the interim livestock movement controls. Details were set out in leaflets sent to all livestock farmers in February 2002 and placed in the Library of the House. They are also on the Department's website. They reflect discussions with organisations representing the owners of camelids.

Special arrangements apply to llama trekking, which can currently take place under a separate licence issued by the DEFRA Divisional Veterinary Manager. Again, details were discussed with the relevant organisations in March 2002 and can be found on the Department's website.

Veterinary advice has now been revised reflecting the passage of time since the end of the lambing season with no re-emergence of FMD, and it is our intention to remove all restrictions on camelid movements, including llama trekking, assuming there is no change to the current disease situation. This will require amendments to the legal instrument which sets out the animal movement controls, and the changes are expected to come into force at the end of July. Controls over camelid movements would be reimposed if a further outbreak of FMD occurred.

Fishing

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will oppose proposals from the European Commission for the phased introduction of vessel monitoring by satellite to all vessels down to 10 metres; and if she will request EU financing for mandatory fitting of VMS to UK vessels. [64509]

Mr. Morley: As yet there are no firm proposals to extend satellite monitoring to all vessels over 10 metres, although this is suggested in the Commission's road map to the reform of the CFP. Satellite monitoring has applied to vessels over 24 metres since 1 January 2000 and has made a significant contribution to the effectiveness of enforcement operations across the Community. There are obvious advantages in extending satellite monitoring and we shall need to consider carefully its impact on smaller vessels. It is too early to make any commitments on the issue of funding.

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the (a) quantity and (b) value of fish quota purchased by the Shetland Fish Producers' Organisation in 1998 to 2002 for (i) cod, (ii) haddock, (iii) monk, (iv) coley and (v) hake. [63954]

Mr. Morley: Producer organisations have been able to acquire access to quota on behalf of their members by a number of means including buying up and cancelling fishing vessel licences but retaining the track record and FQA units, taking track record and FQA units from decommissioned fishing vessels and through agreements with their members and fishermen in other organisations. It is not he practice of the fisheries departments in the UK to disclose details of such transactions whether on an individual or collective basis. Moreover, the departments do not maintain records of the value of such transactions.

Fisheries Inspectorate

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is on proposals for an EU-wide fisheries inspectorate. [64505]

Mr. Morley: The Commission has said that, following a feasibility study to be undertaken in co-operation with member states, it intends to propose the establishment before mid-2004, of a joint inspection structure at Community level, which will pool national means of inspection and surveillance in relation to fisheries or other areas and manage them within a Community framework. Pooling of means will include the operation of multinational inspection teams in both Community and international waters. The Commission has also said that the establishment of a joint inspection structure will not change the distribution of responsibilities for fisheries control and enforcement between the Commission and member states, in which the member states are primarily responsible for the control and enforcement of CFP rules and the Commission is responsible for monitoring and enforcing the correct application of Community law by the member states. Effective and consistent standards of enforcement are key priorities for the UK and we shall be examining the Commission's proposals carefully to ensure that they achieve these objectives.

Bilateral Ministerial Meetings

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when Ministers in her Department have held meetings with Ministers and officials of the Irish Government since 1 June 2000; when and where each meeting took place; which Ministers were involved in each meeting; which Irish Government Departments were involved in each meeting; and which Ministers and officials from the Irish Government attended each meeting. [63074]

Mr. Morley: DEFRA Ministers meet fairly regularly with Irish Ministers in the margins of Agriculture, Fisheries and Environment Councils and in other international meetings.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met with Joe Walsh last November. He was accompanied by John Malone (Secretary General of AFRD); Bart Brady (Assistant Secretary General); Mr. Seamus Healey (Assistant Secretary General); Mr. Colm Gaynor (CVO) and Pat Lynch (Agriculture Counsellor at the Irish embassy).

In February the Minister for the Environment, my right hon. Friend the Member for Oldham, West and Royton (Mr. Meacher), chaired a BIC (E) meeting in Edinburgh. Sue Essex, Noel Dempsey (Environment) and Joe Jacob (Public Enterprise RoI) were in attendance.

I met with Mr. Frank Fahey at DEFRA offices in December. Ammon Confrey (Private Secretary), Sarah White (Deputy Secretary General) and Cecil Beamish (Principal Official) were in attendance.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many statutory instruments have been (a) introduced, (b) removed and (c) amended by her Department since 1 January; and what the (i) cost and (ii) saving has been in each case. [64625]

Mr. Morley: As at 1 July, DEFRA had made 70 statutory instruments since 1 January 2002. All published statutory instruments are available on the HMSO website at http://www.legislation.hmso.gov.uk/stat.htm.

Detailed information regarding costings, revocations and amendments on these instruments could be provided only at disproportionate cost, but details of regulatory impact assessments (RIAs) relating to statutory instruments can be found at the Cabinet Office website at: http:// www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/regulation/scrutiny. Copies are also placed in the Libraries of the House on the day the instrument is laid.

Herefordshire

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs for what reason Herefordshire is dealt with by the Welsh Environment Agency. [65169]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency is a corporate body covering England and Wales. DEFRA sponsors all of the Environment Agency's work in England and the National Assembly for Wales sponsors the Environment Agency's work in Wales.

The agency has eight regions, seven in England and one in Wales. The operational boundaries of regions are defined by the confines of river catchments. A catchment is an area of land from which the water drains into a particular river. This continues a long-standing policy that originated with the water authorities and was subsequently adopted by one of the agency's predecessor bodies, the National Rivers Authority.

Herefordshire is located in the Wye River catchment. The River Wye crosses the boundary between England and Wales, but application of the catchment principle requires that the whole river is managed by a single agency operational unit, in this case Environment Agency Wales.

This means that the whole of the Wye catchment, including a large part of Herefordshire, is managed on a day-to-day operational basis by staff working for Environment Agency Wales. However, the first and main point of contact with the agency for those living anywhere in Herefordshire is the Upper Severn Area of the agency's midlands region.

Bovine TB

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress has been made towards the development of a bovine TB vaccine. [65685]

Mr. Morley: DEFRA's ultimate aim is to produce an effective vaccine for cattle to protect against bovine tuberculosis, and it is spending over £1.4 million a year on this. DEFRA recently announced that the sequence of the entire genoma of the organism that causes bovine tuberculosis has been determined in a collaborative project between the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (UK), the Institut Pasteur (France) and the Pathogen Genome Sequencing Unit at the Wellcome Trust Sanger Institute (UK). This breakthrough is a major step forward in the long-term search for a vaccine against bovine TB and more rapid diagnostic testing. However, the Independent Scientific Group for Cattle TB (ISG) advise that this would offer a solution only in the long term.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress has been made towards the completion of the scientific badger culling trial; when the trial will be completed; and what preliminary results have been obtained. [66078]

Mr. Morley: Field operations associated with the badger culling trial were suspended during the foot and mouth disease (FMD) outbreak, because of the risk of the disease being carried by field operatives onto agricultural land, and because of the diversion of resources. Surveying resumed in January, with trapping under way on 1 May. The Independent Scientific Group for Cattle TB (ISG) has considered the impact of FMD on the trial and advised that the delivery of results will only be delayed by 3–4 months, to late 2004 or early 2005.

The ISG advise that it is to early for an analysis of results so far. It is a basic rule for scientific trials that results are not published prematurely. It has, however, been possible to complete a preliminary analysis of the risk factors associated with cattle TB and this is set out in the ISG's third annual report, copies of which are available in the House Library.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the possibility of bovine TB being transferred to humans; and if she will make a statement. [66511]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 July 2002]: There are estimated to be about 40–50 cases of Mycobacterium bovis (bovine TB) in humans each year in Great Britain. Most of these cases are either contracted abroad or result from the reactivation of M. bovis acquired in the past.

Public health safeguards have been in existence for many years to minimise the risk of people being exposed to bovine TB through meat, milk or dairy products. It is possible that some cases of bovine TB may have occurred in people who have a close association with infected animals. The HSE has published guidance for farm workers on minimising the risk of infection.

Regular meetings are held between Government Departments to monitor the potential for bovine TB to infect humans through the UK food chain and other zoonotic routes.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the Government's assessment is of the effect of its CAP reform proposals on common agricultural policy spending (a) for the United Kingdom and (b) for the European Union (i) as it stands and (ii) after the accession of the 10 candidate countries to the European Union in 2004. [66094]

Mr. Morley: The effects of CAP reform on national and European spending depends on the detail and extent of the reform. We expect the European Commission to publish proposals for reform of the CAP on 10 July. We would expect any proposals to respect the budget ceilings set out in the Financial Perspective.

Milk

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to promote awareness of the school milk subsidy scheme among primary schools in (a) Lincolnshire and (b) England. [65085]

Mr. Morley: In addition to campaigns by the dairy sector, the Rural Payments Agency regularly sends out guidance on the scheme to local education authorities.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will hold a meeting with representatives from dairy farmers and buyers regarding the price of milk. [66576]

Mr. Morley: The price that milk purchasers pay farmers for their milk is a commercial matter in which the Government cannot become involved. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State therefore has no plans to meet representatives of dairy farmers and milk buyers specifically to discuss this issue. However, Ministers frequently meet with representatives from all parts of the dairy sector in the course of their duties, do discuss the overall market situation, and are aware of the concern caused by the current low prices. The Government have therefore actively supported measures taken in Brussels to support EU markets for milk and milk products and to encourage exports.

Countryside and Rights of Way Act

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress she has made in the management of access and systems to ensure that members of the public are informed of their rights and responsibilities if the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 is implemented on a regional basis. [65736]

Alun Michael: Section 20 of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 requires the Countryside Agency to issue codes of conduct for the guidance of walkers and land managers about their rights and obligations on access land.

The agency is also revising the Country Code and consulting widely on its content. The agency plans to relaunch the Code, to contain guidance both to walkers and land managers about access under the Act and more generally, in the summer of 2003.

I am currently considering whether it will be possible to opt for a regional roll-out of the right of access and to manage the implementation of arrangements for informing people of their rights and responsibilities accordingly.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the workings of the Access to the Countryside legislation, with particular reference to farm land. [66518]

Alun Michael: The Countryside Agency is consulting on draft maps of open country and registered common land on a rolling, regional, programme. Following the consultation on each draft map, the agency will then issue a provisional map, and land managers will have an opportunity to appeal to the Secretary of State if they object to the mapping of any land as open country or registered common land.

In addition to mapping, there are practical issues which must be addressed, such as managing access and ensuring that members of the public and land managers are properly informed of their rights and responsibilities. We are working closely with the Countryside Agency and other bodies to ensure that appropriate measures are put in place before the right of access is commenced in any area.

Flood Defence

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the last assessment of the relative risks and priorities in regard to the categorisation of watercourses in England took place; and when she intends to review this categorisation to determine responsibilities for flood defence measures based on the current assessment of the severity of the flood risk issues and their relative priority. [66189]

Mr. Morley: Watercourses in England are classed either as "main river" or "ordinary watercourses". The Environment Agency has permissive powers to undertake flood defence works on main rivers while for ordinary watercourses similar powers rest with the relevant operating authority, ie the local authority or, where one exists, the internal drainage board.

In 1999 the Government published a series of high level targets for flood and coastal defence, alongside an elaboration of the Environment Agency's general flood defence supervisory duty. Following this, work has been undertaken to identify "critical ordinary watercourses" which are those watercourses agreed between the Environment Agency and the relevant operating authority as presenting a significant flood risk. The Environment Agency has also been working with the operating authorities to ensure that these watercourses and any related flood defences are regularly inspected and their condition reported to the Environment Agency.

We recently consulted on a Review of Flood and Coastal Defence Funding including a number of options for streamlining the service. These included the possibility of transferring to the EA responsibility for watercourses presenting the most significant flood risk. We have received nearly 300 responses to the consultation, and will be considering these and our conclusions through the summer and autumn.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which of the high level targets for flooding and coastal defence her Department (a) met within the stated objective date, (b) has met and (c) has still to achieve. [66555]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The high level targets (HLT) published in November 1999 apply to the Environment Agency and other bodies. No targets apply to the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs. The targets generally require the Environment Agency and others to report on specific issues at specific times. Unfortunately reports due in 2001 were delayed because resources had to be diverted during the serious and widespread flooding in autumn 2000 and to deal with follow-up work.

Reports covering the 2001–02 period were published on 24 May 2002 for: HLT 1 (Policy statements); HLT 2 (Provision of Flood Warnings); HLT 3 (Emergency exercises and emergency plans) and HLT 9 (Biodiversity). I expect shortly to be able to publish reports for HLT 2 (due April 2002) and HLT 5 (Flood defence inspections and assessment).

On other targets, the National Flood and Coastal Defence Database (HLT 4) is now expected to become operational by September. Coastal groups have provided partial responses under HLTs 6, 8 and 13 and we are working with them to secure fuller and timely compliance in future. Information has been forthcoming from operating authorities under HLT 7, and the Association of Drainage Authorities have issued guidance to IDBs under HLT 14, though this was delayed by factors beyond the Association's control.

The Environment Agency are still awaiting submissions for the targets 10, 11 and 12, and reports will be published in coming months. While there might be some residual delay following the impact of the autumn 2000 floods, I hope to achieve rather more timely publication in future.

Air Quality

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether her Department's latest modelling shows that the objectives of the 1997 National Air Quality Strategy will be achieved for each of the eight pollutants named in the strategy under current policies. [65541]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 1 July 2002]: Our latest modelling suggests that, for five out of the eight named pollutants (carbon monoxide, lead, benzene, 1,3 butadiene, and sulphur dioxide), we are broadly on track to meet the objectives set out in the 1997 National Air Quality Strategy. In respect of three pollutants, however, (particles, ozone and nitrogen dioxide) there are some parts of the country which are at risk of exceeding the objectives originally proposed in the 1997 strategy.

Many of the objectives of the 1997 National Air Quality Strategy have been tightened or amended in recent years, in the light of on-going policy and scientific developments. Details of our latest objectives together with modelled forecasts for each pollutant, are set out in the January 2000 Air Quality Strategy for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, and also in the September 2001 consultation document on proposed new air quality objectives for particles, carbon monoxide, benzene and polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAH). These documents are both available via the DEFRA website at http://www.defra.gov.uk/environment/airquality/index.htm.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the recommended standard is for each of the eight pollutants named in the National Air Quality Strategy; and whether the standards for each pollutant were breached in (a) the UK and (b) London in the last recorded year of monitoring. [65542]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The standards for each of the eight pollutants in the Air Quality Strategy are given in Table 1a. The strategy is advised by the Expert Panel on Air Quality Standards (EPAQS), which recommends health based ambient air quality standards on which objectives will generally be based. Standards represent the concentrations of pollutants in the atmosphere which can broadly be taken to achieve a certain level of environmental quality. They are based on assessment of the effects of each pollutant on human health including the effects on sensitive subgroups. The Air Quality Strategy also incorporates objectives which are policy targets generally expressed as a maximum ambient concentration to be achieved, taking account of the costs and benefits, and the feasibility and practicability of moving towards the standards. These are given in Table 1b.

Table 1a: Air Quality Strategy standards (2000)

[1] The objective for ozone is not in regulations for the purposes of local air quality management due to the transboundary nature of this pollutant.

There are 122 automatic air quality monitoring sites in the UK national monitoring networks and of these 24 are in London. All data are reported in the National Air Quality Archive (www.airquality.co.uk). The number of sites in the UK and in London which breached each of the standards and objectives are given in Table 2.

Arable Farm Prices

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on recent trends in arable farm prices. [66517]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The table shows price patterns for arable crops over the period May 2001 to May 2002, one month more than a year to allow comparison for the maincrop potato where the season end is May. Here follows the explanation of the price trends.

Bread making wheat prices have fallen by around 4 per cent. between May 2001 and May 2002. Domestic demand has been flat and any short term supply difficulties have been met by imports from the EU.

Feed wheat prices have declined by around 12 per cent. over the last year with the most marked fall since February 2002. Markets have come under increasing pressure from cheap Black sea eg Ukrainian supplies.

Feed barley prices have been affected by falling wheat prices and limited trade on the domestic market. Overall they have declined by 19 per cent. over the period May 2001 to May 2002.

Maincrop potato prices have declined by 20 per cent. since the start of the current maincrop season in August 2001 and by 47 per cent. compared to the end of the 2000–01 season in May 2001. The fall in prices can be attributed to supplies outstripping demand. There is a large price difference between the poorest and best quality stock.

Early potatoes are not shown on the table as at this point in 2002 there is no monthly representative data, however weekly information provides an indication. For the 2001 early season (June and July), prices were considerably higher than during 1999 and 2000 due to strong demand and poor weather restricting supplies. Early indications for 2002 suggest a likely fall in prices due to large volumes of imports. The latest provisional weekly prices (14–20 June) show the prices 98 per cent. and 30 per cent. higher than the equivalent weeks in 1999 and 2000 but 53 per cent. lower than in 2001.

Farm Diversification

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on progress made on farm diversification. [66519]

Alun Michael: It is a Government policy priority to help farmers to consider diversifying the economic base of their businesses. This accords with views on farm diversification emerging from the Policy Commission on the Future of Farming and Food.

To help achieve this policy aim DEFRA provides grants under the Rural Enterprise Scheme, which forms part of the England Rural Development Programme. Since the scheme's launch in October 2000, over 200 diversification projects have been approved and awarded nearly £9 million in funding. The Department also offers assistance in the form of free planning consultancy advice to farmers who intend to pursue an eligible diversification project through the Rural Enterprise Scheme and we are considering how to improve the provision of help and information to farmers considering diversifying their business. Our Rural Development Service has been running successful business planning seminars in a number of the regions.

There are many types of farm business and no single approach will be appropriate. The Rural Enterprise Scheme is just one of a number of measures under the England Rural Development Programme, including agri-environment schemes, aid for conversion to organic farming, grants for processing and marketing of agricultural products, farm woodlands, energy crops and vocational training.

Curry Report

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what economic assessment she has made of the implementation of the Curry report. [66352]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The Policy Commission estimated that implementing its recommendations would cost approximately £500 million over three years. However, the cost of many of the recommendations will depend upon the precise way in which they are implemented. The Government intend to produce a strategy for sustainable food and farming in England in the autumn, following a wide-ranging process of stakeholder engagement. This strategy will incorporate a definitive response to each of the Policy Commission's recommendations, although not all of these fall to, or involve expenditure by Government.

Farming Techniques

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the Government have done to encourage farmers to adopt more wildlife-friendly farming techniques. [66645]

Mr. Morley: The Department and its agencies have a variety of mechanisms to promote more wildlife-friendly farming among farmers. The two largest instruments are the Countryside Stewardship and Environmentally Sensitive Areas schemes. These offer farmers and other land managers payments to assist them in the protection and enhancement of the rural environment.

Other measures include:

Wildlife Enhancement Agreements (administered by English Nature on Sites of Special Scientific Interest); environmental measures attached to the Organic Farming scheme;

cross-compliance measures to ensure good environmental management of set-aside land to tackle over-grazing and inappropriate supplementary feeding of livestock; delivery of free conservation advice to farmers, focusing especially on priority Biodiversity Action Plan species and habitats; a biodiversity and conservation management research programme worth over £2 million a year.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what legislation is in place to control the welfare of (a) livestock and (b) other species. [66646]

Mr. Morley: The following is a list of primary legislation in England and Wales relating to the welfare of livestock and other animals (the list excludes secondary legislation and EU directives):

Night Poaching Act 1828
Game Act 1831 (and amendments)
Night Poaching Act 1844
Hares Act 1848
Game Licences Act 1860
Poaching Prevention Act 1862
Ground Game Act 1880 (and amendments)
Protection of Animals Act 1911 (and amendments)
Performing Animals (Regulation) Act 1925
Protection of Animals Act 1934
Cinematograph Films (Animals) Act 1937
Docking and Nicking of Horses Act 1949
Pet Animals Act 1951 and amendment 1983
Cockfighting Act 1952
Dogs (Protection of Livestock) Act 1953
Protection of Animals (Anaesthetics) Act 1954
Abandonment of Animals Act 1960
Animals (Cruel Poisons) Act 1962
Animal Boarding Establishments Act 1963
Veterinary Surgeons Act 1966
Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968
Riding Establishments Acts 1964 and 1970
Conservation of Seals Act 1970
Animals Act 1971
Breeding of Dogs Acts 1973 and 1991
Guard Dogs Act 1975
Farriers (Registration) Act 1975 and amendment 1977
Agricultural (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976
Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976
Animal Health Act 1981 (and amendments)
Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 (and amendments)
Zoo Licensing Act 1981
Animal Health and Welfare Act 1984
Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986
Protection Against Cruel Tethering Act 1988
Deer Act 1991
Protection of Badgers Act 1992
Wild Mammals (Protection) Act 1996
Breeding and Sale of Dogs (Welfare) Act 1999.

Livestock Movements

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether she intends to change the 20 day standstill rule on livestock movements in time for autumn sales. [65571]

Mr. Morley: No decision will be made until the recommendations of the Royal Society and Lessons Learned Inquiries have been published. There is firm veterinary and scientific advice in support of the present 20 day standstill as a means of helping protect against the rapid spread of any new incursion of disease. We are in discussion with industry representatives about the economic impact of the present standstill rule.

Wye Navigation Order

Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make an announcement about the Wye Navigation Order. [68018]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency has applied for an Order under the Transport and Works Act 1992 making it the navigation authority for the River Wye. A public inquiry into the application was held in 1997 following which further detailed representations were made. After careful consideration the Minister responsible my noble Friend the Lord Whitty has decided to accept the Inspector's recommendation and, with the agreement of the National Assembly for Wales, make the Order. A copy of the decision letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

Departmental Communications

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will calculate (a) how many and (b) at what total cost circulars were issued by her Department in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [33381]

Mr. Morley: DEFRA was created in June 2001. Obtaining information prior to this date would incur disproportionate cost.

Records show that up to the end of the 2001 financial year the departmental publicity and publications section produced 418 circulars/information documents, 225 forms targeted at the farming community and ancillary organisations and 38 consultation papers. The total cost of this was £2,012,886 of which £831,049 covered the cost of delivery of these items by mail.

Affordable Homes

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many affordable homes (a) were built and (b) are estimated to be built in (i) deep rural and (ii) mixed rural areas in each year from 1996 to 2016. [58931]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

Available information on affordable housing units completed by social landlords since 1996–97 in local authority districts classified as either "deep" or "mixed" rural are presented in the following table.

New affordable housing units completed: England

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02

Total new affordable housing units	4,019	8,694	7,523	6,330	6,066	n/a

Notes:

Registered Social Landlord (RSL) completions represent units funded through the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme and/or via local authorities with Local Authority Social Housing Grant (LASHG).

Affordable housing schemes by RSLs comprise those for rent (including Tariff, and Mixed Funded schemes); temporary social housing schemes (including MiniHag, and short-life housing); and shared or outright ownership schemes (including leasehold for the elderly). RSL schemes will include "off-the-shelf" purchases from private developers, and other additions to RSL stock through acquisition and refurbishment.

Sources:

LA new-build from DTLR housing activity monthly P2 returns.

RSL provision from Housing Corporation returns.

No precise information on affordable homes constructed without public funding is available. Provisional data covering 2000–01 were collected as part of the Housing Investment Programme Statistical Appendices for the first time last year, but returns were incomplete. We have made changes to this year's return to encourage more complete reporting.

Central Government does not make long-term forecasts of affordable housing build. We expect local authorities to plan to meet the housing requirements of the whole community including those in need of affordable housing.

The Government recognise the importance of affordable housing in maintaining balanced and successful rural communities, and is doubling the size of the Housing Corporation's programme to deliver affordable housing in small rural settlements (with a population of 3,000 or less), from 800 in 2000–01 to 1,600 homes a year by 2003–04. We expect to deliver around 9,000 affordable homes annually in rural areas by 2003–04, including the 1,600 in small rural settlements.

Hazardous Freight

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what (a) hazardous and (b) radioactive material has been transported through the Portsmouth, South constituency by road on a regular basis in the last year; and if she will make a statement. [66481]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

Information of this nature is not held by the Department.

Illegal Waste

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what advertising campaigns (a) have taken place and (b) are planned by (i) her Department, (ii) the Environment Agency and (iii) other Government bodies in relation to tackling problems from (A) litter, (B) fly tipping, (C) abandoned vehicles and (D) other waste disposed by illegal means; how much these have cost; what assessment has been made of their effect; and if she will make a statement. [64738]

Mr. Meacher: The Department grant funds the environmental charity, Environmental Campaigns (ENCAMS), which runs the Keep Britain Tidy campaign. Last year ENCAMS ran anti-litter advertising campaigns targeted at drivers who throw litter from cars, and adolescents. The latter campaign used pop stars, soap personalities and footballers to convey the message that it is not "cool" to litter. ENCAMS also initiated a clean up campaign targeted at those who drop litter in and around football grounds using Michael Owen and other famous footballers to get the message across—so far campaigns have been launched at Liverpool and Arsenal football grounds. This year ENCAMS will be launching a campaign directed at fast food litter. This campaign will run in August in cinemas throughout the country. ENCAMS also runs a number of Keep Britain Tidy campaigns throughout the year which get local communities cleaning up their local environment.

It is primarily the responsibility of local authorities and the Environment Agency to instigate advertising campaigns in relation to fly tipping and waste disposed of by illegal means. While there is no central list of campaigns by local authorities, the Environment Agency has worked to establish the fly tipping forum which has helped to raise awareness and the profile of the issue. The forum is proposing to organise a seminar specifically relating to fly tipping and waste related crime in the future. In addition, information about fly tipping and advice on what to do in relation to a fly tipping incident can be found on the agency's website at: http://www.environment-agency.gov.uk/business/wasteman/flytip/. The agency has also produced a fly tipping leaflet which gives details of how to report fly tipping incidents.

DEFRA has not carried out any advertising campaigns in relation to abandoned vehicles, nor is any planned.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what (a) advice and guidance has been given by her Department and (b) legislation is in place with relation to tackling problems from (i) litter, (ii) fly tipping, (iii) abandoned vehicles and (iv) other waste disposed by illegal means; and if she will make a statement. [64737]

Mr. Meacher: Guidance for dealing with litter is contained in the 1999 DETR Code of Practice on Litter and Refuse. This sets out reasonable and acceptable standards of cleanliness for local authorities and Duty Bodies which they can be expected to meet. Advice for the general public is published by the Tidy Britain Group in their leaflet entitled "Litter and the Law". This explains the litter laws and how the public can help to achieve a litter-free local environment.

The current legislation in place to deal with litter and refuse is contained in the Environmental Protection Act 1990. This makes Duty Bodies responsible for keeping their land clear of litter and refuse. It also gives both local authorities and citizens the right to take legal action to get areas cleaned up.

The Environment Agency, in conjunction with the fly tipping forum has put together a comprehensive pack of guidance to help various sectors of society to deal with fly tipping. This guidance is available on the Environment Agency website at: http://www.environment-agency.gov.uk/business/wasteman/flytip/.

Section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 makes it a criminal offence to dispose of waste outside the terms of a Waste Management Licence or a registered exemption from licensing. Section 59 of the same act gives the Environment Agency and local authorities the power to serve notice on the perpetrators of fly tipping, requiring them to remove the waste and pay for the clean up. Local authorities and the Environment Agency are also empowered to effect the removal of fly tipped waste and to recover the costs from those responsible.

The Department has not given any advice or guidance with relation to tackling problems from abandoned vehicles. The legislation covering abandoned vehicles is contained in the Refuse Disposal (Amenity) Act 1978, the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984, the Removal and Disposal of Vehicles Regulations 1986 and the Removal and Disposal of Vehicles (England) (Amendment) Regulations 2002.

There is no advice given by the Department in relation to waste disposed by illegal means—other than fly tipping. The Environment Agency can also take action to revoke or amend a waste management licence, if waste is deposited outside the conditions of that licence. These provisions are detailed in the Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994.

Waste Disposal

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment has been conducted for (a) her Department and (b) the Environment Agency on progress towards meeting the EU Incinerator Directive; and if she will make a statement. [65603]

Mr. Meacher: On 20 June 2002, I announced in a written answer, Official Report, column 489W, the publication by the Department of a consultation paper setting out how the Government intend to implement Directive 2000/76/EC on the incineration of waste. This followed consideration of the directive's requirements and the refinement of a regulatory impact assessment (which is included as Annexe 1 to the consultation paper). Responses to consultation are requested by 9 September, in the light of which the Department will finalise draft secondary legislation to put before the House.

In anticipation of the impending implementation of this directive, the Environment Agency has taken the following actions:

Permits for all new incinerators now incorporate the directive's emission limits. Notices varying the operational conditions for existing municipal waste incinerators were issued earlier this year requiring operators to report on plant performance against the emission standards set out in the directive.

Detailed guidance on the interpretation of the directive has been drafted in order to help agency staff to apply the directive's requirements in a consistent and transparent manner.

A technical guidance note on waste incineration techniques and their associated emissions has been drafted and placed on the agency's website.

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has had from the (a) European Commission, (b) Environment Agency, (c) Environmental Services Association, (d) waste management companies, (e) industry and (f) others on the EU Waste Incineration Directive; and if she will make a statement. [65604]

Mr. Meacher: The former Department for Environment, Transport and the Regions conducted extensive consultations with these organisations during negotiations of the draft directive on the incineration of waste. The Department announced on 20 June 2002 the publication of a consultation paper setting out how the Government intend to implement the resulting directive (2000/76/EC) and inviting, by 9 September, responses from regulators, trade associations, industry and any other organisations or individuals with an interest. At this early point in the consultation period, no response has been received.

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what discussions she had had with (a) the European Commission and (b) others regarding the Waste Acceptance Criteria; what the status of the timetable for implementation is; and if she will make a statement; [65630]

(2) what representations she has received regarding the Waste Acceptance Criteria; and if she will make a statement. [65629]

Mr. Meacher: The waste acceptance criteria have been discussed at length with the Commission and other member states at a series of regular meetings of the Landfill Sub-Committee of the Committee for the Adaption to Scientific and Technical Progress of EC Legislation on Waste held since 1999.

These negotiations have been shadowed by a consultation group comprising representatives of the Environment Agency, Government Departments, the devolved Administrations, the waste management industry and waste producers. The representations made by members of the group have formed a valuable input into the development of the UK's negotiating position on the waste acceptance criteria.

The Commission have now finalised and circulated a draft decision setting out criteria and procedures for the acceptance of waste at landfills. This will be voted on at a meeting of the Committee for the Adaption to Scientific and Technical Progress of EC Legislation on Waste in Brussels on 23 July 2002. The draft decision document requires the waste acceptance criteria to be transposed into domestic legislation by July 2004 and implemented by July 2005.

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research (a) has been conducted and (b) is planned for her Department on the (i) healthy, (ii) environmental and (iii) other impacts of (A) emissions from incinerators and (B) dioxins in incinerator ash; and if she will make a statement. [65605]

Mr. Meacher: Emissions: The Environment Agency is currently conducting a 'Human Health Review of Incineration and Combustion Techniques' which is looking at the health impacts of emissions and a number of combustion processes including incineration.

Dioxins in incinerator ash: The Environment Agency has conducted an investigation into the composition, destination and use of residues from the 11 Municipal Solid Waste Incinerators in England. This includes analyses of dioxin levels in the residues, and assessments as to the environmental and health risks involved. The Agency's report has now been published and copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Planned research: With the involvement of the Department of Health and the devolved Administrations, my Department recently hosted a seminar to identify the research needs of all waste management options, including incineration.

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs who is responsible for (a) testing and (b) monitoring (i) incinerator ash and (ii) incinerator emissions; and if she will make a statement. [65606]

Mr. Meacher: Operators are responsible for testing and monitoring incinerator emissions (including incinerator ash) and demonstrating compliance with assessment criteria specified by the regulator. The Environment Agency regulates all municipal waste incinerators (MWIs) with a capacity of 1 tonne per hour or greater. Local authorities regulate MWIs with a capacity less than 1 tonne per hour.

The Environment Agency carries out independent monitoring of emissions at least once a year. The agency also checks the operator's monitoring procedures and findings using a formal audit procedure.

Food Safety

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with the Secretary of State for Education and Skills to ensure that sufficient numbers of environmental health officers are being trained to oversee food safety. [64533]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

Food safety is the responsibility of the Food Standards Agency. I am advised by the agency that its board has expressed concern about the recruitment and retention problems being faced by local authorities. It requested officials to discuss the issues with other relevant stakeholders to look for ways to improve the situation and to help ensure continued provision of effective food law enforcement services. The matter is to be considered again in detail at the board's meeting on 11 July 2002.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to commission an audit of the uses of sheep and goat products in (a) food and (b) non-food products. [64112]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that the board of the agency endorsed a report on BSE and sheep from a group of stakeholders at its meeting on 13 June in Armagh. It contained a recommendation that the agency, with other Government Departments, should commission a full audit of the uses of sheep and goat products in food and non-food products. The agency will now take forward its share of the work and approach the other Departments involved.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures have been taken since the foot and mouth epidemic to ensure that if another outbreak were to occur it could be efficiently dealt with. [66647]

Mr. Morley: DEFRA has produced an interim contingency plan for foot and mouth disease in consultation with some key stakeholders and operational partners. The interim contingency plan builds on the existing plan (which is required by EC Directive 90/423) and codifies experiences and lessons learned from the recent outbreak. However, it does not seek to pre-judge the results of the official inquiries into the last outbreak. All plans will be comprehensively reviewed as a result of any recommendations made by the official inquiries.

A programme of testing through simulation exercises is planned for the future. Stakeholders at both national and local level will be invited to be involved in the programme.

A number of restrictions on animal movements remain in place as a means of helping protect against the rapid spread of any new incursion of disease, and measures have been taken to improve standards of biosecurity in livestock markets and shows. These arrangements also will be reviewed in the light of the recommendations of the official inquiries.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action she is taking to implement the NAO recommendation on the continued close environmental monitoring and inspection of foot and mouth disposal sites and the publication and reflection in her Department's contingency plans of the results. [65191]

Mr. Morley: The Department is working closely with the Environment Agency (EA) to ensure that FMD disposal sites are effectively monitored. Up until the end of March 2002, the EA managed a programme of environmental monitoring in the areas worst affected by the outbreak. DEFRA has now taken over responsibility for this interim monitoring programme and has recently issued a tender for the sampling and analysis of selected sites throughout England and Wales.

The Department also intends to commission individual site-specific risk assessments for each carcase and ash disposal site. These assessments will be made available to the EA, who will review the environmental risk and Groundwater Authorisations. Based on the results of these risk assessments, the Department will then commission a targeted monitoring programme to ensure that any potential longer-term environmental impacts are identified.

In addition to this monitoring programme, each of the mass burial sites has its own comprehensive monitoring programme with regular reporting to DEFRA and the EA. The agency also carries out audit monitoring. Watchtree has 68 monitoring boreholes, Tow Law 32, Throckmorton 28 and Widdrington six. These boreholes are at varying distances from the cells and samples are taken, in some cases at several different depths. The Environment Agency is sampling stream springs and watercourses in the vicinity of the mass burial sites. No pollution from carcase disposal has been detected to date.

The need for formal risk assessments to be undertaken prior to the burial of carcases or ash is being incorporated into departmental operational guidance.

EU Committees
(Scottish Executive Representation)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee on the control of major accident hazards involving dangerous substances (Seveso II) is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66449]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

The Committee of Competent Authorities (CCA) next meeting, which will be its eighth, will be held in Odense, Denmark, from 16 to 18 October 2002. The UK delegation will be headed by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE), and will include others, also from HSE and the Environment Agency (EA). Matters relating to Scottish representation at such meetings should be raised with the Scottish Executive.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical and scientific progress of the Directive on the prevention and reduction of environmental pollution by asbestos is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66459]

Mr. Meacher: There are currently no plans for the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical and scientific progress of the Directive on the prevention and reduction of environmental pollution by asbestos to meet. The UK representation on this committee depends on the agenda items under discussion. Officials from the Scottish Executive and other devolved Administrations attend as necessary in accordance with their interests.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee on agricultural structures and rural development is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64899]

Alun Michael: The EU Committee on agricultural structures and rural development is next due to meet on 24 July 2002. UK representation may vary according to the agenda for each meeting and may include members of the Scottish Executive and other devolved Administrations where there are items of sufficient interest. Agendas and papers are routinely circulated to all devolved Administrations in advance of meetings and they also receive reports of matters discussed.

CABINET OFFICE

Recycling

Sue Doughty: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what guidance is given to Government Departments in relation to (a) recycling of waste products, (b) purchase of materials which are recycled, and (c) purchases of materials from renewable sources; what plans there are to change such guidance; and if he will make a statement. [65597]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's policy on these issues is currently set out in the "Model Framework for Greening Government Operations", that was issued in 1998 and is on DEFRA's Greening Government website: http://defraweb/environment/greening/conserve/conserve.htm. This will be replaced by a new Framework for Sustainable Development on the Government Estate that will be rolled out during the current financial year and set targets for all key operational areas of the Government estate, including waste management and procurement.

The Greening Government website also provides guidance on recycling waste products, e.g. in the "Waste Guide—Advice for Government Departments". The procurement page on that site also contains guidance on purchasing recycled materials, e.g. Part 2 of the "Green Guide for Buyers" contains best practice advice on 'Resource Efficiency' covering the four "Rs", and there is specific guidance in Part 3 covering paper and IT equipment. URL: http://defraweb/environment/greening/greenpro/greenpro.htm There are also links to other sources of information such as the Buy Recycled Programme's Products Guide and the Waste Resources Action Programme (WRAP).

There are plans to revise the "Waste Guide". The Secretary of State has also set up a cross-Government Sustainable Procurement Group that will report to Ministers this summer on using the Government's purchasing power to promote sustainable development and encourage innovation and the supply of environmentally preferable goods and services. Their report due in July will, among other things, look at how the Government can increase its purchases of re-manufactured and recycled goods.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Catherine Meyer

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when his Department will set up a meeting with hon. Members to discuss the case of Catherine Meyer. [65383]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

My noble Friend Baroness Amos, Foreign and Commonwealth Office Minister responsible for consular affairs, would be happy to meet with my hon. Friend to discuss this case.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when her Parliamentary Secretary will meet the hon. Member for Leicester, East to discuss the Catherine Meyer case. [66332]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I will meet with the hon. Member for Leicester, East if he wishes. However, the Lord Chancellor's Department has had no involvement in the case since November 1994.

Leicester County Court

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the staffing level is at Leicester county court; and what it was in 1990. [64832]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department holds records on this which are accurate, back to April 1996.

The Department employed a total of 57 employees as at 1 June 2002 at Leicester county court. As at 1 April 1996 the Department employed 68 employees.

Land Registry

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many staff were employed in the Land Registry in 1990; and how many are employed currently. [66329]

Ms Rosie Winterton: On 1 April 1990, the Land Registry employed 10,771 members of staff and on 1 April 2002 it was employing 7,998.

Contact Orders

Margaret Moran: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many contact orders were (a) granted and (b) refused under section 8 of the Children Act 1989 in (i) 1999, (ii) 2000 and (iii) 2001. [65721]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The figures sought are published annually in Judicial Statistics.

	1999	2000	2001
Granted	41,862	46,070	55,030
Refused	1,752	1,276	713

Contact orders include ones made for indirect contact or supervised contact, though no breakdown is available.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many members of her Department have been employed in its Regulatory Impact Unit in the past five years; and if she will make a statement. [65972]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Between 1997 and March 2002, one person was employed to co-ordinate work on regulatory impact across LCD, alongside other duties. In April, this increased to two.

It is the job of departmental Regulatory Impact Units to establish and promote the principles of good regulation in their Departments. The staff in each unit work closely with the officials responsible for developing policies within their Department and the Regulatory Impact Unit within the Cabinet Office. They focus on those regulations that impact on business, charities and the voluntary sector.

Visa Applications

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many successful appeals for visa applications there have been from Arab countries since September 1999. [65232]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. There are a number of different types of visa and only family visit visa appeals are recorded separately from other immigration appeals. From October 2000 (when the appeal right for such applications was reintroduced) to 31 May 2002 there were 93 successful family visit visa appeals from the nationals of member states of the Arab League. The breakdown by country is as follows:

Algeria—23
Djibouti—1
Egypt—9
Iraq—8
Jordan—1
Lebanon—0
Libya—4
Mauritania—7
Morocco—6
Oman—0
Somalia—5
Sudan—9
Syria—2
Tunisia—5
Yemen—13.

No appeals were received from nationals of Bahrain, Comoros, Kuwait, Qatar. Saudi Arabia or the United Arab Emirates.

Solicitors

Dr. Cable: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what support she is providing to the Law Society to facilitate the prompt reform of those solicitors practice rules identified as anti-competitive by the Director General of Fair Trading; and if she will make a statement. [66476]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Reform of the solicitors practice rules and removal of anti-competitive restrictions therein are matters for the Law Society to take forward. Where there are restrictions in legislation relating to the regulation of solicitors, they fall to Government to consider. As has already been announced, the Government are planning to consult before the summer break on those issues which fall to it arising from the DGFT's report.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what discussions her Department has had with the Law Society in the past 12 months on employed solicitors advising the public, fee-sharing and referral fees; and if she will make a statement. [66474]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Officials from both the Lord Chancellor's Department and from the Department of Trade and Industry have separately held meetings with the Law Society. The DTI has discussed competition issues generally. The LCD has discussed progress relating to those matters highlighted in the Director General of Fair Trading's report, "Competition in Professions". The issue of employed solicitors advising the public is one of the matters to be considered in the Government's consultation paper planned for release before the summer break.

TRANSPORT

Paddington Survivors Group

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, Local Government and the Regions if he will place in the Library a copy of the note of his meeting with the Paddington Survivors Group on 12 September 2001. [59820]

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the official note of his meeting on 12 September 2001 with the Paddington Survivors Group what matters were discussed at the meeting; and if he will make a statement. [60541]

Mr. Darling: I have been asked to reply.

My predecessor met the Paddington Survivors Group on 12 September and 24 October 2001. I met the Group on 13 June 2002. It is not the normal practice to place notes of Ministerial meetings in the Library. I agreed with the Group when we met in June that I would not publish minutes of our meeting.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arms Exports

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of state for Trade and Industry what vetting procedures she employs to consider the suitability for export of *(a)*defensive and (b) offensive weapons; and if she will make a statement. [64219]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 24 June 2002]: The Government rigorously assesses export licence application to determine the risk of the proposed export being misused in contravention of the consolidated EU and national arms export licensing criteria. I refer the hon Member to the reply from my right hon. Friend, the Member for Neath, the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, to my hon. Friend, the Member for Crawley on 26 October 2000, Official Report, columns 199-203W.

The Government have taken a number of steps to strengthen the process of risk assessment at the licensing stage and continue to consider ways of further improving procedures in this area.

Massey Ferguson

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what impact studies (a) have been and (b) will be undertaken by the Government on the effect of the closure of Massey Ferguson on dependent companies in Coventry; and what measures the Government have taken to encourage new manufacturing companies in (i) Coventry and (ii) the West Midlands. [65661]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 3 July 2002]: Work is now underway to consider the impact of the Massey Ferguson reduction on its supplier chain. This will be conducted under the management of the "Massey Ferguson Regional Support Team", which was set up on Friday 28 June 2002. It will be chaired by Councillor Nick Nolan, Leader of Coventry City Council and members include AGCO managers, Advantage West Midlands (the Regional Development Agency), the Local Authorities, Coventry and Warwickshire Chamber or Commerce, Warwick Manufacturing Centre, Coventry, Solihull and Warwickshire Partnership, Jobcentre Plus (formerly the Employment Service), Trade Unions represented at the plant, local Members of Parliament, and the DTI through the Government Office for the West Midlands.

The Government have a number of measures to support and help new businesses—including new manufacturing companies—such as Regional Selective Assistance Enterprise Grants and SMART Grants which are administered by Advantage West Midlands or the Small Business Service. In addition, the "Accelerate" scheme has helped numerous manufacturers in the motor vehicle sector, and the recommendations of the Rover Task Force has enabled funding from the UK Government and European Structural Funds to be focussed on the diversification and modernisation of West Midlands manufacturing companies.

Manufacturing matters to the Government. A National Manufacturing Summit took place in Birmingham on 5 December 2001, with a specific West Midlands follow-up event on 7 March 2002. These have helped to initiate the Government's Manufacturing Strategy, which was published in April 2002. Additionally, the Manufacturing Advisory Service, administered by the Small Business Service, will be officially launched on 8 July 2002.

Employment Relations Act

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the powers he has under section 23 of the Employment Relations Act 1999; and on which occasions she has used them and under which circumstances, with special reference to when she would use them in future. [66080]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The power in Section 23 of the Employment Relations Act 1999 enables the Government to confer statutory employment rights under or by virtue of specified primary legislation. Before deciding whether and how to use this power, we are undertaking a review of employment status issues in relation to statutory employment rights and intend to publish a discussion document before the end of July.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

World Bank Loans

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the proportion of World Bank loans to be converted to grants; and what the criteria are for deciding which World Bank loans are to be converted into grants. [66186]

Clare Short: Negotiations have recently concluded on the 13th Relenishment of the International Development Association (IDA), the concessional finance arm of the World Bank. 18–21 per cent. of overall IDA-13 resources, projected to be around $23 billion, will be provided in the form of grants. During the last IDA replenishment (IDA-12), less than 5 per cent. of resources were available as grants.

The British Government has worked hard to ensure that these grants will be targeted on those countries who will benefit from them most. The categories against which grants will be allocable are in the table below.

Categories for grants in IDA-13

Per cent.

Category	Detail	Proportion of IDA-13
Debt-vulnerable countries	Up to 40% grants for IDA-only countries with per capita income of less than $360 p.a. with debt vulnerability problems	8
Other very poor countries	Up to 23% grants for other IDA-only countries with per capita income of less than $360 p.a.	3.5
Post-conflict countries	Up to 40% grants for all IDA post-conflict countries for the first three years	1.5–4
Natural disaster assistance	100% grants for reconstruction efforts for all IDA countries facing exceptional natural disasters	1
HIV/AIDS programmes for IDA only countries	100% grants for HIV/AIDS programmes	4
for IDA/IBRD blend countries	25% grants for HIV/AIDS programmes	0.5
Total		18–21

Notes:

'IDA-only' countries refers to countries who can only access World Bank loans through IDA. 'IDA/IBRD blend' countries refers to countries who can access a combination of IDA concessional loans and IBRD non-concessional loans.

Workers' Group Development Scheme

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on the Workers' Group Development Scheme. [67516]

Clare Short: The information is in the following table:

DFID Workers Group Development Scheme funding 1998–2001

Title	Country	Agency	Budget (£s)
1998–99
Organisational development programme	Philippines	Christian Aid	23,624
Technical support project	Peru	ITDG	24,135
Developing an equal opportunities strategy	Namibia	TUC	1,587
Farmworkers' literacy and legal rights campaign	Bangladesh	War on Want	20,939
1999–2000
Negotiating skills for women	Africa regional	TUC	24,995
Training on asbestos related disease	South Africa	TUC	22,378
Health and safety education	Non-specific	TUC	20,054
Implementation of core labour standards	Uganda	CTUC	19,250
2000–01
Negotiating skills for women	Africa regional	TUC	24,995
Training on asbestos related disease	South Africa	TUC	22,378
Health and safety education	Non-specific	TUC	20,054
Implementation of core labour standards	Uganda	CTUC	19,250

The Civil Society Challenge Fund opened in October 1999 and provided new funding opportunities for trades union organisations. The Workers Group Development Scheme was therefore closed for new applications from 1 April 2000. All projects funded by the WGDS have now ended.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many members of her Department have been employed in its regulatory impact unit in the past five years; and if she will make a statement. [65970]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development is not involved in regulatory activity, and does not therefore have a regulatory impact unit. The Department does, however, systematically seek to assess the impact of its policies and programmes on the reduction of poverty in developing countries.

Departmental Waste

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of waste produced in her Department was (a) recycled, (b) composted and (c) re-used, broken down into (i) paper, (ii) plastics, (iii) aluminium cans and (iv) other, in each year since 1997; what plans there are to increase the proportions; and if she will make a statement. [65695]

Clare Short: Figures prior to 2000 are not available, as precise volumes were not being measured. Some measuring systems were initiated in 2000 but were not sufficiently comprehensive to enable proportions to be quoted in the format requested.

In April 2000, recording of paper sent for recycling commenced at our main London office and averaged 300kg/wk in the initial months. This increased by 30 per cent following an office awareness-raising campaign in September 2000. Other recycling streams initiated during 2000 included plastic cups, aluminium cans, glass, newspaper, toner cartridges and used fluorescent tubes. Since December 2001, our main London office has been using a Government-approved waste contractor (John W Hannay) who collect all mixed office waste daily and sort it on receipt into 12 recycling streams. They state that they recycle over 90 per cent and send under ten per cent to landfill. This system also obviates the need for time-consuming sorting and recording of individual waste streams at source. We are currently exploring the possibility of extending this system to our other main office in East Kilbride, and will also be conducting environmental audits of our overseas offices with a view to expanding recycling, composting and re-use where local circumstances permit.

When we relocated to a new London office towards the end of 2001; eight giant walk-in skips were filled with waste paper for recycling. Obsolete computer equipment was sent to the charity Computer Aid for reuse (including in developing countries) and surplus obsolete office furniture was donated to local schools and other charities. For the final office clearance we used a Government-approved company (Azcom, via a call-down contract with the Disposal Sales Agency) who reuse and recycle as much cleared material as possible as an alternative to landfill.

DFID is wholly committed to the Green agenda and targets, and is in the process of finalising an Environmental Management System covering all aspects of operational activities. Improved recording and monitoring procedures will form an integral part of that system when it is up and running.

Sexual and Reproductive Health

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which NGOs her Department has supported to promote sexual and reproductive health in developing countries in each of the last five years; and how much money each organisation has received. [66182]

Clare Short: My Department (headquarters and overseas offices) funds many sexual and reproductive health NGOs in the UK, US and across the developing world. Information on this is not held centrally and to collate it would incur disproportionate costs. DFID expenditure through UK NGOs (including sexual and reproductive health NGOs) is listed in Statistics on International Development (table 14). A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Poverty Analysis

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial contribution her Department has made as part of its work with the World Bank, the UN Development Programme and the European Commission on a joint analysis of the linkages between environment and poverty. [67490]

Clare Short: My Department has contributed to a joint paper with the World Bank, the United Nations Development Programme and the European Commission on the linkages between poverty reduction and environmental management. We made no financial contribution as part of this work and no new research or analysis was commissioned. Publishing and editing costs were covered by the World Bank. Our contribution was in staff time.

UN Taskforce

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many staff in her Department are working with the United Nations Information and Communications Technologies Task Force. [67004]

Clare Short: The Department is represented on the Task Force by its Director-General, Resources, who calls on appropriate specialist support as necessary.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial support her Department is giving in 2002-03 to the United Nations Information and Communications Technologies Task Force. [67003]

Clare Short: The Department devotes human resources to attending and supporting Task Force meetings. No direct financial support is provided.

Tanzania

Mrs. Humble: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on her recent visit to Tanzania. [68176]

Clare Short: I visited Dodoma on 2–3 July for discussions with President Mkapa and Government Ministers about the UK's development partnership with Tanzania. I was warmly received, and had some open and constructive discussions with the Government of Tanzania about their impressive progress on social and economic reform, as well as about the government's response to the International Civil Aviation Organisation's (ICAO) report on the air traffic control system. Given that the contract with BAE Systems is legally binding, President Mkapa is inviting ICAO and BAE Systems to visit Tanzania to help advise his government on the best and most effective way of using the system. President Mkapa also made clear that there would be no second phase of the project. The President and Finance Minister outlined measures the government had put in place to ensure proper scrutiny and transparency of contracts to avoid any similar problems in the future. Improved systems and legislation, which DFID has helped to support, are now in place for public expenditure management and procurement.

In view of these assurances and the measures taken by the government of Tanzania, and given the impressive achievements Tanzania has made in economic growth and social reform, I agreed to establish a six year partnership based on mutual commitments to drive forward Tanzania's poverty reduction and economic reform efforts. The Memorandum of Understanding will provide a commitment to at least £45 million per annum of support to the Tanzanian budget, the first year of which will be disbursed between 1 July 2002 and 30 June 2003. In the current financial year we expect to spend a total of £80 million through our bilateral development programme.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Pets In Schools

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what her policy is on the (a) keeping of pets in schools and (b) development of school farms; how those activities are compatible with her Department's guidelines on health and safety; and if she will make a statement. [67198]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Keeping pets in schools and encountering farming activities can be useful educational experiences for pupils. The Department has issued guidelines on health and safety in science education, and also endorsed guidance from educational organisations, covering good keeping and handling of living organisms in schools. The Growing Schools initiative, launched last September, and supported by £500,000 funding, includes the development of school grounds for growing, for example, food "crops", and may also support farm units which contain animals.

HEALTH

Vaccines

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what rules apply to the use of animal material in the production of vaccines. [56021]

Ms Blears [holding answer 14 May 2002]: There have been guidelines for the pharmaceutical industry to follow on the use of certain animal materials in the production of vaccines and other medicines since 1989. The latest version of the guidelines was drawn up by the European scientific committee, the committee for proprietary medicinal products (CPMP), and adopted in May 2001. The latest version of the guidelines became legally binding from 1 July 2000 for new applications for a licence for a medicinal product and from 1 March 2001 for products that were already licensed.

The scope of guidance at any one time, and its implications for pharmaceutical companies, have often been unclear. Following a thorough review of the information supplied to Parliament on bovine spongiform encephalopathy-related issues in vaccines, the Government have established that, regrettably, incorrect and misleading information was given to Ministers by the medicines control agency and thus has been given in response to a number of Parliamentary Questions. An account of the questions incorrectly answered and the correct information has now been placed in the Library and letters sent to right hon. and hon. Members who asked those questions.

We have also placed in the Library:

a copy of the Government's chief medical officer's report on the withdrawal of the oral polio vaccine;

a copy of the committee for safety of medicine's (CSM) consolidated review of transmissible spongiform encephalopathy (TSE) agents and the safety of United Kingdom authorised human medicines;

a report by the MCA that explains in detail the development of the guidance for the pharmaceutical industry to follow on the use of certain animal derived materials in the manufacture of medicines, and the approach taken by the agency to its implementation.

For all practical purposes, nothing in the reports that have been published changes the safety profile of any vaccine licensed for use in the UK. In particular, the CSM's review is reassuring in concluding that there are no TSE-related issues arising from the use of animal materials in the manufacture of UK licensed vaccines.

Children Act

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Government will report on the operation of the Children Act 1989. [67829]

Jacqui Smith: We have today published a report on the operation of the Children Act 1989, pursuant to our duties under section 83 of the Act. Copies are available in the Library and Vote Office. A copy of the document can also be found at the following website address: www.doh.gov.uk/qualityprotects/index.htm and www.doh.gov.uk/scg/childrenactreport2001.htm

Pregnancies

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many crisis pregnancy centres are funded (a) directly and (b) indirectly by his Department; and which organisations they are operated by. [66712]

Jacqui Smith: There are a number of places within the National Health Service and independent and voluntary sectors that offer advice and counselling for pregnant women. The Department does not directly fund any pregnancy advice bureaux or centres but some will have contracts with primary care trusts to provide services. The Department does not centrally collect data on these services.

Outside of the NHS, only pregnancy advice bureaux registered by the Department can refer women to an approved independent sector place for a termination of pregnancy. These bureaux are operated by the British Pregnancy Advisory Service, Marie Stopes International, Fraterdrive Limited and two individuals.

Paediatric Rheumatoid Care

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is made for paediatric rheumatoid care by hospital trusts; and how many full time consultants work in this area. [62314]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 25 June 2002]: The children's national service framework, which is currently being developed, will set standards to improve the healthcare of children and young people. As with other specialities of paediatrics, access to the necessary care and arrangements for improved local delivery will be addressed by NSF hospital module. The Royal College of Paediatric and Child Health reports that there are currently 10 full time consultants who work in paediatric rheumatoid care.

Blind People

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures the Government have taken since 1997 to increase facilities and services for blind people; and if he will make a statement. [61147]

Jacqui Smith: A number of initiatives have begun and legislative changes taken place since 1997 that benefit people with visual impairments as well as other disabled people. Part III of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, deals with discrimination in the provision of goods, services and facilities. Since 1999, for example, service providers have had to take reasonable steps to change practices, policies or procedures, which make it impossible, or unreasonably difficult for disabled people including those with visual impairments to use a service.

The community equipment services strategy, which was published in March 2001, calls for increases in the number of people benefiting from equipment. It highlights the importance of equipment and adaptations for visually impaired people. "Doubly Disabled", published in 1999, provided essential background and guidance for senior National Health Service managers with specific responsibility for advising on access for blind and other disabled persons to services and employment. Last month the Department issued fair access to care services, which provides guidance to councils with social services responsibilities on how they may achieve fair access to care services through reviewing and revising their eligibility criteria for all adult service users. Additionally, we have recently awarded the Royal National Institute of the Blind (RNIB) and the Guide Dogs for the Blind Association (GDBA) jointly a project grant to develop visual care standards.

Continence Products

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding (a) the NHS and (b) social services unnecessarily charging people for continence products. [64520]

Jacqui Smith: No representations have been received on these issues.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the expenditure per head of population on adult mental health services for each NHS health care trust in north-west England, together with the average per capita spent in (a) the north-west region and (b) England in each of the last three years. [62776]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 26 June 2002]: Expenditure per head of population is not collected at regional or trust level, however the table below contains the expenditure per head of population for all mental health services for England:

Year	Expenditure per head of population (cash terms)
1997–98	2,891
1998–99	3,244
1999–2000	3,541

Note:

Figures for 1990–2000 are not directly comparable with earlier years due to changes in collection methods.

Podiatry and Chiropody Services

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he proposes to take to remove regional variations in the availability of podiatry and chiropody services; and if he will make a statement. [66341]

Jacqui Smith: We acknowledge there are regional variations in National Health Service chiropody/podiatry services. NHS organisations such as primary care trusts (PCTs) have to prioritise services they provide to meet local demand including chiropody/podiatry services. The criteria used to clinically prioritise will be determined locally by PCTs.

To assist PCTs in meeting this demand, we are committed to recruiting more allied health professionals (AHPs), which include chiropodists/podiatrists, through the NHS Plan target of over 6,500 extra AHPs, and as extended and stated in the "Delivery Plan", there will be 30,000 extra therapists and scientists over the September 2001 baseline by 2008.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will resume the collation of statistics for chiropody and podiatry care. [66339]

Jacqui Smith: We continue to collect and publish information annually on initial contacts and first contacts by region with the chiropody services. The only change in the statistics collection was the discontinuation of all face to face contact data from 2000–01.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the extent to which chiropody and podiatry services are cost effective in preventing the need for more serious intervention. [66695]

Jacqui Smith: The national service framework programmes are wherever possible based on research evidence. Where this is not possible it is based on expert consensus of best practice. Research gaps brought to our notice from the NSF programmes are priority areas for research in the future.

Chiropody and podiatry services are known to be cost effective in preventing the need for more serious intervention. In diabetes, podiatrists have an essential role in the prevention and management of foot conditions especially in helping to prevent and treat foot ulcerations which may result in amputation. Foot care can reduce complications in people with diabetes by two thirds.[1]

The role of the podiatrist in falls prevention is acknowledged in the NSF for older people, and chiropodists and podiatrists have been involved in developing both NSFs for older people and diabetes.

Care Home Beds

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many care home beds have been closed in Surrey in each of the last five years. [67466]

Jacqui Smith: Information on care home bed closure is not centrally collected. Information provided in the table shows the number of registered residential and nursing care beds in Surrey from 1997 to 2001 at 31 March each year.

Table: Residential and nursing care beds from 1997 to 2001 in Surrey

At 31 March Numbers

Year	Total number of care beds	Residential care places[1]	Nursing care beds[2]
1997[3]	12,088	7,305	4,783
1998	12,681	7,538	5,143
1999	12,321	7,406	4,915
2000	12,599	7,261	5,338
2001	11,440	6,628	4,812

[1] Includes residential care beds in small homes (less than four places)

[2] Includes nursing beds in private hospitals and clinics

[3] Information on nursing beds relates to registered beds during the period 1 October 1996 to 31 March 1997

Department of Health's annual returns

Milk

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the provision of subsidised break time milk for (a) nursery school children and (b) primary school children in (i) Lincolnshire and (ii) England; [65032]

(2) how many schools in (a) Lincolnshire and (b) each other county are benefiting from the EU School Milk Subsidy Scheme. [65034]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

It is not possible to provide a breakdown of uptake between primary and nursery school children, or details of the number of schools participating in the scheme, as this information is known only to the local education authorities which make claims for subsidy to the Rural Payments Agency (RPA). On the basis of the amount of milk on which subsidy is claimed, the RPA estimate that around one in 10 eligible pupils in Lincolnshire is a beneficiary of the scheme. This compares with around one in five for England as a whole. Given the basis on which claims are made, comparable county-by-county figures could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

CABINET OFFICE

Green Minister

Sue Doughty: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office who his Department's green minister is; when they (a) have attended and (b) plan to attend meetings of the Green Ministers' Committee; what the outcomes of meetings were for his Department's activities; and if he will make a statement. [65986]

Mr. Alexander: The Cabinet Office's Green Minister is Douglas Alexander who was appointed to the ENV (G) Committee in June 2002. Having only recently been appointed he has yet to attend any of the Committee's meetings, but intends to do so in the future.

It is the established practice under exemption two of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Tom Harris: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will publish a revised list of ministerial responsibilities. [68177]

Mr. Alexander: The Cabinet Office has today published a revised List of Ministerial Responsibilities. Copiers have been placed in the Libraries of both House and in the Vote Office. The list is also available on the Cabinet Office website: www.cabinetoffice.gov.uk.

Female Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what percentage of the staff of his Department are women; and what the percentage was in June 1997. [66918]

Mr. Alexander: Data on staffing levels is not available for June 1997 as it is only collected twice a year, as at 1 April and 1 October. We are currently in the process of collecting the data for 1 April 2002.

For current figures I would refer the hon. Member to the document on staffing that was released on 21 February 2002. For figures as at 1 April 1997 I would refer the hon. Member to Table 1D of Civil Service Statistics 1997, which was published on 29 January 1998. Copies of both the documents were placed in the Libraries of the House at the time of publication.

The Civil Service Reform programme is aiming to achieve a dramatic increase in diversity, whereby all individuals are valued and encouraged to maximise their potential. As part of this, targets have been set for 2005 to tackle under-representation in the Senior Civil Service, and departments have set targets across all grades. The Head of the Civil Service reports to the Prime Minister annually on diversity.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Judge-directed Acquittals

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what action has been taken to reduce the number of (a) judge-ordered and (b) judge-directed acquittals since 1999. [60203]

The Solicitor-General: In 1999, the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) introduced an adverse outcome analysis system. This provided CPS areas with a consistent means to identify reasons for adverse outcomes and also to allocate responsibility of any failure. This information is collated centrally.

For the last seven years, many areas of the CPS have had in place, with the police, a system of joint performance management that involves an appraisal of Crown Court acquittals, including those ordered and directed by the judge. This process has provided areas with information showing particular trends and a means by which improvements can be made.

The Crown Prosecution Service produces quarterly summaries of unsuccessful case outcomes from information drawn from its various case tracking systems. This year the CPS and the police have begun to develop a joint case outcome analysis which builds on these two processes and will focus on avoidable case failure. Under this system, the reasons for judge-ordered and judge-directed acquittals in individual cases will be jointly assessed for individual training needs and other joint strategies for performance improvement.

The process will be supported by more sophisticated management information following the introduction of the CPS' Compass Case Management System due to roll out between April and December 2003.

The figures in the following table show a fall in judge-directed acquittals from 1,777 in 1999 to 1,471 last year, a reduction of 17.2 per cent. Over the same period judge-ordered acquittals rose from 9,616 to 11,825, an increase of 23 per cent. Much of this increase can be attributed to recent changes in procedures. Since January 2001, the prosecution, unlike before, have been able to discontinue cases in the Crown Court. Although this is a prosecution decision, the current system records these as judge-ordered acquittals.

Judge-ordered and judge-directed acquittals, 1999–2002

	1999–2000		2000–01		2001–02
		as % of completed cases		as % of completed cases		as % of completed cases
Judge-ordered acquittals	9,616	11.1	10,145	12.3	11,825	14.0
Judge-directed acquittals	1,777	2.0	1,755	2.1	1,471	1.7

Abandoned Prosecutions

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Solicitor-General how many prosecutions were abandoned before trial in the last year for which figures are available. [64433]

The Solicitor-General: During the year ending March 2002, the Crown Prosecution Service discontinued proceedings in respect of 171,381 defendants in the magistrates courts, and 26,418 were bound over without trial. Proceedings were written off in respect of 73,084 defendants, usually because the police could not trace the defendant.

In the Crown Court, the Crown Prosecution Service decided to offer no evidence in cases involving 11,825 defendants, while a further 1,461 were bound over without trial. In addition, proceedings were written off in respect of 1,590 defendants.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Solicitor-General what plans she has (a) to give the CPS a greater role in the investigatory stage of cases and (b) to encourage it to assess the evidence earlier. [64436]

The Solicitor-General: The reforms of the CPS since this Government came into office in 1997 mean that the CPS now works more closely with the police. But there is more to do. Since February this year, pilot studies have been conducted to assess the practicability of Lord Justice Auld's recommendation that the Crown Prosecution Service should determine the charge in all but minor, routine offences or where, because of circumstances, there is a need for a holding charge.

The pilots are due to be completed next month, but preliminary results reinforce our belief in the need to involve the CPS form the outset I cases to ensure that they are in the best state that they can be before a trial begins. We will provide details of our response to the Lord Justice Auld's recommendation when the white paper on reform of the criminal justice system is published shortly.

Crime Victims

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Solicitor-General what progress has been made in granting access by the victims of crime to prosecution barristers. [64432]

The Solicitor-General: In England and Wales victims will not normally have any contact with prosecuting counsel until the case is listed for trial.

The exception to this rule is cases involving vulnerable or intimidated victims, where a meeting should take place between the Crown Prosecutor and the victim at some time prior to the trial. Prosecuting counsel should wherever possible attend that meeting.

The practice is different in Northern Ireland. There, there is no restriction on the prosecution, or on counsel, from meeting with prosecution witnesses and talking to them about their evidence. The purpose of this is to help the prosecution assess the weight of the evidence available to them.

Rape Trials

Ms Drown: To ask the Solicitor-General what steps she is taking to ensure CPS lawyers have the skills to prosecute successfully in rape trials. [64434]

The Solicitor-General: Rape cases are acknowledged to be among the most difficult to prosecute to conviction, and the expertise of prosecutors and prosecuting counsel is especially important. The recent joint inspection into the investigation and prosecution of cases involving allegations of rape found that prosecution decision-making is generally sound and handled by experienced prosecutors. But it made a number of recommendations to spread best practice across the CPS, including the need for specialist prosecutors. The CPS is currently working out how best to implement these recommendations to improve the chances that those guilty of rape will be convicted.

An inter-departmental working group expects to respond to the recommendations in the Report as a whole later this month.

Information Technology

Dr. Cable: To ask the Solicitor-General if she will make a statement on the use of IT in the Crown Prosecution Service. [64435]

The Solicitor-General: The first stage of the CPS IT modernisation programme (the Connect 42 project) was completed successfully at the end of 2001, and has provided all Crown Prosecution Service staff with computers and e-mail. This enables prosecutors and caseworkers to access the Internet for legal reference material as well as providing secure e-mail to police forces and other Government Departments.

The second stage of the modernisation programme (the Compass project) is a PFI project and was awarded to Logica, on time and budget, in December 2001. Logica, in partnership with the CPS, are providing maintenance, support and replacement of the IT infrastructure over 10 years. In addition, Logica have been contracted to provide a case management system compatible and linked with other IT systems in the CJS to replace the four case tracking systems currently used by CPS.

Police Custody (Deaths)

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Solicitor-General what her policy is on taking the views of the family of victims into account when deciding whether to prosecute following a death in police custody. [64438]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service reviews all cases, including those involving death in police custody, in accordance with the Code for Crown Prosecutors. This provides that before considering whether it is the public interest to prosecute, there must be sufficient evidence to provide a realistic prospect of a conviction. If the evidential test is satisfied, the Crown Prosecutor will take into account the consequences for the family and any views expressed by the victim's family when considering if it is in the public interest to prosecute.

The Attorney General, with the support of the Director of Public Prosecutions, is currently reviewing the prosecution process in cases arising from a death in custody and has issued a consultation paper on which he has taken steps to consult widely. The paper can be found on our website. On 23 May in this House, I invited hon. Members to respond to the paper and placed a copy in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Homeless Ex-servicemen

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures the Government have in place to care for ex-soldiers and servicemen who are homeless and suffering financial and emotional problems. [66361]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The Social Exclusion Unit's 1998 Report identified that between one quarter and one fifth of rough sleepers had been in the Armed Forces at some stage, predominantly some years before as National Servicemen. Since then, the Ministry of Defence (MOD) has been working in partnership with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's Homelessness Directorate, (previously known as the Rough Sleepers Unit) and the charitable sector to improve care and support for acute cases of homelessness, and notably those already sleeping rough on the streets or at high risk of doing so.

The MOD has put in place new preventive mechanisms at pre-discharge, point of discharge and post-discharge to help vulnerable leavers make a more successful transition to civilian life. These and other measures taken by the Government and its partners have reduced levels of rough sleeping by some two-thirds, in line with the Prime Minister's target. Furthermore, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has confirmed that an interim analysis of rough sleeping data gathered in November 2001 shows that the percentage of rough sleepers with an Armed Forced background has decreased markedly since the 1998 SEU Report.

Medical care of ex-Service personnel with substantial emotional problems is the responsibility of the National Health Service (NHS) and the full range of treatments and psychiatric services is available. Those requiring psychiatric treatment may be treated as NHS patients at the Duchess of Kent's Psychiatric Hospital, subject to the nature of their medical condition and capacity though, if they reside outside the catchment area, their local Health Authority would have to meet the cost of treatment in accordance with NHS budgetary procedures.

The MOD has recently placed a research contract with Kings College London to help advise policy decisions to improve the delivery of cross-departmental support to veterans and to identify any areas of unmet need. This research will include interviews with key stakeholder organisations, such as Combat Stress.

The Veterans Agency already makes payments to allow qualifying war pensioners suffering from psychological injury or illness to receive remedial treatment at Combat Stress centres.

Defence Estate Disposals

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his estimate is of the value of disposals from the Defence Estate for each year from 1993–94 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [66292]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 4 July 2002]:

Cash receipts

The receipts on a cash basis received for land/property disposals are provided in the following table:

Disposal programme

£ million

Year	Actual cash received
1993–94	76
1994–95	75
1975–96	74
1996–97	180
1997–98	143
1998–99	158
1999–2000	287
2000–01	206
2001–02	159

Accrual basis

The Department moved to Resource Accounting and Budgeting and therefore the DE Agency now reports, within its Annual Report and Accounts, disposals on an accrual basis. See the following table:

£ million

	Accrual basis
Year	Accrual
2000–01	225
2001–02	184

Oral Questions

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many oral questions he has transferred to other Departments in each of the last 18 months. [67049]

Dr. Moonie: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Questions are transferred only when it is more appropriate for another Department to answer.

TREASURY

VAT

Mr. Soames: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the reason is for the delay in introducing the Extra Statutory Concession to reduce VAT on home care services supplied by private businesses; and when he expects to introduce the regulation. [66147]

Mr. John Healey [holding answer 2 July 2002] : We will introduce the Extra Statutory Concession as soon as revised regulations governing the conduct of the private recruitment industry are laid before Parliament by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Departmental Waste

Sue Doughty: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of waste produced in his Department was (a) recycled, (b) composted and (c) reused, broken down into (i) paper, (ii) plastics, (iii) aluminium cans and (iv) other in each year since 1997; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65698]

John Healey: The following table shows the percentage of waste recycled by HM Treasury since 1997 broken down into waste streams:

Per cent.

Waste streams	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Paper	0.01	0.6	0.07	25	34
Glass/cans	0.02	0.02	0.02	0.02	0.4
Mixed other	0.04	0.1	0.05	0.73	0.04
Totals	0.07	0.07	0.14	26	34

The Treasury are moving into newly refurbished accommodation (1 Horse Guards Road) later this month and are implementing an environmental management system that will be certified to ISO 14001 by the end of the year. As a result of improved waste monitoring and recycling initiatives, we expect to be able to increase the amount of waste we recover.

Overseas Development

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what volume of correspondence his Department has received since October 2001 regarding (a) the United Nations target of spending 0.7 per cent. of gross domestic income on overseas development assistance and (b) debt relief for developing countries. [64603]

Mr. John Healey: Including letters, campaign postcards and e-mails there have been approximately (a) 3,000 and (b) 38,000 related items of correspondence received by the Treasury, both supporting the Government's recent actions to increase overseas development assistance and relieve the debt of the world's poorest countries, and encouraging us to further action in the future.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many members of his Department have been employed in its regulatory impact unit in the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [65976]

Dawn Primarolo: The Treasury, Inland Revenue and HM Customs and Excise each have separate departmental regulatory impact units in which two, five and three people respectively co-ordinate work on regulatory impact. The number of people in these units has remained broadly constant.

The staff in each unit work closely with the officials responsible for developing policies within their department and the regulatory impact unit within the Cabinet Office. They focus on those regulations which impact on business, charities, and the voluntary sector.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Advertising

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the total cost was of advertising and promoting benefits in 2000–01. [46467]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The total cost of advertising social security benefits (excluding pensions) in 2000–01 was £4.4 million. Production, distribution and other costs totalled a further £3 million.

New Deal

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many civil servants are employed on New Deal related work in (a) Leicester and (b) the UK. [63448]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Information on the number of people employed on New Deal work nationally is not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The New Deals are a key element of our welfare to work strategy and are an integral part of the work of many people in the Department.

In the Leicestershire Jobcentre Plus District around 70 civil servants work directly on the New Deals.

Bereavement Benefits

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make arrangements for the payment of bereavement benefits to widows who were otherwise qualified to receive them but were excluded on grounds of gender prior to the coming into force of the Welfare and Pensions Act 1999. [61370]

Malcolm Wicks [holding answer 24 June 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Northavon (Steve Webb) on 27 June, Official Report, column 1061W.

Doctors

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) complaints and (b) comments have been received concerning each doctor working for the Medical Services since 1997. [65192]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: There are over 2,000 doctors carrying out examinations for Medical Services. Information relating to individual doctors is held on personal files and could be disclosed only with the consent of the individual doctor. This could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. All complaints are investigated individually by Medical Services, and appropriate remedial action taken.

Universal Banking Services

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Turner) of 18 June 2002, Official Report, column 289W, what assessment he has made of the implications of a delay in the provision of universal banking services for the extension of automated credit transfer from 2003. [66558]

Malcolm Wicks: The Post Office tell us they are on schedule for the introduction of universal banking services in April 2003. In line with the recommendations of OGC reviews, contingency arrangements are part of the planning for this project as they are for all projects.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many statutory instruments have been (a) introduced, (b) removed and (c) amended by her Department since 1 January; and what the (i) cost and (ii) saving has been in each case. [64630]

Mr. Caborn: DCMS have introduced 15 Statutory Instruments since 1 January 2002 including one Instrument which was originated in this Department but eventually made by the Privy Council. Endorsed on each is an Explanatory Note, which identifies the legislation revoked or amended by the instrument.

An assessment of the costs and savings attributable to each could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Oral Questions

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many oral questions she transferred to other Departments in each of the last 18 months. [67031]

Mr. Caborn: Between 1 January 2001 and 30 June 2002 the Department for Culture, Media and Sport transferred five oral questions to other Departments as follows:

October 2001—1;
January 2002—1;
February 2002—1; and
March 2002—2.

Questions are transferred to another Department only when it is clear that DCMS are not responsible for that area of policy and only when the other Department has agreed to answer it.

New Opportunities Fund for Children's Play

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport who will lead the review of the New Opportunities Fund for Children's Play; what the review process will be; how she proposes to involve children and young people in the review; and when it will conclude. [66776]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 4 July 2002]: These issues are still under discussion. We hope to make an announcement shortly.

Football and Hockey

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much funding Sport England gives to (a) football, (b) hockey, (c) men's football, (d) women's football, (d) men's hockey and (f) women's hockey. [66771]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The following figures show the amount of funding Sport England has given to football and hockey since the inception of the Lottery.

There have been 429 community capital awards to football up to March 2002, totalling £187,106,898 (of which £120,000,000 went to Wembley National Stadium) and 1,504 Awards for All totalling £4,468,471. There have been 137 community capital awards to hockey up to March 2002, totalling £57,638,283, and 360 Awards for All totalling £1,144,680.

No further breakdown is available.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she last met television executives to discuss the broadcasting of (a) football and (b) hockey. [66768]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 4 July 2002]: I met executives from ITV Digital on 16 March, and the Director-General of the BBC on 18 March, to discuss the broadcasting of football. I have not discussed the broadcasting of hockey with television executives.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much funding per participant Sport England gives to (a) football, (b) hockey, (c) men's football and (d) women's football, (e) men's hockey and (f) women's hockey. [66772]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 4 July 2002]: According to the Football Association, there are a total of 1.2 million football players.

Funding from Sport England to Association Football in 2001–02 totals £6,951,295.

From these figures funding per participant is therefore £5.79.

According to the English Hockey Association there are approximately 68,000 regular national, regional and local league players, in addition to an estimated 165,000 active club members.

Funding from Sport England to the English Hockey Association in 2001–02 totals £3,827,861.

From these figures funding per participant is therefore £16.42.

No further breakdown is available.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people participate in (a) football, (b) hockey, (c) men's football, (d) women's football, (e) men's hockey and (f) women's hockey. [66770]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 4 July 2002]: According to the Football Association, there are 36,000 affiliated football clubs and a total of £1.2 million football players. Of this total 60,000 are women and girls who participate in the sport.

According to the English Hockey Association there are approximately 68,000 regular national, regional and local league players, in addition an estimated 165,00 active club members. No figures by gender exist.

Sport Activities

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list those activities which her Department recognises as sport. [67018]

Mr. Caborn: The Sports Councils currently recognises 112 activities. Recognition is based on a number of criteria used by the Councils within a framework agreed with Government . The main criteria used by the Councils are "physical" effort and "skills". I am arranging for a full list of activities recognised by the Sports Councils and recognised Government bodies with English or GB/UK remit (which is publicly available) to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sub-continent

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Governments of (a) India and (b) Pakistan about the deployment of landmines along their shared border. [66172]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing North (Mr. Pound) on 25 June 2002, Official Report, column 791W.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the current situation with respect to cross-border terrorist incursions into India. [66176]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are welcome reports that infiltration across the Line of Control has reduced in recent weeks. This has helped to reduce tensions in the region. But the situation still remains fragile. Pakistan must continue taking steps to bring about a permanent end to cross-border infiltration and militancy. And, in parallel, India must respond with further de-escalatory steps. As I said in the House on 25 June, Official Report, column 736, we want support for cross-border terrorism to stop and a verifiable end to infiltration as the first step towards reducing the current tensions. We want both Governments to talk through the issues that divide them and to talk to the people of Kashmir about how they want to go forward.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his assessment of the sequence of activities required to decrease tensions in the South Asian region. [66175]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have welcomed recent moves by India and Pakistan to reduce tensions in the region, but the situation there still remains fragile. Pakistan must continue taking steps to bring about a permanent end to cross-border infiltration and militancy. And, in parallel, India must respond with further de-escalatory steps. We have also made clear our concerns about the human rights situation in Jammu and Kashmir and the importance of holding free, fair and inclusive elections there in the autumn. Although India and Pakistan can only resolve their differences by direct bilateral dialogue, the international community can help by remaining fully engaged.

India

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of the Delhi Declaration. [66171]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As my hon. Friend, the Member for Exeter (Mr. Bradshaw), stated in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton South (Dari Taylor) on 16 April 2002, Official Report, column 829W, the New Delhi Declaration of 6 January 2002 represents a new high-water mark in the strong and vibrant relationship between the United Kingdom and India. This relationship has been marked in recent months by better co-operation in a variety of areas of common interest.

We remain committed to increasing co-operation with India under the provisions set out in the Declaration, and are confident it will help to further strengthen UK/Indian relations.

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of India about combating terrorism. [66174]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We discuss terrorism with the Indian government on a regular basis. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, has a regular dialogue on terrorism with his counterparts in the Indian Ministries for External and Home Affairs. The Foreign Secretary has spoken with Indian Ministers on the telephone on a number of occasions recently about the tension between India and Pakistan and terrorism. Terrorism was also high on the agenda when he visited New Delhi in May. The Foreign Secretary will continue this dialogue with the in coming Indian Foreign Minister, Yashwant Sinha. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister also discussed terrorism with Indian Prime Minister Vajpayee during his visit to India in January. During this visit the two Prime Ministers agreed to enhance significantly our co-operation on combating terrorism. In addition to these contracts, the UK-India Joint Working Group on Terrorism meets every six months at official level to discuss international terrorism and opportunities for co-operation and training. The last meeting of the Group was in April in London.

Recycling

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of (a) paper and (b) other goods purchased by his Department was recycled paper in each year since 1997; what the annual total cost of these purchases was; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65771]

Mr. MacShane: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost as detailed records were not kept for the full period in question. Since October 2001 the FCO has bought only 100 per cent. recycled printer and photocopier paper for use by its UK Departments. We are looking at ways to increase procurement of other recycled stationery products.

Departmental Waste

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of waste produced in his Department was (a) recycled, (b) composted and (c) re-used, broken down into (i) paper, (ii) plastics, (iii) aluminium cans and (iv) other in each year since 1997; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65700]

Mr. MacShane: This information could only be provided at disproportionate cost since we do not keep records in the requested format. The breakdowns below represent the information supplied for Green Minister's reports for 2000–01 and 2001–02.

tonnes

	2002–01	2001–02
Total waste	3,389.88	1,343.21
Total waste recovered	824.28	415.16
	(24.32%)	(30.91%)
Details of waste recycled
Paper	180.00	162.52
Toner cartridges	2.29	1.38
Fluorescent tubes	0.59	1.94
Metal and wood	n/a	16.2
Batteries recycled	n/a	1.24
Special waste (oils)	n/a	2.26

The FCO will be re-tendering its waste contracts later this year. We aim to increase the amount of waste recycled in line with Green Minister's targets.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received in respect of conflict between the Rwandan Army and dissident Banyamulenge forces in South Kivu Province, Democratic Republic of the Congo; and if he will make a statement. [66323]

Mr. MacShane: The South Kivu area of DRC is relatively inaccessible. Reliable information is scarce. But there are worrying NGO reports that the fighting between dissident Banyamulenge forces and the RCD-Goma/Rwandan Army is causing a humanitarian crisis for the people of the Hauts Plateaux. We have raised this matter with the Government of Rwanda and in the UN Security Council.

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the security and humanitarian situation in the East of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. [66322]

Mr. MacShane: We continue to monitor closely the situation in eastern DRC. In particular, we have been concerned over fighting in Kisangani, Ituri province and the Hauts Plateaux in south Kivu, the associated abuses of human rights and the negative impact on the humanitarian situation. Where the security situation permits we have encouraged the United Nations Mission (MONUC) to investigate and to take appropriate action. We have raised our concerns with the governments of the region. We have supported UN resolutions and EU statements calling on the de facto authorities of the region to ensure the protection of civilians, respect human rights and uphold the rule of law.

Staff (Health and Safety)

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what his responsibility is for the health and safety of his Department's staff deployed abroad; [66108]

(2) what his policy is on health and safety in British embassies. [66110]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The FCO's policy on the Health and Safety of its staff is the same both at home and overseas that is to keep staff safe at work, so far as is reasonably practicable. Statutory duties under UK law (eg the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 and the Construction (Design and Management) Regulations 1994) do not apply overseas. However, as a good employer, the FCO accepts its responsibility to try to provide the same duty of care to all its employees.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which overseas Governments have notified him (a) that they accept and (b) that they do not accept (i) the result and (ii) the legitimacy of the Zimbabwean presidential elections. [65998]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The European Union, the United States, Norway, Switzerland, New Zealand, Australia, Canada and others, have gone on record as saying that they do not accept that the election result reflected the will of the Zimbabwean people.

The Commonwealth, SADC Parliamentary Forum, and Japanese election observer teams reported that the election was not free and fair.

The Ghanaian election observer team reported that the election process fell short of the internationally accepted electoral standards and norms. President Wade of Senegal has said that > "Mr Mugabe did not respect the rules. We can't call that an election."

Several countries in Africa and elsewhere have gone on record as accepting the outcome of the election, though a number have qualified their assessments.

US Peacekeeping

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations the UK Government, in its capacity as a United Nations Security Council member, is making to the USA in respect of the resolution proposed by the latter exempting UN peacekeepers from each jurisdiction of any international tribunal including the International Criminal Court and what steps the UK Government are taking to ensure that UN peacekeepers will not be exempt form the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court; [66228]

(2) what representations the UK Government are making to the USA about the latter's continued commitment to its global peacekeeping and enforcement activities and the basis upon which such commitments are carried out. [66229]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has been in close touch with his US counterpart on the draft Security Council resolution renewing the mandate for UNMIBH/SFOR peacekeeping forces in Bosnia.

The Government are committed to an effective International Criminal Court. We understand US concerns for their peacekeepers but do not share them. We are working with the US and other UN Security Council Members to achieve a solution acceptable to Security Council Members which will enable the US to continue to participate in international peacekeeping.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Entertainment Costs

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the cost was of the Department's 2001 staff Christmas Party; and how many people attended. [61651]

Mr. Morley: The Department did not hold a party for staff at Christmas 2001.

EU Management Committee

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee on the supply of agricultural products to the population of the former Soviet Union is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64901]

Mr. Morley: The Department has no record of such a committee.

Environment Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the outcome was of the Environment Council on 25 June;

what the Government's stance was on each issue discussed, including its voting record; and if she will make a statement. [65276]

Margaret Beckett: I represented the UK at Environment Council on 25 June, accompanied by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Environment. The Council made real progress on a range of important issues.

The Council approved a Decision, on behalf of the European Community, to ratify the Cartagena Protocol on Biosafety. The UK supported Community ratification of this important instrument. The Protocol establishes clear and specific international rules on the import and export of genetically modified organisms (GMOs): prompt ratification by the EU will help secure its entry into force.

Council Conclusions were adopted paving the way for a thematic strategy on the sustainable use of soil. The UK supported the Conclusions, which invite the Commission to produce a Community Strategy and, where appropriate, general principles for assessing and managing threats to soil but, with France, Austria and Denmark, made a written declaration on the importance of respecting and subsidiarity principle.

Conclusions were also adopted emphasising the need to take measures to halt biodiversity loss by 2010, and welcoming the outcome of the Sixth Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity and the Ministerial Declaration made there. The Conclusions also suggested next steps in the implementation of the Habitats Directive and management of the Natura 2000 network.

Brief Council Conclusions were adopted on progress on ratification of the Kyoto Protocol. These expressed disappointment at Australia's recent withdrawal from the Protocol and urged other parties who have not yet done so to ratify as soon as possible.

Ministers held general orientation debates on three subjects: the proposed amendments to the Packaging and Packaging Waste Directive recovery and recycling targets, the proposed revision of the Seveso II Directive, and a proposed Environmental Liability Directive.

On packaging and packaging waste, the UK intervened in support of a compromise Presidency text and registered a Parliamentary Scrutiny reserve. The compromise text maintains the Commission's minimum overall targets, and broadly maintains their proposed material specific targets (plastic recycling target increased to 22.5 per cent), but extends the deadline for Member States to meet those targets from 2006 and 2008 and removes the maximum target for recovery. The European Parliament first reading is expected to be in September, and so Council is likely to agree a Common Position in October.

Member States, including the UK, supported the Presidency compromise text on proposed amendments to the Seveso II Directive. The Directive aims to prevent major accidents involving dangerous substances. The proposed amendments would alter the classification system for explosives, change threshold quantities for substances dangerous to the environment, and for carcinogens, and add new named carcinogens to those already listed in the Directive. France proposed lower thresholds for reject ammonium nitrate, following an accident at Toulouse in September 2001 when a quantity of ammonium nitrate exploded. This change was agreed with UK support. Again following the European Parliament first reading in early July, the Council is likely to agree a Common Position in October.

During the debate on environmental liability, Ministers focused on the issues of financial security and subsidiary responsibility. The UK intervened arguing that subsidiary responsibility was not consistent with the polluter pays principle and that the Council should not make a decision on the appropriate system of financial security until the precise scope of the Directive was clear. The Presidency concluded that Member States were divided on these issues but that a majority favoured both some form of compulsory financial security and some form of subsidiary responsibility for Member States.

The Council took note of COREPER's conclusions in support for Environment Council in its contributions on follow-up to the EU Sustainable Development Strategy, including if necessary the establishment of a group of high-level officials, and on co-ordination between the sectors concerned by sustainable development.

The Presidency gave a progress report on the proposed emissions trading Directive and invited views. The UK expressed support for a Community emissions trading scheme. The Presidency also updated Council on a proposal for a Regulation concerning traceability and labelling of genetically modified organisms (GMOs), and on the Decision to ratify the Rotterdam Convention on the Prior Informed Consent Procedure (PIC) for Certain Hazardous Chemicals and Pesticides in International Trade, and its associated implementing Regulation.

Under Any Other Business, Sweden drew the Council's attention to the progress made by industry in developing technology to reduce emissions from diesel cars and suggested that community rules needed revising to reflect this. Portugal presented its national strategy for Sustainable Development. The Netherlands called for a proposal accelerating the phase out of Chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs). Germany raised the issue of co-existence of GMO and conventional crops. Belgium asked the Commission for an update on the forthcoming white Paper in Integrated Product Policy. The UK asked whether the Commission has decided on its intended legislative approach for Fluorinated gases. The Commission replied that it was still considering various options for legislation, and would make a proposal by the end of 2002.

Bovine TB

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the cost has been so far to her Department of compensating farmers for losses due to the deaths of bovine TB infected cattle. [65689]

Mr. Morley: From the beginning of 1997 until the end of 2001, a total of £26,144,176 has been paid out to farmers for cattle slaughtered under TB control measures.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what interim measures are being undertaken to provide farmers with financial and other support whilst awaiting bovine TB trial results. [65688]

Mr. Morley: The Government recognise the economic difficulties that farmers face from the disclosure of bovine tuberculosis in their herds, and from the imposition of movement restrictions by the State Veterinary Service. In accordance with the recommendation of the Agriculture Select Committee, officials are currently considering potential future strategy options, including measures to alleviate economic difficulties faced by those under movement restrictions. Consultation with stakeholders (including farmers' union) have started.

CAP Underspend

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total CAP underspend was in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement. [66513]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Expenditure on the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) is made in accordance with the EU regulations. Actual CAP expenditure may be higher or lower than forecast at the beginning of each budgetary year, due to the market situation, exchange rate fluctuations, or exceptional items. Surplus from one year's EC Budget is returned to Member States in the following year's Budget by means of a reduction of the amount to be financed from own resources. This has the effect of reducing the amount each Member State is required to pay from the GNP-based resource. The budget process requires the Commission to estimate the level of expenditure necessary in a particular year. It would be misleading to describe a difference between the estimate and outturn expenditure as an "underspend". Information on the implementation of the budget is available from the House of Commons Library in the Annual Reports of the Court of Auditors.

Farms

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many farms there were in England in each reporting period from 1979–80 to 2002; and if she will make a statement. [66278]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The number of main holdings included in the overall Agricultural and Horticultural Census results (following the periodic reclassification between main and minor holdings) were:

Number of Holdings

Year	Number
1980	155,688
1985	153,766
1990	150,652
1995	146,112
2000	146,347
2001	159,417

Notes:

1. Holdings in the census have been classified as main and minor. Main holdings are included for selection in the annual census (since 1995 this has been on a sample basis). Minor holdings are only surveyed once every five years following which a review of the classification between main and minor takes place. New holdings are counted as main holdings until the next reclassification exercise.
2. Additional holdings from a significant register updating exercise were identified in 2000 and first included in 2001.
3. The figures for June 2002 Census are still being processed. From this year the distinction between main and minor is being dropped.
4. Holdings may not relate to individual farms. A single business may consist of several holdings.

Grasslands

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the reasons why the conditions of (a) lowland and upland calcareous grassland, (b) upland acid grassland, (c) upland heathland and (d) bogs in England are generally unfavourable; and what measures she is taking to improve them. [66779]

Alun Michael: The information sought is not available.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will publish figures on the number of appeals against slaughter during the 2001 foot-and-mouth outbreak, including how many were upheld and how many of the total appeals were against contiguous culls. [68297]

Mr. Morley: In total there were 584 appeals against slaughter, all but four were dealt with by the local DEFRA Divisional Veterinary Manager. Of the 584 cases where animal owners challenged decisions to slaughter livestock, 534 were appealing against contiguous culls. In total, 376 appeals were upheld, 336 of which were appeals against contiguous culls.

The above figures include the four appeals heard in court of which three were against contiguous culls. Two of the four were upheld; one was an appeal against a dangerous contact cull and the other was against a contiguous cull. The successful appeal against a contiguous cull subsequently became an infected premises.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the outcome was of the Agriculture Council held on 27 June; what the Government's stance was on each issue discussed, including its voting record; and if she will make a statement. [67730]

Margaret Beckett: I represented the United Kingdom at the Agriculture Council meeting in Luxembourg on 27 June 2002.

The Council received progress reports on Commission proposals concerning the control of zoonoses and a common market organisation for ethyl alcohol, and reached provisional political agreement on a proposed framework regulation laying down general food hygiene rules. It noted there was no qualified majority support for or against a proposal to register "feta" as a protected legislation of origin. Under the relevant procedures, this means the Commission will be able to adopt the measure under its own powers in due course.

During a brief discussion of BSE, Commissioner Byrne called on the French Government to comply with the ECJ's ruling on its illegal ban on British beef exports. The French Minister announced their intention to defer implementation of their national rules banning spinal cord from sheep over six months old until January 2003. I subsequently followed up both these points bilaterally with my French counterpart.

The Council discussed Presidency papers on the future of the EU's Veterinary Fund, the CAP fruit and vegetables regime and the use of agricultural insurance as a risk management tool. It also received a presentation from Commissioner Fischler on the medium term prospects for the main EU agricultural markets, in advance of his proposals for CAP Reform, which are expected on 10 July.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

"Making Decisions"

Mr. Drew: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the response of organisations to the Consultation Paper, "Making Decisions"; and if he will list those that (a) supported the principle of doctors being able to withhold food and fluid from patients and (b) those that did not. [67249]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Consultation Paper "Making Decisions: Helping People who have Difficulty Deciding for Themselves" seeks responses by 9 July 2002. Following the closure of the consultation period, all responses received will be thoroughly considered and will inform the final published version of the guidance leaflets. I will make a statement on responses to the Consultation in due course.

Edward VIII

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what recent guidance she has given to individual departments concerning the public release of documents relating to Edward VIII; and if he will make a statement. [66720]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Individual Government Departments are responsible for re-reviewing remaining closed records relating to King Edward VIII in line with the standard criteria for extended closure from the Open Government White Paper (1993). General guidance on access to records relating to the Royal Family was issued jointly by the Cabinet Office and Public Record Office in September 2001 and is available on the PRO website at: www.pro.gov.uk/recordsmanagement/access.

Norwich Airport

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the planning process being undertaken on land development around Norwich Airport. [61769]

Mr. McNulty: Development opportunities at and around Norwich Airport are identified in the City of Norwich Local Plan. The City Council has made proposals to replace this plan. The Secretary of State for Transport, Local Government and the Regions assessed this replacement plan against Government policy in the summer of 2001 and submitted various representations. The replacement local plan proposes to allow Norwich Airport to continue to develop as a regional airport of significant importance to the local economy. The Secretary of State did not submit any representations on the proposals for Norwich Airport in the initial deposit version of the local plan. When the revised version of the local plan is published later this year I will carefully assess any changes made to the plan.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Building Regulations

Mr. Anthony D. Wright: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects to publish the revisions to Part E of the Building Regulations; and if he will make a statement. [68178]

Mr. Leslie: Part E of the Building Regulations sets standards for the sound insulation between new homes. I propose to publish amendments to part E of the Regulations and the supporting documents in the autumn of this year. There will be a requirement in the regulations for testing the sound insulation of a sample of new homes on each site.

The requirement for sound insulation testing will apply to houses, flats, hostel and hotel accommodation, whether purpose built or formed by conversion of other types of building. For new hostel and hotel types of accommodation, and houses, flats, hostel and hotel accommodation formed by conversion of other types of building, I anticipate that the requirement will come into force on 1 July 2003. For new houses and flats only, I anticipate that it will come into force on 1 January 2004.

The reason for this later date is that I have asked the House Builders Federation to develop Robust Standard Details for the sound insulation of separating walls and floors for use in new houses and flats. These Robust Standard Details must provide consistently good performance, and so will not need routine testing.

Officials and the Building Regulations Advisory Committee will assess whether the House Builders Federation has achieved this objective. If satisfied that this scheme might work successfully, then I will put the proposals out to public consultation. If this does not raise any unforeseen issues, I would intend to amend the Regulations to allow Robust Standard Details to be used as an alternative to testing. Otherwise, I anticipate that testing will be introduced on 1 January 2004.

Mindful of the need not to overburden business with unnecessary administration, we want to give the construction industry a chance to prove that their preferred system will work. However, we are not prepared to compromise on consumer issues. If Robust Standard Details do not prove effective, testing will be introduced.

The consultation on Part E also included a proposal to transfer the protection of new housing from external noise from the Town and Country Planning System to the Building Regulations system. We have decided not to proceed with the proposal as part of this amendment. However, we are continuing to explore whether we should pursue this at a later date.

Firefighters

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on pay negotiations for firefighters. [67531]

Mr. Leslie: The Government have no statutory role in determining firefighters' pay. Representatives from local government, representing the employers, and from the Fire Brigades Union, representing employees, are responsible for negotiating firefighters' pay and conditions of service. These groups meet in the National Joint Council for Local Authorities' Fire Brigades. We understand that the two sides are currently in discussion on the Fire Brigades Union pay claim, which was formally tabled on 28 May.

Rate Support Grant

Chris Grayling: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his policy is on the future of NDR and rate support grant. [65673]

Mr. Raynsford: In the draft local government Bill, we have set out our proposals to provide general grant support to local authorities through a single grant stream, to be known as Formula Grant, instead separate support streams comprising redistributed national non-domestic rates (NNDR) and Revenue Support Grant (RSG).

We believe that this will simplify the grant distribution system, so making it more intelligent and transparent.

The proposed merger would have no effect on the collection of business rates or on the total amount being redistributed. Neither would it reduce accountability, as we would continue to publish details of the total amount of business rates being redistributed and to maintain the existing formal accounts covering receipts and payments.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to review the Barnett Formula for local authority finance; and if he will make a statement. [67441]

Mr. Raynsford: Mechanisms for the allocations of public expenditure are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. He has made it clear on several occasions that the Government have no plans to review the Barnett Formula, which in any case applies to allocations to the devolved administrations, not to English local authorities.

Empty Homes

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what estimate he has made of the amount of empty social housing in England in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement; [65851]

(2) what estimate he has made of how many homes were lying empty in England in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [65854]

Mr. Raynsford: The total number of vacant dwellings in England on 1 April in each of the last five years is presented in the table, along with the number that were owned by social landlords.

Number of vacant dwellings in England at 1 April

Year	Total vacant housing	of which: Social Housing
2001	755,100	121,600
2000	760,500	124,700
1999	767,000	116,600
1998	753,300	110,900
1997	767,200	107,900

New Housing

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what progress has been made on achieving the Government's target for constructing new housing on previously used land; and if he will make a statement. [65858]

Mr. McNulty: In 2001 an estimated 61 per cent. of new dwellings were provided on previously-developed land. This includes new dwellings provided from the conversion of existing buildings, which account for three percentage points. The Government's target is that by 2008, 60 per cent of additional housing should be provided on previously-developed land and through conversions of existing buildings.

Regional Assemblies

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans the Government have to review regional boundaries in areas which reject a directly elected regional assembly based on the regions set out in the Governments Regional Government White Paper; and if he will make a statement. [67453]

Mr. Raynsford: Our proposals for the boundaries of elected regional assemblies are set out in chapter 6 of the Regional Governance White Paper, Your Region, Your Choice.

Local Government White Paper

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects that the provisions contained in the Local Government White Paper will be implemented; and if he will make a statement. [65862]

Mr. Raynsford: We published an implementation plan in April which sets out the planned dates for delivering the key proposals in the White Paper and which is updated monthly. It is available on the Department's web site. We continue to make good progress, with a draft Local Government Bill published for consultation on 12 June which takes forward a number of the proposals included in the White Paper.

Local Authority Public Services

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what progress has been made on achieving the Government's objective of putting all local authority public services online by 2005; and if he will make a statement. [65865]

Mr. Raynsford: All local authorities (bar one) in England responded in July 2001 to the invitation to prepare and submit Implementing e-Government Statements. These are corporate plans focus how each authority approaching the task of e-enabling their services.

Local government's self-assessment, as reported in their statements, of the average availability of electronic services as at July 2001 was at 29 per cent against the National Target (all services e-enabled by end of 2005). On the basis of these statements we expect local authorities to reach 45 per cent by March 2003, 73 per cent by March 2004 and 100 per cent by 2005.

In April we published for consultation a draft National Strategy (e-gov@local: towards a national strategy for local e-government) that seeks to clarify a common and ambitious vision of local e-government and promote its delivery. We are also providing £350 million (over three years from 2001–02) of investment to promote its e-delivery in local government, which includes:

£160 million over the next two years to local authorities (ie £400k each) to support the implementation of their local strategies.

A further £75 million over the same period will be made available to partnerships of councils working together and with other local public service bodies. This will encourage local economies of scale and joined-up local services.

Up to £80 million over the next two years will be spent in creating generic e-government solutions—based on best practice—around key technologies (such as smartcards and websites) and priority services (such as online school admissions, planning applications) which can be made available to all authorities. Thereby helping to speed up the introduction of e-government and reducing the gross investment costs to the public purse.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fireworks

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of state for Northern Ireland if he will consult (a) the Northern Ireland Fireworks Association and (b) other interested parties before proceeding with the Explosives (Fireworks) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2002. [54118]

Jane Kennedy: The Explosives (Fireworks) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2002 came into effect on 6 May.

Representatives for the fireworks industry in Northern Ireland were afforded an opportunity to put forward their views on the problem of fireworks misuse in February when they met with officials from my Department. In addition I received written representations from, among others, MLAs, local councils and members of the public and I considered carefully every representation before deciding that prohibiting the purchase, possession, sale and use of garden fireworks except under licence would be the most effective first step in addressing the problems of fireworks misuse.

Weston Park Talks

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will appoint the international judge to address the six issues of concern identified in the July 2001 Weston Park talks. [56651]

Jane Kennedy: On 29 May 2002 the British and Irish Governments announced the appointment of the Honourable Mr Justice Peter deCarteret Cory, a retired member of the Supreme Court in Canada, to conduct the investigation of allegations of collusion. This follows the commitment made by two Governments following the Weston Park talks last summer to appoint a judge of international standing from outside both jurisdictions to undertake a thorough investigation of allegations of collusion in the cases, of the murders of Chief Superintendent Harry Breen and Superintendent Bob Buchanan, Pat Finucane, Lord Justice and Lady Gibson, Robert Hamill, Rosemary Nelson and Billy Wright.

Devolution

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) units and (b) programmes he has established to develop the work of his Department since devolution; what units and programmes (i) ceased and (ii) began to be run down after devolution; and what functional units and programmes continue. [60851]

Jane Kennedy: Devolution did not significantly change the functions of the Northern Ireland Office, since the responsibilities transferred on 2 December 1999 were already managed by the separate Northern Ireland departments. The duties of the Secretary of State and his ministerial colleagues were, however, substantially reduced and private offices have been streamlined accordingly. In addition teams established to provide support for the Talks process and for the enactment of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 have been wound up. New teams have been established to take forward work on policing, criminal justice and prisons issues. A full description of the ongoing work of the Northern Ireland Office is given in the Department Report, published on 14 June (CM 5432).

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many statutory instruments have been (a) introduced, (b) removed and (c) amended by his Department since 1 January; and what the (i) cost and (ii) saving has been in each case. [64628]

Jane Kennedy: The Northern Ireland Office has introduced one Statutory Instrument since January 2001; the Criminal Injuries Compensation (NI) Order was introduced on 1 May 2002.

The approximate spend to March 2002 is £1,700,000, the forecast cost is expected to be around £1,900,000. This figure includes approximately £900,000 for the computer system for Compensation Agency to support the Tariff scheme. It must be note that a part of this system was to be introduced in the Compensation Agency anyway.

As the Order has only recently been introduced, it is too early to provide any figure relating to savings on the compensation budget.

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the EU directives relating to his Department which have been (a) amended and (b) repealed in 2002. [64947]

Jane Kennedy: There have been no EU directives amended or repealed in 2002 relating to the Northern Ireland Office.

Policing Board

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) pursuant to his answer of 17 June 2002, Official Report, column 66W, how many meetings of the (a) Policing Board, (b) Policing Board committees and (c) Policing Board sub-committees each member attended (i) for the full duration and (ii) for part of the meeting; [64551]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 17 June 2002, Official Report, column 66W, if he will list the attendance records for (a) elected and (b) non-elected members of the Police Board of Northern Ireland at Policing Board sub-committee meetings since the Board went live. [64552]

Jane Kennedy: As the Policing Board is a non-departmental public body, I would invite the hon. Member to write to the Chairman of the Policing Board seeking the information that she requires.

Performance Targets

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what has been the (a) cost and (b) saving from the pursuit of the Department's Public Service Agreement targets in each year since they were introduced; [61044]

(2) what the (a) cost and (b) saving has been from the Department's pursuit of Service Delivery Agreement targets in each year since they were introduced. [61640]

Jane Kennedy: The Northern Ireland Office's Public Service Agreement (PSA) was first published in October 2000 to cover the three-year period 2001–02 to 2003–04. As the PSA targets effectively embrace virtually all of our departmental activities the cost of seeking to meet our PSA objectives is essentially the same as our total departmental expenditure. For 2001–02 (the first year of our PSA) this is currently estimated at £1,052 billion.

The efficiency elements within our current PSA are already reflected in the profiling of the budget set for the Department whereby anticipated reductions in spending in one area are redirected to offset emerging pressures in other areas.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how much and what proportion of the Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2002–03 had been spent by 31 May; what the figures were for 2001–02; and if he will make a statement; [61003]

(2) how much and what proportion of his 2002–03 Departmental Expenditure Limit has been spent by 31 May; what the figures were for 2001–02; and if he will make statement. [61744]

Jane Kennedy: The details of the Departmental Expenditure Limit for 2001–02 and 2002–03, and the proportion of spend to 31 May is as follows:

2001–02
DEL (Resource)	£1,056,836,000
Spend at 31 May	£217,655,000
Proportion	20.5%
2002–03
DEL (Resource)	£1,092,309,000
Spend at 31 May	This information is not yet available

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much and what proportion of the departmental expenditure limit for 2002–03 will be accounted for by staff costs; what the figures were for 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [61033]

Jane Kennedy: Details of staff costs as a percentage of Departmental Expenditure Limit:

2001–02
Total DEL	£1,056,836,000 (Resource DEL, excluding Capital)
Staff costs	£115,483,000*
Proportion	10.9%
2002–03
Total DEL	£1,092,309,000 (Resource DEL, excluding Capital)
Staff costs	£120,295,000
Proportion	11%

* (Please note that this figure is provisional only, at this stage. Final outturn figures for the 2001–02 financial year are not yet available.)

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Military Training Budgets

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the budgets for the training of military and security personnel from overseas (a) in the UK and (b) overseas for (i) each of the past two years, (ii) the current year and (iii) future years for which estimates are available. [65261]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Funding for the training of military and security personnel (including police forces, customs and border guards) from overseas comes from a variety of FCO departmental budgets. It supports FCO objectives such as promoting international peace and stability, and improved quality of life world-wide through good governance and crime reduction. A breakdown of approximate expenditure as requested by financial year (f/y) is:

	F/y 2000–01	F/y 2001–02	F/y 2002–03
UK training	2,964,040	671,829	157,431
Overseas training	5,676,188	4,690,909	4,890,181

Future estimates are not yet available.

The reduction of FCO expenditure in f/ys 2001–02 and 2002–03 does not reflect a reduction in activity. It is because the FCO contributed a large part of its military and security training funding to the two cross-departmental Conflict Prevention Pools (involving FCO, MOD, DfID and HMT) established in April 2001 for Africa and the rest of the world. Each of the four Government Departments made a contribution to the pools. Many of the training activities continue to be supported by the pools because they achieve HMG's conflict prevention objectives overseas. In f/y 2001–02, the Africa Pool had a budget of £50 million and this will remain the same through to f/y 2003–04. The Global Pool was allocated £60 million for f/y 2001–02, £66 million for this financial year and will have £76 million to spend in f/y 2003–04.

Information on the FCO's ASSIST training budget f/y 2000–01, which was the principle contribution to the pools is available from an earlier answer given by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Bradshaw) to my hon. Friend the Member for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross) on 10 January 2002, Official Report, column 957W.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many members of his Department have been employed in its regulatory impact unit in the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [65968]

Mr. Straw: As a non-regulatory Department, the FCO does not have a dedicated regulatory impact unit. Since 1997 issues relating to regulatory impact have been dealt with by a member of FCO staff as part of his overall duties.

Visa Applications

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Egyptian students seeking to enter the UK on medical grounds have been refused visas in the past year; and if he will make a statement. [65234]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 3 July 2002]: We do not maintain statistics on the number of entry clearance applications received, granted or refused on the basis of seeking to enter the UK on medical grounds. Nor do we at present maintain statistics on the nationality of applicants, although we are currently looking at ways of improving our information technology to enable us to do so.

Export Licences

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how the Government consider applications for export licences for the supply of military equipment for incorporation into final products for possible onward export; and if he will make a statement. [67534]

Mr. Straw: In recent years there have been far reaching changes in the defence industry in the United Kingdom, the rest of Europe and the United States. Against the background of the end of the Cold War and the resulting reduction in defence budgets world wide, the defence industry has been subject to massive rationalisation. One consequence of this change is that increasingly defence goods are manufactured from components sourced in several different countries.

This restructuring of the defence industry presents new challenges for the Government's approach to export licensing. Many export licence applications are for goods which are to be incorporated in defence equipment in a second country, which thereafter may be exported to a third country.

The Consolidated EU and National Arms Export Licensing Criteria set out in a statement by my right hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), Official Report, column 199–203W on 26 October 2000, make clear that they "will not be applied mechanistically" to decisions on export licence applications, but rather "on a case-by-case basis, using judgment and common sense". The criteria do not provide specific guidance on what approach should be adopted in these "incorporation" cases.

Other EU and NATO member states face the same rapidly changing environment for their defence industries as the UK. Enquiries by Her Majesty's Government suggest, however, that while as yet there is no common policy in such cases, many of our European partners recognise the need to adopt a special approach towards cases involving incorporation for onward export.

After very careful consideration, Her Majesty's Government have, therefore, decided that it is necessary to set out how it will in future approach licence applications for goods where it is understood that the goods are to be incorporated into products for onward export. The Government will continue to assess such applications on a case by case basis against the Consolidated Criteria, while at the same time having regard to, inter alia, the following factors:

(a) the export control policies and effectiveness of the export control system of the incorporating country;

(b) the importance of the UK's defence and security relationship with the incorporating country;

(c) the materiality and significance of the UK-origin goods in relation to the goods into which they are to be incorporated, and in relation to any end-use of the finished products which might give rise to concern;

(d) the ease with which the UK-origin goods, or significant parts of them, could be removed from the goods into which they are to be incorporated; and

(e) the standing of the entity to which the goods are to be exported.

Against this background the Government have considered its response to a number of applications for the export of parts, subsystems and components to the USA for incorporation into equipment eventually destined for other countries. These include Head Up Display units (HUDs) for incorporation in F-16 aircraft scheduled for delivery to Israel in 2003. The UK content in F-16s is less than 1 per cent. in value, but the supply of HUDs is part of a long-standing collaboration in this US programme. Any interruption to the supply of these components would have serious implications for the UK's defence relations with the United States.

The Government continue to be seriously concerned about the situation in Israel and the Occupied Territories. There has to be a break to the cycle of violence, which has brought so much misery to both peoples, and a resumption of the peace process. We are working closely with partners including the US to reduce the level of tension and to bring about a sustainable and peaceful settlement through negotiation.

The United States Government maintains a strong and effective export licensing system. The Quadripartite Committee has noted that the United States' conventional arms transfer policy

> "does not appear to differ in any important way from the EU Code or the UK national criteria. In some respects . . . it is an improvement"

(HC 467 xxix 73 (25 July 2000)). Appropriate use of arms exported to Israel by the US is the subject of regular dialogue between the two countries, and when the US have concerns they make these known to the Israelis (as required by Congressional legislation). The State Department has been monitoring Israeli actions carefully and will continue to do so.

At the same time the Government carefully take into account the importance of maintaining a strong and dynamic defence relationship with the US. This relationship is fundamental to the UK's national security as well as to our ability to play a strong and effective role in the world. The importance of this role has been demonstrated repeatedly in recent months. There are also wider benefits to the UK's national security of maintaining a strong indigenous defence industrial capability.

Taking account of all these considerations, the Government considered that the applications should be approved, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has today granted licences for the export of the HUDs, and other equipment to the USA. The Government will apply similar considerations to similar applications in future.

European Foreign Ministers

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what issues will be discussed at the forthcoming meeting of European Foreign Ministers; and when it is. [67124]

Peter Hain: The General Affairs Council meets on 22–23 July.

The provisional agenda proposed by the presidency includes, under Horizontal Affairs: the work programme for the presidency and for the Commission; progress of work in other council configurations; enlargement; follow-up to the European Council in Seville: and follow-up to the EU Action Plan on terrorism. Under External Affairs the Council is expected to discuss: the EU's priorities in the area of conflict prevention; the middle east; western Balkans; Zimbabwe; EU-US trade (steel); preparation of the World Summit on Sustainable Development; Afghanistan and ESDP.

Gibraltar

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what grounds it was decided not to hand out leaflets on Gibraltar during the overseas territories exhibition organised by his Office on Britain's overseas territories; and who took the decision. [67218]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 5 July 2002]: No such decision was taken. An updated information leaflet on Gibraltar was prepared specially for the event, and was inserted into all the packs prepared before the event. These packs ran out on the day, due to high demand. Additional packs were prepared but, due to an oversight, these were given out for a short period without Gibraltar leaflets. This situation was quickly corrected.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's policy is on the status of joint proposals agreed by the United Kingdom and Spain on the future of Gibraltar, should they be rejected by the people of Gibraltar in a referendum; if such proposals would form the basis of future negotiations; and if he will make a statement. [67559]

Peter Hain [holding answer 5 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 2 July 2002, Official Report, column 276W. As I said in Westminster Hall on 18 June 2002, Official Report, column 38WH, no deal will be implemented unless the people of Gibraltar agree in a referendum.

Bermuda Boundaries Commission

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the Bermuda Boundaries Commission and related supporting written submissions. [67254]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Boundaries Commission has not yet produced its report. When it does appear, a copy will be placed in Libraries of both Houses.

International Criminal Court

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries that (a) have signed the accession treaty to the International Criminal Court, (b) are expected to sign and (c) have deposited the instruments of ratification, giving the date of ratification in each case; and which of the non-ratificants have indicated that they may withhold their ratification. [67475]

Mr. Straw: Following is a table of countries which have signed, ratified or acceded to the Rome statute, containing relevant dates. I have no specific information about countries expected to sign up to the statute; however, there have been eight ratifications in the last month, bringing the total to 75.

We are not systematically informed of countries' intentions to withhold ratification. However, on 6 May 2002, the United States declared its intention not to become a party. On 30 June the Israeli cabinet announced that it too would withhold ratification.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects Afghanistan to ratify the International Criminal Court treaty. [67474]

Mr. Straw: This issue of when Afghanistan might ratify the Statute establishing the International Criminal Court is a matter for the Government of Afghanistan. I have no specific information on their approach/timetable, but I will make inquiries and write to the hon. Member.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

HM Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what costs were borne by the House in respect of the funeral of HM Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother. [65256]

Mr. Kirkwood: The costs for the lying in state of HM the Queen Mother will be shared between the House of Commons and the House of Lords. The Commons share is estimated at £495,000. I understand that the Department of Culture, Media and Sport have agreed to bear at least part of this cost, and discussions about payment are under way.

WALES

Postal Services

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will next meet representatives from Consignia to discuss postal services in Wales. [63497]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I am due to meet with a senior representative of Consignia in Wales later this month.

Air Transport

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with (a) the National Assembly for Wales and (b) airlines about increasing the number of chartered flights in Wales. [64542]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I have regular discussions with Assembly Ministers about issues affecting Wales including a wide range of transport matters.

Assembly officials have been closely involved in the Regional Air Service studies the reports of which are to be published soon. These regional consultation documents will set out options for the development of air services and airports in the UK over the next 30 years.

The Regional Air Service studies include consideration of all forms of air traffic including charter flights. I understand that Welsh airports are actively marketing the facilities they are able to offer to charter operators.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many members of his Department have been employed in its regulatory impact unit in the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [65977]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My Department was created in July 1999. It does not have a regulatory impact unit.

Buildings Insurance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the cost of buildings insurance to his Department was (a) before and (b) after 11 September 2001. [66928]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Consistent with Government accounting, my Department does not insure its building.

Female Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the staff of his Department are women; and what the percentage was in June 1997. [66917]

Mr. Paul Murphy: My Department came into existence on 1 July 1999. At page 23 of the Departmental Report 2002 (Cm 5431) is a table showing the number of women at each grade. The overall percentage is 59 per cent.

Elan Valley SSSI

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures the Government are taking to protect the Elan Valley site of special scientific interest from development. [64707]

Mr. Paul Murphy: In Wales, planning and nature conservation are responsibilities of the National Assembly.

Bird Habitats

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to safeguard the natural habitat of red kites and golden plovers in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [64706]

Mr. Paul Murphy: This is primarily a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

In line with EC Directive (79/409/EEC) on the Conservation of Wild Birds, the Assembly is taking appropriate steps to preserve, maintain or re-establish a sufficient diversity and area of habitats for all species of naturally occurring birds.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Public Building Design

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what the timetable is for the publication of each of the departmental design action plans to deliver the Prime Minister's Better Public Building Initiative; [65068]

(2) if she will list the Ministerial Design Champions. [65041]

Dr. Howells: The Ministerial Design Champions group has been chaired by Lord Falconer of Thoroton since October 2000. The group consists of the following:

Department for Culture, Media and Sport—Baroness Blackstone

Home Office—Lord Filkin

Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs—Elliot Morley

Department of Trade and Industry—Brian Wilson

Treasury—Paul Boateng

Ministry of Defence—Dr. Lewis Moonie

Department for Work and Pensions—Malcolm Wicks

Department for Education and Skills—Baroness Ashton

Lord Chancellor's Department—Minister to be appointed

Department of Health—Lord Hunt

Foreign and Commonwealth Office—Denis MacShane

Office of the Deputy Prime Minister—Lord Rooker

Department for Transport—Minister to be appointed.

A Better Public Buildings website will be launched on 5 July. The following Departments will publish their action plans either on this website or in hard copy by that date:

Department for Culture, Media and Sport

Department for Work and Pensions

Foreign and Commonwealth Office

Department of Trade and Industry

Lord Chancellor's Department

Home Office.

The following Departments have already published action plans:

Ministry of Defence

Department of Health

Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs.

The former Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions was preparing an action plan for publication both in hard copy and on the new website in time for the launch on 5 July. Due to the recent departmental changes, new action plans will now need to be prepared for the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Department for Transport. The Department for Education and Skills plan to publish an Action Plan later this autumn.

Building Values

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the buildings owned by her Department and estimate the market value of each of them. [66949]

Dr. Howells: The Department for Culture Media and Sport does not own the buildings on its estate.

The majority of properties managed by the Royal Parks Agency are owned by the Sovereign in right of the Crown, and are therefore inalienable.

The Secretary of State has the following property interests in the Royal Parks Agency.

1. Pembroke Lodge in Richmond Park is owned by the Crown Estate Commissioners and is leased to the Secretary of State for a term of 99 years and five days from 31 March 1992. Its market value was assessed at £375,000 in March 2000.
2. The Secretary of State owns the freehold to Watermill House, 213 Uxbridge Road, Hampton. It borders the Longford River (which is managed by the Royal Parks Agency) and its market value was assessed at £67,000 in March 1999.

Buildings Insurance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the cost of buildings insurance to her Department was (a) before and (b) after 11 September 2001. [66931]

Dr. Howells: The Department for Culture Media and Sport and the Royal Parks Agency do not purchase insurance to cover buildings on their estates.

Clarence House

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport who will meet the bill for the refurbishment of Clarence House; and what the total cost will be to public funds. [66690]

Dr. Howells: Detailed surveys are currently taking place to ascertain the extent of the Clarence House refurbishment works, which include work on fire compartmentation, automatic fire detection, upgrade of electrical and mechanical services and some redecoration. It is not possible to provide a firm estimate of the cost of the refurbishment until the completion of these surveys. The refurbishment will be funded from the current level of grant in aid for the maintenance of the Occupied Royal Palaces.

Statistics

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the statistics that are collected by her Department by English parliamentary constituency; and if she will make a statement. [67098]

Dr. Howells: My Department collects statistics by Parliamentary Constituency on one topic, namely Lottery Awards, and these are based upon information provided by Lottery distributors.

A database, which is available on my Department's website at www.lottery.culture.gov.uk, provides details of individual awards along with the total number and value. This can be analysed further by type of good cause, area details and distributing body.

Timber

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport whether grants for construction, restoration and refurbishment issued by the Lottery are covered by Government requirements regarding timber procurement; and if she will make a statement. [67033]

Mr. Caborn: This information is not readily available. I will, however, write to the hon. Member as soon as it becomes available, placing copies of my letter in the Libraries of both Houses.

Charitable Status

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if she will make a statement on the proposals of the Charity Commissioners to restrict eligibility for charitable status to those sports that in the opinion of the Charity Commissioners are beneficial to physical health; and what discussions her Department has had with the Charity Commissioners over the criteria they are using to determine the eligibility of different sports for charitable status; [67081]

(2) whether her Department has discussed with the Charity Commissioners the recognition for the purposes of charitable status of those sports already recognised by the Government through Sport England and Sport UK as eligible for Lottery and Exchequer funding; and if she will make a statement. [67082]

Mr. Caborn: The Charity Commission has confirmed that no sports are excluded in principle from applying for charitable status. If a sport does not meet the criterion for healthy recreation then the Commission will consider an application on other grounds such as social inclusion or education. Full discussion on the revised guidance for charitable status and sport was carried out with the Charity Commission and representatives from sports bodies.

Annual Leave

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the average annual leave entitlement is for staff in her Department in 2002. [64652]

Dr. Howells: The Department does not maintain central records of annual leave entitlement for staff so this information could be provided only at disproportionate costs.

Staff outside the senior civil service within the Department are entitled to 25 days annual leave per year on joining the civil service and after 10 years service this is then increased to 30 days per year. Members of the senior civil service are entitled to 30 days per year.

Female Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what percentage of the staff of her Department are women; and what the percentage was in June 1997. [66914]

Dr. Howells: The current percentage of women within the Department is 48 per cent. compared to 43 per cent. in June 1997.

National Insurance

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the cost to the tourist industry of the changes in the national insurance regime in the last budget. [67017]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) on 10 May 2002, Official Report, column 385W.

"All Our Futures: Creativity, Culture and Education"

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps she is taking to implement the recommendations of the report, "All Our Futures: Creativity, Culture and Education"; and if she will make a statement. [67156]

Dr. Howells: The National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education reported jointly to the Secretaries of State for Culture, Media and Sport and Education and Employment in 1999 via the report "All Our Futures". The report contained 59 detailed recommendations for action by a range of bodies including Government, schools and higher education institutions. My Department has worked closely with the Department for Education and Skills, and external partners, to implement the recommendations.

Some of the main steps taken so far include funding of £270 million for the introduction of the Music Standards Fund to protect and expand LEA music services; the establishment of Artsmark, a national awards scheme now in its second year which recognises schools which offer a wide range of arts provision; and the recent joint announcement of £130 million for the Space for Sport and Arts programme which will fund almost 300 primary schools nationwide to modernise or build new multi-use halls and sports facilities and new music and arts studios.

Other major initiatives in progress include the development of 16 Creative Partnerships pilots, with the aim of building long-term, sustainable relationships between creative professionals and schools. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority is undertaking a project focusing on pupils' creativity across the curriculum which will produce guidance for schools on ways to promote pupils' creativity.

Our Green Paper "Culture and Creativity—the Next Ten Years", published in March 2001, set out our overall vision for culture and creativity, and further underlined the importance we place on creativity and culture in education.

Broadband

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will publish her assessment of the benefits of access to broadband services for industries within her remit; and if she will make a statement. [61803]

Dr. Howells: The Government believe that the rapid roll-out and adoption of broadband across the UK is important to both their social and economic objectives. The Government and other organisations have conducted studies of the application of information and communication technology and e-commerce to business and small and medium enterprises which suggest that broadband has a range of benefits and that industries stand to gain from productivity improvements. However, an assessment of the specific benefits to each industry within DCMS' remit could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Regional Television

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans she has to take action to require the ITC to ensure that ITV companies in Scotland do not decrease the number of hours of regional programmes which they broadcast annually. [67089]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 5 July 2002]: On 27 May the Independent Television Commission (ITC) published the Charter for Broadcasting in the Nations and Regions, an agreement with the ITV companies to secure a sustainable future for regional programming. The charter includes commitments to guarantee out of London investment, improve scheduling of regional programming and strengthen local accountability. It also involves a greater standardisation of regional programme hours, and therefore some reduction in output that is less well funded and shown at the least accessible times. The ITC considers that the emphasis should be on quality rather than quantity and that the public interest is best served by better funded, more accessible programming. The Department has no plans to intervene.

Television Cricket

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will take measures to require future Ashes cricket series in Australia to be available on terrestrial television. [67247]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 5 July 2002]: The Government only intervene in the sports broadcasting market to ensure that all television licence holders have free-to-air access (on the BBC, the ITV Network or Channel 4) to those sporting occasions which are considered to have true national resonance. These events are listed under Part IV of the Broadcasting Act 1996. The list was revised and extended in 1998 and is kept under review.

Cricket test matches played in England and the final, semi-finals and matches involving Home Nations teams in the Cricket World cup are listed. Test matches played overseas are not listed because, while of great interest to cricket fans, they do not strike a chord with the general viewer in the same way as events which are listed.

Hockey

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she last attended a hockey match in her official capacity. [67938]

Tessa Jowell: I have not yet attended a hockey match in an official capacity, although I did attend an elite training session for hockey goalkeepers at the Summer Performance Camp at Loughborough University on 10 July 2001.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the levels of participation in hockey by persons from ethnic minority backgrounds; and if she will make a statement. [68004]

Mr. Caborn: The following figures show participation in hockey by ethnic breakdown.

Figures only cover affiliated clubs and are taken from an audit by the English Hockey Association.

Further breakdown by age would be available on request.

	Men	Women
White	29,701	22,412
Mixed	742	285
Asian/Asian British	1,414	149
Black/Black British	136	205
Chinese/Other	132	76
Total	32,125	23,127

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans she has to encourage the provision of astroturf hockey pitches. [67936]

Mr. Caborn: The Government recognise the value that synthetic turf pitches have in improving the opportunities to take part in a variety of outdoor sports, including hockey.

The Government support the provision of sport and leisure facilities, including astroturf hockey pitches, through various means including funding from the Sports Lottery Fund, administered by Sport England. The provision of astroturf hockey pitches is a matter for local authorities to consider, in the light of local needs and the appropriate mixture of public and private provision.

Sport England has worked with the English Hockey Association in the preparation of a facilities strategy. This strategy deals with the provision of new artificial pitches with particular reference to water-based pitches for performance hockey. The strategy makes recommendations for the number of artificial turf pitches by population base and identifies three categories of artificial pitch provision: regional academies; satellite centres; and premier club centres.

TRANSPORT

Trackside Debris

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what action he has taken in respect of reports of sleepers and other debris being left by contractors beside the main east coast railway line in Arlesey, Bedfordshire; and if he will make a statement; [58329]

(2) if he will raise with the Chief Executive of Railtrack at a meeting in the near future the issue of contractors' debris beside railway lines; and if he will make a statement; [58327]

(3) what information he has received from the Chief Executive of Railtrack about an initiative designed to ensure contractors clear debris from areas surrounding railway tracks whilst work is in progress; and if he will make a statement. [58328]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 21 May 2002]: I understand that Railtrack have in hand a national programme to ensure that the lineside is clear from surplus engineering material by October 2002; and that systems are in place by the following month to prevent future build-up of such material.

Home Zones

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which local authorities included proposals for home zones in their annual progress reports 2001 finance forms; how many were proposed in each case; what the total length of these roads is; and if he will make a statement. [66002]

Mr. Jamieson: The table shows the information provided within the local transport plan Annual Progress Reports submitted in August 2001 of those English authorities outside London which included proposals for the designation of areas as home zones. Length of road within each proposal is not recorded centrally.

LTP Annual Progress Report 2001

10-Year Plan

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to publish revisions to the 10 year plan for transport. [66061]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to the Secretary of State for Transport' oral answer to the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Chope) on Tuesday 2 July 2002, Official Report, columns 77–78.

Train Punctuality

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trains of each train operating company arrived late by (a) more than five minutes and (b) more than 10 minutes in each month from November 2001 to June 2002; and how many trains in each train operating company were cancelled in each month from November 2001 to June 2002. [66673]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to the Strategic Rail Authority Publication 'On Track' which contains the rail performance information he seeks. The document is published every six months, the last one on 6 June and was placed in the Libraries of the House.

Funding Guarantees

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what funding guarantees have been given to the SRA by his Department. [66496]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement about Network Rail made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on 27 June 2002 Official Report, columns 971–973.

Halcrow

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what strategic transport reports he intends to commission from Halcrow; and what fees they will be paid. [66756]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department may wish to engage consultants for a wide variety of purposes, including policy development (and implementation), administration, research and development, and the provision of specialist services. I would not want to prejudge who are appointed to undertake such work.

York-Penzance Rail Service

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent assessment he has made of the (a) reliability and (b) punctuality of rail services between York and Penzance. [67212]

Mr. Jamieson: Performance figures for each of the train operating companies are published by the Strategic Rail Authority in their quarterly publication "National Rail Trends", and in more detail in their six monthly publication "On Track". Copies of these publications are placed in the library of the House. The most recent editions of both documents were published on 6 June.

Modes of Transport Statistics

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) car, (b) bus and (c) rail journeys were made in the last 12 months. [67213]

Mr. Jamieson: Data from the National Travel Survey on main mode of trip show that, over the period 1998–2000, residents in Great Britain made on average:

(a) 640 car trips per person per year (411 as a driver and 228 as a passenger)

(b) 58 local bus trips per person per year and

(c) 19 rail trips per person per year (12 by surface rail and 7 by LT Underground).

Data are not available for single years.

Seat Belts

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 1 July 2002, ref 65787, on seat belts, what plans he has to ensure they are used by pupils. [67225]

Mr. Jamieson: The law does not require passengers to wear seat belts in the rear seats of coaches but advice in the Highway Code is that they should be worn where available. Unlike the case of drivers of cars, goods vehicles and the smaller minibuses, it would be unreasonable and potentially unsafe for drivers of these larger vehicles also to be responsible for seat belt wearing by passengers under 14 years.

Oral Questions

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many oral questions he has transferred to other Departments in each of the last 18 months. [67050]

Mr. Jamieson: Since the Department for Transport was formed on 29 May 2002, no oral questions have been transferred to other Departments.

Five oral questions were transferred by the former Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions, as follows:

Month	Number of oral questions transferred
June 2001	1
December 2001	1
January 2002	1
March 2002	2

Questions are only transferred when it is more appropriate for another Department to answer, and they accept the question.

National Air Traffic Services

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 25 June to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Carmichael), Official Report, column 768W, on national air traffic services, what actions with regard to software and equipment have been taken to prevent a recurrence of the problems experienced on 27 March, 10 April and 17 May. [67174]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 5 July 2002]: Details of the actions taken in response to earlier software and equipment problems at West Drayton and Swanwick are operational matters for NATS.

Bus Services

Andy Burnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bus services in each metropolitan transport authority area for which his Department pays subsidy have been (a) temporarily and (b) permanently suspended in the last 12 months. [66880]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department does not collect information in the form requested.

All local bus services following a registered route and timetable are eligible to receive grant from the Department in the form of fuel duty rebate. However, in the vast majority of cases (nearly 90 per cent. of total bus provision in the areas of passenger transport authorities) decisions on service provision are for commercial operators.

In the remaining cases, the service is provided under contract from the passenger transport authority and subsidised by that authority from its own resources. The resources available to authorities are augmented by payments from the Department's rural bus subsidy grant scheme. I understand that only one service supported by a passenger transport authority with funding form this scheme has been withdrawn in the last 12 months.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to increase the take-up of concessionary fares on rural bus services. [66781]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Our minimum requirement for concessionary fares schemes has, since June 2001, guaranteed at least half-fares for pensioners and disabled people on local buses to the benefit of seven million people overall, some of whom will be travelling in rural areas. This is an improvement on the previous position where 16 mostly rural areas had no concessionary travel scheme at all. From April 2003 the Travel Concessions (Eligibility) Act 2002 will ensure that men aged 60–65 will also receive the benefit of concessionary travel. Further, our Rural Bus Subsidy Grant has provided an additional 1,800 services upon which concessionary travel is possible. Many of the innovative schemes supported by our Rural Bus Challenge competition also provide further scope for take-up of concessionary travel.

Baldock Bypass

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the funding of the Baldock bypass and progress on the project. [67952]

Mr. Jamieson: Hertford county council originally proposed that the Baldock bypass should be funded through the Private Finance Initiative. However, following a re-evaluation of the scheme, Hertfordshire concluded that the Baldock bypass should be procured through conventional funding. They agreed to provide revised cost estimates in support of this view.

We have been in discussions with Hertfordshire to determine what procurement would represent value for money for this scheme and are currently awaiting information from Hertfordshire. When this information is received I hope to be in a position to make a decision about how the Baldock bypass will be funded.

John Cordle

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether (a) he and (b) his Ministers spoke to a constituent, Mr. John Cordle of Salisbury, on 18 June. [67202]

Mr. Jamieson: No.

Northern Line

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people on average (a) entered and (b) left the Northern Line in each 15 minute period of a working day for each station on the Northern Line in the most recent period for which figures are available. [67713]

Mr. Jamieson: Detailed in-year operational information of this nature is a matter for London Underground.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the percentage of people, taking the Northern line (a) south from Euston and (b) north from Kennington, who travelled on the (i) Charing Cross branch and (ii) Bank branch in the most recent period for which figures are available. [67714]

Mr. Jamieson: None, detailed operational information of this nature is a matter for London Underground.

London Underground

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the length of train, in numbers of carriages, that each station on the London Underground Network (a) can accommodate and (b) is most frequently served by. [67718]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer to the answer which my right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport (Mr. Spellar) gave to the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Brake) on 15 January 2002, Official Report, column 196W.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the (a) crowded and (b) very crowded links, as defined by London Underground, as at 1 July of each of the last eight years, on the London Underground network. [67721]

Mr. Jamieson: Detailed operational information of this nature is a matter for London Underground who inform me, furthermore, that it could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times each day (a) a station and (b) a platform, on the London Underground network has been temporarily closed owing to overcrowding in the most recent period for which figures are available. [67716]

Mr. Jamieson: Detailed operational information of this nature is a matter for London Underground.

Network Rail

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 25 June 2002, Official Report, column 774W, on Network Rail, if he will list the (a) funders and (b) customers to whom he refers; and if he will provide details of the obligations in each case. [66067]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority would fund Network Rail by means of future grants and will provide back-stop credit facilities as set out in the statement made to the House by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 27 June 2002, Official Report, columns 971–989, and in the minutes mentioned in the statement, which have been laid before the House. In addition to the SRA, Network Rail would have a number of commercial funders. Network Rail's customers would be the train and freight operating companies. Their obligations would be in accordance with the track and station access agreements for each operating company. These agreements are available from the office of the rail regulator.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, under the Network Rail proposal, what call there is on Railtrack Group PLC under the outstanding guarantees in respect of (a) the European Investment Bank facilities made available to Railtrack PLC and (b) the bank facilities which have been made available to London and Continental Railways Limited in connection with the CTRL. [66531]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: None.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the incentive arrangements with regard to Network Rail and possible enhancement projects; and if he will make a statement. [66602]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Network Rail will prepare and publish an incentive plan annually. The plan will cover both the short and the long run delivery of the business and be focused on delivery of the business plan, including enhancement projects, and on meeting licence and contractual obligations.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the mechanism by which members of Network Rail will be held accountable by (a) customers, (b) the general public, (c) the Executive and (d) Parliament. [66543]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Network Rail would be accountable via its network licence and contractual obligations. Its customers could ensure that the company meets its contractual obligations to them; the Rail Regulator would continue to monitor and enforce delivery against the network licence; and the Strategic Rail Authority's strategic plan will set the framework within which the company would deliver and particularly within which enhancements will be taken forward.

The strategic plan is laid before Parliament. The SRA would also appoint a non-executive director to the Network Rail board.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the mechanism for selecting the members of the nominating committee for Network Rail members; [66542]

(2) by what mechanism people and groups will be appointed to be members of Network Rail; how many will be appointed; and on what date. [66540]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Network Rail would have three categories of members: "industry members"—railway licence holders; "public interest members"—drawn from the community at large, with a clear interest in the railway and the ability to make a genuine contribution; and the "SRA member"—nominated by the Strategic Rail Authority. Network Rail expects there to be around 100 members in total.

Network Rail intends to recruit public interest members by invitation and through advertisement and will appoint a membership selection panel (MSP), with an independent majority, to consider applications against a membership policy. The board would appoint public interest members on the recommendation of the MSP. The detail and timing of these arrangements are matters for Network Rail to determine.

Railtrack

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he expects to make an application to the court for the discharge of the Railtrack administration order; and if he will make a statement. [66539]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member the statement about Network Rail made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport on 27 June 2002, Official Report, columns 971–73.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what basis Railtrack Group will waive its claims for compensation against Her Majesty's Government, the Secretary of State, his Department and others in respect of the making of the administration order; if he will place copies of related documentation in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [66499]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: This is a matter for Railtrack Group plc. Their reasoning is explained in the press release they issued on 27 June 2002.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under the administration order, whether Railtrack Group will be permitted to carry out the planned rollover of chargeable gains arising in the year, in connection with certain contingent tax liabilities arising from transactions entered into before 7 October 2001, for which no provision has been made; and if he will make a statement. [66532]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: This is a matter for Network Rail, Railtrack Group and the administrators of Railtrack plc.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Support

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what industrial support resources, including staff and direct financial investment, are invested in the (a) automotive, (b) environmental industry, (c) construction, (d) metals, (e) aerospace, (f) chemicals and (g) water industrial sectors. [63806]

Ms Hewitt: The DTI's role is to work with business, employees and consumers to drive up UK productivity and competitiveness. Our planned expenditure on resources for the promotion of enterprise, innovation and increased productivity is £1.23 billion for 2002–03, as set out in Table 2, Annex A, of the Trade and Industry Expenditure Plans Report 2002, Cm 5416. This will include advice and support for the sectors in question and the development of policy to promote the success of those sectors. The detailed information requested cannot be provided without incurring a disproportionate cost.

Departmental Waste

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of waste produced in her Department was (a) recycled, (b) composted and (c) re-used, broken down into (i) paper, (ii) plastics, (iii) aluminium cans and (iv) other, in each year since 1997; what plans there are to increase the proportions; and if she will make a statement. [65693]

Ms Hewitt: Up to June 2002 the DTI used a variety of waste contractors, who operated their own waste minimisation techniques, including minimisation at source, re-use, recycling and energy recovery. An accurate figure for the proportion of waste recycled, composted, reused and segregated from 1997 to date could be obtained only at disproportionate expense. However, I attach a high importance to monitoring and improving on current waste outputs, and a total waste management tender has been developed and has taken effect from July 1 2002. The successful contractor will be required to report on the percentage of waste streams that are recovered, while ensuring that the following targets are achieved:

	Recovery target (As a percentage of waste handled)	Recycling/ composting target (As a percentage of waste recovered)
2002–03	60	45
2003–04	70	55
2004–05	80	65

Initially the targets will be achieved through paper and card recycling but the tender specification requires the contractor to investigate innovative techniques for recovering other waste streams, including metals, plastics and glass.

General Agreement on Trade in Services

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the European Union's negotiating demands for the General Agreement on Trade in Services, indicating which ones her Department (a) supports and (b) does not support. [64719]

Ms Hewitt: In line with the end-June benchmark date set in the WTO Doha ministerial declaration for the exchange of initial requests between WTO members for liberalisation under the current General Agreement on Trade in Services negotiations, the European Community's requests were finalised on 28 June following consultation between the Commission and member states. They are being transmitted this week to individual WTO members to whom they are addressed.

In the case of the EC's major trading partners, both developed and developing countries, requests are made in most services sectors. The main exceptions are health, education (with the exception of the US, to whom requests are made in the area of privately funded higher education services) and audio-visual services.

As regards developing countries, requests are made in line with their levels of development. In the case of the least developed countries, requests are in the main limited to three to five sectors, with the sectors identified being those where liberalisation is most likely to contribute to development—primarily business, financial, telecommunications and transport services.

Throughout the requests, the EC emphasises that it is not seeking the dismantling of public services or the privatisation of state owned companies. The requests also make clear that the EC recognises the importance of liberalisation being underpinned by domestic regulatory frameworks designed to ensure the achievement of public policy objectives.

The requests are not demands. They are an opening basis for negotiations. Nor, as WTO Director-General Mike Moore has confirmed last week, do requests constitute agreements by WTO members to include such sectors as part of their commitments.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the members of each of the regional development agencies, together with any declared party political affiliation. [64454]

Ms Hewitt: The names of the board members of each of the eight English regional development agencies outside London, together with any political affiliations declared in response to the political activity questionnaire required by the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments (OCPA) are as follows:

The OCPA declaration covers political activities undertaken during the previous five years, including the name of the party or body for which the board member has been active. Political activities are defined by OCPA as follows:

obtained office as a local councillor, MP, MEP etc;

stood as a candidate for one of the above offices;

spoken on behalf of a party or candidate;

acted as a political agent;

held office such as chair, treasurer or secretary of a local branch of a party;

canvassed on behalf of a party or helped at elections; undertaken any other political activity which the applicant considers relevant;

made a recordable donation to a political party (the requirement for publishing a register of recordable donations, as defined under the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000, became effective from 16 February 2001).

No other records are kept of political activities by board members.

Military Export Licences

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what deliveries of equipment on the military and dual-use lists have been made to (a) India, (b) Pakistan and (c) Israel in each month since September 2001; and if she will make a statement. [65099]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 18 March 2002, Official Report, column 54W.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what factors the Government take into account when deciding whether to issue (a) a Standard Individual Export Licence and (b) an Open Individual Export Licence; and if she will make a statement. [65100]

Nigel Griffiths: All relevant export licence applications, whether for Standard Individual Export Licences (SIEL) or Open Individual Export Licences (OIEL), are considered on a case by case basis against the consolidated EU and national arms export licensing criteria. I refer the right hon. and learned Member to the reply from the Minister for Europe, my right hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Peter Hain), to right hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Peter Hain), to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Laura Moffatt) on 26 October 2000, Official Report, columns 199–203W.

In assessing applications for OIELs, the Government considers whether an OIEL would provide for sufficient control in relation to the goods and countries or end users concerned. If not, SIEL applications will be invited instead. Furthermore, OIELs will normally only be granted to exporters with a proven track record of applications for SIELs, and where the particular nature of their business makes the use of SIELs inappropriate or inefficient.

Waste Disposal

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the disposal of (a) high level, (b) intermediate level and (c) liquid form waste. [66098]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

There is currently no long-term management policy for either high level or intermediate level radioactive waste. Both high and intermediate level wastes are currently stored safely on licensed sites and are subject to strict regulatory control by the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate. Any discharges relating to the storage of waste are similarly regulated by the Environment Agency. Wastes in liquid form may be high, intermediate or low level. Low level liquid wastes are discharged from a number of sites throughout the country under authorisations granted by the Environment Agency under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993.

The Department and the devolved Administrations are working towards finding suitable management solutions for long-lived radioactive waste which have full public support. We recently held a public consultation on the matter, and will be announcing both the results and the next stages of the policy making process very shortly.

Arms Exports

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps her Department has taken to minimise the risk of UK arms exports being diverted from the stated end-use or end-user in Pakistan. [65433]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

The Government focus their efforts on assessment of potential end-use at the export licensing stage, including where needed through checks made by our posts overseas. Carrying out effective risk assessment on end-users before making the export licensing decision is the surest way of preventing arms from falling into the wrong hands. Nevertheless, the Government remain committed to carrying out end-use monitoring in those circumstances where this will genuinely add value to our efforts to minimise the risk of misuse and diversion and where such monitoring is practicable. Our overseas posts have standing instructions to report on allegations of misuse of any UK-origin defence equipment.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Health and Safety Standards

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what statutory obligations are in force for inspection of health and safety standards in (a) residential homes, (b) boarding schools and (c) university halls of residence; and if he will make a statement. [66653]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

The Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 (HSWA) applies to residential homes, boarding schools and university halls of residence. HSWA sets out general health and safety duties which employers, the self-employed and people in control of premises have towards their employees, and others who could be affected by the work activities. It is the 'umbrella' legislation under which other, more specific, health and safety regulations are made. The Health and Safety (Enforcing Authority) Regulations 1998 allocate inspection responsibility for different types of undertakings to either the Health and Safety Executive or to the Local Authority. Inspectors are appointed under Section 19 of HSWA to carry out inspection and enforcement in relation to health and safety.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 22 May 2002, Official Report, column 282, what progress has been made with his consultations about the future of nuclear power. [64221]

The Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State: Responsibility for the consultation on nuclear energy lies with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. The consultation covers the key issues for Energy Policy including the role of nuclear. The Government published a consultation document on 14 May, arranged a debate on 20 June in the House of Commons and workshops have been arranged to discuss key issues with energy stakeholders.

Out-of-town Shopping Centres

Keith Vaz: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many out of town shopping centres he has visited in an official capacity since 1 January. [66327]

Mr. Leslie: None in an official capacity.

Local Authority Performance

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if he will make a statement on the future of Best Value as a means of assessing the performance of local authorities; [67446]

(2) if he will make a statement on the relationship between the role of Best Value assessments in local authorities and the new comprehensive performance assessment; and if he will make a statement. [67438]

Mr. Raynsford: Comprehensive Performance Assessments bring together different judgments about a local authority's performance, many of which arise from audits and inspections carried out under the best value powers in the Local Government Act 1999. Such assessments will be used to determine, in consultation with individual councils, the timing and content of subsequent audit and inspection activity. In the case of good performing authorities, we anticipate reduced levels of inspection from next year. All authorities can expect a more proportionate risk based programme of both audit and inspection, and better co-ordination across the range of their functions.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the cost to local authorities of complying with the comprehensive performance assessment system; and if he will make a statement. [67437]

Mr. Raynsford: Comprehensive Performance Assessments make significant use of existing performance information from the following sources:

inspections;

audit reports;

performance indicator data;

other central Government assessment data;

together with a corporate governance assessment of the authority as a whole, which includes an element of self assessment.

Additional inspection fieldwork is kept to the minimum necessary to provide fair and robust judgments. The Audit Commission will undertake the majority of this fieldwork by redirecting their scheduled inspection activities. Because the fieldwork will replace some, or all, of the planned inspection activity for the period up to December 2002, it will be achieved within the existing fee envelope for local councils.

Social Exclusion Unit

Mr. Heald: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 14 February 2002, Official Report, column 555W, on the Social Exclusion Unit, what progress has been made in respect of the Social Exclusion Unit's work on (a) mental health issues and prisoners, (b) mental health provision for cared for children and (c) elderly persons' mental health needs to get out of the house; and if he will publish reports in respect of the work. [68005]

The Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State: (a) The Social Exclusion Unit's report on reducing re-offending by ex-prisoners was published on 1 July 2002 and copies of the report are in the Libraries of both the House of Commons and the House of Lords.

The report contains a detailed analysis of the mental health issues facing prisoners. It recommends that the Government develop and implement a national rehabilitation strategy, which should pull together the contributions of all relevant Government Departments. As part of this strategy, the report recommends improvements to key reception and release procedures in prison, and a 'Going Straight Contract', which would deliver improvements in mental health outcomes, particularly in how they join up with many of the other factors affecting prisoners. An action plan setting out the Government's response to the report will be published later this year.

(b) The Social Exclusion Unit has consulted widely on all the factors impacting on the educational attainment of children in care. Mental health has been raised as an important issue, especially with regard to child and adolescent mental health services (CAMHS). The project will be published later this year.

(c) In May 2002 the Social Exclusion Unit published its interim report on transport and social exclusion entitled "Making the Connections". The report is available on the Unit's website and in the Libraries of both the House of Commons and the House of Lords.

The interim report highlights that one third of older people say that there are one or more activities that they would like to be able to do more often; and that half of these involved family and other social visits. This suggests a significant degree of social isolation, which may have an impact on mental health.

The Social Exclusion Unit will publish its final report on transport and social exclusion later this year.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many members of his Department have been employed in its regulatory impact unit in the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [65965]

Mr. Leslie: The new Departmental Regulatory Impact Unit was established in October 2001 and it works for both the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Department for Transport.

Figures for earlier years are not comparable with the current baseline due to the different policy responsibilities. The resource position for 1997–2001 were parts of a Grade 7, SEO, EO and AO.

1997–98 (1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998) = 4

1998–99 (1 April 199 to 31 March 1999) = 4

1999–2000 (1 April 1999 to 31 March 2000) = 4

2000–01 (1 April 2000 to 31 March 2001) = 4

2001–02 (1 April 2001 to 31 March 2002) = 4 staff, 2 full time, 2 job share.

It is the job of Departmental Regulatory Impact Units to establish and promote the principles of good regulation in their Departments. The staff in each unit work closely with the officials responsible for developing policies within their Department and the Regulatory Impact Unit within the Cabinet Office. They focus on those regulations that impact on business, charities, the voluntary sector and public sector front line service deliverers.

Local Strategic Partnership, Walsall

David Winnick: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on accreditation of the local strategic partnership in Walsall. [68194]

Mr. Leslie: Following the decision last February that Walsall's LSP had made insufficient progress to warrant accreditation the partnership's development has been closely monitored. The role of stakeholders in the health, education, police, voluntary and private sectors has been crucial in driving development towards a viable structure and constitution for the partnership. The LSP is now ready to fulfil an important leadership role in the borough, and has now received its accreditation.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the estimated (a) level and (b) cost of energy use in his Department and associated agencies was in each year since 1997; what proportion of energy was generated from renewable sources; and if he will make a statement. [65960]

Mr. Leslie: My Department was formed on 29 May. For details of energy consumption and cost for the former Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister for Rural Affairs, my right hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Alun Michael), to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove on 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 384W.

Procurement of electricity from renewable sources in my Department began in October 2000 and from April 2002 some 40 per cent. of the Departments' total electricity usage was from a renewable source.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Collins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister on how many occasions during the last 12 months an official photographer has accompanied him on official visits (a) overseas and (b) within the UK; what (i) travel expenses, (ii) costs of equipment and processing, (iii) staff payment and (iv) other costs were incurred on each occasion; what publications official photographs have appeared in during the last 12 months and what terms and conditions were attached to the publication of such photographs; and whether photographs taken on official visits are available for use in non-governmental literature. [62834]

The Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State: In the last 12 months the Deputy Prime Minister has not been accompanied by an official photographer on any visit, whether in the UK or overseas.

Homelessness

Mr. Breed: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what proportion of rural local authorities have used bed and breakfast accommodation to house young people for each of the last 10 years, broken down by region; [66783]

(2) what proportion of rural districts had emergency accommodation for young people in each of the last 10 years, broken down by region; [66784]

(3) what measures he is taking to improve the recording of homelessness in rural areas. [66782]

Mr. McNulty: Detailed information on emergency accommodation and use of bed and breakfast accommodation for young people in rural districts is not collected centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The new Homelessness Act 2002 will bring about radical change in the way that central and local government, and all other partners, work together to tackle homelessness in all parts of the country including rural areas. For the first time ever, local authorities will be required to carry out a review and develop a strategy for their area that prevents homelessness and provides solutions for people who are, or who may become, homeless. More specifically, the reviews required by the Homelessness Act will require authorities to estimate current and likely future levels of homelessness and audit provision for all forms of homelessness among young people.

In addition, the quarterly P1E return on which local authorities report activity under the homelessness legislation has been expanded to collect information about the average length of time spent by households in B and B hotels, and hostel style accommodation.

With effect from April 2002, the form has been further revised, both to seek finer detail about instances of harassment and violence leading to home loss and in anticipation of additional priority need categories proposed in the Homelessness (Priority Need for Accommodation) Order 2002 which, subject to parliamentary approval, should come into effect at the end of July.

Grant Distribution

Paul Clark: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will consult on reform of the system used to distribute grant to English local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [68477]

Mr. Raynsford: I am pleased to announce that we are today issuing a consultation document covering reform of the system we use to distribute grant to English local authorities. The consultation will run for 12 weeks over the summer. I have placed copies of the document in the Library of the House. It is being sent to all local authorities, as well as other stakeholders, and is available via the internet.

The system covers key services including education, personal social services, police, fire and a wider range of other responsibilities. It accounts for distribution of over 85 per cent. of the resources government provides for those services, currently about £36 billion per year. Its importance to local government, other stakeholders and public service delivery across the country means that we want a full and open public consultation on the new system.

The consultation document sets out the Government's broad objectives for the reform. Responses to the 2000 Local Government Finance Green Paper showed that a big majority of the local government respondents wanted the new system to continue to be based on formulae. The Government announced in the 2001 Local Government White Paper "Strong Local Leadership—Quality Public Services" that we agreed. We want new formulae that are fairer, simpler; more intelligible and more stable.

We are concerned to make sure that the new system is more easily understood that the old one. It is important to improve transparency and accountability. Clearly, it will never be possible to achieve a very simple system; the complexity of the issues it seeks to address see to that. The extremely technical nature of the issues means that there is frequently no clear-cut optimum solution. But we believe it is possible to make improvements.

In considering how to reflect local authorities' relative needs and circumstances, a range of factors have to be taken into account. Three elements seem fundamental:

1. a basic amount per head of population (or other relevant unit cost);
2. an appropriate emphasis on the need to tackle deprivation; and
3. the variation in pay costs between different areas of the country.

Because deprivation and pay components are core drivers of the costs authorities face in most areas and the problems the system will need to address, we are particularly keen to see them separately identified in formulae. However, that is not to say that other components (for example sparsity) are unimportant. Indeed, they may be a key consideration in particular instances. They will be clearly identified where they form part of a formula.

The document sets out options for the various components. These options are detailed to the level of showing the effects on each relevant local authority, comparing against the baseline of 2002–03. This will enable authorities and other interested parties to form views about the desirability of each option.

However, these figures are not those that will appear in the 2003–04 local government finance settlement later this year. They will differ both because of changes in the overall funding totals (as a result of the spending review) and as a result of changes to data such as population that will not be available until the autumn. Waiting until that information is available would severely restrict the time available for consultation and in any case would not improve the consultation because we want responses to be about the system and the formulae, rather than on the basis of yearly variations in data. So the options are presented in terms of changes from the 2002–03 local government finance settlement.

We will not necessarily limit ourselves to building the new system from the choices specifically consulted upon here. It is likely that other options will be put forward in response to this consultation, and we will not exclude those before taking decisions. Our conclusions arising from the consultation and further consideration of options will be incorporated in the provisional settlement for 2003–04 that will be published at the usual time, towards the end of the year. Following a further period of consultation, final decisions will be announced in early 2003 in time to take effect in the 2003–04 financial year.

This is a difficult and important issue. The Government recognise that pragmatic decisions will be needed to produce a workable system, and the complexity and variety of the pressures that are put upon the system from all sides means that it will not be possible for all authorities to get what they want from this process. So no authority should feel that it is guaranteed to get a bigger share of the fixed amount of resources the system can distribute. But the Government are seeking a fairer distribution of resources which takes account of today's pressures on local government and the particular needs of areas of deprivation. We will consider all of the views that are put forward, and weigh them up carefully before decisions are taken.

Balfour Beatty

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the contract between the Government and Balfour Beatty for the refurbishment of 22 Whitehall. [55259]

Mr. Alexander: I have been asked to reply.

As my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister stated to my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) on 14 May 2002, Official Report, column 567W, an initial report on timber procurement for 22 Whitehall has been received and there will be a report to the House when the report is finalised.

Urban Green Spaces Taskforce

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will respond to the final report of the urban green spaces taskforce; and if he will make a statement. [67846]

Mr. McNulty: We welcome the proposals of the final report, which provide a good basis for preparing our policy on provision and management of urban parks and green spaces as proposed in the urban White Paper [Cm 4911].

Our responses to a majority of the 52 recommendations of the final report rely on other initiatives which have yet to conclude. These include the current spending review, the cross cutting review on improving the public space, and the revision of planning policy guidance on open space, recreation and sports. We also wish to take advice from the Steering Committee set up by the OPDM to consider specific recommendations from the report.

We plan to integrate our policy on urban parks and green spaces with our strategy and action plan for improving public spaces. The resulting document will address all the recommendations of the final report and deliver our urban White Paper commitments for long-term improvements to urban green spaces. The strategy will be published in the autumn.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Computers

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures are (a) in place and (b) under discussion in her Department in order to ensure compliance with the WEE Directive. [60757]

Mr. Meacher: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Energy and Construction on 13 June 2002, Official Report, column 1266W.

Packaging Waste

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate her Department has made of the increase in domestic recycling required in order to achieve new packaging and packing waste recycling and recovery targets under discussion in the EU; and what discussions she has had with local authorities in relation to increasing domestic and curbside collection of packaging waste to meet recovery and recycling targets by 2006. [62363]

Mr. Meacher: The Department worked with the task force of the Advisory Committee on Packaging (ACP) in the production of a report, published in November 2001, which looked at packaging material flows from raw material manufacturer to seller, and at packaging waste flows from point of discard to ultimate disposal or recovery. This report, which is publicly available, also looked at the likely level of packaging waste arising in the household stream and which would increasingly have to be recovered if likely higher targets are to be met.

New packaging waste recovery targets have not yet been finalised but for the purposes of the estimates in the task force report an overall recycling target of 60 per cent. is assumed to have to be met in 2006. The tonnage needed to meet such a target would be in the region of 5.7 million tonnes and the task force report concludes that as much as 65 per cent. of the additional tonnage required may need to be recovered from the household waste stream.

A first meeting to discuss future packaging waste recovery from the household waste stream was held last year between officials in my Department, the ACP task force and local authorities. Further meetings are planned.

Holsworthy Biogas Project

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much public money has been spent on the Holsworthy Biogas project; what steps her Department took to ensure that all licensing requirements were in place before public money was spent; what steps her Department took to vet the business plan for this project and when the steps were taken; what assessment she has made of the (a) viability of the business plan and (b) profitability of the project; and if she will make a statement. [61770]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 17 June 2002]: £1,870,315 of UK public expenditure and £1,924,985 of European funding has been committed to this project, the total project costs for which are £7,700,000. To date, some £1,515,014 of UK public expenditure has been made. The Department routinely assessed all applications for funding under the Objective 5b programme. Such assessment included consideration of the business plan, the environmental impact and the profitability of the project. At the time of assessment and approval of the Holsworthy Biogas project, it was not recognised that restrictions on disposal of waste food would prevent the plant being licensed. However, following the recent risk assessment commissioned by the Government we are reviewing the Animal By-Products legislation with a view to permitting the treatment of catering waste in composting and biogas processes.

Mobile Recycling Plants

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many mobile recycling plants there are in operation in the UK; and what their weekly capacity is. [62976]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 18 June 2002]: Two mobile recycling plant licensed by the Environment Agency have been operating in the UK. The capacity of each is approximately 4,000 refrigerators per week. In addition one fixed plant was commissioned this week and will begin operating shortly and a further two are due to be operating within a month. All are for the removal of ozone depleting substances from refrigerator equipment, and the combined capacity of all plant will be 1.2 million units per year.

Kyoto Protocol

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if the Government support the extension of the Kyoto Protocol to cover developing nations. [63519]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are committed to the principle that developed countries, as the biggest emitters, should take the lead in reducing emissions. We are therefore working to secure ratification and early entry into force of the Kyoto Protocol, under which developed countries take on legally binding emission reduction targets for the period 2008–12. Developing countries are covered by the Kyoto Protocol. Under its terms, they do not have legally binding greenhouse gas emission targets but must take steps to limit their emissions and to report on their efforts. A number of developing countries have already ratified the Protocol and we hope that as many developing countries as possible will follow that lead. The Government hope that the entry into force of the Protocol will provide the basis on which we can enter into an international dialogue with developed and developing countries (or "all countries") on future action to tackle climate change. In due course, all countries that emit significant quantities of greenhouse gases will need to take action if we are to meet the UN Climate Change Convention's objective of stabilising greenhouse gas concentrations in the atmosphere at a safe level.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions the Government have had with (a) US representatives, (b) the IMF, (c) the World bank, (d) the WTO and (e) developing nations regarding emissions reductions and the transfer of clean technologies to developing countries. [66643]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs have discussed a wide range of climate change issues with US representatives this year, including emissions reductions and technology transfer to developing countries. Most recently the importance of tackling climate change was discussed at the G8 Heads of Government meeting on 26–27 June in Kananaskis, attended by the Prime Minister and President Bush. Other Government Ministers and officials take every opportunity to engage constructively with the US on climate change.

While the Government have had no recent discussions with the IMF on these issues, we are actively encouraging a substantial and successful third replenishment of the Global Environment Facility, the focus of which includes climate change activities in developing countries.

The Department for International Development has been working closely with the World bank and a number of other agencies to assess the impact of climate change on poverty.

Climate change is rarely discussed in the forum of the WTO and the Government have had no discussions with it on the particular issues of emissions reductions and technology transfer.

Government Ministers and officials regularly discuss these and a range of other climate change related issues with representatives from developing countries. We will continue to work constructively on climate change with our international partners in the run up to the Eighth Conference of the Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change in October, in Delhi.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many veterinary surgeons who were (a) employed by the former Ministry for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, (b) employed by other Government Departments and agencies and (c) in the private sector were used by the Government in their campaign to eradicate the outbreak of foot and mouth disease in 2001. [64118]

Margaret Beckett: The number of veterinary surgeons assisting with the eradication of foot and mouth disease was not static throughout the epidemic. The table identifies veterinary resources as at mid April 2001 during the peak period.

Veterinary resources as at mid April 2001

	Number
(a) MAFF veterinarians	344
(b) Veterinary surgeons employed by other Government Departments and agencies; including foreign Governments	122
(c) Private sector veterinarians[1]	1,169

[1] Relates to temporary veterinary inspectors

Local veterinary inspectors (LVIs) assisted in terms of licensing and some sero-surveillance work but remained working for their respective practices. These have not been included in the breakdown of figures.

Department-sponsored Organisations

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she expects to announce the budget allocation for the financial year 1 April 2002 to 31 March 2003 for organisations sponsored by her Department; and if she will make a statement. [64280]

Mr. Morley: The Department operates a system of delegated budgeting. Budgets for 2002–03 were issued to policy commands during April, for them to allocate as appropriate. Organisations who are sponsored by the Department are part of the delegation process. They are notified of the level of sponsorship once this has been determined.

Camelids

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what the target time is for processing an application for an import licence for camelids from non-EU countries; and if she will make a statement; [64359]

(2) what plans she has to change the licensing procedure for the import of camelids; and if she will make a statement. [64358]

Margaret Beckett: If the application for an import licence is complete and correct and we have up-to-date import conditions in place that have been agreed with the exporting country, we can dispatch a licence within three days. It is, however, more common for us to have to negotiate new or amended import conditions with the veterinary authorities of the exporting country. This can be a slow process and can take several months. For this reason we do not have a target date for such applications.

The existing licensing procedure will be retained until the European Commission introduces harmonised animal health rules for the importation of camelids into the Community.

Veterinary Surgeons

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is towards the recruitment of veterinary surgeons to replace those retiring from the State Veterinary Service. [64470]

Margaret Beckett: We currently have a temporary moratorium on the recruitment of veterinary staff to replace those retiring from the State Veterinary Service. This will be reviewed following further examination of the funding for consequential work arising from FMD, which is presently underway.

Due consideration will also be given to any relevant recommendations made by the Lessons Learned and Royal Society inquiries.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many veterinary surgeons are employed by the State Veterinary Service; how many such posts are vacant; and how many vets are due to retire from the SVS within the next 12 months. [64469]

Margaret Beckett: The total number of veterinary surgeons employed by the State Veterinary Service (SVS) as at 1 April 2002 is 336.8 (full-time equivalent basis).

The number of vacant veterinary permanent posts was 12.

It is anticipated that 10 vets will be retiring within the next 12 months.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many veterinary surgeons work for each regional office of her Department. [65471]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 1 July 2002]: As at 1 April 2002, the State Veterinary Service (SVS) had five regions comprising of 23 divisional offices. Veterinary staff employed in each region is indicated in the table:

Region	Number of staff employed
East region	58
North region	84
West region	67
Scotland	57
Wales	30

Ungulates

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many ungulates, broken down by species, were imported from non-EU countries into the United Kingdom in each of the past three years; and if she will make a statement. [64360]

Margaret Beckett: The number of ungulates, broken down by species, imported from non-EU countries into Great Britain (but not including imports into Northern Ireland) for the period 1999–2001 is shown in the following table.

Species	1999	2000	2001
Equine	1,767	1,891	1,732
Alpacas (and other Ruminants)	468	1,194	29
Bovine	1,941	482	45
Ovine	8	78	967
Rhinocerotidae	1	0	1
Deer	0	3	0
Giraffes	0	3	0

The figures are provisional and subject to change.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) when she was advised by the European Commission that in the absence of an approved third country list under Directive 92/65/EC ungulates covered by this directive cannot be legally imported into a Community country; [64361]

(2) what representations she has made to (a) the European Commission and (b) her counterparts in other member states about the implementation of Directive 92/65/EC; [64467]

(3) what assessment she has made of the impact of the implementation of EC Directive 92/65/EC on breeders of alpacas and other camelids in the United Kingdom. [64466]

Margaret Beckett: The Commission gave a verbal summary of its views at a meeting of the Standing Committee on the Food Chain and Animal Health on 10 April this year. We have not yet received formal notification of any changes to the existing arrangements. We have written to the Commission seeking clarification of their position and have alerted them to the impact a suspension of such imports would have on the UK, not only for the well established trade in alpacas but also for breeding programmes of certain endangered species across the Community. There have been a number of formal and informal discussions in Brussels with the Commission and other member states and the Commission intends to introduce harmonised rules for certain species covered by Directive 92/65/EC.

Cattle (Artificial Insemination)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average time taken over the last 12 months was to process an application for a bull to be licensed for artificial insemination. [64461]

Margaret Beckett: The average time taken over the last 12 months to carry out pre-approval health testing of bulls and issue a licence for artificial insemination was 28 days from receipt of a complete and correct application.

Red Kites and Golden Plovers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many (a) red kites and (b) golden plovers there were in (i) Scotland, (ii) England and (iii) Wales in each year since 1972. [64709]

Mr. Meacher: The information requested on red kites from 1972 to 2000 is shown in the table.

Illegal Waste

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action (a) has recently been taken and (b) is planned by her Department to tackle problems from (i) litter, (ii) flytipping, (iii) abandoned vehicles and (iv) other waste disposed by illegal means; and if she will make a statement. [64731]

Mr. Meacher: Last year I launched three litter initiatives: the £1 million Pathfinder Programme, which calls upon local authorities to come up with innovative ways of tackling litter; the development of a voluntary code of best environmental practice for the fast food industry; and a review of the litter legislation to see what is, and what is not working. The results of Pathfinder will be available this time next year; the fast food code of practice is currently being drafted; and the litter legislative review has been subsumed into the Government's public space cross-cutting review, which will report this autumn.

The responsibility for enforcing the legislation on fly tipping rests with the Environment Agency and local authorities. The Department fully supports the work and actions taken by these bodies in order to tackle the problem, including prosecutions where appropriate. The Department is currently looking at the legislative framework on fly tipping to see if any changes can be made to help local authorities and the Environment Agency in their role. The Environment Agency are also working to establish an environmental crime unit that will bear down on problems such as fly tipping through, among other things, improved intelligence and surveillance systems.

In October 2001 we published a joint consultation document with DTLR on measures to remove abandoned and untaxed vehicles from the streets more quickly and, for the longer term, bring forward changes to vehicle registration and licensing procedures to ensure greater accuracy of DVLA's vehicle record. Regulations to reduce the statutory notice periods after which local authorities can remove abandoned vehicles were laid before the House on 19 March and came into force on 9 April.

The Environment Agency has strong existing powers available to take action against illegally deposited waste.

Human Behaviour and the Environment

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research has been conducted (a) by and (b) for (i) her Department, (ii) the Environment Agency and (iii) other Government bodies in relation to human behaviour and the environment; and if she will make a statement. [64739]

Mr. Meacher: DEFRA undertakes and commissions a large volume of research every year, some of which deals with issues of human behaviour and the environment. At any one time the Department is funding around 1500 research projects supporting around forty individual policy subject areas. Details of all ongoing DEFRA research projects and research results can now be found on the Department's searchable website at: http://www.defra.gov.uk/research/default.htm. For example, the Domestic Noise Complaints Study published in 1999 can be found on the site. The results of the recent Noise Attitudes Survey (which was published by DEFRA on May 20 2002) will also be available on the site shortly.

In addition, the Department sponsors the Sustainable Development Research Network (website: http://www.sd-research.org.uk/), which aims to identify and promote research which integrates environmental, social and economic objectives.

The Environment Agency has completed numerous research projects on various aspects of human behaviour and the environment. A main focus of research to date has been to understand values and perceptions of the environmental business of the Agency, for example in relation to industry, nuclear waste management and water management. The specific themes covered by the research are:

public participation and involvement: a major project on Evaluating Methods for Public Participation has recently been completed; the Agency is also participating in a European research project on Enhancing Transparency and Public Participation in Nuclear Waste Management. A number of smaller projects have looked at issues such as information provision and public participation in specific decision-making contexts.

policy advocacy processes: a three-year project is being developed which looks at policy advocacy in different areas, such as waste.

partnership: as well as a number of local projects, a national project is being developed to equip staff to work better in partnerships with other stakeholders.

risk communication: research has explored public perceptions of environmental risks and approaches to risk communication, particularly in relation to risks related to industrial pollution and flooding; the Agency also participated in a major project with other government departments and agencies looking at the Social Amplification of Risk.

social impacts: a number of projects focusing on the impacts of flooding, including health impacts and impacts on vulnerable groups, are due to be completed this year; understanding social perspectives on the environmental issues that concern the Agency: the perspectives of different stakeholders were explored in a recent project on Industrial Pollution Communication; social aspects of sustainable development: two projects on integrated appraisal (one on Appraisal Methods and one looking at integrated appraisal in the context of the Water Framework Directive) have contributed to knowledge in this sphere.

More information on some of these findings are available at "www.webookshop.com/ea/rdreport"

Additionally, the Agency has recently carried out a research study into people's behaviours and attitudes to household waste. This research showed that people would recycle more of their rubbish if it were made easier to do so by local councils. [Almost 9 out of 10 people claim that they would be likely to separate rubbish for recycling if the council provided appropriate containers]. Results were published in May this year and are available at "www.environment-agency.gov.uk/subect/waste/232021/239537/296229"

DEFRA does not collect or hold data on research undertaken or commissioned by other Government Departments on this issue.

EAGA

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will publish the list of complaints that she has received from members on the performance of EAGA. [65019]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 27 June 2002]: Between June 2001 and May 2002 I received 111 representations from members regarding the performance of the Warm Front scheme in areas where EAGA is Scheme Manager. These representations cover areas such as delays to installation, communication issues and standards of workmanship.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Advisory Committee for the implementation of the directive on the reduction of the sulphur content of certain liquid fuels is next due to meet; whether any experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66436]

Mr. Meacher: Meetings of this Committee are held as and when required. The UK would usually be represented by an official from my Department but the precise representation would be decided in the light of the matters to be discussed. There have been no meetings of the Committee over the last 12 months, and we are not aware of any planned.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the implementation of legislation on ambient air quality assessment and management is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66451]

Mr. Meacher: Meetings of this Committee are held as and when required. The UK would usually be represented by an official from my Department but the precise representation would be decided in the light of the matters to be discussed. There have been no meetings of the Committee over the last 12 months, and we are not aware of any planned.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical and scientific progress of the air quality values and guide values for sulphur dioxide and suspended particulates is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66442]

Mr. Meacher: This part of directive 80/779/EEC on air quality limit values and guide values for sulphur dioxide and suspended particles has been repealed.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of the Directive on air quality standards for nitrogen dioxide is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66443]

Mr. Meacher: This part of directive 85/203/EEC on air quality standards for nitrogen dioxide as been repealed.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the Adaptation to Technical Progress and the implementation of the directive on the control of volatile organic compound emissions resulting from the storage of petrol and its distribution from terminals to service stations is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66461]

Mr. Meacher: Meetings of this committee are held as and when required. The UK would usually be represented by an official from my Department, but the precise representation would be decided in the light of the matters to be discussed. There have been no meetings of the committee over the last 12 months, and we are not aware of any planned.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the Adaptation to Scientific and Technical Progress of the directive on the limit value for lead in the air is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66429]

Mr. Meacher: This part of directive 82/884/EEC on a limit value for lead in the air has been repealed.

Bovine TB

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the conclusions were of the meeting on 12 June of the Independent Scientific Group on Bovine TB. [65468]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB (ISG) met on 12 June in London as part of its normal schedule of meetings. The group noted progress on the Krebs field trial, including recent proactive culling operations in Cornwall and Gloucestershire, and discussed future work programmes. There was discussion of arrangements to increase collections in the Road Traffic Accident survey of badger carcases for TB and for clearing the backlog of epidemiological questionnaires (TB99) following delays arising from the foot and mouth disease emergency. Consideration was given to additional measures to combat the spread of bovine TB and action outside trial areas. The group reviewed its programme for analysing and interpreting data from cattle TB 'hotspots' outside trial areas, data on inconclusive reactors and data on the gamma interferon test, and confirmed its intention to finalise a report by the autumn.

Various research activities were discussed including a report on post genomic research on M.bovis at the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (VLA) and recently published research by VLA on the pathology in cattle following M.bovis BCG vaccination against experimental bovine TB.

A summary of ISG agendas and notes of meetings is published on DEFRA's website at http://defraweb/animal/tb/tb/.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many (a) total TB tests on herds, (b) herds under movement restriction, (c) tests on unrestricted herds, (d) new herd incidents and (e) new confirmed herd incidents there were in each county between 1 January and 30 March, and what percentage of tests on unrestricted herds in each county resulted in a confirmed herd incident. [65474]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The information is not available in the format requested. A statistical summary for Great Britain as a whole for the period 1 January to 30 March is given in table 1.

A more detailed breakdown of the information requested in sub-points (a), (b), (d) and (e) is given in table 2. This is broken down by State Veterinary Service region for the period 1 January to 31 May. Statistics for unrestricted herds (sub-point (c)) are not available in the same format.

All the statistics given are available on the DEFRA website at: http://defraweb/animalh/tb/default.htm.

Note:

Figures are provisional and subject to revision.

[1] Herds for which tuberculin skin testing is carried out on at least one animal during the period shown.

[2] Herds restricted at any time during the period shown due to a TB incident.

[3] Any tests carried out during the period shown on a herd which was not already under restriction due to a TB incident. Also any cases found, during the period shown, by routine inspection at the slaughterhouse of animals from a herd not already under restriction.

[4] Herds which were previously TB free but either had cattle that reacted to a tuberculin test or had a tuberculous animal disclosed by routine inspection at slaughter, during the period shown.

[5] New herd incidents (column 4) for which at least one animal was subsequently confirmed to have TB.

[6] Column 5 as a percentage of column 3.

[7] Estimates for February and March 2002 are given as a range as a number of the test results are still awaited. It is expected that the final figure, when available, will fall within this range.

Table 2—Detailed Tb raw data: 1 January—31 May 2002 Great Britain

	West	North	East	Total for England	Total for Wales	Total for Scotland	Total for GB
(a) Total number of herd tests	8,140	4,271	1,576	13,987	3,903	2,309	20,199
(b) Herds under TB2 restrictions because of a TB incident at some time during the reporting period	1,454	171	32	1,657	421	57	2,135
(d) Total new herd TB incidents	820	129	17	966	226	32	1,224
(e) of which are considered confirmed new TB incidents (i.e. CNIs)	472	69	5	546	116	9	671

Notes:

In using and interpreting table 2 the following points should be noted:

A proportion of TB incidents remain unclassified, awaiting the results of culture tests which can take several months. Therefore the number of confirmed incidents, for 2002 in particular, will currently be under-recorded. For instance, 9 per cent. of new TB incidents in January to May 2002 were unclassified when the data were extracted.

The number of TB incidents depends on the number of tests carried out and on the nature of the testing regime at the time (as well as on the underlying prevalence of the disease). In 2002, testing resources are being concentrated on herds which are overdue their tests (because of the backlog following the foot and mouth disease outbreak) and which have therefore had a longer period than usual in which to contract the disease. Those currently being tested also contain a higher than usual proportion of high risk herds. During the FMD outbreak, TB testing was significantly reduced and necessarily targeted to higher risk herds e.g. those tested following routine inspection of animals at slaughterhouses. At any time, the more herds are tested, the more likely you are to find TB.

It is therefore very difficult to assess the underlying trends at this time.

Any reactors, inconclusive reactors and direct contacts still awaiting removal and slaughter on the date of the data download were not included in the tables. These only show the number of reactors, inconclusive reactors and direct contacts that had been slaughtered as at 11 June.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on progress with Krebs trials in triplets I and J. [65475]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The planning of work in triplets I and J of the Krebs trial is proceeding in accordance with the timetable agreed with the Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB. Under procedures applicable to all triplets designed to safeguard the safety of staff, details of current and future operations are not disclosed until they have been completed. A summary of the completed work for each triplet is shown on DEFRA's website at http://defraweb/animal/tb/tb/

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her target date is for eliminating the backlog of herd tests for Bovine TB. [65473]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The rolling nature of the backlog of herd testing for bovine TB makes it difficult for us to set a specific target for its elimination although we are working hard to address the backlog which currently stands at 20K. As overdue tests are cleared, more fall due and join the backlog. In addition as further incidents of TB are disclosed more testing is triggered.

Sheep

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of (a) the number of sheep and (b) the proportion of the national flock which were born before the imposition of the ban on feeding animal protein to ruminants and are still alive. [65467]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 1 July 2002]: BSE-related feed controls relating to ruminants date back to 1988, but the feed ban in relation to mammalian protein is considered to have been effective from 1 August 1996, when mammalian meat and bonemeal was banned from all farmed livestock feed to prevent the possibility of cross-contamination of ruminant feed. It is estimated that the number of sheep still alive which were born before 1 August 1996, is less than 500, representing approximately 3 per cent. of the UK national flock.

GM Crops

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when ACRE formed its sub-group to look into the impact of releasing genetically modified organisms on soil ecology; how many times the group has met; which (a) laboratories and (b) trial sites are being used for the monitored research; and when the research findings will be available. [54475]

Mr. Meacher: The current workplan of the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment (ACRE) as published in their 2000 Annual Report inc[illegible] provision for six workgroups to be established in two ph[illegible] Three were established last year. The second phase to sta[illegible] summer, will include a subgroup to review the impact of GMOs on soil ecology. The group will give consideration to potential hazards and how they might be realised, the current or future GM crops and traits that might give most concern to soil ecology and where the main gaps are in current scientific understanding. The group has not yet met and is not carrying out any research in laboratories or in the field. The outputs of this group including minutes of meetings will be published on the ACRE website at http://www.defra.gov.uk/environment/gm/acre/index.htm.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the scientific assessments peer reviews that data from the GM field scale evaluations will undergo; and in what order they will take place. [65517]

Mr. Meacher: The data from the farm-scale evaluations will be collated, analysed and presented in the form of a series of scientific papers written by the research consortium conducting the ecological studies. Their work is being overseen by the Scientific Steering Committee (SSC) to ensure that it is of the highest scientific standard.

Once complete and approved by the SSC, the papers will be submitted to a reputable scientific journal for peer review and publication at the discretion of the journal. We anticipate that the report of the spring-sown crops, maize, spring oil seed rape and beet, will be published in summer 2003 and the autumn-sown oil seed rape in 2004.

Benthic Fauna

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what (a) guidance and (b) legislation is in place with regard to benthic fauna; and if she will make a statement. [65501]

Mr. Meacher: The UK Biodiversity Action Plan (UK BAP) provides a framework for the conservation of species and habitats, including benthic fauna, as well as the integration of biodiversity into all areas of policy. The UK BAP has some 40 individual action plans for important marine and coastal habitats and species, including mammals, fish, molluscs, sea anemones and algae.

The EC Habitats Directive requires member states to protect areas that support certain habitats and species, including examples of benthic fauna. My Department is working with the statutory conservation agencies to identify and select special areas of conservation in and beyond the UK's territorial waters.

Under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, a licence is required before any material can be deposited in the sea for either disposal or construction purposes. As part of the licensing process, a full environmental assessment is carried out taking account of all potential impacts on the marine environment, including benthic fauna.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what changes there have been to benthic fauna since 1997; and if she will make a statement. [65502]

Mr. Meacher: Measurement of the diversity of benthic fauna is a key component in understanding the health of UK coastal waters. We have set in place a National Marine Monitoring Programme that, on an annual basis, assesses the benthic community at a network of sites in our coastal seas.

DEFRA's Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science (CEFAS) has found that apart from some reduction in diversity in estuaries due to natural stressors and pollutants, the UK's coastal waters are generally healthy and support diverse benthic fauna showing no detrimental changes.

CEFAS is currently engaged in a repeat of a detailed 1986 survey of benthic communities across the North sea in association with European Marine Institutes under the auspices of the International Council for the Exploration of the sea. This survey will provide the most comprehensive study to date on changes in benthic communities in the North Sea.

Environmental Behaviour

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much her Department has spent on (a) programmes and (b) campaigns conducted by her Department related to changing individual behaviour in relation to the environment (i) in each year since 1997 and (ii) since 7 June 2001; and if she will make a statement. [65625]

Mr. Meacher: The Department supports several programmes to change individual behaviours in relation to the environment. They develop work undertaken before the General Election by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. These include work by the Energy Saving Trust, Environmental Campaigns Limited (incorporating the former Tidy Britain Group and Going for Green organisations), and the recipients of Environmental Action Fund grant. The "Are you doing your bit?" campaign was launched by the former Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions in 1998 and covers both environmental and transport topics. We have also consistently taken advantage of opportunities to promote individual action in other projects and public engagements, notably in the build-up to the World Summit on Sustainable Development.

Expenditure by DEFRA and DETR on programmes and campaigns to change individual behaviour 1997–98 to 2001–02

Period	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001[1]	2002[2]
Environmental Action Fund, most of which supports individual action	3,651	4,260	3,909	4,161	698	3,492
DETR/DEFRA support for ENCAMS for core costs and programmes to promote individual action	3,997	3,697	3,763	3,763	590	2,952
DETR/DEFRA support[3] for Energy Saving trust advertising to promote individual action	3,313	3,532	3,726	4,208	792	3,959
Programme total	10,961	11,489	11,398	12,132	2,080	10,403
Campaign total[4]	—	3,400	7,000	9,300	100	500[5]

[1] 1 April to 6 June 2001. Estimated by taking two-twelfths of annual spend.

[2] 7 June 2001 to 31 March 2002. Estimated by taking ten-twelfths of annual spend.

[3] It is not possible to disaggregate a small element of Scottish Executive support from this figure.

[4] Representing expenditure on the "are you doing your bit"? campaign launched in 1998.

[5] Most of the campaign's planned resource were allocated in 2001–02 to rural support during the foot and mouth disease outbreak.

Notes:

(All figures are out-turn, in £000. Figures before 7 June 2002 relate to expenditure by the former Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions).

Vacant Posts

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which posts in her Department (a) centrally and (b) regionally are vacant; and if she will make a statement. [65632]

Mr. Morley: The vacancy position in DEFRA's HQ Units (based in London, York and Guildford) as at 28 June 2002 was as follows (grades are as stated and include equivalent specialist grades):

Grade
Administrative Assistants	12.5
Administrative Officers	39
Executive Officers	35
Higher Executive Officers	38
Senior Executive Officers	19
Grade 7	30
Grade 6	9
Senior Civil Service	2

Action is in hand to fill those posts for which funding has been confirmed.

The situation in core-DEFRA's regional offices (excluding its Agencies) is also subject to available funding. The regional organisations such as the Rural Development Service and State Veterinary Service are currently assessing vacancies in the light of budgets for this financial year.

Water Industry

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what powers Ofwat has to control monopolies in water and sewerage companies. [66627]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The Director General of Water Services' powers and duties are set out in the Water Industry Act 1991. He uses his powers to place conditions on companies that, among other things, set their annual price limits. The Director General also has powers to make enforcement orders to secure companies' compliance with their conditions of appointment or with other requirements.

The Director exercises his powers and duties in a manner which he believes facilitates competition and promotes economy and efficiency. In the absence of a fully competitive market for water and sewerage services, the Director uses proxies for market competition, primarily comparative competition.

Any mergers between existing water and sewerage companies would result in the loss of a comparator and are automatically referred to the Competition

Commission. In considering the effects of the proposed merger on the public interest, the Commission is required by the Water Industry Act 1991 to have regard to the principle of avoiding prejudice to Ofwat's ability to make comparisons between different water enterprises.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what powers Ofwat has to control the level of charges for services provided by water and sewerage companies. [66628]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The Director General of Water Services has powers to set price limits. Within its price limit, each company is responsible for deciding individual charges. Under the Water Industry Act 1999, companies must publish these charges annually in a charges scheme, for which they must obtain the Director General's approval. Companies are prohibited from charging household customers other than in accordance with an approved charges scheme.

Game Excise Licences

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent (a) representations and (b) discussions she has had; what assessment she has made regarding game excise licences; and what plans she has to change them. [67250]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 5 July 2002]: The Government have received a number of recent representations on game licences. This is a highly complex area, and we are considering these and their implications for the future of the game licensing regime.

Country Sports

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much her Department and its predecessors have spent on country sports, broken down by category, in each of the last 10 years. [67252]

Alun Michael: The Department has no provision in its budgets for promoting country sports. Further, I am not aware of any such spending on country sports in respect of MAFF and the parts of the Home Office which came into DEFRA before June 2001.

With colleagues, I shall do what I can to promote sport in general in rural areas, including fishing and shooting as well as a variety of other sports.

Earth Summit

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs who will make up the United Kingdom's delegation to the Rio+10 Summit in Johannesburg. [66742]

Mr. Meacher: We are currently in the process of considering the delegation for the forthcoming World Summit on Sustainable Development but the final decision on the make up of the delegation will rest with the Prime Minister. However, both the Prime Minister and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will attend the summit.

We have been working closely with various stakeholder groups in our preparations for World Summit on Sustainable Development and representatives have been part of the UK delegation at previous preparatory meetings for WSSD. This will continue to be the case for the summit itself.

Common Land

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what representations she has received regarding changes in the value of land registered as common land under the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000; [67940]

(2) what analysis she has made of changes in the value of land registered as common land under the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000; and if she will make a statement. [67939]

Alun Michael: The Department has not received any specific representations about changes in the value of registered common land which might be due to the provisions contained in the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000. This was an issue on which comments were invited during consultation on draft regulations under section 68 of the Act relating to vehicular access over common land, but no specific representations were received. As the published regulatory impact assessment makes clear, the Department cannot predict with confidence the detailed impact of the regulations.

Landfill

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when her Department has advertised for the position of landfill directive manager in her Department since 1997; on what dates the post has been filled; and if she will make a statement. [65626]

Mr. Morley: The position of landfill directive manager (now known as 'Head of Landfill and Composting Team') has been advertised and filled as follows since 1997:

July 2000:

post advertised internally within DETR. Post filled on 20 October 2000.

December 2001:

post became vacant and was advertised internally in DEFRA. Post filled on 18 March 2002.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to meet representatives of the livestock industry to discuss animal welfare. [63001]

Mr. Morley: We regularly meet representatives of the livestock industry to discuss animal welfare issues.

Wildlife Crime

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action her Department is taking to tackle crime in relation to wildlife. [63015]

Mr. Meacher: My Department is determined to tackle wildlife crime and we have a number of relevant initiatives under way. For example, I launched the National Wildlife Crime Intelligence Unit at the end of April, and we have begun a review of Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulations 1997, which will include an assessment of the level of penalties and police powers of arrest for wildlife offences.

Grassland

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the reasons why the conditions of (a) lowland and upland calcareous grassland, (b) upland acid grassland, (c) upland heathland and (d) bogs in England are generally unfavourable; and what measures she is taking to improve them. [66779]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Assessment of the condition of these habitat types, or of specific features within them, is carried out in a number of contexts.

Countryside Survey 2000 has provided a national assessment of long-term changes in the extent and condition of habitats. The Department is funding further research to improve understanding of the underlying reasons for this and the results are expected in Spring 2003. The report and related material can be found at www.cs2000.org.uk.

As part of the UK Biodiversity Action Plan (UKBAP) individual action plans have been published for upland and lowland calcareous grassland, upland heathland and bogs. Each plan contains an assessment of the factors affecting the habitat, targets for maintenance or improvement of the habitat condition and actions aimed at achieving these targets. Implementation of the action plans is being led by the statutory conservation agencies in partnership with the relevant Government and voluntary sector bodies. Further information on the plans can be found at www.ukbap.org.uk.

English Nature also assess the condition of Sites of Special Scientific Interest (SSSIs). Where SSSIs are not in a favourable condition, a number of factors may contribute to this. Agriculture is a major factor, particularly grazing intensity. Overgrazing or undergrazing can adversely affect the condition of sites. We are addressing these problems on a number of fronts. For example, we continue to expand agri-environment schemes, which can assist many of these habitats. In addition, the sheep quota purchase scheme announced on 26 June is an example of the development of more direct and innovative measures to help alleviate grazing pressure.

Grazing regimes also affect these habitats on common land. We shall shortly announce our plans for improving the legislation to enable better management of common land.

In relation to SSSIs, English Nature are also able to enter into management agreements with land managers to prevent activities which can be damaging to these sites. Currently 201,000 hectares are subject to such agreements.

Air Pollution

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research her Department has commissioned into (a) the acute, short-term and (b) the chronic, long-term effects on health of (i) nitrogen dioxide, (ii) carbon monoxide and (iii) particles in regard to air pollution. [64662]

Ms Blears [holding answer 27 June 2002]: I have been asked to reply.

The Department has been commissioning research into the effects of air pollutants on health since 1991. A range of projects dealing with both long-term and short-term effects of air pollutants on health has been funded. Many of these projects deal with more than one air pollutant.

Decisions regarding a new research programme were taken on 14 June. Nine projects will be funded to a total cost of about £1 million. Of the nine projects, three deal with long-term effects, four with short-term effects and one with both long and short-term effects. One project focuses specifically on nitrogen dioxide, the others deal with pollutants in general with a special focus on particles. No work on carbon monoxide has been agreed as yet though a project on long-term effects of exposure to carbon monoxide is being held as a "first reserve".

Details of the new programme will be placed in the Library.

A summary list of all work funded prior to the new programme will also be placed in the Library.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Nepal

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her Department's assessment is of the security situation in Nepal; and what effect it has had on her Department's ability to provide development and humanitarian aid. [67037]

Clare Short: The security situation has deteriorated sharply since the Maoists abandoned peace negotiations in November last year. Since then an estimated 3,000 people have died as a result of the conflict.

The Government holds all the district towns, but large parts of the countryside are under effective control of the Maoists. The intensity of the conflict varies, with the Maoist "heartland" areas of the mid-west and far-west most affected.

The war is generally regarded to be unwinnable by military means alone, as the country is ideally suited to guerrilla warfare. There are growing concerns about human rights violations on both sides. In recent weeks, there has been a noticeable decline in confrontations between the Security Forces and the Maoists, but this lull in the fighting is believed to be temporary.

While there is no direct threat against development workers, there are indirect risks of being caught in crossfire. Restrictions on movement, especially of people and supplies, and the withdrawal of Government counterparts in rural areas, means that Government development programmes in some remote areas has effectively stopped. None the less, Maoists are allowing continuation of development projects in some areas under their control, particularly where work is strongly supported by local communities.

UK funded development assistance is continuing, albeit more slowly. In addition to existing work on rural livelihoods, rural infrastructure, health and governance, my Department is implementing a programme of short-term support for people in conflict affected areas, and are working to re-orientate the entire DFID programme towards conflict resolution.

We have not yet reached a situation of acute humanitarian crisis except in a few isolated locations, and there are no plans as yet to provide humanitarian assistance although we are monitoring the situation very closely.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much her Department allocated for (a) bi-lateral aid to Nepal and (b) non-Governmental organisations working in Nepal for (i) 2000–01 and (ii) 2001–02; and if she will make a statement. [67428]

Clare Short: UK development assistance to Nepal in 2000–01 totalled £17.165 million, of which approximately £2.9 million was channelled through NGOs working in Nepal. In 2001–02 the approximate figure for total expenditure was £20 million, and around £3 million was channelled through NGOs.

Montserrat

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 in Montserrat. [67503]

Clare Short: The figures requested are available in "Statistics on International Development", (SID), Table 7.2 which shows a breakdown of bilateral aid by country in the Americas for the last five financial years. A copy of this publication is available in the Library of the House.

St. Helena

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 in St. Helena. [67501]

Clare Short: The figures requested are available in "Statistics on International Development", (SID), Table 7.1 which shows a breakdown of bilateral aid for the last five financial years. A copy of this publication is available in the Library of the House.

Civil Society Challenge Fund

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 2000–01 on the Civil Society Challenge Fund. [67527]

Clare Short: The figures requested are available in "Statistics on International Development", (SID), Table 13 which shows a breakdown of bilateral grants and other aid in kind, including the Civil Society Challenge Fund, for the last five financial years. A copy of this publication is available in the Library of the House.

Oceana Regional

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 in Oceana Regional. [67502]

Clare Short: The figures requested are available in Statistics on International Development, (SID), Table 7.5 which shows a breakdown of bilateral aid to the Pacific region for the last five financial years. A copy of this publication is available in the Library of the House.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 in (a) Anguilla, (b) Burma, (c) Jordan and (d) Vietnam. [67504]

Clare Short: The figures requested are available in Statistics on International Development, (SID), Tables 7.1 to 7.4 which show a breakdown of bilateral aid by country for the last five financial years. A copy of this publication is available in the Library of the House.

Urban Development Projects

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on water and sanitation in infrastructure and urban development projects. [67521]

Clare Short: Annual figures are given in the table.

	£ million[1]	Percentage[2]
1997–98	617	9
1998–99	1,168	11
1999–2000	940	7
2000–01	1,388	7
2001–02[3]	1,306	1

[1] Bilateral commitments total. For projects with a commitment figure greater than £100,000.

[2] Proportion on water supply and sanitation.

[3] Provisional figures.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on engineering in infrastructure and urban development projects. [67524]

Clare Short: My Department's expenditure on engineering in Infrastructure and Urban Development since 1998–99 has been as set out.

£000

Financial year	Energy	Transport and Communications	Water and Sanitation	Urban and Industrial Development	Construction
1998–99	61,001	47,673	29,846	6,678	878
1999–2000	38,686	48,820	35,902	9,430	628
2000–01	32,279	40,615	34,204	11,241	479
Total	131,966	137,107	99,951	27,349	1,985

Joint Funding Scheme

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 2000–01 on the civil society bilateral programme entitled the Joint Funding Scheme. [67526]

Clare Short: The figures requested are available in "Statistics on International Development", (SID), Table 13 which shows a breakdown of bilateral grants and other aid in kind including the Joint Funding Scheme for the last five financial years. A copy of this publication is available in the Library of the House.

Developing Countries

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the value of property rights for poor people in the economic development of developing countries; what her Department is doing to promote property rights of poor people in the developing world; which projects her Department supports that promote the establishment of property rights for poor people in developing countries; and what the value of each project was in each of the last five years. [66808]

Clare Short: Property rights are an important element in poor people's range of livelihood assets and can assist directly in processes that eliminate poverty. My Department has made a series of assessments of property rights, mainly concerning land ownership and housing, in both rural and urban contexts.

Research has been undertaken, for example, to establish the range of tenure arrangements available to poor people in developing countries that allow people degrees of security and freedom in where they live, from which they can build their livelihoods for the future. The results are published by Intermediate Technology Development Group Publishing under the title "Land, Rights and Innovation". This tenure framework is currently being used to observe how poor people manage to establish their property rights in 15 developing countries. The work is being shared with the UN and World bank.

My Department is promoting better awareness of the role of property rights in poverty reduction through core funding support to UN-Habitat who are running their Global Campaign for Secure Tenure in 11 developing countries, and core funding support to the Centre on Housing Rights and Evictions which is based in Geneva. Support is also provided to the Asian Coalition for Housing Rights.

Secure land and property rights for the poor are essential if they are to contribute to and benefit from economic development, and to unlock access to essential services and to finance for small-scale investment opportunities of all kinds. Many poor people have no or insecure property rights and can fall victim to forced evictions by landlords governments and commercial land development in both town and country.

Secure rights can be provided through various forms of tenure, and DFID is working actively throughout the world, especially in Africa and with global institutions to help developing countries establish effective policies and institutions to deliver secure property rights to the poor and prevent evictions. In those cases where we have a direct role to play, DFID projects have helped governments to deliver secure rights and land titles to the poor; I would highlight:

South Africa were we spent £5.9 million up to 2000—a further phase is now being prepared in addition to a project earmarked at £5 million to help the SADC countries strengthen property rights for the poor throughout the Southern African Region

Guyana where a £4.39 million project is due to end in 2003

Support to Kenya Land Reform £0.47 million

Uganda Land Laws (Tenure) £1.35 million

Asian Coalition for Housing Rights £2.19 million

Property Rights in Croatia £0.59 million

10 projects in the former Soviet Union totalling £3.53 million, and £295,000 through NGO partners in Bangladesh, directly assisting the poor access land and secure their rights.

41 projects both small and large with a total value of £34.34 million have been contributing to our overall efforts over the last five years. In addition DFID supports research projects into how best to enable access to land and secure property rights for the poor in different contexts in various countries; in the same period there have been 19 research projects with a total value of £2.5 million.

Kenya

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with (a) the Government of Kenya and (b) the British high commission in Nairobi regarding political and ethnic violence and human rights abuses in Kenya; and what projects her Government support to promote justice for victims of ethnic and political violence in Kenya. [66812]

Clare Short: British officials and I raise these issues regularly in our frequent contacts with the Kenyan Government. Our programme in Kenya includes a project co-funded by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Ministry of Defence to prevent and settle internal conflict. We also support organisations offering legal aid to disadvantaged people including those who may be affected by ethnic and political violence; and we are working with the Kenyan Government to develop a pilot legal aid scheme.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her Department is doing to promote democratic reform in Kenya. [66810]

Clare Short: DFID's Political Empowerment Programme together with other donors' programmes, aim to strengthen Kenya's political system by enabling poor and marginalised groups to organise and influence government and strengthening democratic institutions including Parliament. In addition DFID and high commission officials have frequent contacts with the Kenyan Government and Opposition on democratic issues.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the level of (a) political violence and (b) human rights abuses in Kenya; and how her Department responds to such violence and human rights abuses. [66811]

Clare Short: My officials in Nairobi, working in close consultation with our British High Commission, carefully monitor all reports of political violence and human rights abuses in Kenya and raise any concerns with the relevant authorities.

Failed States

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her policy is towards failed states; and which countries her Department classifies as failed states. [66807]

Clare Short: Our policy is to help resolve the underlying economic, social and political problems by promoting change in government and its policies and to work, where we can, inside and outside government, to achieve our objectives, especially support to poor people.

Problems of policy, commitment and governance are found in varying degrees in a number of states.

Human Rights Commissions

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development in which countries she contributes assistance to the work of a human rights commission; how much has been contributed in the past three years for which figures are available; and what proportion of the total budget of that body this sum represents. [66699]

Clare Short: My Department has directly supported the human rights commissions of Rwanda and Zambia. In the former, we financed a review, and in the latter the production of a strategy. This work cost £10,800 in 2000–01 and £27,200 in 1998–99 respectively. I shall write to the hon. Member on the final part of his question, which could not be researched in the time available.

The Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights takes primary responsibility for assisting governments to establish such institutions. Planned funding by my Department of OHCHR amounts to £6 million over three years, under the terms of an Institutional Strategy Paper sighed in 1999. This support is for broad improvement in capacity. Under this arrangement we have provided in the calendar years:

	£ million
2000	1.247
2001	2.115

Information on its website, http:/www.unhchr.ch shows that total extra-budgetary expenditure in 2001 by OHCHR was US$48.8 million, of which 0.8 per cent. was allocated to national human rights institutions.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office provided £100,000 to OHCHR in 2001 for support to national institutions, and plan £150,000 in 2002.

G8 Digital Opportunities Task Force

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many staff from her Department are working with the G8 Digital Opportunities Task Force. [67002]

Clare Short: The G8 DOT Force was formally wound up in June 2002, but during its two years of existence, my Department was represented by its Director General Resources, who called on appropriate specialist support as necessary in carrying out this role. In practice, this specialist support drew in the additional expertise of at least five other key staff.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial support her Department is giving in 2002–03 to the G8 Digital Opportunities Task Force. [67001]

Clare Short: The G8 DOT Force was formally wound up in June 2002, but we intend to continue our support for some of its key deliverables, especially those focused on Africa. During the DOT Force's two years of existence, my Department spent over £300,000 in direct support to encourage a strong developing country and civil society voice in the DOT Force.

Malawi

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the results of the initiative to improve safety, security and access to justice in Malawi. [67005]

Clare Short: A formal assessment of progress is not due until April 2003. The MASSAJ programme is working closely with key institutions in the Malawi justice sector—including the Ministries of Justice and Home Affairs, Malawi Police Service, the judiciary and the magistracy; it is supporting the redrafting of the anti-corruption legislation and the roll of pilot juvenile justice initiatives. The programme includes co-operation with (i) the EU on strengthening the independence of the judiciary; (ii) NORAD in reducing the incidence of small arms; and (iii) USAID on strengthening paralegal support which enables poor people to access justice.

Buildings Insurance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the cost of buildings insurance to her Department was (a) before and (b) after 11 September 2001. [66935]

Clare Short: Only one of our buildings was previously insured, namely our London headquarters at 94 Victoria Street. Under the terms of the lease, we were required to reimburse the landlord at an annual cost of £40,000. Since vacating these premises in December last year, our buildings insurance costs are nil, since our buildings are self-insured, ie the Crown carries the risk. The specific events of 11 September had no direct consequence on our insurance costs.

Building Values

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the buildings owned by her Department and estimate the market value of each of them. [66953]

Clare Short: The only UK property owned by DFID is our office in East Kilbride. It was last valued at £3.5 million, of which the building itself is £2.9 million and the surrounding land £0.6 million. In addition, we own three freehold properties in Zimbabwe, last valued at £276,000, one property in the Solomon Islands (value: £65,000) and one in Kiribati (value: £17,000).

International Development Finance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on the African Development Bank; [67511]

(2) if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on the European Development Fund VIII; [67512]

(3) if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on the Caribbean Development Bank; [67507]

(4) if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on the Asian Development Fund; [67508]

(5) if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on the Asian Development Bank; [67509]

(6) if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on the Inter-American Development Bank; [67505]

(7) if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on IMF funds. [67535]

Clare Short: The figures requested are available in "Statistics on International Development", (SID), Table 8 which shows a breakdown of gross public expenditure on multilateral contributions for the last five financial years. A copy of this publication is available in the Library of the House.

Anti-corruption Issues

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the cost to her Department was of the establishment in January of a resource centre to advise on anti-corruption issues. [66999]

Clare Short: The cost of establishing and running the Utstein Anti-Corruption Resource Centre will be approximately £870,000 over three years. Support for the resource centre will be shared between the four Utstein partners of the Netherlands, Norway, Germany and the UK.

Anti-corruption Commission (Sierra Leone)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what contribution has been made by her Department to the establishment of the Anti-Corruption Commission in Sierra Leone. [66998]

Clare Short: My Department has been involved since 1999 in establishing the Anti-Corruption Commission in Sierra Leone, from initial feasibility studies, detailed organisational design work, refurbishment of office accommodation, and the provision of equipment. We have allocated £1.45 million to the organisation since October 2000. Currently four British anti-corruption experts are attached to the commission providing technical support on prevention, and helping to investigate cases. Publicity and prevention campaigns have been launched in a number of key areas, helping to place corruption at the very top of the political agenda.

Cameroon

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what international election observers were present at the recent parliamentary and municipal elections in Cameroon; and if she will make a statement on the outcome of the elections. [66809]

Mr. Straw: I have been asked to reply.

The Commonwealth, Francophonie, UN and OAU all had election observer teams in Cameroon at the time of the municipal and legislative elections.

We are concerned at early indications of procedural irregularities in the elections, and now await both the official results of the elections and the reports of the observer missions.

DEFENCE

Times Letter

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he was advised, and by whom, that the named authors of a letter to The Times published on 13 May were not serving officers; [58997]

(2) when his Department informed The Times that the names of the officers purporting to have signed the letter published on 13 May were bogus. [58998]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence was advised on the day of publication by the Director News that the signed authors of the letter were not members of the Armed Forces.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 10 June 2002, Official Report, column 757W to the hon. Member for Essex North (Mr. Jenkin).

Ro-Ro Ferries

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress with procurement of roll-on, roll-off ferries requirement as listed in the strategic defence review. [51493]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 25 April 2002]: Construction of the six ships to meet the Ministry of Defence's requirement is proceeding to schedule. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 27 June 2002, Official Report, column 1038W to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby North (Mr. Laxton).

HMS Boxer and HMS Brave

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his deployment plans are for HMS Boxer and HMS Brave. [66761]

Mr. Ingram: HMS Boxer and HMS Brave are currently moored at HM Naval Base, Portsmouth.

The ships have been de-equipped to an unclassified status and all stores have been removed. As part of the disposal process, significant quantities of material have been returned to Ministry of Defence stores to assist with fulfilling fleet shortage requirements.

The platforms are designated for CINCFLEET High Seas Firing (i.e. Hulk Targets) in 2003–05.

HMS Victoria

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost is of repairs being made to HMS Victoria; how much of this cost the UK will bear; and if he will make a statement. [67422]

Mr. Ingram: My officials have not received any formal representations from the Canadian Government about the condition of the ex upholder class submarine HMS Unseen, now re-named HMCS Victoria, and as such have no information about the cost of repairs. My officials will of course assist with any Canadian inquiries.

HMS Monmouth

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the refit of HMS Monmouth will be complete; what the total cost of the refit will be; when she will return to service; and if he will make a statement. [67143]

Mr. Ingram: HMS Monmouth's refit, including associated sea trials, is planned to complete in spring 2003, at which time the ship will be available for operational deployment. The final price of the refit is still in negotiation, and will be based upon the eventual work package that will emerge from ship surveys. However, it is expected to be in the region of £19 million.

Invincible Class Carriers

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how many days each of the Invincible class carriers were operational in each of the past five years. [67566]

Mr. Ingram: For the past five years the Invincible Class Carriers were operational for the following number of days:

	Invincible	Illustrious	Ark Royal
1997	333	244	0
1998	193	301	0
1999	225	201	0
2000	264	263	0
2001	346	103	53

During the period 1997 until late 2001, HMS ARK ROYAL was not available due firstly, to a period of extended readiness, followed by a major refit period.

84 Squadron

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the establishment of pilots on 84 Squadron is; and how many of these are civilians. [67560]

Mr. Ingram: Five pilots are established on 84 Squadron including the Commanding Officer. None of the pilots is a civilian.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ground crew support the operations of 84 Squadron; and how many of these are civilians. [67561]

Mr. Ingram: Forty-seven ground crew support the operations of 84 Squadron. None of the ground crew is a civilian.

Armilla Patrol

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vessels have been searched by Armilla Patrol warships in each of the past five years. [67564]

Mr. Ingram: The Royal Navy continues to make a valuable contribution to the Multinational Interception Force deployed in the Gulf, in accordance with UN SCR 665, to verify Iraqi compliance with UN sanctions which focus controls on Iraq's attempts to export oil illegally and import defence equipment and weapons of mass destruction related goods.

MIF operations are a coalition effort and so are not recorded nationally. However, from ships logs, we believe that in the last three years RN vessels have participated in a total of 145 boardings: 36 in 2000; 57 in 2001; and 52 to date in 2002.

Literacy/Numeracy Rates

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the UK armed forces he estimates have (a) literacy and (b) numeracy problems; and if he will make a statement. [67104]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Territorial Army

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on the deployment of the TA (a) as battlefield replacements and (b) formed units. [52478]

Dr. Moonie: The Strategic Defence Review concluded that the main role of the Territorial Army should be to provide formed units and individuals as an essential reinforcement to their Regular Army counterparts when deployed on operations across all military tasks.

In keeping with this, both volunteer and regular reservists have contributed significantly to operations at home and overseas in recent times.

Munitions Depots

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in respect of the closure of the munitions depot at Dean Hill, Wiltshire, what will be (a) the expected annual savings to his Department, (b) the anticipated revenue from the sale of married quarters to (i) sitting tenants and (ii) the market, (c) the estimated cost of connection of the married quarters estate to civilian services for (A) electricity, (B) water and (C) gas, (d) the ongoing annual maintenance of the site broken down into (1) buildings, (2) ground maintenance and (3) security and (e) the estimated market value of the site at sale. [65705]

Mr. Ingram: The annual savings from the closure of the Dean Hill site are estimated to be £2.083 million once all one-off expenditure is taken into account.

We currently estimate the cost of separating as, electricity—£50,000; water—£40,000; sewerage—£90,000. Gas is already supplied from a separate Calor gas tank. All figures exclude VAT. The annual maintenance budget can be broken down as follows: buildings—£894,000; grounds maintenance—£25,000. So far as security is concerned the approximate cost of the Ministry of Defence police presence at DM Dean Hill was £800,000 for financial year 2001–02.

Although the Ministry of Defence has assessed the disposal value of the West Dean site and associated residential properties, these are likely to be sold on the open market. To release our estimates of value could influence the eventual receipt, and I am, therefore, withholding this information under Exemption 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Departmental Report

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the 2002 departmental report will be published. [49577]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 15 April 2002, Official Report, column 774W by the then Chief Secretary (Mr. Smith).

Armed Forces Pay

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his estimate is of the average annual rise in pay for individuals employed in the armed forces in each year from 1990–91 to 2000–02; what the increase in the defence budget was in each year; and if he will make a statement. [66267]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Information on increase in the pay of the armed forces is not available in the form requested. However, the annual pay awards for the armed forces as recommended by the Armed Forces Pay Review Body (AFPRB), for the years 1990–91 to 2000–01 are outlined in the table. Overall annual increases in the defence budget for these years are also shown.

Per cent.

Financial year	Pay awards	Increase/decrease in defence budget
1990–91	8.70	–0.85
1991–92	9.50	3.72
1992–93	5.90	–9.19
1993–94	1.50	–3.06
1994–95	3.00	–2.16
1995–96	2.30	–7.27
1996–97	3.20	0.67
1997–98	3.00	–6.18
1998–99	3.75	1.17
1999–2000	3.50	–2.00
2000–01	3.30	2.50

The figures for the pay awards reflect the AFPRB recommendations for the majority of service personnel in each year. Within these overall awards, however, some personnel have received higher increases where the review body has targeted specific ranks in a given year. The figures in the table exclude the effects of the staging of the implementation of the awards, increases in the level of X factor and increases due to adjustments to the pension abatement.

Staging of pay awards for the armed forces took place in 1990, 1994, 1996, 1997 and 1998.

The figures for the defence budget represent the cash outturn in each of the years including the additional costs of operations.

Colchester Garrison

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 July 2002, Official Report, column 36W, if he will re-evaluate the terms of the Private Finance Initiative of the new Colchester Garrison; and if he will make a statement. [67090]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 5 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for North Essex (Mr. Jenkin) on 2 July 2002, Official Report, column 232W.

Nuclear Missile Defence

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expenditure is planned on nuclear missile defence. [66685]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 3 July 2002]: We plan to spend about £4 million on missile defence-related activities, which consist solely of collaborative research and information exchange between the United Kingdom and the United States on ballistic missile defence technologies.

Narcotics

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the dedicated counter-narcotics activities of the British armed forces and the costs of these activities in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement; [67562]

(2) what quantities of narcotics have been confiscated by HM forces in each of the past five years. [67563]

Mr. Ingram: There are no military assets dedicated to counter narcotics activities and consequently no cost directly attributable to the Ministry of Defence. Military forces are, however, made available upon request, when operational commitments and resources allow, to support the counter drugs activities of the law enforcement agencies. Any additional costs for this support are reimbursed by the agency concerned.

Counter narcotics operations requiring military support resulted in the seizure of drugs valued at £2.3 billion in 1999–2000 and £40 million in 2001–02. There were no seizures resulting from operations involving military support in 1997–98, 1998–99 or 2000–01.

Falklands Commemorations

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what events he has attended this year in connection with Falklands conflict commemorations. [67570]

Mr. Ingram: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence visited the Falklands Islands in March and attended a service of commemoration at the Liberation Memorial in Stanley.

Following his visit to the islands he also laid a wreath at the memorial in Buenos Aires to commemorate the Argentine service men who died during the conflict.

I visited the islands in June to represent Her Majesty's Government at commemorations to mark the 20th anniversary of the end of the conflict.

Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what British military aid is being given to the FYR of Macedonia [illegible] [67182]

(2) what [illegible] policy is on future military aid to the FYR of Macedonia [illegible] [67183]

Mr. Ingram: There has been no significant change to British military aid being provided to Macedonia or future policy in that respect since the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 26 March 2002, Official Report, columns 854–[illegible]W.

Iraq

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's compliance with UN decisions concerning Iraq. [63810]

Mr. Hoon: Government policy towards Iraq has been developed within the framework of UN Security Council Resolutions.

The British armed forces continue to play an important role in enforcing as far as possible, UNSCRs against Iraq. Royal Navy vessels continue to make a valuable contribution to the Multinational Interception Force deployed in the Gulf to verify Iraqi compliance with UN sanctions. Royal Air Force aircraft patrol the Iraqi No Fly Zones in support of UN SCR 688, which demanded an end to Saddam's brutal repression of his own people. We also contribute a small contingent of British armed forces personnel to the UN Iraq Kuwait Observer Mission established under UN SCR 687 to monitor the UN defined border and demilitarised zone between Iraq and Kuwait.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Academic Staff

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will estimate the numbers of academic staff on short-term contracts in each university in England and Wales since 1997 (a) in total numbers and (b) as a percentage of total academic staff. [62031]

Margaret Hodge: The information requested has been placed in the Libraries.

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will list the EU directives relating to her Department which have been (a) amended and (b) repealed in 2002. [64938]

Margaret Hodge: My Department is currently working on legislation to amend the implementing regulations for directive 92/51/EEC. This has arisen out of directive 2001/19/EC which makes various amendments to several European directives relating to recognition of qualifications. The implementation date of directive 2001/19/EC is 1 January 2003.

No other EU directives have been amended in 2002, and none has been repealed.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will list the EU directives and regulations that have been implemented through her Department in 2002; and what was the cost of each to public funds. [64988]

Margaret Hodge: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 10 April 2002.

No EU directives or regulations have been implemented through my Department in 2002. There has therefore been no cost to public funds.

Universities

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment she has made of the link between staffing levels and the quality of teaching and research in universities. [65205]

Margaret Hodge: The Department has carried out no specific assessment of links between staffing levels and the quality of teaching and research in universities. However, the recently completed QAA eight-year cycle of subject reviews in higher education, which included an assessment of teaching quality, has identified only 1 per cent. of unsatisfactory provision. In addition, the 2001 Research Assessment Exercise showed that 55 per cent. of research staff now work in departments which contain work of international excellence (rated five or five-star) compared with 31 per cent. in the previous exercise in 1996. Staffing levels in higher education have increased by 10 per cent. over the last five years and so have student numbers.

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the level of funding provision for the university of Manchester Institute of Science and Technology; and what plans she has to increase funding for UMIST. [65206]

Margaret Hodge: The funding of individual institutions is determined by the Higher Education Funding Council for England, which allocated total resources of £36.7 million to the university of Manchester Institute of Science and Technology for the academic year 2001–02. For the year 2002–03, it plans to allocate £36.9 million.

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what her policy is on amalgamation of universities to create centres of academic excellence; and if she will make a statement. [65208]

Margaret Hodge: The Government recognise the importance of having universities able to compete with the best in the world and support higher education institutions in their pursuit of excellence. We will encourage and support universities who wish to choose amalgamation to promote excellence within the constraints of both our powers and availabilities of resources.

Student Statistics

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time students were in (i) FE and (ii) HE in each of the years 1992–93 to 2001–02. [65398]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The information is shown in the table.

[1] Census count as at 31 December in years up to 1993–94, and as at 1 December in subsequent years. Covers all home and overseas students on postgraduate and undergraduate courses, including HE students in FE colleges and the Open University.

[2] Includes FE students in HE institutions in all years, and sixth form colleges as from 1993–94. Due to a change in data collection, the figures for FE sector colleges for the years 1994–95 to 2000–01 are not comparable with those for earlier years; as from 1994–95 the figures are based on a whole year count of students, whereas in previous years they are based on a snapshot count at 1 November. As from 1994–95, includes funded and non-funded students.

[3] HE figures are provisional.

[4] Not available—the whole year count of students in FE sector colleges is collected retrospectively at the end of the academic year.

Note:

Figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred; components may therefore not sum to totals.

Autistic Children

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many autistic children are statemented in England and Wales; [65674]

(2) what estimate she has made of changes in the number of autistic children in England and Wales in the past five years. [65677]

Margaret Hodge: The information requested is not available centrally.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations she has received in the past year from parents who have had autistic children placed in mainstream schools against their wishes. [65676]

Margaret Hodge: Parents who object to local education authority proposals to place statemented pupils in mainstream schools may appeal to the Special Educational Needs Tribunal. In the current school year the tribunal has received 123 appeals from parents who did not wish their autistic children to be educated in mainstream schools.

Departmental Waste

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of waste produced in her Department was (a) recycled, (b) composted, (c) re-used, broken down into (i) paper, (ii) plastics, (iii) aluminium cans and (iv) other, in each year since 1997; what plans there are to increase the proportions; and if she will make a statement. [65681]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The table shows the proportions of waste re-used or recycled by the Department in the last two years. No waste was composted. This information was not collected in the form requested prior to the periods shown.

Percentage

Waste type	2000–01[1]	2001–02[1]
Paper/cardboard	20.4	17.5
Plastics	0.1	.07
Cans/glass	1.5	.8
Other	3.1	16.2

[1] Percentage of waste re-used or recycled.

We will continue to monitor developments in waste management, and work with local authority partners and waste service providers to improve these levels.

Higher Education Statistics

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of people aged under 25 years from each socio-economic group participated in higher education in each of the last 12 years. [65793]

Margaret Hodge: Information is not available exactly as requested. The available information relates to the social class breakdown of the Age Participation Index (API) from 1990 to 2000, and is shown in the table. The API is defined as the number of UK domiciled under 21 initial entrants to full-time and sandwich courses expressed as a proportion of the averaged 18 to 19-year-old population. The sharp rise in participation rates in the early 1990s reflects the expansion of the higher education sector during these years. There was an increase in entrant numbers in 1997 related partly to the funding arrangements for higher education, with students choosing to enter HE rather than wait until 1998. There was a corresponding reduction in 1998 before the entry rates started to increase again in 1999.

The Government are committed to raising the participation rates for people from less affluent family backgrounds, and has introduced Excellence Challenge, including the AimHigher campaign, which is targeted at raising attainment and aspirations among young people who traditionally would not consider going to university.

Teachers/Lecturers Pay

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when she estimates the Government's objective of broad convergence in pay and terms and conditions between school teachers and further education lecturers will be achieved. [66081]

Margaret Hodge: We have acknowledged the historic gap between funding in schools and further education (FE) colleges and we have pledged to bring up the levels of support for FE to ensure upward convergence of funding between the two sectors. We will do this over time and as resources allow. However, as independent corporations, it is for each FE college to agree annual pay rises and conditions of employment with its staff in the context of the overall resources available to it.

We are investing significant funding in the FE sector. An additional £314 million is available for FE this year compared with 2001–02 and by 2003–04, total funding for FE will be up by 26 per cent. in real terms since 1997, with total funding per full-time equivalent student up by 16 per cent. over the same period. Separate to any general pay rise a FE lecturer may receive, the Teaching Pay Initiative (TPI) provides £311 million over the period 2001–04 to reward excellent teaching. The substantial additional investment we are making in the sector should help the FE sector support the pay aspirations of their staff.

AS-Level Examinations

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the AS-Level examinations; and what changes will be made in the structure of sixth form studies. [66155]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Last September, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced a number of changes to AS-level examinations. The length of some AS examination papers was reduced with most lasting one hour, enabling a complete AS to be taken in half a day. The examination timetable was restructured to reduce clashes and ease the burden of administration of examinations on schools and colleges.

The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) continue to review Curriculum 2000 reforms and are due to report to Ministers following the summer examination results. We shall carefully consider QCA's recommendations and take necessary actions.

Student Funding

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when she plans to announce the results of her Department's review of student funding; and if she will make a statement. [66268]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The review of higher education student funding is still underway. We will make an announcement later this year, when the review is complete.

Pre-schools

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans she has to increase capital expenditure on pre-schools; and if she will make a statement. [66270]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 4 July 2002]: We are already making a significant amount of capital funding available for pre-school provision. Over the two financial years 2002–03 and 2003–04, the Government are making available £40 million of capital funding for the provision of free nursery education places in disadvantaged areas.

In addition, up to £100 million of capital funding is available via the New Opportunities Fund in 2001–04 to create 45,000 child care places in neighbourhood nurseries. Early years settings may qualify to receive this funding by providing wraparound care in addition to sessional care.

Similarly, £6 million capital grant is available over the financial years 2002–03 and 2003–04 to provide modest help to playgroups seeking to develop the services they offer from sessional to daycare.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when the EU Committee on the second general system for the recognition of professional education and training is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66457]

Margaret Hodge: There has been just one meeting of the Committee in the last five years—in November 2001. No further meeting of the Committee is currently scheduled. Membership of the Committee is vested in the UK Co-ordinator for directive 92/51/EEC, who is an official of this Department. Representatives of the Scottish Executive did not attend the meeting in November 2001, but have the opportunity to attend meetings should they wish to do so.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when the EU Leonardo da [illegible] Committee is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66463]

Margaret Hodge: The Leonardo da Vinci programme management committee is due to meet on 11 and 12 July 2002. Representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have not been and (b) are not members of this Committee. The UK is represented by officials from the Joint International Unit of the Department for Education and Skills and the Department for Work and Pensions. Representatives of the Scottish Executive participate fully in the National Co-ordination Group which oversees the administration and implementation of the programme in the United Kingdom. These arrangements are in accordance with the Memorandum of Understanding between the UK Government and the devolved Administrations.

University Students (Low Income Families)

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what proportion of university entrants from (a) Jarrow, (b) south-Tyneside, (c) the north-east and (d) the UK were from low income families in 2001; [66582]

(2) what the proportion of university entrants from low income families was in (a) Jarrow, (b) south Tyneside, (c) the north-east and (d) the UK in each year since 1997. [66583]

Margaret Hodge: The available information from the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) for students from south Tyneside, the north-east and the UK, is shown in the table. UCAS do not routinely identify students from areas such as Jarrow, which lie within local authorities. The information is based on the social class of the applicants, which will not necessarily equate directly to levels of family income.

The Government are committed to raising the participation rates for people from less affluent family backgrounds, and has introduced Excellence Challenge, including the AimHigher campaign, which is targeted at raising attainment and aspirations among young people who traditionally would not consider going to university.

Connexions

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what progress has been made in involving faith communities in the work of Connexions at (a) central and (b) local levels. [66705]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: One of the principles of the Connexions strategy is to take account of the views of young people both individually and collectively. This includes young people from faith communities and the organisations that represent them. Nationally, the Connexions Service National Unit has discussed and agreed with the Catholic Education Service the basis on which Connexions personal advisers work in Catholic schools and colleges. Locally, Connexions partnerships work with many different voluntary and community groups which support young people, including faith-based organisations. There are examples across the country of faith based organisations being involved in local Connexions management or advisory groups. Some local faith based organisations receive grants from Connexions Partnerships. Organisations with a faith basis also feature prominently among the National Voluntary Youth Organisations (NVYOs) who receive funds from the Department's NVYO Grant Scheme. This is administered by the Connexions Service National Unit to support personal development programmes for young people.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much Connexions (a) spent and (b) transferred to other bodies in the last financial year; and how many members of staff it employs. [66706]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: In the last financial year (2001–02) the Connexions Service spent approximately £320 million. Of that, £107 million was incurred by Connexions Partnerships—i.e. those fifteen that were operating during 2001–02; twelve of which were in place for the full 12 months and three for the last seven months. The remainder was used to support careers services in those areas where Connexions was not operational and to fund central costs such as the training of personal advisers.

We do not collect information centrally on the exact amount of funding transferred to other bodies, mainly because the variety of different ways in which Partnerships operate makes it impractical to do so. It is for each Connexions Partnership to determine, within broad guidelines, how best to use its funding to meet identified local needs. In some cases this involves sub-contracting work to other organisations such as voluntary and community bodies.

According to the latest available information (relating to the situation at the end of March 2002), the 15 Connexions Partnerships operational at that time employed 3,933 staff—this includes all staff involved in the delivery of Connexions i.e. delivery staff (mainly personal advisers), managerial and administrative staff, etc.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much funding Connexions receives from Government sources; what non-governmental sources of income Connexions has; how much Connexions disburses to other organisations; and by what mechanisms Connexions makes this money available. [66708]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: In the current financial year (2002–03), Connexions has been allocated £446 million from central Government funds. The majority of that funding (ie £359 million) is devolved to Connexions Partnerships through the main Connexions grant—this relates to the 27 partnerships operational at the start of 2002–03 and the remaining 20 due to become operational during the financial year. The remainder of the overall Connexions budget is used to support careers services in those areas where Connexions is not yet fully operational and to fund central costs such as the training of personal advisers.

We do not have an exhaustive list of other sources of income but they include the European Social Fund, the National Lottery, the private sector, the Learning and Skills Council and local partners such as local authorities, etc. The strength of Connexions is its ability to pull together the contributions of a range of local partners to eliminate any gaps and duplication in the provision of support for young people. Much of the contribution of local partners is, therefore, of an "in-kind" nature rather than simply financial.

We are not yet able to quantify how much funding Connexions partnerships expect to receive in 2002–03 from sources other than the main Connexions grant. However, in the last financial year (2001–02), operational Connexions Partnerships received approximately £1.4 million in cash plus an estimated £8 million in contributions "in-kind" from sources other than the main Connexions grant. Early data from partnerships' business plans show that those figures are expected to be substantially greater this year.

We do not collect information centrally on the exact amount of funding disbursed to other organisations, mainly because the variety of different ways in which partnerships operate makes it impractical to do so. Once their funding has been allocated to them by DfES, Connexions Partnerships have the flexibility to use it in whatever manner they judge to be the most effective in relation to their local circumstances. In some cases this involves delegating work to partner organisations such as voluntary and community bodies. In those cases, the Connexions Partnership raises a grant or sub-contract with the organisation concerned in order to control the flow of funding.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps have been taken to train Connexions advisers in respect of mental health matters as recommended in the Bridging the Gap report published in July 1999. [67975]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 1 March 2002, Official Report, column 1600W.

Connexions Partnerships will provide a full service to all young people aged 13 to 19 and will co-ordinate the delivery of appropriate support and opportunities when needed. This includes liaison with key organisations who can provide specialist support in respect of mental health matters.

Oral Questions

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many oral questions she has transferred to other Departments in each of the last 18 months. [67032]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Since the election in June 2001 no oral questions were transferred for answer by another Government Department.

Educational Maintenance Allowance

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of young people who received an educational maintenance allowance in each year since 1999 were identified as rural. [67085]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 5 July 2002]: We do not ask the local education authorities or schools and colleges who administer the EMA scheme to classify individual recipients as "urban" or "rural".

However, of the 56 LEA areas in which EMA is paid, six are identified as predominantly rural in character: Cornwall, East Lancashire, Northumberland, North East Lincolnshire, Suffolk and Worcestershire. Cornwall was the only LEA from this list to receive an EMA in 1999–2000, when there were only 15 pilot areas. The following figures show EMA recipients in these areas as a percentage of the total number of EMA recipients in each of the academic years during which we have run the pilots.

Academic year	Percentage of EMA recipients in predominantly rural areas
1999–2000	31.3
2000–01	15.3
2001–02	14.0

Medical Schools

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the expenditure was on (a) research and (b) teaching in each United Kingdom medical school in the latest year for which figures are available. [67148]

Margaret Hodge: Expenditure by higher education institutions, broken down by research and teaching, is not available centrally.

With the exception of St. George's medical school, medical schools in England form part of their parent university and are funded through the block grant provided by the relevant funding councils for England and the devolved administrations. Once the grant has been allocated, it is for each institution to decide how to spend it.

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the capital value was of the (a) laboratories, (b) equipment and (c) other assets used for research in each United Kingdom medical school in the latest year for which figures are available. [67149]

Margaret Hodge: This information is not available.

London Schools Strategy

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what additional resources will be provided under her Department's new strategy for London schools, broken down by (a) proposed end use and (b) financial year in which it will be spent. [67630]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: As Minister with responsibility for the London schools strategy, I am looking forward to discussions with key partners about what additional resources should be provided and to what purpose. Provisional plans are:

£7.5 million to expand the training of talented teachers needed to lead and manage the most challenging schools in London; aimed at existing heads, deputies and middle managers (£0.5 million in 2002–03, £3.5 million in 2003–04, £3.5 million in 2004–05).

£10.0 million to boost provision for gifted and talented pupils in London establishing centres in 13 LEAs to improve the teaching and learning of gifted pupils and establish a programme of recruiting pupils from disadvantaged backgrounds to the schemes (£2.0 million in 2002–03, £3.9 million in 2003–04, £4.1 million in 2004–05).

£5 million for an Innovation Fund to encourage and incentivise new forms of partnership working between successful and less successful schools and the development of new types of secondary school in London (£0.5 million in 2002–03, £2.0 million in 2003–04, £2.5 million in 2004–05).

Up to £2.5 million to fund the work of a London Schools Commissioner to implement the strategy for London schools (£0.5 million in 2002–03, £1.0 million in 2003–04, £1.0 million in 2004–05). This will be finalised once precise tasks are clearer.

These resources will be in addition to other spending on London through the Department's other programmes and funding streams that are subject to the outcome of the spending review.

CABINET OFFICE

Statistics

Mr. Laws: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list the statistics that are collected by his Department by English parliamentary constituency; and if he will make a statement. [67091]

Mr. Alexander: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury today at column 769W.

Energy Guidance

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what guidance his office has issued since May 1997 to Government Departments and agencies in relation to (a) energy conservation and energy efficiency and (b) the purchasing of energy from renewable sources; and when the guidance was issued. [65722]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

Guidance to the public sector on conserving energy and improving energy efficiency has been provided by the Energy Efficiency Best Practice Programme, and this work is now part of the Carbon Trust's Action Energy scheme. This programme has also provided a range of guidance specifically for the Government Estate and Departments have been supported by site specific visits and consultancy advice.

The guidance issued by Government on renewable energy purchase was published on 16 January 2001, in HTML format only, and was placed on the Greening Government website (http://www.defra.gov.uk/environment/greening/energy/elec/index.htm)

Guidance has also been issued to Government by the Office of Government Commerce Buying Solutions in January 2001 entitled 'A one stop shop for energy procurement'.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Consultations

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the public consultations undertaken by his Department since June 2001, stating in each case the (a) number of respondents and (b) percentage of those specifically consulted who responded. [60144]

Jane Kennedy: The information is as follows.

Date	Paper	(a) Number of respondents	(b) Percentage of those specifically consulted who responded
28 June 2001	Consultation (under section 85 and section 75 and schedule 9 of the NI Act) on a proposal for a draft Criminal Injuries Compensation Order and Scheme	16	8

Northern Ireland Prison Service Part Input

Unfortunately there are no centralised records kept at headquarters or at establishment level on consultations with organisations. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Human Rights and Equality Unit

The Human Rights and Equality Unit have recently published for consultation, the Government's response to the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission's review of powers recommendations. Responses are not required until 16 August 2002.

Criminal Justice Review Team

The draft Justice (Northern Ireland) Bill was published for public consultation on 12 November 2001. (a) There were approximately 40 responses from individuals and representatives groups. (b) No groups or individuals were specifically targeted in the consultation.

Departmental Operating Costs

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will break down the operating costs of his Department by relative spending on each specialist (a) unit and (b) programme in each of the last three years. [60852]

Jane Kennedy: The information is in the table.

Castlereagh

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress in Sir John Chilcott's investigation into the break-in at Castlereagh. [68298]

Dr. John Reid: I have received a work in progress report from Sir John Chilcott and Colin Smith. I look forward to receiving the full and final report, which is expected later this year.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sex Offenders

10. Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the supervision of sex offenders living in the community. [64755]

Mr. Wills: Protecting the public from sexual and violent offenders is one of the Government's highest priorities. The Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 required each police and probation area to make arrangements to assess and manage the risks posed by sexual and violent offenders in the community. This is built on a range of measures we had already undertaken to strengthen the supervision of sex offenders in the community.

Asylum Policy

11. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes in the policy of his Department on asylum seekers will stem from the decisions made at the Seville EU summit. [64756]

Beverley Hughes: Seville showed that the United Kingdom continues to play a leading role in developing the asylum measures proposed by the Treaty of Amsterdam as a major step towards achieving a common European asylum system. The significant changes in policy envisaged in our Nationality Immigration Asylum (NIA) Bill anticipate the developments we want Seville to deliver.

23. Ann McKechin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions his Department has had with the Scotland Office regarding asylum issues. [64769]

Beverley Hughes: Discussion is continuing with the Scotland Office and the Scottish Executive on the issue of Asylum Centres for asylum seekers. Asylum, as my hon. Friend is aware, is a reserved matter.

Police Morale

13. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on police morale. [64758]

Mr. Denham: We have turned around the decline in police numbers that started under the last Government. By 31 January this year there were 4,578 more police officers than in March 2000 and police strength was at a record number. We are on course for our target of 130,000 officers by spring 2003.

We are committed to reducing the burden of unnecessary bureaucracy. We are developing a new occupational health strategy for the police service and we have provided a one-third increase in capital investment this year, which will allow improvements in the conditions in which officers work and the technology that they use.

We have reached agreement on a package of reforms to police pay and conditions of service that is good for the service, for rank and file officers and for the public.

We will ensure that officers know and feel that they are valued.

17. Mr. Francois: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on police morale. [64763]

Mr. Denham: We have turned around the decline in police numbers that started under the last Government. By 31 January this year there were 4,578 more police officers than in March 2000 and police strength was at a record number. We are on course for our target of 130,000 officers by spring 2003.

We are committed to reducing the burden of unnecessary bureaucracy. We are developing a new occupational health strategy for the police service and we have provided a one-third increase in capital investment this year, which will allow improvements in the conditions in which officers work and the technology that they use.

We have reached agreement on a package of reforms to police pay and conditions of service that is good for the service, for rank and file officers and for the public.

We will ensure that officers know and feel that they are valued.

National Probation Service

14. Lawrie Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the role of the National Probation Service in reducing crime. [64760]

Hilary Benn: The National Probation Service, together with the Prison Service and the Youth Justice Board are jointly responsible for the target of reducing the level of reconviction of offenders by 5 per cent. by 2004. The Probation Services is working towards this by:

Careful risk assessment of offenders

Providing help with accommodation and employment

Improving basic skills

Running offending behaviour programmes.

The Probation Service is also responsible for ensuring that community penalties are effectively enforced.

Prisoner Rehabilitation

15. Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect the number of prisoners in England and Wales is having on the provision of rehabilitation schemes in prisons. [64761]

Hilary Benn: From 1996 to 2001 the number of offending behaviour programmes successfully completed by prisoners has risen almost fivefold despite a 19 per cent. growth in the prison population over the same period. Last year 16,000 prisoners achieved basic skills certificates, there are no firm indications yet that the number of prisoners is significantly affecting the provision of rehabilitation programmes in prisons. However, it is inevitable that at times of high population pressure such provision may be disrupted. The Prison Service will continue to do everything possible to minimise this.

21. Joyce Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy on constructive regimes in prison to deter re-offending. [64767]

Hilary Benn: The Prison Service draws upon research, known as "What Works", to ensure an evidence based approach to providing regimes which are effective in tackling offending behaviour and the factors which contribute towards re-offending.

The Government has set the Prison Service challenging targets to improve its regimes and expand provision of basic skills training, drug treatment, offending behaviour programmes and resettlement activities. To achieve these targets, we are investing an additional £31 million in 2001–02, £50 million for 2002–03 and £71 million for 2003–04. In this way we are supporting the Prison Service in contributing to our target of reducing the rate of re-convictions by offenders punished by imprisonment or by community supervision by five per cent. by April 2004.

Active Community Unit

16. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the work of his Department's Active Community Unit. [64762]

Mr. Wills: The Active Community Unit leads a cross Government effort to promote civil renewal, to encourage active citizenship, and to build constructive partnerships between Government and the voluntary and community sector. It has lead responsibility for the Government's target of making substantial progress towards one million more people being actively involved in their communities by 2004.

Travellers

18. Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward legislation to increase police powers with regard to the rights of residency of travellers. [64764]

Mr. Denham: As we announced last week we intend to bring forward additional eviction powers for police, linked to site provision, to deal with unauthorised camping by Gypsies and Travellers. Proposals will be brought forward as soon as a legislative opportunity arises.

Vandalism

19. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to assist the police in the fight against low-level crime and vandalism. [64765]

Mr. Denham: The Government is taking urgent action to tackle low level crime and vandalism across the country. Among the most important are the measures to enhance the effectiveness of Anti-Social Behaviour Orders in the Police Reform Bill and the introduction of Neighbourhood and Street Wardens to reinforce the capacity of the police and local communities to prevent disorderly behaviour.

Tackling anti-social behaviour and disorder is one of the Ministerial priorities for the police

28. Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional assistance his Department gives to schools that suffer damage and vandalism; and if he will make a statement. [64774]

Mr. Denham: The Government are providing assistance to schools that suffer from vandalism through a range of initiatives including our Neighbourhood Wardens and Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) schemes. The police involvement in truancy sweeps and in the "Safer Schools Partnerships" scheme is expanding the role that they play in schools as part of the Government's wider initiative to help tackle local street crime and behaviour problems. The Department for Education and Skills has also made £10 million available to Local Education Authorities this year to support security improvements at school that help protect them from crime.

Youth Crime

20. Mr. John Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the level of youth crime was in the Vale of Glamorgan in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [64766]

Mr. Denham: Information provided by the Vale of Glamorgan Youth Offending Team shows that, in the year 2001, there was a total of 519 recorded offences in its area involving young offenders. Where the age of the offender was known and the case resulted in a reprimand, final warning, referral order or conviction.

36. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to prevent young children committing crimes. [64782]

Mr. Denham: The Government are supporting a wide programme to tackle youth offending, including action to prevent children being drawn into crime in the first place. This includes working with families through the Sure Start initiative, neighbourhoods through the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund, and education services through reducing exclusions and improving attendance, as well as implementation of the 10 year drugs strategy.

We also support a number of preventative programmes including Youth Inclusion Programmes, Splash Schemes and the Positive Futures programme, which help to steer young people, including those identified as being most at risk, away from crime.

In addition, improvements to the youth justice system, reduced delays, new sentences and programmes, and expanded powers available to the police and courts all help to ensure that we are tackling youth criminality head on.

CS Spray

22. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reported incidents involving the use of CS spray by police officers in England and Wales there were in (a) 1996, (b) 1997, (c) 1998, (d) 2000 and (e) 2001; and if he will make a statement. [64768]

Mr. Denham: I regret that this information is not available for the majority of police forces in England and Wales. The Association of Chief Police Officers is considering what arrangements should be made to ensure that national statistics are available in future.

Race Relations

24. Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to improve race relations and community cohesion. [64770]

Beverley Hughes: The Government are committed to making race equality and community cohesion central to their aims.

We are committed to outlaw discrimination in employment by December 2003 as required by European Employment Directives.

The Race Relations (Amendment) Act 2000 came into force on 2 April. It places a general duty on specified public authorities to have due regard to the need to eliminate unlawful discrimination—and to promote equality of opportunity and good relations between persons of different racial groups.

Public bodies were required to have in place by 31 May this year, realistic and timely plans to show how they intend to comply with the general duty.

The Government are working right across Departments on a number of measures to promote community cohesion. Our aim is to build communities where:

there is a common vision and a sense of belonging for all people;

there is an appreciation of people's different backgrounds and circumstances; where those from different backgrounds have similar life opportunities; and strong and positive relationships are being developed between people from different backgrounds in the work place, in schools and within neighbourhoods.

Following the disturbances, we rapidly set up a programme of summer activities. This summer, we are running an enhanced programme of activities—both on community cohesion and to address issues of street crime. For example, a £16 million summer activities programme run by the Department for Education and Skills (DfES) also includes community cohesion criteria alongside other aims.

We are also engaging young people through other measures. For example, "Beyond Labels"—an international conference for young people, supported by the Home Office, will take place in Leicester in July.

We commissioned the Community Cohesion Review Team—chaired by Ted Cantle—to explore the causes of last summer's disturbances and the independent report made several, wide-ranging recommendations. The Government published its initial response to the Cantle Report in December last year.

The recommendations are being taken forward by the Ministerial Group on Community Cohesion, which I chair. The group is advised by a Community Cohesion Panel, chaired by Ted Cantle. The panel comprises people with expertise in relevant areas—including young people and the community. The Government announced membership of the panel on 22 May 2002.

A new Community Cohesion Unit has been established to support the Ministerial Group and Panel—and to work across Government to deliver community cohesion.

Community Facilitators are now in place in 34 towns across the country to bring together local people, foster dialogue and encourage the search for positive solutions to local problems. Community Support teams are also being provided to Bradford, Burnley and Oldham, to address community cohesion issues and each town has also produced an outline community cohesion action plan.

To assist local government address community cohesion issues. The Home Office has published—jointly with the Commission for Racial Equality, Local Government Association and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister—draft guidance for local authorities. This sets out a series of practical steps that they (and other local agencies) can take to address community cohesion issues. A copy of this has been placed in the Library. We are seeking views on it by 14 August.

The Government believe that community cohesion is an issue that all local authorities need to urgently consider. Some local areas will conclude that their existing policies and community planning systems are satisfactory. But the Government believe that the majority will need to amend some of their policies in order to build effective community cohesion. A small number of areas may identify a wide range of issues which are best addressed by a specific and focused action plan. A number of areas other than Bradford, Oldham and Burnley have already indicated their commitment to developing such plans.

National Security

25. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve the security of the United Kingdom from the intentional release of chemical, biological and radiological materials. [64771]

Mr. Blunkett: I keep these matters under close review through my chairmanship of the Ministerial Committees on Terrorism and Civil Contingencies.

Our crisis management machinery is based on a proven, co-ordinated response capability involving the relevant agencies.

Following the tragic events of 11 September last year, we have accessed the threat from the use by terrorists of chemical, biological and radiological materials and reviewed our arrangements for dealing with such events. A major cross-departmental programme of work is in hand to enhance the resilience of the UK and counter the threat. Following the Budget on 17 April, I announced additional resources to enable this work to be sustained and developed. This will be further reviewed in the Spending Review.

Anti-Social Behaviour Orders

26. Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in reducing the paperwork required for Anti-Social Behaviour Orders; and if he will make a statement. [64772]

Mr. Denham: The recent Home Office review of Anti-Social Behaviour Orders (ASBOs) found that unnecessary bureaucracy was a problem in some areas. The review recommended that local agencies draw up simple, streamlined protocols designed with the local area in mind and made a number of practical suggestions for minimising bureaucracy and delays. Advice on how best to do this will be included in the new Home Office guidance on ASBOs.

Victim/Witness Protection

27. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the protection of victims and witnesses pending court proceedings. [64773]

Hilary Benn: Chief officers of police assess whether a witness needs protection pending court proceedings and then put in place measures which are commensurate with the level of risk identified.

Several communities have established safety schemes to support witnesses and we would like to see more of these. Witness intimidation is an offence and the police have been encouraged to prosecute whenever possible.

Violent Crime (Elderly Victims)

29. Richard Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the level of violent crime against elderly people. [64775]

Mr. Denham: The Government shares the profound revulsion which is caused by crimes against elderly people, and is determined to ensure that even the most vulnerable people can feel safe both in their homes or out in their neighbourhood. The latest British Crime Survey (BCS) published last year does not separately identify the level of violent crime against elderly people. However, the BCS did show that the risk of elderly men becoming victims of violence was less than 0.5 per cent. and that the corresponding risk for women was about 0.6 per cent.

Burglaries

30. Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to reduce the number of burglaries. [64776]

Mr. Denham: Reducing burglary is being tackled in a number of inter-connected ways. These include:

Ensuring police forces deliver their best value targets—progress is being monitored quarterly and, through the Police Standards Unit and Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC), we will be working with those at most risk of not delivering their target to help them get back on track.

Funding local anti-burglary strategies, initially through the Reducing Burglary Initiative and subsequently through the Safer Communities Initiative.

Delivering our anti-drugs strategy

Tackling youth crime

Delivering our plans to improve the delivery of justice, including bringing more offenders to justice and reducing re-offending.

Piloting a repeat victimisation model and then rolling out the lessons learned to other areas.

Negotiating stretched burglary targets in Local Public Service Agreements.

Targeting crime prevention advice to those known to be at high risk of burglary, such as students.

Police Pay

31. Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has recently received about police pay. [64777]

Mr. Denham: The Secretary of State is represented on the Police Negotiating Board (PNB), the statutory negotiating body for police pay and conditions. All the main police organisations are represented on the PNB, including the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO), the Association of Police Authorities (APA), the Superintendents' Association and the Police Federation.

On 9 May 2002, the PNB reached agreement on a recommendation to my right hon Friend the Secretary of State for a package of reforms to police pay and conditions. The Secretary of State has approved the PNB recommendation.

Under the PNB Agreement, all officers in the federated ranks will get an increase in basic salary of £402 from 1 April 2003, on top of the annual police pay award made in September each year.

In addition, from the same date federated ranks' officers who have spent a year at the top of their pay scales will be eligible for a competence-related payment of £1,002 a year. We expect at least 75 per cent. of those eligible to get the payment. There will also be a new special priority payment scheme, under which officers in qualifying posts will get a payment of between £500 and £3,000 normally, up to £5,000 exceptionally.

The PNB Agreement also delivers a number of significant improvements in the management and deployment of police officers, including more flexible rostering and use of part-time working as well as better management of ill health and poor attendance.

The Secretary of State has also received representations from a number of police officers, including the Chief Constable of Thames Valley about the pay and allowances which officers receive.

Special Constables

32. Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of special constables. [64778]

Mr. Denham: Special constables are a key element of our police reform agenda, and we are already working, with stakeholders, to increase the recruitment and retention of special constables as part of that process. Indeed, we announced a package of measures on 18 June that are designed to improve the way specials are recruited, managed, deployed and how their welfare is considered within forces.

We are particularly keen to improve liaison with employers and encourage them to support employees who are specials. Specials bring skills and experience back to their workplace which makes them of real value as an employee. Later this year the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Home Secretary will publish a joint discussion paper on fiscal and other changes we can make to promote community service, including service as a special constable. A new headline role has also been published, focusing on intelligence-led patrolling and crime reduction initiatives. And a new national foundation training package for specials was issued last month. Revised Conditions of Service Regulations and new Conduct Regulations are in preparation.

Central to this whole process will be Home Office/Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) good practice guidance covering all aspects of the recruitment, management and deployment of specials, which will be issued by the end of the year. And we will be identifying a number of "Specials champions" to support this work and to take forward initiatives to help reverse the decline in specials numbers. We have set aside £300,000 to support these champions and we are working very closely with ACPO in this area.

Detainees (Immigration)

33. Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his latest estimate is of the number of persons detained under immigration powers over the past 12 months. [64779]

Beverley Hughes: The latest available information on the number of persons detained under Immigration Act powers relates to 30 March 2002. As at that date, 1,575 persons (to the nearest five) were being detained solely under Immigration Act powers.

I regret that statistics showing the total number of persons detained in the last 12 months could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by examination of individual case records, and no estimate of the total number has been made.

Information on Immigration Act detainees as at 29 June will be published on 30 August on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Accommodation Centres (Children's Education)

34. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what education provision is given to the children of asylum seekers in accommodation centres; and what improvements he plans to make. [64780]

Beverley Hughes: We expect the first trial accommodation centre to open during 2003. We will provide education facilities on site for the children of asylum seekers maintained there. On site education will mirror the provision in mainstream schools, tailored to the specific needs of the children. Education will be evaluated along with other aspects of accommodation centres at the end of the trial period.

Detoxification Centres

35. Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the availability of places for drug addicts at residential detoxification centres. [64781]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Over 50 per cent. of Drug Action Teams have residential detoxification services located within their area. Figures on the numbers of places available for residential detoxification, however, are not collected centrally.

There are an estimated 130 residential treatment services in England and Wales (which may or may not include detoxification facilities), which have an estimated 2,169 available beds. This would suggest a possible 8,700 drug and alcohol users could be treated each year.

Figures from the National Drug Treatment Monitoring System (NDTMS) show that the average waiting times for residential treatment have significantly reduced. The average waiting times for priority cases has been reduced from 5.08 weeks in 2000–01 to 4.45 weeks in 2001–02. Non-priority cases waited an average of 9.34 weeks in 2000–01 improving to 6.44 weeks in 2001–02.

Clandestine Immigration

37. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to deal with clandestine immigration. [64783]

Beverley Hughes: We are working closely with the French Government to deal with the problem of illegal immigration from France, and the trafficking networks which bring many of these illegal immigrants across Europe. We are committed to the efficient use of intelligence to target resources against organised immigration crimes, and we are investing in new technologies to combat those attempting to enter the United Kingdom clandestinely concealed in road freight vehicles.

Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Act

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which individuals are being detained, where and for what reasons, under Part 4 of the Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001. [65065]

Mr. Blunkett: 11 people have been detained to date using powers in Part 4 of the Anti-terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001. Of those detained, two have voluntarily left the United Kingdom; the other nine remain in detention. It is long standing practice not to discuss individual cases or the immigration status of individuals, including their place of detention, unless they themselves first choose to do so.

St. Charles Site, Brentwood

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department has taken to secure the land within its ownership in Brentwood, known as St. Charles site, from unauthorised entry. [65384]

Hilary Benn: The security arrangements in place include new 2.4 metre high fencing and 24 hour security guarding.

Following an incident of illegal trespass on 10 May 2002, immediate action was taken to install additional security measures on the Brentwood site. The additional measures, which were installed in consultation with Brentwood borough council and the Essex police, included trenches, earth mounding and other obstructions to entry.

Voluntary Sector

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for West Dorset, (Mr. Letwin), Official Report, column 704W, on Government funding of the voluntary sector, how Government funding has been defined for the purpose of the estimates; what categories of financial transaction have been excluded from this definition; and on what basis each estimate was made. [65039]

Hilary Benn: The definition of Government funding used for the purposes of the estimates is the same as that published in the Report on Central Government Funding of Voluntary and Community Organisations 1982–83 to 1999–2000 (annexe B, page 20) ISBN 1 84082 636-3, copies of which are available in the Library. No categories of financial transaction were specifically excluded.

The estimates are based on surveys of Government Departments and other public funders of the voluntary sector conducted by the Charities Aid Foundation on behalf of the Home Office.

Prison Service

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers (a) joined and (b) left the Prison Service in each of the last five years for which figures are available in (i) actual figures and (ii) as a percentage of the total. [66434]

Hilary Benn: The information is contained in the table. Officer grades include prison officers, senior officers and principal officers. Joiners information excludes staff who have been re-graded to prison officer from another Prison Service grade.

	Prison officers in post at beginning of year	Joiners		Leavers (including retirements)
		Number	Percentage of total	Number	Percentage of total
1997–98[1]	23,058	1,578	6.8	—	—
1998–99	23,444	1,185	5.1	723	3.1
1999–2000	23,875	918	3.8	847	3.5
2000–01	24,090	514	2.1	961	4.0
2001–02	23,777	363	1.5	1,342	5.6

[1] Reliable information on leavers during 1997–98 is not available.

Human Trafficking

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures the Government are taking to prevent the trafficking of women in the Balkans and what evaluation he has made of their success; what measures the Government are taking in this regard in co-operation with fellow European Union member states, and what evaluation he has made of their success; what measures have been taken by European Union institutions to combat this trafficking and what evaluation he has made of their success; and if he will make a statement. [65708]

Beverley Hughes: Alongside effective enforcement in the United Kingdom (UK), we have recognised that there is the need to develop intelligence and undertake joint operations against trafficking networks in transit countries in the Balkans region. We have provided a total of £200,000 to fund various local anti-trafficking projects in the Western Balkans region implemented under the auspices of the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe's democratisation arm, the Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights.

In 2000 we set up Reflex, our multi-agency task force on organised immigration crime, which co-operates with overseas law enforcement partners on the disruption of organised criminal groups intent on trafficking. Led by the National Crime Squad (NCS), Reflex brings together all the key agencies, including the Immigration Service, the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS), the security and intelligence agencies and key police forces including the Metropolitan police, Kent and the British Transport police.

The UK has posted nine Immigration Liaison Officers to disrupt trafficking and organised immigration crime in and around the Balkans region. European Union (EU) partners have made similar deployments. We co-operate directly or through Europol with EU law enforcement agencies and those in EU accession states. Since April 2001 this has resulted in the disruption of 14 trafficking organisations and 67 arrests. 323 individual facilitators have been arrested.

Project Immpact, a UK led EU immigration initiative to assist the Bosnia State Border Service, has reduced the flow of illegal migrants through Sarejevo airport by 90 per cent. UK and EU experts assist the anti-trafficking EU STOP teams in Bosnia which have identified 185 victims of trafficking involved in prostitution over the past year.

We have also provided assistance to the recently established anti-trafficking task force at the South East Europe Co-operation Initiative (SECI) centre in Bucharest, which is focused on cross border co-operation and intelligence sharing between its 11 member states in the Balkan region.

Belgium and Spain have made organised immigration crime a theme of their EU presidencies. The Danish presidency will promote an EU-wide project against the trafficking of women co-ordinated by the European Police Chiefs Taskforce in the second half of this year.

Commission for Racial Equality

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the budget of the CRE was in 1990; and what it is in the present financial year. [66336]

Beverley Hughes: The grant in aid allocated to the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE) in the financial year 1990–91 was £13,500,000 and is £19,900,000 for the current financial year 2002–03 (both amounts rounded to the nearest £100,000).

The CRE budget was increased to £3 million from 2002–03 to enable the Commission to deliver its new responsibilities under the Race Relations (Amendment) Act 2000.

Communications (Interception)

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation relating to the interception of communications and the use of computers which use selected keywords and numbers to determine which communications are intercepted. [65156]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 provides for the lawful interception of communications: there are no plans to amend this legislation.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what controls govern the interception from within the UK of communications originating from outside the UK. [65164]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The interception of communications is governed by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000. "External" communications, which are defined by that Act as those sent or received outside the British islands, may be intercepted under a warrant: in particular, section 8(4) of the Act provides for a warrant for the interception of external communications only. The conditions for obtaining such a warrant are set out in sections 5–8 and 15 of the Act.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) Departments and (b) organisations are allowed to intercept electronic mail. [66634]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 3 July 2002]: A warrant for the interception of communications of any kind can only be issued personally by the Secretary of State to those persons specified in section 6(2) of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000. Those persons are:

the Director-General of the Security Service;

the Chief of the Secret Intelligence Service;

the Director of Government Communications Headquarters (GCHQ);

the Director-General of the National Criminal Intelligence Service;

the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis;

the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary (now the Police Service of Northern Ireland);

the Chief Constable of any police force maintained under or by virtue of section 1 of the Police (Scotland) Act 1967;

the Commissioners of Customs and Excise;

the Chief of Defence Intelligence; and

a person who, for the purposes of any international mutual assistance agreement, is the competent authority of a country or territory outside the United Kingdom.

Juvenile Offenders

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what extra resources have been made available since 16 April to fund the expected increase of remands into custody of juvenile offenders; and if he will make a statement. [66625]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 2 July 2002]: £53 million has been made available for this year to provide additional juvenile secure places, tagging of juveniles on bail and after release from custody and extension of intensive supervision and surveillance programmes.

Representation Packs

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what average delay was incurred in the last year for which figures are available before prisoners receive representation packs after they are recalled to prison; and if he will make a statement. [66617]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The Prison Service target for issuing representation packs to determinate sentence prisoners after they have been recalled to prison is five working days. During the 12 month period ending 31 May 2002, 76 per cent. of representation packs were issued within target. Information on the average delay in issuing these packs is not held centrally and to provide it would incur disproportionate cost.

Bail Information Schemes

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation areas in England and Wales operate bail information schemes; in how many cases by probation area information on bail was provided to the courts in the last year that figures are available; in how many of these cases the court ordered conditional bail; and if he will make a statement. [66621]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 2 July 2002]: 36 areas operated bail information schemes in 2001–02, covering some 60 per cent. of magistrates courts in England and Wales. In some areas schemes will have been focused in particular courts rather than delivered as an area-wide service.

The list of numbers of bail information reports prepared by each area in 2001 is in the table. Bail information reports are only one of the reports available to the court to assist in reaching a decision on whether to order conditional bail in any case and no statistics are collected for the number of such cases.

The National Probation Directorate is currently reviewing the coverage of bail information schemes to identify the scope for increasing the number of magistrates courts covered by such a scheme and developing performance measures to monitor and improve the quality of the information provided in reports.

Judicial System (Racism)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is being done to combat racism within the justice system in the United Kingdom. [65660]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The Race Relations (Amendment) Act 2000 is a direct response to the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry. The Government brought forward amendments to the Race Relations Act 1976 to strengthen the duties placed on public authorities. The Race Relations (Amendment) Act 2000 presents both a challenge and an opportunity to public authorities. So for the first time we have placed a statutory duty on Criminal Justice System organisations to eliminate racial discrimination and also to promote race equality and good race relations when carrying out their functions.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, my right hon. and noble Friend the Attorney-General and my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary are responsible for the justice system in England and Wales. We have published Race Equality Schemes setting out how the new duties apply to our Departments and the action we will take to fulfil those duties.

Information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland, is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Security

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures have been taken in conjunction with other European states to increase security after the events of 11 September 2001. [66635]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 3 July 2002]: Heads of State and Government of the European Union (EU) endorsed an Action Plan on 21 September, following the terrorist attacks in the United States. The Action Plan sets out agreed decisions on a range of measures to combat global terrorism and to improve practical co-operation among member states. The Action Plan includes:

Creation of fast-track extradition and an EU arrest warrant, which should significantly reduce obstacles to extradition within EU;

Agreement on common EU offences and penalties for terrorist activity;

Setting up a team of EU member states' anti-terrorist experts who can ensure timely collection and analysis of information and intelligence and draft threat assessments;

Rapid implementation of the United Nations Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism by all EU member states;

Requirement that the potential impact on the fight against crime and terrorism is fully considered in drafting European Community legislation;

Measures on freezing of assets and evidence and

Review of the EU's relations with third countries in the light of their support for counter-terrorism.

Duplicate Passports

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he plans to take following recent convictions of offenders who had obtained duplicate passports; and if he will make a statement. [66738]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The United Kingdom Passport Service has a range of checks in place to prevent and detect passport fraud including a check on the death records of under 18-year-olds in England and Wales. This check is a significant step forward in our efforts to crack down on the fraudulent use of birth certificates. Enhancing its capability to prevent and detect fraud is a business priority for the Passport Service. It is implementing a comprehensive fraud action plan, and is working actively with other agencies to develop its identity validation techniques.

West Mercia Police

Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of police officer recruitment for West Mercia police. [64759]

Mr. Denham: Police strength in West Mercia increased by 125 between the end of March 2001 and the end of January this year, when it reached 2,012 officers. The force plans to have record police numbers in the course of 2002–03.

The Government's Crime Fighting Fund (CFF) has played a major part in driving up the number of officers. It is enabling forces to take on 9,000 recruits over and above previous plans in the three years to March 2003. In the first two years of this recruitment initiative West Mercia appointed 109 CFF recruits and they will be able to take on a further 43 CFF recruits in 2002–03.

Overall, I understand that West Mercia Police Authority's budget will support a planned increase in strength of 300 officers in 2002–03. I congratulate the police authority and the force in setting itself this goal, which will contribute to our target of 130,000 officers in England and Wales by spring 2003.

Drugs (Prisons)

Angela Watkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent steps he has taken to reduce the amount of illegal drugs in prisons. [29912]

Hilary Benn: A range of measures is in place to reduce the smuggling of illegal drugs into prisons. These include:

passive and active drug dogs;

low level furniture in visits areas to aid visibility;

closed circuit television in visits areas;

an initiative to ban visitors found smuggling drugs into prisons;

mandatory drug testing of prisoners.

Life Sentences

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners serving life sentences in England and Wales have served (a) up to five years more than their tariff sentence, (b) five to 10 years more than their tariff sentence, (c) 10 to 15 years more than their tariff sentence and (d) in excess of 15 years more than their tariff sentence. [34576]

Hilary Benn: The tariff is the minimum period a life sentence prisoner must serve to meet the requirements of retribution and deterrence before being considered for release. After this minimum period has been served release will only take place where the prisoner is judged no longer a risk of harm to the public.

The available information in respect of mandatory life sentence prisoners ie those aged over 21 who have been found guilty of murder is as follows:

(a) up to five years more than the minimum period—559,

(b) five to 10 years more than the minimum period—199,

(c) 10 to 15 years more than the minimum period—97 and

(d) in excess of 15 years more than the minimum period—20.

Such information in respect of non-mandatory life sentence prisoners—ie those aged under 21 found guilty of murder and those aged over and under 21 who have had a life sentence imposed for an offence other than murder—is not held centrally in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost by examining the individual records of the prisoners concerned.

Performance Targets

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the (a) cost and (b) saving has been from the Department's pursuit of Service Delivery Agreement targets in each year since they were introduced. [61648]

Beverley Hughes: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 26 June 2002, Official Report, column 1069W.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many performance targets he has set for his Department; and how many that were included last year have been dropped this year. [64272]

Beverley Hughes: The Home Office Public Service Agreement states the Department's key targets for this year. The Service Delivery Agreement targets underpin them. These targets are set over the period 2001–04 and therefore the targets set last year are still valid. New targets for the Home Office are currently being discussed as a result of the Spending Review 2002 process. These will commence from April 2003.

Additional targets are set out in the Home Office's Business Plan. This was published on 13 June as a combined document with the annual report. All our targets for the coming year are outlined in this document as are last year's targets and whether they have been achieved or are on-going.

Remploy

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the value is of Remploy products purchased by his Department in each year since 1995. [63823]

Beverley Hughes: The value of Remploy products purchased by the Home Department since 1995 are as follows:

	Value of Remploy products purchased
1995	41,700
1996	16,979
1997	20,207
1998	17,044
1999	1,508
2000	2,168
2001	3,406

The number of purchases have declined because of a change of focus within Remploy's activities towards production associated with education. As a result, Remploy were not able to guarantee service requirements by our main purchaser centrex.

Criminal Records Checks

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many questions are asked by the Criminal Records Office of those for whom criminal records checks in connection with work with children are sought; and of those which are essential to the conduct of a check. [63881]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 24 July 2002]: The Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) Disclosure Application form has a total of 42 questions, 25 of which are considered essential to enable the CRB to undertake the necessary checks. The remaining questions are asked to enable the CRB to process applications more quickly, or relate to referee details that, in some circumstances, the CRB may need to contact for additional details.

Applicants can apply for a Disclosure either by completing and posting an application form, or over the phone. The telephone operator will ask a minimum of six questions, (to establish contact details), and applicants then have the option of supplying almost all of the information required for the form over the telephone.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what average length of time it takes for a check to be made at the Criminal Records Bureau. [64836]

Hilary Benn: The Criminal Records Bureau is not meeting its Disclosure Application processing service standards. At present these are taking five to six weeks and this applies to both 'standard' and enhanced Disclosures.

To address this, the bureau has introduced a performance improvement plan. This should ensure that, over the coming weeks, service levels will improve steadily until the full service standards are met.

Terrorism (Overseas Students)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are in place to monitor the activities of overseas students in the UK to ascertain whether they have become involved in organisations proscribed under the Terrorism Act 2001; and if he will make a statement. [64956]

Mr. Blunkett: The police and security services attach the highest priority to the monitoring of organisations proscribed under the Terrorism Act 2000.

Individuals, including overseas students, who are members or supporters of these organisations will be investigated and appropriate action taken.

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he makes to screen individuals applying from overseas to study in the UK for connections to proscribed organisations under the Terrorism Act 2001; and if he will make a statement. [64957]

Mr. Blunkett: There are mechanisms in place to identify individuals seeking to enter the United Kingdom who are members or supporters of terrorist organisations. It is not in the public interest to publish details of these mechanisms.

Interior Minister for Greece

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Interior Minister for Greece. [64837]

Mr. Blunkett: I have not met the Interior Minister for Greece. I have, however, had a bilateral with Mr. Michalis Chrysohoides, Greek Public Order Minister, on 24 January this year in London. As we approach the Greek Presidency of the European Union, I intend to meet Greek Ministers responsible for Justice and Home Affairs.

Annual Leave

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average annual leave entitlement is for staff in his Department in 2002. [64610]

Beverley Hughes: Due to fluctuating numbers in each grade information on average annual leave entitlements could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The current leave entitlement for staff in the Home Office and its Agencies is as follows:

	Leave entitlement
Non-agency Home Office i.e. excluding the Prison Service, Passport and Records Agency and Forensic Science Service
Band A	Grades up to and including Higher Executive Officer and equivalents: 22 days on entry, 25 days after one year's service and 30 days after 13 years.
Band B	Grades above Higher Executive Officer, up to and including Grade 6 and equivalents: 25 days on entry and 30 days after 10 years' service.
Prison Service
Band A	Prison Officers: 22 days on entry, 25 days annual leave after one year's service and 30 days after 18 years.
Band B	Generalist grades up to and including Manager 'E' and equivalents. 25 days on entry and 30 days after 16 years service (from 1 March 2002).
Band C	Generalist grades Senior Manager D—A and above or equivalents. 30 days on entry which does not increase.
Passport and Records Agency
One band	All staff receive 25 days on entry and 30 days after 10 years' service.
Forensic Science Service
Band A	Grades up to and including Higher Executive Officer and equivalents: 22 days on entry, 25 days after one year's service and 30 days after 10 years.
Band B	Grades above Higher Executive Officer, up to and including Grade 6 and equivalents: 25 days on entry and 30 days after 10 years' service.

There have been a number of changes over the last four years to the annual leave entitlements of staff in the above bands. These have all primarily been aimed at reducing the qualifying period for the maximum leave allowance of 30 days.

Senior Civil Service

The annual leave entitlement for staff in the Senior Civil Service is set centrally by the Cabinet Office and is currently 30 days.

Brixton Prison

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers have been transferred out of Brixton compulsorily since 1996. [65437]

Hilary Benn: I will write to my hon. Friend shortly with a detailed answer.

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the population is of HMP Brixton; and how many of those prisoners are Irish nationals. [65441]

Hilary Benn: On 27 June 2002 the population of Brixton prison was 752. Of those prisoners 30 are Irish nationals.

Prison Recalls

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals during the last

12 months had their licence revoked and were recalled to prisons in England and Wales. [65418]

Hilary Benn: During the 12-month period ending 31 May 2002, 4,773 determinate prisoners and 19 life sentence prisoners were recalled to prison using the Secretary of State's powers to revoke a prisoner's licence pursuant to sections 38(a)(1) and 39 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Prisoners serving a sentence of less than four years and who committed their earliest offence prior to 1 January 1999 or who were released on a statutory notice of supervision can only be recalled by the courts.

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average delay incurred was before prisoners received representation packs after they were recalled to prison in the last 12 months. [65419]

Hilary Benn: The Prison Service target for issuing representation packs to determinate sentence prisoners after they have been recalled to prison is five working days. During the 12 month period ending 31 May 2002, 76 per cent. of representation packs were issued within target. Information on the average delay in issuing these packs is not held centrally and to provide it would incur disproportionate cost.

Prisons

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new prisons have been built since 1997; and how many have had buildings modernised. [66644]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Since 1997, eight new prisons have been built and opened which are:

Year	New prisons
1997	Altcourse	Liverpool, Merseyside
1997	Parc	Bridgend, Mid Glamorgan
1998	Lowdham	Nottingham
1999	Weare[1]	Portland, Dorset
2000	Forest Bank	Manchester
2000	Ashfield	Bristol, Avon
2000	Dovergate	Uttoxeter, Staffordshire
2001	Rye Hill	Rugby, Warwickshire

PRIME MINISTER

The Dome

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the (a) Departments and (b) Ministers with responsibility for (i) the Millennium Dome and (ii) the Millennium Experience since 2 May 1997. [64579]

The Prime Minister: The Department of National Heritage, renamed the Department for Culture, Media and Sport in July 1997, was responsible for the Dome until the end of June 2001, when responsibility was passed to the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions. In May 2002, responsibility was transferred to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister under machinery of Government changes.

The Department of National Heritage, renamed the Department for Culture Media and Sport in July 1997, has been the Department responsible for the New Millennium Experience Company, which built the Dome and operated the Millennium Experience, since 2 May 1997.

The Ministers with responsibility for the New Millennium Experience Company and the Dome since 2 May 1997 have been as follows. My right hon. Friend the Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) was responsible, in a caretaker role, from May to July 1997, when responsibility was transferred to the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson). Responsibility was transferred from Peter Mandelson back to Chris Smith, again in a caretaker role, in December 1998. In January 1999, responsibility was transferred to Lord Falconer of Thoroton QC. Pending final decisions on the allocation of ministerial portfolios in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, Lord Rooker is dealing with policy issues related to the Dome, while responsibility for the New Millennium Experience Company will also transfer to a Minister in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in accordance with the established procedures in due course.

Ministerial Design Champions Group

Ms Shipley: To ask the Prime Minister who the chairman is of the Ministerial Design Champions Group. [65083]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at Culture, Media and Sport today.

Poppy Growing (Afghanistan)

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 1 July on the G8 summit, what the detailed steps were that were discussed at the G8 summit to combat poppy growing in Afghanistan. [66836]

The Prime Minister: The G8 discussed the UK's Anti-narcotics Strategy Paper and Action Plans for Afghanistan which concentrates on four key areas to combat poppy growing: law enforcement, provision of alternative livelihoods, institution building and demand reduction. Agreement was reached that the G8 would step up efforts to assist the Afghan Government in combating this menace in order to eradicate opium production in Afghanistan.

A copy of the Strategy Paper and Action Plans will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Heroin and Cocaine

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 1 July on the G8 Summit, what measures are being taken in heroin and cocaine producing states to stop production of raw material and to prevent their products from leaving the country. [66838]

The Prime Minister: The UK is leading the co-ordination of international anti-narcotics assistance to Afghanistan (which is the source of 90 per cent. of the heroin consumed in the UK). This involves working with international partners and organisations to build law enforcement capacity in Afghanistan to interdict opiates and undermine those criminal organisations engaged in drug trafficking. The international effort is also directed towards eradicating opium poppy and creating alternative livelihoods for Afghan opium farmers.

The UK has also sought to assist drug interdiction efforts of Afghanistan's neighbours. The FCO's Drugs and Crime Fund provided anti-narcotics assistance of around £1.5 million in 2000–01 to Iran, Pakistan and the Central Asian Republics. We have also provided assistance to Balkan countries through which heroin is trafficked from Afghanistan.

Colombia, Peru and Bolivia together produce virtually all of the world's cocaine. The UK is working closely with the Governments of each of these states to tackle the problem by supporting projects to build local law enforcement capability. Current projects include the provision of training and equipment in all three countries.

The Queen Mother

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister authorised the making of the complaint to the Press Complaints Commission concerning reports on the Lying in State of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother; and which Minister authorised its subsequent withdrawal. [67051]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made on 14 June, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many times he has travelled on official business by air within Great Britain since June 2001; [67473]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 1 July 2002, Official Report, column 81W, on official visits, on how many occasions he has travelled by rail on official business since June 2001; [67472]

(3) what information and records, including mode of travel, he has kept on his official visits since June 2001. [67471]

The Prime Minister: I travel making the most efficient and cost-effective arrangements. My travel arrangements are in accordance with the arrangements for official travel set out in chapter 7 of the Ministerial Code, and the accompanying guidance document, Travel by Ministers.

My office keeps records of my home and overseas travel. Since June 2001, I have made 33 journeys by air and eight by train. A judgment is always made about what is the most appropriate form of travel in the time available.

Street Crime

Mr. Beith: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has given responsibilities to Ministers other than the Home Office Ministers to monitor and receive reports from chief constables on the subject of street crime. [68024]

The Prime Minister: The street crime initiative involves a wide range of Government Departments tackling street crime with a co-ordinated programme of action. Each of these Departments along with representatives from the Police Service, magistrates and local government is represented on the Street Crime Action Group which I chair.

The Street Crime Action Group agreed that it would be helpful for individual Ministers from each of these Departments to visit the 10 target areas to give encouragement to local agencies and promote a shared approach at local as well as national level. I have asked the following Ministers to act as sponsors for the street crime initiative:

The right hon. Baroness Blackstone—Avon and Somerset
Hazel Blears—Lancashire
Yvette Cooper—Merseyside
John Denham—London
The right hon. Lord Falconer—Greater Manchester
The right hon. Harriet Harman QC—West Yorkshire
Ruth Kelly—Nottinghamshire
Barbara Roche—Thames Valley
The right hon. Lord Rooker—West Midlands
Stephen Twigg—South Yorkshire.

Data which were already being collected from a range of local agencies including the police and other criminal justice organisations are being copied to them for information.

Meteor Missile Project

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from the German Government concerning the future of the Meteor missile project; and if he will make a statement. [68026]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply he received from my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Dr. Moonie) on 3 July 2002, Official Report, columns 320–21W.

Falklands

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Prime Minister what events he has attended this year to commemorate the 20th anniversary of the Falklands conflict. [67572]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend, the Minister for the Armed Forces attended the ceremonies in Stanley to commemorate the 20th anniversary of the Falklands conflict on my behalf. I also sent a radio message to the people of the Falkland Islands on the anniversary of the end of the conflict, in which I made clear that the sovereignty, security and right of self-determination of the Falkland Islands and its people are not open to negotiation or compromise.

Statistics

Mr. Laws: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the statistics that are collected by his Department by English parliamentary constituency; and if he will make a statement. [67101]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend, the Financial Secretary today at column 769W.

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Laws: To ask the Prime Minister what refurbishment and repair work is planned for No. 10 Downing street in (a) 2002–03 and (b) 2003–04; what the estimated cost is; and if he will make a statement. [66882]

The Prime Minister: As my official spokesman has made clear, routine maintenance to the grade 1 listed building will be taking place and the precise costings have not yet been completed. Work will be carried out in numbers 10, 11 and 12. Invoices for the work will be paid in the normal way.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefits

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many successful appeals there have been against suspension of benefits in (a) Angus and (b) Scotland in each of the last five years. [67323]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Decisions on suspending payment of benefit are discretionary. There is no formal procedure for revising such decisions and there is no right of appeal against them. However, they can be changed in the light of any relevant new evidence or information submitted to the Department.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what criteria are used by officers at the local offices of the Department in deciding on suspension of benefits. [67259]

(2) how many people who have had benefits suspended in the last five years in (a) the Angus constituency and (b) Scotland have had them reinstated following investigation. [67255]

(3) if he will provide a breakdown of the reasons for suspension of benefits in (a) the Angus constituency and (b) Scotland in each of the last five years. [67256]

(4) how many suspensions of benefits were reversed following evidence of the medical condition of the applicant in (a) the Angus constituency and (b) Scotland in each of the last five years; [67257]

(5) how many claimants had their benefits suspended in (a) the Angus constituency and (b) Scotland in each of the last five years. [67258]

(6) what the average time taken to re-instate benefits following suspension was in (a) the Angus constituency and (b) Scotland in each of the last five years. [67260]

(7) if he will provide a breakdown of the type of benefit suspended in each of the last five years in (a) the Angus constituency and (b) Scotland. [67319]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: It is a long-standing principle that people receiving benefit have a responsibility to confirm their continuing entitlement on a periodic basis. Where a person may have failed to meet that obligation, it is right that payment of benefit should be suspended.

Benefit may be suspended in whole or in part and the suspension continues until the decision maker is able to make a substantive decision on entitlement. If the substantive decision results in no entitlement or a reduced entitlement, the fact that payments have been suspended means that an overpayment is avoided. If the doubt is resolved in a person's favour, payments are restored and arrears paid. Decisions on suspending payment of benefit are discretionary. There is no formal procedure for revising such decisions, but they can be changed in the light of any relevant new evidence or information submitted to the Department.

The Suspension and Termination Guide sets out the guidance for those who take decisions on suspending payment of benefit, and includes advice about the criteria to be applied. A copy has been placed in the Library.

No information is collected centrally on benefit suspensions.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what assessment he has made of the effect on those whose benefit has been suspended in full for failing to keep an appointment at Jobcentres from the time of suspension to reinstatement of benefits; [67320]

(2) if he will introduce a sliding scale of penalties, short of immediate suspension of benefit, for those who have failed to adhere to provisions relating to appointments at Jobcentres; [67324]

(3) how many claimants, broken down by age group, have had benefits suspended in (a) the Angus constituency and (b) Scotland in each of the last five years for failing to keep an appointment at a Jobcentre; [67325]

(4) what guidance has been given to local Jobcentres on the suspension of benefits from those who fail to keep appointments. [67326]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: It is a long-standing principle that people claiming jobseeker's allowance have a responsibility to confirm their continuing entitlement to benefit by attending the Jobcentre fortnightly and also by keeping other appointments arranged to help with their job search. Where a person may have failed to meet those obligations, it is right that payment of benefit should be suspended.

When making a decision about suspending benefit, staff in Jobcentres have access to the "Suspension and Termination Guide for Decision Makers" and the "Labour Market Conditions Guide" which gives advice on procedures. This advises that where someone has failed to attend an appointment, benefit should be suspended at the end of that day. The person may then contact the office within five days to show good cause for failing to attend. Examples of good cause include domestic emergencies, attending a job interview or illness. If good cause is demonstrated, then the suspension is lifted and payment made. If not, then the claim is terminated from the day of non-attendance.

No departmental research has been undertaken on suspensions of benefit and no information is collected centrally on the number of people who have had their benefit suspended.

We keep all our policies under review. However, we have no plans to change the current arrangements under which benefit can be suspended.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many persons in receipt of (a) disability living allowance, (b) incapacity benefit and (c) carer's allowance in (i) Angus and (ii) Scotland have also been in receipt of housing benefit in each of the last five years. [67322]

Malcolm Wicks: Information is not available in the format requested. The available information for Housing Benefit recipients in Scotland for each of the last five years is in the tables. The samples on which this information is based are too small to provide reliable figures for individual constituencies.

Housing benefit recipients in Scotland who also received either disability living allowance, incapacity benefit or invalid care allowance in May of each year from 1996 to 2000

May	Recipients with Disability living allowance	Recipients with Incapacity benefit	Recipients with Invalid care allowance
1996	62,000	74,000	15,000
1997	72,000	70,000	14,000
1998	78,000	72,000	15,000
1999	79,000	72,000	16,000
2000	82,000	66,000	17,000

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand and include cases where the partner of the recipient of housing benefit also receives the relevant other benefit.

2. Individuals can receive housing benefit, disability living allowance and incapacity benefit and such cases will be recorded twice in the table. The figures in the columns should accordingly not be added together.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average payment to a landlord in respect of housing benefit for a one-bedroom property was in (a) Angus, (b) Edinburgh, (c) Glasgow, (d) Aberdeen, (e) Dundee, (f) Newcastle, (g) Leeds and (h) London in each of the last five years. [67328]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the total cost was of housing benefit paid in (a) Angus and (b) Scotland in each of the last five years. [67321]

Malcolm Wicks: The available information is in the table.

Housing benefit expenditure

Notes:

1. Data for Angus relate to the Angus council area. This unitary authority was created on 1 April 1996 and comparable data are not available for the previous year.

2. Figures are rounded to the nearest £ million.

3. Figures are consistent with those published in the Chancellor's Budget Report, April 2002.

Benefit Payments

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many persons in receipt of retirement pension, in each parliamentary constituency in (a) Scotland and (b) Wales receive payment of their benefits (i) directly into their bank accounts and (ii) through local sub-post offices. [58125]

Mr. McCartney: The table sets out information on how retirement pensioners in parliamentary constituencies in Wales and Scotland are paid. It is not possible to say exactly how many people receive their payments at a post office because some people choose to pay a girocheque directly into a bank/building society account.

The information supplied is a snapshot during September 2001 and separates payments made by order book and girocheque, which are normally cashed at Post Offices, and payments made directly into bank/building society accounts by means of automated credit transfer (ACT).

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many letters have been issued to those people who will be affected by the reduction in SERPS on the sliding scale; and on what basis those people were identified. [60620]

Mr. McCartney: Up to and including 27 May 2002, 2,907,190 letters have been sent to people who will be affected by the reduction in SERPS on the sliding scale.

People were identified from their date of birth held on the National Insurance Recording System (NIRS2).

Older People

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether he will (a) assume the title of champion for older people and (b) chair the Cabinet Sub-Committee on Older People. [62000]

Mr. McCartney: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions looks forward to taking up the title of champion for older people. My right hon. Friend, the Prime Minister will publish a list of Cabinet Committees and their membership shortly.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the administrative cost of the coal section of the Compensation Recovery Unit was in 2001. [62553]

Maria Eagle: The administrative cost to the Compensation Recovery Unit of processing miners' compensation cases during the financial year 2001–02 was £1,171,497. The total amount recovered in the same period was £15,424,590.

New Deal (Ambition)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, pursuant to the answer of 12 November 2001, Official Report, column 570W, how many participants in the New Deal have received training through Ambition IT Initiative since January. [64355]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Ambition initiatives are demand-led, and are aimed at training disadvantaged people for good quality jobs. The availability of jobs is key to their success. In the latter part of 2001 there was a reduction in the global workforce in the IT sector as a number of key companies scaled down their operations. At the same time, a number of American companies which employ people in the UK froze recruitment as a result of the events of 11 September. The Ambition:IT initiative was consequently put on hold in December 2001 so that the Department could conduct a review of the skills requirements of the IT sector in the UK.

The review has concluded that the demand for people with IT skills is now most acute in the public sector. The programme has therefore been refocused on this sector and we now expect to start new deal participants in training from this autumn.

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list the EU directives and regulations that have been implemented through his Department in 2002; and what was the cost of each to public funds. [64973]

Maria Eagle: None.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will list the EU directives relating to her Department which have been (a) amended and (b) repealed in 2002. [64942]

Maria Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

None.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what proportion of claim forms issued to men aged over 60 years who were potentially eligible for winter fuel payments were returned by 30 March; how many of those claims proved well founded; and what extra steps he is taking to advise men aged over 60 years of potential eligibility in winter 2002. [64720]

Mr. McCartney: The information is not held in the format requested, However in the 2001–02 winter, the total number of claim forms issued was 285,431. The number of claim forms returned, by 30 March, was 223,927. Of these, 172,281 were successful. A significant number of people who requested claim forms could have become entitled to the winter fuel payment without the need for them to submit a claim and would have been paid automatically.

This year, as in previous years, we will run an information campaign to inform everyone aged 60 and over about winter fuel payments. The campaign for winter 2002 will run until the end of March 2003.

Pensions

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to consult the National Pensioners Convention before submitting the national strategic report on pensions to the European Council. [65525]

Mr. McCartney: The National Pensioners Convention is one of a number of organisations invited to a meeting with the Department in July concerning the National Strategy Report, which will be the UK's contribution to the exchange of information between member states agreed by the European Council.

Mental Health

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, pursuant to his answer of 18 January 2002, Official Report, column 507W, whether he has commissioned research on the impact on the health of mental health service users of the implementation of his Department's benefits policies; and if he will make a statement. [66043]

Maria Eagle: No research on this topic has been commissioned since 18 January 2002. DWP has an annual cycle for commissioning research, as set out in "The Forward Look 2001" Cm 5338, London: TSO, 2001. The DWP research programme for 2002–03 is currently being finalised and will be published in due course.

Basic State Pension

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will calculate the total cost of the basic state pension if it were increased to minimum income guarantee levels for (a) over 75s and (b) over 80s, and increased in line with earnings until (i) 2010, (ii) 2020, (iii) 2030, (iv) 2040 and (v) 2050 (A) in real terms and (B) expressed as a proportion of gross domestic product. [66219]

Mr. McCartney: The information requested is in the table.

	Real terms (£ billion)	As percentage of GDP
Cost of BSP assuming it is increased to MIG levels for over 75s and earnings uprated
2010	51	4.3
2020	62	4.4
2030	85	5.0
2040	109	5.4
2050	127	5.3
Cost of BSP assuming it is increased to MIG levels for over 80s and earnings uprated
2010	48	4.0
2020	56	3.9
2030	74	4.4
2040	89	4.4
2050	105	4.4

Notes:

1. Real term figures are in 2002–03 price terms.

2. It is assumed that the basic state pension will rise by 2.5 per cent. or inflation, whichever is the greater.

3. Long term earnings growth is assumed to be 1.75 per cent. and long term GDP growth is assumed to be 1.75 per cent. to be consistent with the earnings assumption.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many oral questions he has transferred to other Departments in each of the last 18 months. [65507]

Maria Eagle: The available information is in the table.

Oral questions transferred to other Departments

Month questions tabled	Number transferred
June 2001	3
July 2001	1
October 2001	2
November 2001	1
January 2002	3
February 2002	0
March 2002	2
May 2002	1
June 2002	3

Child Poverty

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the child poverty levels in the Portsmouth, South constituency were in (a) 1997 and (b) 2001; and if he will make a statement. [66470]

Malcolm Wicks: Poverty is a complex multi-dimensional issue, affecting many aspects of children's lives—including income, health, housing, the quality of their environment and opportunities to learn. There is therefore no single measure of 'child poverty levels' in the Portsmouth, South constituency.

Single Parents

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what (a) financial and (b) non-financial assistance is given to single parents; and what proposals the Government have to increase levels of support; [66356]

(2) what help is given to single parents to (a) re-enter work and (b) enter education. [66357]

Malcolm Wicks [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The Government believe that work is the best route out of poverty and research has shown that nine out of ten lone parents want to work, either now or in the future. Lone parents face problems on moving into work due to balancing their work life with their caring responsibilities. That is why we are providing extra help to reduce these inequalities and offer lone parents a range of choices to gain more independence by moving into work.

We have introduced measures to make work pay, including the working families' tax credit and the national minimum wage. From 2003 a lone parent working 16 hours a week will have a guaranteed minimum income of £179 a week. We have also provided help to make work possible for lone parents through the child care tax credit and the national child care strategy, which since 1997 has created new places for the benefit of more than 900,000 children.

The New Deal for Lone Parents is available to all lone parents and offers a personalised service of advice and guidance. Personal advisers help with identifying child care, give advice on work and training opportunities and continue to offer in-work support once the lone parent is in work. Nearly 300,000 lone parents so far have participated in the programme and over half have found work. The programme now offers greater training flexibility by funding work-focused courses in skills that will be of benefit in the labour market, such as basic IT skills. In addition, everyone who joins any of the New Deal programmes is now assessed for literacy and numeracy needs and offered high quality learning opportunities.

We are continuing to roll out compulsory personal adviser meetings for lone parents claiming income support to ensure that they are aware of the range of help and support we have introduced to enable them to move into work. Our new Jobcentre Plus offices are providing an integrated service to ensure that lone parents receive the benefits they are entitled to and the help they need to move into work.

The Government are encouraging everyone with the necessary qualifications, including lone parents, to enter further and higher education. For further education institutions in England[1] we have increased the ring-fenced budget for child care funds by 20 per cent. to £36 million in 2002–03. In higher education in England[1], lone parents have access to a range of support including child care grants, a grant for school meals and a grant towards travel, books and equipment.

TREASURY

Government Communications

Mr. Todd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice he has given to Government Departments on the disclosure of OGC Gateway reviews to hon. Members. [56531]

Mr. Boateng: Guidance has been issued and is available on the OGC website (www.ogc.gov.uk)

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the EU directives and regulations that have been implemented through his Department in 2002; and what was the cost of each to public funds. [64995]

Ruth Kelly: The following directives and regulations have been implemented to this date in 2002:

directive 2000/46/EC on the taking-up, pursuit of and prudential supervision of the business of electronic money institutions;

directive 2000/28/EC relating to the taking-up and pursuit of the business of credit institutions; directive 44/2001 on mutual assistance recovery;

the Protection of the Euro against Counterfeiting Regulations 2001 (SI 2001/3948) specified criminal penalties for breach of Council Regulation (EC) No.1338/2001; the provisions of the Customs Code Committee came into force on 1 January 2002, amending the preferential agreement with the Faroe Islands, by introducing legal provisions for proof of origin.

I am not aware of any further directives being implemented in 2002, but the Department does not keep a single record of this information and it could be assembled only at disproportionate cost. Similarly, calculating the cost to public funds of the directives' implementation would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the EU directives relating to his Department which have been (a) amended and (b) repealed in 2002. [64945] directive 2000/12/EC relating to the taking-up and pursuit of the business of credit institutions was amended in 2002, by directive 2000/28/EC;

Ruth Kelly: The following directives have been amended to this date in 2002:

directive 77/388 regarding value added tax arrangements applicable to electronically supplied services and broadcasting was amended by directive 2002/38/EC and regulation 792/2002, with effect from 1 July 2003;

directives 92/79/EEC, 92/80/EEC and 95/59/EC concerning the structure and rates of excise duty applied on manufactured tobacco were amended by directive 2002/10/EC; directive 79/267/EEC as regards the solvency margin requirements for life assurance undertakings was amended by directive 2002/12/EC; directive 73/239/EEC as regards the solvency margin requirements for non-life insurance undertakings was amended by directive 2002/13/EC.

No directive relating specifically to my Department was repealed in 2002.

I am not aware of any further directives being amended or repealed in 2002, but this Department does not keep a single record of this information and it could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Banking Licences

Keith Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which banking licences have been (a) granted and (b) refused since 1 May 1997. [65387]

Ruth Kelly: The information is as follows:

(a) In the period between 1 May 1997 and 30 November 2001, a total of 42 institutions were granted banking licences under the Banking Act 1987. Since 1 December 2001, one firm has been authorised as a bank under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000, and it appears on the Financial Services Authority's public register. A detailed list of these 43 firms follows.

(b) In the period between 1 May 1997 and 30 November 2001, a total of three institutions applied for authorisation under the Banking Act 1987 but did not proceed through to authorisation. In the period from 1 December 2001, no applications for banks have been formally refused. The names of firms which apply for authorisation have at all times remained confidential between the firm and the relevant supervisor, until the firm has been authorised.

Economic Growth

Hywel Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the most recent estimates are for GDP growth for (a) the UK, (b) England, (c) Scotland, (d) Northern Ireland, (e) Wales and (f) each EU Objective 1 area. [66165]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Karen Dunnell to Mr. Hywel Williams, dated 8 July 2002:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question on estimates of GDP growth of the countries and EU Objective 1 areas of the United Kingdom. I am replying in his absence. (66165)

Growth rates are normally calculated on the basis of data at constant prices. However, regional GDP data are only available on a current price basis, in the absence of regional deflators. The growth rates shown in the table below will therefore include the effects of inflation.

The latest GDP estimates for the countries of the United Kingdom and the English regions are available up to 1999, and for the sub-regions (NUTS-2 areas) up to 1998. These data form the basis for the growth rates shown in table 1 below. The sub-regions Merseyside; South Yorkshire; Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly; and West Wales and the Valleys are the four UK areas that currently have full Objective 1 status. Northern Ireland and the Highlands and Islands did not qualify for Objective 1 funding in the current round but are in receipt of transitional funding and are included for completeness.

Data up to 2000 are expected to be published at the end of 2002.

The data referred to in this answer are available in the House of Commons Library and on the web at http://www.statistics.gov.uk/regionalaccounts.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the estimated (a) level and (b) cost of energy use in his Department and associated agencies was in each year since 1997; what proportion of energy was generated from renewable sources; and if he will make a statement. [65956]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 3 July 2002 by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs.

Office for National Statistics

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on which projects the public sector classification committee of the Office of National Statistics has been asked to comment since 1 January. [66718]

Ruth Kelly: The answer requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Karen Dunnell to Mr. Taylor, dated 8 July 2002:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question on which projects the Public Sector Classification Committee of the Office for National Statistics has been asked to comment since 1st January. I am replying in his absence. (66718)

The public sector classification committee (PSCC) considers a wide range of projects as the need arises. Four of these are currently confidential or market sensitive. The others are in the list below.

New Tax Credits—discussion complete in 2001, but announced since 1 January.

Network Rail

Education Maintenance Allowance

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence there is from the evaluation of the education maintenance allowance pilots of the effect on family income of replacing child benefit on participation in education by young people aged 16 to 19 years. [67528]

Mr. Boateng: The Government are piloting an educational maintenance allowance in 56 local education authorities. EMAs provide financial support for 16 to 19 year olds to continue in education through provision of weekly payments and bonuses for retention and achievement. The Department for Education and Skills published the latest evaluation of the pilots on 3 July. Copies of this are available in the House Library.

Individual Savings Account

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) mini and (b) maxi ISAs were purchased in the last tax year. [67229]

Ruth Kelly: Estimates of the number of mini and maxi ISA accounts receiving subscriptions and the amount of these subscriptions for 2001–02 are contained in table 9.4 of Inland Revenue Statistics. The latest version is on the Inland Revenue's website: http://www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/isa/isa—t01–1.htm

Part-time Workers

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average weekly hours of work for part-time workers were in 2001 in the United Kingdom. [67219]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Karen Dunnell to Mr. Bob Laxton, dated 8 July 2002:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the average hours worked by part-time workers in the United Kingdom. I am replying in his absence. (67219)

The Labour Force Survey (LFS) estimate of the average actual hours of part-time workers for the twelve month period ending December 2001 is 15.6 hours.

PISA 2000 Survey

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and what proportion of pupils in the PISA 2000 Survey achieved the correct answer in the Reading Unit 1 section of the literacy test in (a) Question 1, (b) Question 2, (c) Question 3, (d) Question 4 and (e) Question 5. [67842]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Karen Dunnell to Mr. Nick Gibb, dated 8 July 2002:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning how many and what proportion of pupils in the PISA 2000 Survey achieved the correct answer in the Reading Unit 1 section of the literacy test in (a) Question 1, (b) Question 2, (c) Question 3, (d) Question 4 and (e) Question 5. I am replying in his absence. (67842)

The proportion of students who answered individual questions correctly is available for all items for each country in the Test Item Compendia available at http://pisaweb.acer.edu.au/oecd_pisa_data_s1.html

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who in (a) the Department for Education and Skills, (b) the Office of National Statistics and (c) other Departments was responsible for (i) devising the sample selection, (ii) making the sample selection and (iii) compiling the list of schools used in the PISA 2000 survey. [67843]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Karen Dunnell to Mr. Nick Gibb, dated 8 July 2002:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning who in (a) the Department for Education and Skills, (b) the Office of National Statistics and (c) other departments was responsible for (i) devising the sample selection, (ii) making the sample selection and (iii) compiling the list of schools used in the PISA 2000 survey. I am replying in his absence. (67843)

The sampling frame used in PISA and the sample design are described in Appendix A of Student Achievement in England—Results in reading, mathematical and scientific literacy among 15-year-olds from the OECD PISA 2000 study, published by ONS in May 2002.

A number of people were involved in devising the sample selection in consultation with the international sampling referees.

The report is available free at: http://www.statistics.gov.uk/statbase/Product.asp?vlnk=8169&Mo re=N

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 1 July 2002, Official Report, column 117W, whether schools were permitted to remove pupils from the selection made by PISA; and whether pupils were omitted from the list of students born in 1984 and on what basis. [67864]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Karen Dunnell to Mr. Gibb, dated 8 July 2002:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question pursuant to the answer given on 1st July, Official Report, column 117W, whether schools were permitted to remove pupils from the selection made by PISA; and whether any pupils were omitted from the list of students born in 1984 and, if so, on what basis. I am replying in his absence. (67864)

The protocols for selecting students within schools and for excluding students are described in Appendix A of Student Achievement in England—Results in reading, mathematical and scientific literacy among 15-year-olds from the OECD PISA 2000 study, published by ONS in May 2002.

The report is available free at: http://www.statistics.gov.uk/statbase/Product.asp?v1nk=8169&Mo re=N

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the questions asked in the follow-up sessions that were held for pupils taking the PISA 2000 tests were the same as those in the original tests. [67844]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Karen Dunnell to Mr. Gibb, dated 8 July 2002:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if the questions asked in the follow-up sessions that were held for pupils taking the PISA 2000 tests were the same as those in the original tests. I am replying in his absence. (67844)

The circumstances under which students were assessed in a follow-up session and the construction of the PISA test are described in Section A.3 and 1.6 of Student Achievement in England—Results in reading, mathematical and scientific literacy among 15-year-olds from the OECD PISA 2000 study, published by ONS in May 2002.

The tests used in the follow-up sessions were the same as those in the original testing session. The PISA test contained over 200 items in total, equivalent to 7 hours of testing time. Not all students were given the same questions. Each student was given one of nine different test booklets with different combinations of items. The tests were administered by test administrators who were independent of the school. Tests were brought to the school by the administrator on the day of testing and removed after testing. Only 3% of students were assessed in a follow-up session.

Devolution

Angus Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the EU Insurance Committee is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68601]

Ruth Kelly: The EU Insurance Committee is due to next meet on 26 and 27 November 2002.

The UK is represented by an official from HM Treasury and a representative from the Financial Services Authority. As financial regulation is not a devolved matter, representatives of the Scottish Executive have not attended the committee.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the EU Banking Advisory Committee is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68604]

Ruth Kelly: The EU Banking Advisory Committee is due to meet next on 9 October 2002.

The UK is represented by an official from HM Treasury and two from the Financial Services Authority. As financial regulation is not a devolved matter, representatives of the Scottish Executive have not attended the committee.

Adoptions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many adoptions have been completed in each of the last five years. [67161]

Ruth Kelly: The answer requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Karen Dunnell to Mr. Paul Burstow, dated 8 July 2002:

The Registrar General for England and Wales has been asked to reply to your recent question on the number of adoptions completed in each of the last five years. I am replying in his absence. (67161)

The information requested is given in the table.

Number of adoptions in England and Wales in each of the last five years

	Number of adoptions
1997	5,212
1998	4,617
1999	4,988
2000	5,036
2001	5,131

Statistics

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the statistics that are collected by his Department by English parliamentary constituency; and if he will make a statement. [67099]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Karen Dunnell to Mr. David Laws, dated 8 July 2002:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question on which statistics are collected by English Parliamentary Constituency. I am replying in his absence. (67099)

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) collects a wide range of statistics. However, they are not collected at Parliamentary Constituency level for a number of reasons. In particular, most of the statistics collected at a local level are based on administrative areas such as local authorities, and these do not always share boundaries with Parliamentary Constituencies.

Members of the Government Statistical Service (GSS) in all Government Departments provide a statistical service to the House of Commons Library.

The House of Commons Library provides a tailored service for MP's. Statistics that can often be provided at Parliamentary Constituency level include economic status (employment, unemployment and inactivity), claimant count, employee jobs, average earnings and Census data. Also, many statistics that are available at a lower level can generally be aggregated to Parliamentary Constituency level. This includes the increasing range of statistics at ward level becoming available through ONS's Neighbourhood Statistics Service (www.statistics.gov.uk/neighbourhood).

Excess Profits

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there is a standard definition of excess profits which is used by the Government; and if he will make a statement. [68001]

Dawn Primarolo: There is no standard definition of excess profit used by the Government.

Taxation

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 26 June 2002, Official Report, column 945W, on taxation, for what reason the figures in the answer included benefit changes; and if he will make a statement. [66754]

Dawn Primarolo: The figures in the answer referred to included benefit changes in order to provide a comprehensive picture of the cumulative impact on households across the income distribution of Budget measures introduced over the last Parliament.

Lone Parents

Vera Baird: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to make provision to enable lone parents to maintain stable child care arrangements during a period of temporary unemployment once the new tax credits have come into force in April 2003. [67244]

Dawn Primarolo: The working tax credit, which includes support for the costs of eligible child care, is designed to encourage people to take up work and to make work pay for low-income households. So entitlement to it will depend on working the required number of hours. It will be based on the hours normally worked by the claimant and will be able, as a result, to continue providing support for short periods when the claimant is unable to work their usual hours. It will also be able to cover short gaps between jobs.

For longer breaks in employment, we will continue to provide help through other channels, especially for lone parents who need to use child care. Lone parents can receive financial assistance through the Adviser Discretion Fund, where up-front child care costs represent a barrier to moving into work. From April 2003 there will also be a dedicated child care co-ordinator in every Jobcentre Plus district to help jobseekers with children to access information on child care provision in their area.

Tax Credits (Scotland)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families in Scotland are in receipt of (a) the working families tax credit and (b) the child tax credit. [68483]

Dawn Primarolo: For the number receiving the working families tax credit, I refer the hon. Member to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Jarrow (Mr. Hepburn) on 16 January 2002, Official Report, column 293W. The number of families who are eligible for the children's tax credit in Scotland is estimated to be 400,000.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Computers

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many computers were replaced in his Department in each of the past three years; how the replaced units were disposed of and by which companies; and at what cost. [60750]

Yvette Cooper: It is the policy of the Lord Chancellor's Department to try to make surplus IT equipment available to schools and other non-profit making bodies at low cost. In disposing of its computers therefore, the Department uses Recycle-IT! the UK's largest computer re-use project. They supply second-user systems tailored to the needs of the voluntary, church, education and disabled organisations, embryonic businesses and Third World countries. As Recycle-IT! do not charge for this service, there is no cost to the Department for disposing of redundant equipment.

The following table relates to the limited number of PCs owned and managed directly by the Department. It shows the total number of computers disposed of in each of the last three financial years. It also shows the total number of those computers, which were replaced along with the cost of the replacement computers.

	Disposed	Replaced	Cost of replacement
1999–2000	302	151	103,000
2000–01	415	365	435,660
Total	801	516	538,660

The Departments PFI partners own the majority of the IT equipment used. The contract stipulates that 70 per cent. of the equipment provided under the contract must be no more than three years old, and that none should be more than five years old. There are currently 2,800 PC's and laptop computers provided by our PFI supplier. The Department also encourages its PFI partners to use Recycle-IT!

Knutsford Crown Court

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what repairs and maintenance is being carried out to Knutsford Crown court; and how much the programme costs. [67186]

Yvette Cooper: Following advice from our specialist conservation consultant, the Lord Chancellor's Department are currently taking forward a project to repair the damaged ceiling to courtroom one (including minor roof repairs), at an estimated cost of £29,000. The Department is also planning to repair the boilers at an estimated cost of £4,000.

Special Advisers

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many special advisers were employed by the Lord Chancellor's Department (a) between 1 May and 31 December 1997 and (b) in each year from 1998 to 2001 inclusive; and what the total amount spent on special advisers by the Department was in each of those years. [41253]

Yvette Cooper: The Department employed no special advisers between 1 May and 31 December 1997 and employed one special adviser in each of the financial years 1998–99, 1999–2000 and 2000–01. The salaries of special advisers are negotiated individually within the stated pay scale which, for each the years in question, was as follows:

1998–99:

up to £74,954 (from 1 April)

up to £76,056 (from 1 December)

1999–2000

up to £78,186

2000–01

up to £80,453.

Details of costs are not given in order to protect the privacy of the appointee concerned, in line with exemption 12 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number and expected cost to the Lord Chancellor's Department of special advisers in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03. [43270]

Yvette Cooper: There was one special adviser in the department as at 13 March 2002. The salaries of special advisers are negotiated individually within the stated pay range (up to £125,000, although the Special Advisers Remuneration Committee may award salaries up to £90,000 only: salaries above that figure are set by the Prime Minister). Details of expected costs are not given in order to protect the privacy of the appointee concerned, in line with exemption 12 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Libra Project

Mr. Evans: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the cost to the Government of a failure of the Libra project to deliver on its core case management application. [55108]

Yvette Cooper: Delivery of a central part of the contract—the office infrastructure and network—is over 75 per cent. complete and office services are being delivered to over 8,500 magistrates court staff.

There have been delays in delivering the software application. We have been in discussion with Fujitsu Services (formerly ICL) on the impact of the delay and to determine the best way forward for the project. The resolution is expected shortly, and the House will be informed of the outcome.

We remain determined to provide magistrates courts with modern computer equipment and standardised IT software. If Fujitsu Systems failed to deliver the Libra software, it would be necessary to meet the requirement from elsewhere in the market. Costs would be dependent on the market conditions and on negotiations.

Chief Justice of Germany

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when she last met the Chief Justice of Germany. [66331]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Neither my right hon. Friend the Lord Chancellor, nor my ministerial colleagues have met the Chief Justice of Germany.

Buildings Insurance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the cost of buildings insurance to the Lord Chancellor's Department was (a) before and (b) after 11 September 2001. [66934]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Departments are required to comply with the Government's general policy on insurance which is set out in Government accounting, Chapter 30, para 30.2.5, which notes that Government do not need to purchase insurance to protect the viability of its business and should consider insurance only where the value of claims met would exceed the cost of the insurance premiums. Commercial insurance of a building is acceptable in cases where (a) insurance is a condition of a lease (b) the lessor will not accept a Government indemnity (c) incurring the total cost of the accommodation in question, including the cost of the insurance is more cost effective than other accommodation options [Government Accounting, para 30.2.11a]

The Lord Chancellor's Department incurs insurance costs as a condition of their lease on various leasehold properties they occupy through the landlord service charges levied. Details of the annual insurance premiums per property pre and post 11 September are not available and the Department would incur a disproportionate cost establishing this information.

Legal Aid Solicitors (Wales)

Ian Lucas: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the shortfall of legal aid solicitors in Wales, broken down by (a) subject and (b) county. [65498]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Legal Services Commission contracts with both quality assured solicitors' firms and not-for-profit organisations to provide legal services which meet the identified priority needs for those services. The Commission is confident that there is sufficient provision in Wales, in all categories of law and in all counties. However, it is developing and improving coverage.

For civil legal aid contracts with solicitors' firms, the Commission allocates a defined number of cases in specified categories of law. In its contracts with not-for-profit organisations, the Commission allocates a defined number of caseworker hours in specified categories of law. The allocation of cases and time throughout 2001–02 exceeded the number of cases actually started. There is no evidence at present of a shortfall of civil legal aid providers in any category of law in Wales.

The Wales Regional Legal Services Committee is preparing a report on how well the Commission's civil contracts are currently meeting legal need. The report, which will be issued this autumn, will also identify any remaining priorities for new contracts in the next financial year.

For criminal defence work, the Commission has no evidence at present of any shortfall in the number of contracted solicitors' firms undertaking criminal defence work in Wales.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many oral questions she has transferred to other departments in each of the last 18 months. [65512]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Lord Chancellor's Department only transfers Parliamentary Questions when it is more appropriate for another Government Department to answer. The information requested is set out in the following table.

Month	2001 Number of questions transferred and to which Department	2002 Number of questions transferred and to which Department
January	—	0
February	—	Three to Home Office
March	—	0
April	—	Three to Home Office
May	—	[1]n/a
June	[1]n/a	One to Home Office One to Prime Minister
July	One to FCO	One to Home Office
August	[1]n/a
September	[1]n/a
October	[1]n/a
November	0
December	One to Home Office

[1] Months that the Lord Chancellor's Department had no oral question time

Civil Courts

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many court staff he estimates will be made redundant as a result of his proposals to modernise the civil courts. [65279]

Yvette Cooper: The timetable and extent of the courts Tribunals Modernisation Programme has not been finalised so it is not yet known what the subsequent effect on staffing levels will be. Initial business planning assumptions indicate that it may be possible to minimise redundancies through the effective management of retirement and recruitment policies, natural turnover of staff and by exploring opportunities for staff in other areas such as the Immigration Appeal Appellate. Redundancy options will be explored only as a last resort, and there will be full consultation with the relevant trade unions throughout.

Rape

Vera Baird: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what role he intends his Department to take in the cross-departmental committee on the HMIC/CPSI thematic report on rape. [65212]

Yvette Cooper: The Director of the Crown court is representing the Department on the cross-departmental committee to take forward the comments made in the report in relation to the listing of cases with allegations of rape. He has asked that the comments about the listing of rape cases be considered in thematic review of listing which is currently being carried out by the joint Criminal Justice Inspectorates.

Census 1901 Website

Mr. Beith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the 1901 census website will be available for access. [66048]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The PRO and QinetiQ Ltd. are working together to get the system back on line as soon as possible.

Patients (Fluids)

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether the responses received from the consultation on 'Making Decisions' were analysed to determine how many respondents were (a) in favour and (b) against the withholding of food and fluids from incapacitated patients not actually dying; and whether such an analysis will be conducted following the consultation on 'Withholding and Withdrawing Life-Prolonging Treatments: Good Practice in Decision Making'. [67207]

Ms Rosie Winterton: 'Making Decisions' is a policy statement setting out the Government's proposals for making decisions on behalf of mentally incapacitated adults. It was issued in 1999 following on from a consultation paper: "Who Decides? Making Decisions on Behalf of Mentally Incapacitated Adults". The question posed by the hon. Member was not asked in that consultation paper. 'Withholding and Withdrawing Life-Prolonging Treatments: Good Practice in Decision Making' has recently been produced by the General Medical Council, not by my Department.

Ministerial Visits

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many visits to EU applicant countries she and her Ministers have made since 1 January 2001. [66330]

Ms Rosie Winterton: My right hon. Friend Baroness Scotland of Asthal QC and former LCD Minister Lord Bach have both visited a number of EU applicant countries since 1 January 2001. The dates are provided in the following table.

Minister	Country	Date
Lord Bach	Czech Republic	24 January 2001
Lord Bach	Slovak Republic	8 March 2001
Baroness Scotland	Slovak Republic	18–20 December 2001
Baroness Scotland	Poland	23–25 January 2002
Baroness Scotland	Bulgaria	29–31 January 2002

Building Values

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the buildings owned by the Lord Chancellor's Department and estimate the market value of each of them. [66952]

Yvette Cooper: The National Asset Register, published in July 2001 (Cm 5221), lists assets owned by each Department and their valuation.

Ministerial Salaries

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the annual cost was of ministerial salaries in her Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 2001–02. [60947]

Yvette Cooper: The levels of ministerial salaries are recommended by the senior salaries review body. From May 1997, in this Department there was one Cabinet Minister (the Lord Chancellor) at an annual salary of £140,665, and one parliamentary secretary at an annual salary of £23,623. From June 2001, there was one Cabinet Minister (again, the Lord Chancellor) at an annual salary of £173,875; one parliamentary secretary (House of Lords) at an annual salary of £60,961; and two parliamentary secretaries (House of Commons) at an annual salary of £26,835.

Community Service Orders

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many community service orders were extinguished without being served in each year since 1995. [65126]

Hilary Benn: I have been asked to reply.

The number of community punishment orders (formerly community service orders) which terminated before completion of the order in each year since 1995 in England and Wales was as follows:

Year	Number
1995	14,700
1996	14,400
1997	13,400
1998	12,700
1999	12,300
2000[1]	13,500

[1] Latest year for which complete information is available

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many community service punishments were handed down by magistrates' courts in each year since 1990; and what proportion of these sentences were served. [65125]

Hilary Benn: I have been asked to reply.

The number of persons sentenced by magistrates' courts to community punishment orders (CPOs) (formerly community service orders) and supervised by the probation service in England and Wales for each year since 1990 was as follows:

Year	Number
1990	26,500
1991	30,000
1992	31,600
1993	35,700
1994	38,900
1995	38,100
1996	37,200
1997	37,900
1998[2]	39,800
1999[2]	42,200
2000[2,3]	43,600

[1] Excludes (CPOs) given for breach.

[2] Includes (CPOs) for persistent petty offenders and for fine deaulters.

[3] Latest year for which complete information is available.

The proportion of community punishment orders (formerly community service orders) terminating each year since 1990 which were successfully completed was as follows:

Year	Percentage
1990	69
1991	70
1992	72
1993	71
1994	70
1995	71
1996	71
1997	71
1998	72
1999	72
2000[1]	71

HEALTH

Primary Care Trusts

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many primary care trusts had finance directors in post on 1 April; and what the total budget is for these organisations with finance directors in place; [54715]

(2) how many primary care trusts were in place on 1 April; and what the total budget is for these organisations. [54716]

Mr. Hutton: Three hundred and three primary care trusts (PCTs), including Northumberland which has been designated a care trust, were in operation on 1 April 2002.

We have allocated £41.5 billion in total to health authorities (HAs) for 2002–03. Of this, £40.9 billion has been shared by HAs between their constituent PCTs.

The number of PCTs that had directors of finance in place on 1 April 2002 was 208. Acting directors of finance are in place where a permanent appointment has not yet been made. Their share of HA allocations was £27.9 billion for 2002–03.

An element of the allocation shared between PCTs will be retained at HA level for HA level functions, collective commissioning and other items funded at HA level. Information on this is not collected centrally.

Nurses

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial assistance is provided to those nurses wishing to return to the NHS for (a) tuition fees, (b) subsistence and (c) travel costs; and if he will make a statement. [56711]

Mr. Hutton: Health care professions (including nurses), returning to the national health service benefit from a returners' package which includes:

- free refresher training
- a minimum of £1,000 financial support while retaining (£1,500 for midwives)
- assistance with child care support of up to £135 per week for one child and £200 for two or more children
- assistance with travel and books.

Over £70 million has been allocated to build around 150 on-site subsidised nurseries. Around a further 7,500 places will be created by 2004.

The Government's starter home initiative launched on 6 September 2001 will help the NHS ease staffing shortages in parts of London and the south east.

Herbal Remedies

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations the UK has made in respect of the EU Traditional Herbal Medicinal Products Directive with specific reference to moves to bring herbal remedies into the regulatory regime dealing with pharmaceutical drugs; and what position the UK has taken on the proposal to extend this to cover combinations of herbs and nutrients. [57961]

Ms Blears: Many herbal remedies in the United Kingdom and elsewhere in the European Union already have a marketing authorisation under European medicines legislation.

Negotiations on the proposed directive on traditional herbal medicinal products are at an early stage. So far the Government have argued in particular that there should be greater flexibility to take account of non European herbal traditions and that an early date should be set for the review of the scope of the directive in relation to non herbal traditional medicines.

The medical control agency is holding a consultation exercise on the directive. This is showing that there are varied views on the proposed manufacturing and quality standards. Some respondents, including UK manufacturers of traditional herbal remedies, have argued that the standards are achievable and are necessary in the interests of consumer protection and of the long-term reputation of the herbal sector.

Others, particularly from the health food sector, have argued that the standards are inappropriate or unnecessary. We have extended the consultation until the end of July in order to allow those with concerns to identify the specific areas where they believe the standards to be over-regulatory. We will further develop the UK negotiating position on this issue once we have assessed the additional information provided during the extended period of consultation.

We are currently considering representations that have been received during the consultation about the regulatory position on herbal-nutrient combination products.

MMR Vaccine

David Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have been given the MMR vaccine; and what the Government's targets are. [58562]

Ms Blears: Current immunisation targets are for 95 per cent. of children to be immunised by age two against measles, mumps and rubella; there is no formal target for a reinforcing (booster) dose. The Department recommends that MMR, a combined vaccine against measles, mumps and rubella, is administered in a single dose at between 12 and 15 months of age.

Information about the percentage of children immunised against measles mumps and rubella by their 2nd birthday, and from 1999–2000 by their 5th birthday, is contained in the statistical bulletin "NHS Immunisation Statistics, England: 2000–01". A copy of the bulletin is in the Library and can also be found on the Department's website www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0121.htm.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the meetings he and his Ministers (a) have had and (b) propose to have with NHS trust and health authority chairmen and chief executives to discuss (i) reducing radiotherapy waiting lists and (ii) the associated financial implications of such action. [59286]

Ms Blears: Ministers have not met chairmen and chief executives specifically to discuss reducing radiotherapy waiting times. However, we are taking wide ranging action to improve radiotherapy waiting times including a number of initiatives aimed at tackling the shortage of professionals associated with radiotherapy delivery, major investment in radiotherapy equipment, streamlining radiotherapy delivery through the cancer services collaborative and increased the number of training places for radiographers.

Mental Health

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which agencies are responsible for monitoring and caring for individuals who have been released from a mental hospital; and what arrangements ensure that agencies are co-ordinating these systems. [67160]

Jacqui Smith: The lead health service provider, usually the National Health Service Trust, and the local authority social service department have the responsibility for the care of individuals who have been discharged from hospital. The care programme approach provides the framework for the care of people with mental health problems wherever the user is in the system, including residential and community settings. This framework is also used by the probation service, the police, and housing agencies who will be involved in on-going review of care arrangements and risk assessments

Arrangements for monitoring the care programme approach are set out in the policy booklet: "Effective Care Co-ordination in Mental Health Services" (Department of Health, October 1999) and "An Audit Pack for Monitoring the Care Programme Approach" (Department of Health, June 2001).

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action has been taken in respect of each of the recommendations for action of the key area group of the Workforce Action Team on recruitment and retention issues in the mental health field. [67973]

Mr. Hutton: The mental health care group workforce team (MHCGWT) is actively taking forward the recommendations of the workforce action team (WAT). The MHCGWT is currently:

working with Workforce Development Confederations as part of their recruitment and retention agenda; ensuring that wider recruitment and retention issues across the NHS include the correct focus on mental health.

The MHCGWT have set up a recruitment and retention sub-group in order to develop initiatives on:

an advertisement campaign on mental health recruitment for later this year;

a community engagement programme to recruit local people into the mental health workforce; producing recruitment videos; disseminating good practice.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to legislate for the regulation of (a) psychologists, (b) psychotherapists and (c) counsellors. [67981]

Mr. Hutton: We have given a high priority to improving service quality in general in the national health service and social care services, as well as in the private sector. A number of initiatives testify to this, including the development of national service frameworks, the establishment of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence and the new framework of clinical governance. These modernised and more accountable professional regulatory arrangements will work alongside NHS quality assurance arrangements to offer much better protection for patients, wherever they are seen.

Proposals for the regulation of these groups are in the first instance a matter for the health professions council. The Department have indicated that we will be supporting moves to establish a scheme of statutory professional regulation of applied psychologists.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the women's mental health consultation process. [67955]

Jacqui Smith: Preparation of the consultation document for the national women's mental health strategy continues and publication will take place after completion of the current spending review.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent estimate he has made of the proportion of those suffering from severe mental illness (a) who are capable of undertaking paid employment and (b) who undertake paid employment. [67949]

Jacqui Smith: This information is not available. However, the psychiatric morbidity survey carried out by the Office for National Statistics (ONS) and published in 2001 provided some information on the prevalence of psychiatric disorder by employment status. A copy of this report has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the estimated cost is of implementation of the draft Mental Health Bill; and whether such funds are available. [67964]

Jacqui Smith: The costs of the Mental Health Bill are being considered as part of the Department's spending review and the timescale for implementation will be determined by the availability of funding from the spending review settlement.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the reason was for his decision on the timing and length of the consultation on the draft Mental Health Bill. [67963]

Jacqui Smith: Consultation on the draft Mental Health Bill will run for 12 weeks from 25 June 2002 until 16 September 2002.

This period is in keeping with the Cabinet Office code of practice guidance on written consultation.

The Government are committed to introducing legislation as soon as parliamentary time allows and we are therefore consulting on the draft Mental Health Bill at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment he has made of the benefits of early treatment for those with mental health problems. [67944]

Jacqui Smith: The Department's research, analysis and information directorate has commissioned a review of current evidence in the field of early intervention in psychosis. This is being undertaken by Professor Max Marshall and is due to be completed by the end of September 2002.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of those people who suffer severe mental illness were first treated for it by compulsion under a section of the Mental Health Act 1983 in each of the last five years. [67969]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not available in this form.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent reports he has received of people with a diagnosis of severe mental illness being turned away when they ask for treatment. [67958]

Jacqui Smith: There have been no reports of people with a diagnosis of severe mental illness being turned away from services.

The mental health national service framework explicitly states that everyone with severe mental illness should have access to the range of services they need.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average period of untreated psychosis prior to a person receiving treatment was in the last 12 months. [67945]

Jacqui Smith: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent progress has been made on the selection and implementation of instrumentation for the routine measurement of outcomes in mental health. [67960]

Jacqui Smith: The Department is developing an outcomes programme pilot for the implementation of instruments, which should be set up by September 2002. The plan to begin routine measurement of outcomes in mental health from April 2003 is currently on target.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the cost is per prison of providing mental health in-reach services in the last year for which figures are available; [67997]

(2) how much is being spent in 2002–03 on providing mental health in-reach services in prisons; and how much will be spent in (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05 and (c) 2005–06. [67994]

Jacqui Smith: During 2001–02 mental health in-reach services were being established in 18 prisons in England. During 2002–03 it is planned that in-reach teams should be established in a further 26 prisons. Funding amounting to £3,850,000 has been allocated in 2002–03 to cover the costs of these developments. Specific allocations are made taking account of participating prisons' type, size and throughput.

Funding for 2003–04 and beyond has not yet been decided.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of beds available for the treatment of those with mental ill-health [67948]

Jacqui Smith: We have already fulfilled our NHS Plan commitments to create 500 extra secure beds and 320 extra 24-hour staffed beds by April 2001, and are on track to deliver 200 additional long-term secure beds by 2004.

Crisis resolution teams are dramatically reducing pressure on in-patient beds by 2004 there will be 335 such teams treating 100,000 people a year who would otherwise need admission to hospital.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what systems are in place to notify (a) police and (b) local authorities about persons who have been placed in a mental hospital being released; and if he will make a statement. [67177]

Jacqui Smith: The Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 required the police and probation services (the 'responsible authorities') in each of the 42 areas of England and Wales to establish arrangements for assessing and managing the risks posed by sexual and violent offenders. These arrangements include those who have been detained in respect of a conviction by a hospital or guardian ship order within the meaning of the Mental Health Act 1983. These arrangements were introduced in April 2001. Scope to disclose information to the responsible authorities only exists within current legislation, where there is a high risk of harm to self or others, consistent with the Human Rights Act. Responsibility for the arrangements rests with those in charge of care and treatment, bearing in mind the facts of each individual case. The Department will be issuing guidance to ensure that all mental health trusts are appropriately represented in the arrangements.

New proposals concerning the rights of victims to information are contained within the draft Mental Health Bill published last week, and in relation to information exchange in the accompanying consultation document. We look forward to hearing views on these proposals.

Looked-after Children

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 23 April 2002, Official Report, column 240W, on looked-after children, if he will set out the number of children in residential care broken down by (a) health authority and (b) region in each of the last five years. [67253]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not collected by health authority. The information available by region is shown in the table.

Number of children looked after in residential placements at 31 March 1997

	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001
England	7,900	8,500	8,300	8,900	8,500
North East	595	555	505	540	505
North West	1,090	1,100	1,115	1,145	1,045
Merseyside	415	455	445	490	410
Yorkshire and Humberside	1,000	970	1,005	1,025	940
East Midlands	420	520	540	535	485
West Midlands	800	880	860	950	865
South West	490	530	545	535	555
London	1,600	1,645	1,650	1,960	2,120
Eastern	570	690	665	685	710
South East	920	1,110	930	985	905

Notes:

1. Figures for children looked after in this table exclude agreed series of short term placements.
2. Numbers may not add up to totals due to rounding.
3. Residential placements include secure units, children's homes, hostels, residential schools and placements in other residential settings.

Psycho-surgery

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people underwent psycho-surgery in each of the last five years, broken down by age. [67159]

Jacqui Smith: For the purpose of clarity, we refer to psycho-surgery as neuro-surgery for mental disorder.

While the Department does not collect information on neuro-surgery for mental disorder centrally, the ninth biennial report of the Mental Health Act Commission covering the years 1999–2001, indicates that nine applications for neuro-surgery for mental disorder were considered (seven in 1999–2000 and two in 2000–01). All nine operations were eventually certified to go ahead.

In the period covered by the previous biennial report of the Mental Health Act Commission (1997–99), 17 referrals were made to the Commission to consider certifying neuro-surgery for mental disorder. All the cases referred in this reporting period were certified but one patient withdrew consent before the operation took place.

We do not have the breakdown of the Commission's figures by age groups.

Working Minds

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether Working Minds employers' tool kits are available. [67953]

Jacqui Smith: An additional 2,000 copies of the Working Minds employers' toolkit were printed in March 2002. Copies are available from 0870 4430930, fax 0870 4430931, e-mail mindout@codestorm.co.uk

Psychiatric Readmissions

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of progress in meeting the Public Service Agreement Target of reducing the emergency psychiatric readmission rate. [67959]

Jacqui Smith: The emergency psychiatric readmission rate has been reduced from the baseline of 14.3 per cent. in 1997–98 to 12.7 per cent. at the last quarter of 2001–02.

Obesity

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the role of sport in tackling obesity. [67996]

Ms Blears: Increasing participation in sport has a role to play in raising the rates of physical activity. Low rates of physical activity together with an unhealthy diet contribute to increased rates of obesity. Major cross-Government work has been put in place to raise the level of physical activity, and participation in sport. This includes: £581 million from the new opportunities fund for a physical education and sports programme; the national active sports programme and the Department's recently announced £2.5 million programme of community physical activity pilots, which will test out different community approaches to increasing physical activity. All pilots will involve sport action zones.

Community Day Centres

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women-only community day centres and services are in place. [67956]

Ms Blears: The information requested is not available centrally.

Endometriosis

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much his Department has spent in each of the past five years into the causes and treatment of endometriosis. [67942]

Ms Blears: The main Government agency for medical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC), which is funded via the Department of Trade and Industry. The Department directly funds research into policy and the delivery of effective practice in health and social care, and provides national health service support funding for research commissioned by the research councils and charities in the NHS.

The MRC's expenditure on relevant research was £1.7 million in 1997–98; £1.8 million in 1998–99; £1.8 million in 1999–2000; £1.2 million in 2000–01 and £1.2 million in 2001–02. The Department's expenditure on directly funded relevant research was nil in 1997–98; £55,000 in 1998–99; £85,000 in 1999–2000; £70,000 in 2000–01 and £70,000 in 2001–02.

In addition, the Department provided NHS support funding for research councils and charities' research, details of which can be found on the national research register on www.doh.gov.uk/research/nrr.htm.

Child and Family Support Service

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are employed in the Child and Family Support Service. [45486]

Jacqui Smith [pursuant to her reply, 7 May 2002, c. 103W]: I regret that my previous reply was incorrect. It should read:

Information on the whole-time equivalent number of staff employed by councils with social services responsibilities in England in relation to child and family support services at 30 September 2001 is shown in the following table. These figures exclude central and strategic staff and certain other categories of staff who provide more generic services across the range of council responsibilities. No information is available centrally on the numbers of people in the private and voluntary sectors who are providing services to children and families on behalf of councils with social services responsibilities.

Staff employed by councils with social services responsibilities in England on child and family support services (whole-time equivalent)

Type of staff	Whole-time equivalent at 30 September 2001
Area Office staff (including social work staff, excluding occupational therapists)	21,275
Day Care staff:
Family centres	3,715
Nurseries and play groups	2,260
Residential Care staff:
Children with learning disabilities	2,045
Community homes for children looked after	8,685
Specialist needs establishments	1,110
Occupational therapists	105

Iodine Tablets

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what preparations have been made to distribute iodine tablets to the population in the event of a nuclear emergency. [67871]

Mr. Hutton: The Government have established detailed plans for responding to major incidents. Cross-departmental contingency plans are in place and regular exercises test responses to a range of different threats, including those from radiation. Arrangements for distribution of potassium iodate tablets to the population are included in these exercises.

Health Professions Council

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received from professions wishing to be covered by the Health Professions Council; [67979]

(2) what programme of work his Department has in hand as to the regulation of professions other than those covered by the Health Professions Council; and if he will set out the timetable for such work; [67980]

(3) what plans he has to add to the professions covered by the Health Professions Council. [67982]

Mr. Hutton: It is for the health professions council to consider proposals for the extension of its remit to other professions, and the timing of any such extension would depend on the outcome. I received an approach from the British Psychological Society in March. The Government have also agreed with the general dental council that its powers to register professionals complementary to dentistry (such as dental technicians) should be widened.

Medical Schools

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding each medical school received in each of the past five years. [61462]

Margaret Hodge: With the exception of St. George's Medical school, medical schools in England form part of their parent university and are funded through the block grant provided by the Higher Educating Funding Council for England. The HEFCE allocations of block grant for 2002–03 are published in the Funding Council's report 02/11.

The funding allocation for St. George's medical school for each of the past five years is as follows:

	Funding (£ million)	Percentage increase year-on-year
1998	12.134	1.8
1999	12.466	2.1
2000	13.268	4.2
2001	14.744	0.7
2002	16.006	7.4

Note:

The information is taken from the Higher Education Funding Council for England publication "Recurrent grant for 2001–02: final allocations" (report 01/57) which records allocations of recurrent grant to higher education institutions and to further education colleges delivering higher education. Information for previous years in published in equivalent reports, the data for 2002–03 are provisional. copies of the publication are available at http://www.hefce.ac.uk/Pubs/

TRANSPORT

Nuclear Waste Shipments

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the seaworthiness of ships that will carry cargoes of nuclear waste from Japan to Sellafield. [68090]

Mr. Jamieson: Ships are subject to mandatory survey by their flag administration in accordance with the requirements of the International Maritime Organisation. The ships that are transporting MOX fuel from Japan to Sellafield are flagged with the UK and so the survey and certification arrangements are the responsibility of the Maritime and Coastguard Agency acting on behalf of the Secretary of State for Transport.

The ships have been subjected to the proper survey regime and hold valid certificates of compliance with the IMO requirements, including the special requirements applicable to ships meeting the highest Class 3 of the International Code for the Safe Carriage of Packaged Irradiated Nuclear Fuel, Plutonium and High-Level Radioactive Waste on board Ships.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the risk to coastal areas from ships carrying cargoes of nuclear waste to Sellafield. [68089]

Mr. Jamieson: Between 1995 and 1999 the UK participated in an international research project, co-ordinated by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), which studied the risks associated with ships carrying radioactive material of all kinds, including nuclear waste. The results of that study were published in IAEA-TECDOC-1231, "Severity, probability and risk of accidents during maritime transport of radioactive material", in July 2001, which is available on the IAEA's website at http://www.iaea.org/ns/rasanet/programme/radiationsafety/transportsafety/Downloads/Files2001/t1231.pdf.

Fareham

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many transport (a) surveys and (b) studies under way cover Fareham. [68095]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department is currently undertaking the South Coast Multi Modal Study, which includes consideration of strategic transport issues from Southampton to Margate, including Fareham. One of that study's eight strategy development plans centres on the south Hampshire area. The responsibility for local transport issues in Fareham is a matter for Hampshire County Council, who will periodically undertake surveys and consultation events in connection with the local transport plan and specific measures such as the development of the light rail line from Fareham to Portsmouth via Gosport.

EU Committees (Scottish Representation)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of recording equipment in road transport (tachographs) is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68590]

Mr. Jamieson: The Committee for Adaptation to Technical Progress (CATP) last met in September 2001 and currently there are no plans for further meetings. Officials from my Department represent the UK on the Committee as policy responsibility for the tachographs is a reserved matter. However, my officials consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee for the establishment of conditions for the interoperability of the trans-European high-speed rail system is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68585]

Mr. Jamieson: The next meeting of this Committee is scheduled for 30 September 2002. Officials from the Strategic Rail Authority, assisted by HM Inspectorate of Railways, represent the UK on the Committee as policy responsibility for the transport trans-European network is a reserved matter. However, my officials would consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee on the reciprocal recognition of national boatmasters' certificates for the carriage of goods and passengers by inland waterway is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68581]

Mr. Jamieson: This Committee has not met for some time and it is not known when it will next meet. Officials from my Department would represent the UK on this Committee as responsibility for policy on national boatmasters' certificates is a reserved matter.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee on the System of Changing for the Use of Transport Infrastructure is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68575]

Mr. Jamieson: No date has yet been fixed for the next meeting of this Committee but we expect it to be held in the Autumn. Officials from my Department represent the UK on the Committee as policy responsibility for EU transport infrastructure charging issues is a reserved matter. However, my officials consult the Scottish

Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the Devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee on unfair pricing in maritime transport is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68598]

Mr. Jamieson: It is not known when this Committee will next meet. Officials from the Office of Fair Trading, the Department of Trade and Industry and my Department, as appropriate, represent the UK on this Committee as competition policy is a reserved matter.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee on application of tonnage measurement of ballast spaces in segregated ballast of oil tankers is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68599]

Mr. Jamieson: The Committee has never met and there are no plans for it to do so.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee for the adaptation to technical progress of roadworthiness tests of vehicles is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68588]

Mr. Jamieson: No date has yet been fixed for the meeting of this Committee but we expect it to be held in the autumn. Officials from my Department represent the UK on the Committee as policy responsibility for the roadworthiness testing of vehicles is a reserved matter. However, my officials consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the Devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee on application of the legislation on the minimum level of training for seafarers and the recognition of certificates issued by training institutes or administration of third countries is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68597]

Mr. Jamieson: No date has yet been fixed for the next meeting of this committee. Officials from my Department represent the UK on the committee as policy responsibility is a reserved matter. My officials will consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee on the transfer for ships from one register to another within the Community is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68603]

Mr. Jamieson: This committee has never been known to meet and there are no plans for it to do so. Officials from my Department would represent the UK on this committee since policy on ship registration is a reserved matter.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee on the Transportation of Radioactive Waste (Surveillance and Control) is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68565]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 10 June 2002, Official Report, column 917W.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee for granting Community financial aid in the field of trans-European networks on transport is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68584]

Mr. Jamieson: No date has yet been fixed for the next meeting of this committee but we expect it to be held in the autumn. Officials from my Department represent the UK on the committee as policy responsibility for the transport trans-European network is a reserved matter. However, my officials consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee on the Development of Trans-Europe Transport Networks is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68574]

Mr. Jamieson: No date has yet been fixed for the next meeting of this committee but we expect it to be held in the autumn. Officials from my Department represent the UK on the committee as policy responsibility for the transport trans-European network is a reserved matter. However, my officials consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our concordat with the devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee on the Adaptation to Scientific and Technical Progress of Legislation concerning the Transport of Dangerous Goods is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68592]

Mr. Jamieson: There is no date set for the next meeting of this committee, but it is expected to be in late 2002. Officials from the Department for Transport, and the Health and Safety Executive represent the UK on this committee, as responsibility for the transport of dangerous goods is a reserved matter, pertaining to transport safety.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee on Transport is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68577]

Mr. Jamieson: This committee was established under Article 79 of the EC treaty. But, as far as we are aware, the committee has not met in recent times and there are no plans for it to do so. Representatives of the Scottish Executive have not been—and would not in the future be—members of the committee as EU transport policy is a reserved matter.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee on aids to transport by rail, road and inland waterway is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68580]

Mr. Jamieson: This Committee was established under the provisions of Article 6 of the 1970 Regulation on the granting of aids for transport by rail, road and inland waterway (Regulation (EEC) No. 1107/70). As far as we are aware, the Committee has not met for several years and there are no plans for it so to do. Representatives of the Scottish Executive have not been—and would not in the future be—members of the Committee as policy on state aids is a reserved matter.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Implementation Committee on minimum requirements for vessels bound for and leaving Community ports and carrying dangerous or polluting goods is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68600]

Mr. Jamieson: No date has been fixed for the next meeting of this Committee. Officials from my Department represent the UK on the Committee as responsibility for maritime safety and pollution prevention is a reserved matter.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee on the definition and use of compatible technical and operating standards and specifications for the procurement of air traffic management equipment and systems is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68602]

Mr. Jamieson: This Committee meets only on an ad-hoc basis, and no meetings are scheduled at present. Officials from my Department would represent the UK on the Committee as policy responsibility on air traffic management is a reserved matter. However, my officials would consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee on the harmonisation of technical requirements and administrative procedures in the field of civil aviation is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68595]

Mr. Jamieson: The Committee on the harmonisation of technical requirements and administrative procedures in the field of civil aviation is established under the provisions of Article 12 of Council Regulation (EEC) 3922–91. The Committee meets only on an ad-hoc basis and no future meeting is currently scheduled. It is composed of officials competent in the sphere of aviation safety regulation and each Member State may nominate one official to represent it. Since aviation safety regulation is a reserved matter, representatives from the Scottish Executive would not attend Committee meetings. However, the Government would consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the Devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee on the driving licence is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68594]

Mr. Jamieson: No date has yet been fixed for this Committee but we expect it to be held in the Autumn. Officials from my Department represent the UK on the Committee, supported as necessary by colleagues from the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency and the Driving Standards Agency. Policy responsibility for driving licences is a reserved matter.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee on restrictive practices and dominant positions in air transport is next due to met; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [67737]

Mr. Jamieson: The Advisory Committee on restrictive practices and dominant positions in air transport is established under the provisions of Article 8 of Regulation (EEC) 3975/87. The Committee meets only on an ad-hoc basis and no future meeting is currently scheduled. It is composed of officials competent in the sphere of air transport and agreements and dominant positions and each Member State may nominate two officials to represent it.

Since regulation of aviation and air transport, and of anti-competitive practices and agreements and abuse of dominant position, are reserved matters, representatives from the Scottish Executive would not attend Committee meetings. However, the Government would consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the Devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Technical Adaptation Committee on the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the safety and health of workers at work is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [67754]

Mr. Jamieson: The UK representatives at such meetings would be drawn from staff with the relevant technical and policy responsibilities within the Health and Safety Executive. During the last 12 months HSE have received no invitations to such technical meetings; nor are any currently scheduled.

Health and safety at work does not fall within the responsibilities of the devolved Governments of Scotland and Wales, and they do not have separate representation in the European Community. However, central Departments are under an obligation to consult them if matters negotiated at European level touch upon the responsibilities of the devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Technical Adaptation Committee on the minimum safety and health requirements for improved medical treatment on board vessels is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [67755]

Mr. Jamieson: This committee has never met, and there are no plans for it to do so.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee on restrictive practices and dominant positions in the shipping industry is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [67757]

Mr. Jamieson: The Advisory Committee on restrictive practices and dominant positions meets on an ad hoc basis when there are decisions or legislative proposals to discuss. It is not known when it will next meet. Officials from the Office of Fair Trading, the Department of Trade and Industry and my Department represent the UK on the committee as competition policy is a reserved matter.

London-South Midlands Multi-Modal Study

Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the re-opening of the Luton-Dunstable-Leighton Buzzard railway line is to be assessed as part of the transport strategy being developed in the London-South Midlands Multi-Modal Study. [67144]

Mr. Jamieson: The Multi-Modal Study is a strategic study looking primarily at the needs of long distance traffic in the study area. The re-opening of the Luton-Dunstable-Leighton Buzzard railway line, which would primarily serve local needs, has therefore, not been considered in detail within the context of the study.

Travel Awareness Campaigns

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to fund travel awareness campaigns (a) this year and (b) in future years. [67538]

Mr. Jamieson: This year we are supporting the "Walk to School", "Bike Week" and "In town, without my car" campaigns and are considering further promotion of "traveline", the public transport information service. We are also providing practical support for other sustainable travel initiatives including funding local authority school and work place travel plan co-ordinators, free consultancy advice for schools and organisations wanting to develop travel plans, regional cycling co-ordinators, and cycling projects through the Cycling Projects Fund. We shall shortly be inviting local authorities to bid for funding to run personalised travel planning demonstration projects. Some of these projects will stretch over several years, others are still under development.

London Transport Studies Model

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place a copy of the London Transport Studies Model, as used for the 10 Year Plan, in the Library. [67722]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 July 2002]: I have arranged for the document pack "London Transportation Studies Model", published by the Government Office for London in 1999, which is referred to on page 13 of the Transport 2010 Background Analysis to be placed in the Libraries of the House. Transport for London is now responsible for maintaining and updating the model.

Airline Safety

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps are taken to prevent airline pilots from operating an aircraft under the influence of alcohol; [67571]

(2) how many aircraft pilots and crew have been found under the influence of (a) alcohol and (b) drugs in the past year. [67574]

Mr. Jamieson: It is an offence under the Air Navigation Order 2000 for aircraft pilots to carry out their duties whilst under the influence of alcohol or drugs. As part of the process for obtaining an Air Operator Certificate from the Civil Aviation Authority, airlines are required to establish policies on alcohol and drugs to ensure compliance with this provision. The detailed implementation of such policies is a matter for the airlines. In addition, pilots have to undergo regular medical examinations which will pay attention to any evidence of excess alcohol intake or substance abuse. The Authority is not aware of any UK licensed professional pilots flying whilst under the influence of alcohol or drugs, in the past year.

We intend to enhance the statutory provisions by introducing a prescribed blood/alcohol limit for safety critical personnel in aviation, and powers to allow police to test suspected offenders, at an appropriate legislative opportunity.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many commercial aircraft have not met safety requirements in the past year. [67573]

Mr. Jamieson: The Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) is responsible for the implementation of safety standards for all UK registered aircraft and airlines. Its Safety Regulation Group audits and inspects aircraft and airlines on an on-going and systematic basis and takes appropriate regulatory action as and where necessary.

Operators of commercial aircraft must hold an Air Operator Certificate which places on them responsibilities to ensure that any aircraft is fit to make its intended flight. If an aircraft is not fit to make a particular flight the operator will correct the problem before allowing the aircraft to fly. As a result, UK registered aircraft should not fly commercial operations unless they meet safety requirements and the CAA is not aware of any that have done so in the past year.

Should an aircraft not be fit to make an intended flight as a consequence of one of the conditions which must be reported under the CAA's Mandatory Occurrence

Reporting Scheme, the operator will advise the Authority accordingly, thus meeting the safety requirements placed upon them.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what discussions he has had with and representations he has received from (a) the Health and Safety Executive, (b) National Air Traffic Services and (c) the CAA on safety breaches by low-cost airlines; and if he will make a statement; [63975]

(2) if he will list (a) published and (b) unpublished reports on safety of (i) airlines and (ii) National Air Traffic Services prepared by (1) the Health and Safety Executive and (2) the Civil Aviation Authority since 1 June 2001; and if he will make a statement; [63977]

(3) what recent assessments have been made of the safety of (a) airlines and (b) National Air Traffic Services by (i) the Health and Safety Executive and (ii) the Civil Aviation Authority since 1 June 2001; and if he will make a statement. [63976]

Mr. Jamieson: The Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) is responsible for the implementation of safety standards for National Air Traffic Services Limited (NATS) and all UK registered airlines. Its Safety Regulation Group audits and inspects these companies on an on-going and systematic basis and takes appropriate regulatory action as and where necessary. There are statutory prohibitions on disclosing information supplied to the CAA in its safety regulatory capacity and the authority does not publish the reports of its inspections of airlines or NATS. Public disclosure of such reports, related to specific companies, could have an adverse effect on the openness and effectiveness of the established auditing and reporting procedures. Evidence of any concerns regarding the safety of a UK registered airline should be reported to the CAA for further investigation.

The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) has made one recent assessment in connection with NATS which concerned the possible risks to health of those operating the air traffic control system at Swanwick. The ensuing report was sent to NATS and to representatives of the relevant employees. There are statutory restrictions on the disclosure of information obtained by the HSE in pursuance of its powers that apply to this report.

Air Travel (Security Surcharge)

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what impact the £7 security surcharge is having on the number of passengers travelling on United Kingdom flights; [68326]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure money raised from the £7 security surcharge on United Kingdom flights is invested into security at United Kingdom airports; [68321]

(3) what extra security arrangements were required by the Government in UK airports following the events of 11 September 2001; [68610]

(4) what representations he has received calling for the £7 security surcharge on United Kingdom flights to be abolished. [68320]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government have not introduced a security surcharge on United Kingdom flights.

Following the attacks on 11 September, heightened aviation security measures were introduced at all UK airports and for all airlines operating from the UK, and security remains at an enhanced level. We do not discuss the details of our aviation security requirements, although I can say that the UK does have one of the most demanding aviation security regimes in the world.

It has long been central to UK aviation policy that users should pay the full costs of air travel, and this should include the costs of whatever level of security is deemed appropriate in the light of prevailing circumstances. Many United Kingdom and other European carriers have already imposed ticket surcharges to reflect increased insurance and security costs, and this is the pattern which we believe the industry should follow. This is a matter for them and I see no grounds for Government intervention in this area.

Different airlines have been affected differently in the aftermath of 11 September. Some airlines' passenger numbers are still well down on June 2001. On the other hand, no-frills carriers are reporting an increase in passengers. This does not suggest that having to pay additional security costs is having a major impact on people's decision on whether or not to fly.

Statistics

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the statistics that are collected by his Department by English parliamentary constituency; and if he will make a statement. [67092]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend, the Financial Secretary on Monday 8 July 2002.

Concessionary Travel Schemes

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to extend the eligibility criteria for concessionary travel schemes in the next four years. [67492]

Mr. Jamieson: From 1 April 2003, men aged 60–65 will benefit from the concessionary travel arrangements available in their area. At present we have no other plans to extend eligibility for concessionary travel schemes.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to fund the full cost of concessionary travel schemes in (a) London and (b) all other local authority areas. [67493]

Mr. Jamieson: Government provision for existing concessionary travel schemes is included in the general grant for local authorities. This is distributed using standard spending assessments and it is not possible to provide a meaningful allocation for each authority. Future levels of spending are currently under consideration in the Spending Review. It is for local authorities to decide their spending priorities in the light of their responsibilities and the wishes of their electorate.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the estimated (a) level and (b) cost of energy use in his Department and associated agencies was in each year since 1997; what proportion of energy was generated from renewable sources; and if he will make a statement. [65959]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department was formed on 29 May.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Leslie) on 8 July 2002, Official Report, column 679W.

0870 Telephone Numbers

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his policy is on using 0870 telephone numbers for inquiries by the public to the Department and its agencies. [66194]

Mr. Jamieson: There is no overall departmental policy covering the use of national rate (0870) telephone numbers for inquiries by the public to the Department and its agencies. National rate numbers are not used anywhere in the centre of the Department. Usage in the various departmental agencies is as follows.

DVLA use national rate (0870) telephone numbers for the main inquiry lines that answer general queries about driver licensing and vehicle registration and licensing. This is to ensure that all callers receive a fair and equitable service in as much as they pay the same telephone charge no matter from what part of the country they call.

The vehicle inspectorate uses a national rate (0870) number as an additional service above and beyond the local contact numbers that are available to the trade and general public.

The Driving Standards Agency uses a national rate (0870) number for telephone bookings for driving tests at their two call centres, based in Newcastle and Cardiff. This ensures equity of payment for all customers using booking services without resulting in increased fee levels.

The Maritime and Coastguard Agency Rescue use a national rate (0870) number for their information line, which handles general inquiries about the MCA.

Highways Agency and Vehicle Certification Agency do not use national rate numbers.

Ministerial Speeches

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the speech made by the Minister to the international travel information seminar in London on 26 June; [66248]

(2) what speeches have been made by his Ministers to external organisations or events since the beginning of June; and if he will place copies in the Library; [66245]

(3) if he will list speeches which he has made to external organisations or events since the beginning of June; and if he will place copies in the Library. [66247]

Mr. Jamieson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport made a speech to the Railway Forum on 2 July. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport addressed the annual rail freight conference on 20 June, the 5th United Kingdom Transport conference on 25 June, the Passenger Transport Executive Group on 27 June and the aviation club on 3 July. I made two speeches on 26 June, one to the international travel information seminar and one to the Baltic Exchange Golden Jubilee reception. Where appropriate, ministerial speeches are placed on the Department's website.

Health and Safety Legislation

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what responsibility his Department has for workplace-related health and safety legislation; [65490]

(2) what responsibility his Department has for workplace-related health and safety legislation. [65489]

Mr. Jamieson: The Secretary of State for Transport currently answers to Parliament on all activities of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive, except when these come within the specific area of responsibility of another Secretary of State. Under section 11 (2) of the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974, the Secretary of State may approve proposals from the Commission for regulations, and under section 15 (1) of the Act may also introduce health and safety legislation, provided the Commission is consulted.

In tandem with the recent machinery of government changes, it was announced on 29 May that there will be a review of departmental responsibilities for health and safety issues. An announcement on this will be made in due course.

Joint Working

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the protocols for joint working between his Department and other Departments and (b) the Government code of practice under which his Department operates when working with other Departments; and if he will make a statement. [66008]

Mr. Jamieson: With regard to protocols for joint working between my Department and other Departments, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bath (Mr. Foster) on 25 June 2002, Official Report, column 777W. When consulting other Departments on the development of policy, my Department follows the guidance in volume 1 of the Directory of Civil Service Guidance. hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Tom Brake).

Staff Training

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much the Department has spent on staff training and development in each of the last five years. [61065]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department is fully committed to the training and development of its staff. In the last five years it has spent the following amounts:

1997–98—£1.9 million—Department of Transport and Department of the Environment

1998–99—£2.9 million—DETR

1999–2000—£3.2 million—DETR

2000–01—£4.5 million—DETR

2001–02—£6.5 million—DTLR.

Public Consultations

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the public consultations undertaken by his Department and its predecessors since 1997; if copies were available (a) online and (b) in print in each case; and on what date the period for responses (i) opened and (ii) closed. [66651]

Mr. Jamieson: A full list of the public consultations undertaken by the Department or its predecessors since 1997 has been placed in the Libraries of the House, including the dates for which the period for responses opened and closed. The list is based on central records and reflects the public consultations undertaken within the areas for which the Department is currently responsible. The Department does not, however, keep central historical records relating to the availability of consultation documents online or in printed form.

Bull Bars

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what recent assessment he has made of the likely impact of bull bars on pedestrians who are involved in collision with the front of vehicles at varying speeds; [68381]

(2) what recent assessment he has made of proposals to ban the fitting of bull bars to the front of vehicles in the United Kingdom; [68382]

(3) how many vehicles with bull bars were licensed for use on United Kingdom roads in each of the last five years for which records are available. [68380]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government funded a comprehensive TRL study that looked into the likely effects of bull bars on pedestrians and recommended test procedures to identify aggressive designs. The report "Assessment and Test Procedures for Bull Bars" by G. Lawrence, C. Rodmell and A. Osborne has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

We have concluded that the most effective way of controlling aggressive bull bars would be on a European basis, and welcome the commitment by the European Motor Industry to stop fitting rigid bull bars to new cars from this year.

We have also submitted a technical proposal to the Commission, based on the TRL work, setting out how after-market bull bars and bull bars fitted to larger vehicles could be dealt with through European legislation. We are pressing the Commission to take this forward.

The number of licensed vehicles fitted with bull bars is not officially recorded. However of the 23 million licensed vehicles on UK roads, we estimate that there are around 600,000 vehicles fitted with bull bars.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what discussions he has had with the EU on plans to introduce legislation and directives to make the front of vehicles safer; [68373]

(2) what plans he has to introduce legislation to make the fronts of vehicles safer. [68375]

Mr. Jamieson: Legislation covering the design of new cars is dealt with at a European level. We welcome the proposal by the European Commission for an agreement with the motor industry to design car fronts to reduce the injury to pedestrians in the event of an impact. We are now awaiting a further proposal from the Commission to provide a legislative framework for this agreement.

Driver Competence

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the development of a national framework of assessment of continuing medical competence to drive of those who have experienced trauma, illness or infirmity. [67111]

Mr. Jamieson: In common with all drivers who may have a medical condition affecting their safety to drive, those who have experienced trauma, illness or infirmity are assessed against the standards of medical fitness contained in Directive 91/439/EEC, and against the requirements of the Road Traffic Act 1988 and its associated Regulations. A practical assessment of a driver's competence following head injury or other conditions, such as a stroke, is available at 15 mobility centres around the UK. This facility is used at the request of the medical advisers at DVLA, doctors and the drivers themselves. The Department is in the process of commissioning a research programme to assess the most appropriate means of evaluating drivers with residual deficit following trauma, illness or infirmity.

Tankers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) United Kingdom registered bulk tankers and (b) tankers registered elsewhere have been lost in each of the past five years. [68327]

Mr. Jamieson: Lloyd's Register—Fairplay Ltd. World Casualty Statistics indicate the following number of losses in the world fleet for Tankers and Bulk Carriers. There have been no UK registered losses for these types of vessels in the past five years.

	Tankers	Bulk carriers
1997	24	16
1998	15	29
1999	15	19
2000	14	21
2001	12	9

Highway Construction Workers

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many statutory notifications there have been of injuries among highway construction workers in each of the last 10 years. [68224]

Mr. Jamieson: The following is the available information.

Injuries to workers occurring in the processes of road repairs and surfacing, and in street cleaning and verge maintenance, 1996–97 to 2000–01

	Fatal injuries		Major injuries		Over three day injuries
	Road repairs/ surfacing/ maintenance	Road verge maintenance	Road repairs/ surfacing/ maintenance	Road verge maintenance	Road repairs/ surfacing/ maintenance	Road verge maintenance
1996–97	5	—	107	16	614	79
1997–98	4	—	95	18	557	95
1998–99	3	—	91	17	526	109
1999–2000	2	—	75	11	444	80
2000–01	9	1	59	13	377	68

Notes:

1. Figures relate to employees and the self-employed.
2. Injuries reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations (RIDDOR) 1995.
3. The table sets out data from 1996–97 onwards. Access to earlier data is available only at disproportionate cost
4. Statistics relate to the planning year from 1 April to 31 March.

Vehicle Emissions

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his timetable is for the introduction of car emission labelling on new cars; and if he will make a statement. [67655]

Mr. Jamieson: Labelling for new cars showing fuel consumption information has been a legal requirement in the UK since 1983. Since 1999 the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders (SMMT) has had a voluntary system of labelling based on the requirements of the EU directive for labels to show CO_2 emissions as well as fuel consumption information. The EU directive was formally implemented in the UK in November 2001. The Government have recently consulted on proposals to pilot a possible new form of label to ensure that it is as meaningful and informative as possible. Responses to the consultation are now being considered.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the contribution the vehicle labelling scheme on car emissions can make to the United Kingdom Kyoto targets. [67658]

Mr. Jamieson: The EU vehicle labelling scheme is part of the Community's wider strategy to reduce CO_2 emissions from new passenger cars. It is designed to support and complement other strands of this strategy including voluntary agreements with car manufacturers to reduce average CO_2 emissions, and fiscal measures. Provision of information on fuel consumption and CO_2 emissions under the labelling scheme is a tool with which to influence consumer demand towards more fuel-efficient vehicles. It could also provide an added incentive to manufacturers to produce vehicles with lower fuel consumption. As an integral part of the strategy to reduce CO_2 emissions it is difficult to isolate the contribution made by the labelling scheme from wider changes going on in the new car market. Nevertheless, fuel consumption and CO_2 emissions labelling is expected to have a smaller impact than for example voluntary agreements with manufacturers.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the contributions made by other EU countries on the subject of the emission ratings on new cars in order to meet Kyoto targets. [67656]

Mr. Jamieson: The EU is keeping its requirements on labelling under review in the light of member state's experience with their different labelling systems introduced under the EU labelling directive. The directive requires member states to provide a report by the end of 2003, discussing the lessons learned from implementing the labelling scheme. That report may better enable an assessment to be made of the contributions made by other EU countries on emissions ratings for new cars and the contribution to meeting CO_2 emissions reduction targets.

Motoring Statistics

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the average expenditure on motoring per car per week was in the last 12 months for people living in (a) Wiltshire, (b) Dorset, (c) Hampshire and (d) Somerset. [67834]

Mr. Jamieson: Information on motoring expenditure is not available at county level.

Car Use

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce air pollution caused by car use in London. [67578]

Mr. Jamieson: Central and local government both have a role to play in reducing air pollution caused by car use in London.

The Government has introduced a range of measures to encourage environmentally friendly transport. These include lower fuel duties for cleaner fuels and grants under the PowerShift and CleanUp programmes to help car owners, hauliers and transport operators to buy or convert vehicles to run on cleaner fuels such as LPG natural gas and electricity.

The Mayor of London has produced a Transport Strategy for London and is due to produce an Air Quality very shortly which will contain policies to reduce air pollution from vehicles.

London boroughs have a key role to play through the Local Air Quality Management regime. Most boroughs have drawn up, or are in the process of drawing up, air quality action plans under section 84 of the Environment Act 1995, setting out what they are doing to improve air quality in their areas. These action plans are likely to include measures targeted at reducing emissions from road transport.

Road Traffic Forecasts

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the next national road traffic forecasts are due to be published; and if he will make a statement. [66675]

Mr. Jamieson: No decision has been made on when new national road traffic forecasts will be published.

New Cars

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what prediction he has made of the numbers of new cars on the road in the United Kingdom in (a) 2002–03, (b) 2003–04, (c) 2004–05 and (d) 2005–06. [67657]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department does not forecast either the total stock of cars or the number of new cars purchased each year. Instead, forecasting work projects forward Census figures for car ownership by households. Current published figures show an increase from a projected 25.6 million cars in households in Great Britain in 2001 to 27.7 million in 2006, an increase of approximately 420,000 cars each year, equal to a growth rate of around 1.6 per cent. per annum. This increase is driven by population growth, income growth, and a trend towards higher rates of licence-holding, particularly among females. The figures will be reviewed when 2001 Census data becomes available.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the cost in 2002–03 is of administering vehicle excise duty; how many officials are involved; where they are located; and what the annual salary bill has been in each of the last three years. [66701]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The costs and staff involved in the collection and enforcement of vehicle excise duty (VED) in Great Britain are shown in the table.

	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Cost of administering VED (£ million)	100.2	103.3	110.5
Number of officials (estimated)	2,100	2,200	2,300
Salary costs (£ million)	34.6	36.4	39.3

The number of officials shown (full-time equivalents) is an estimate, based on the apportionment of the total Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) staff. The collection of VED is integrated with the registration of vehicles and the ongoing maintenance of the vehicle register. Staff involved are not dedicated wholly to registration or licensing activities. The number of officials figures do not include non-DVLA staff working at post offices involved in VED collection and vehicle registration.

The DVLA staff are located at the headquarters in Swansea and at 40 local offices spread throughout Great Britain.

Signage

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the final draft of the TSRGD, he will ban from the trunk road network local government boundary signs welcoming motorists to towns or cities that they are still some distance from. [68613]

Mr. Jamieson: We have no plans to do so. The Traffic Signs Regulations and General Directions (TSRGD) make no distinction between boundary signs on trunk roads and other all-purpose roads. We consulted last year on proposals to allow the signing of local authority administrative boundaries including district councils that take their name from a town within the district, and the responses have generally been in favour. Decisions on particular signs on the trunk road network will be taken in the light of local circumstances.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will provide for the marking of the historic county boundaries in the United Kingdom within the final draft of the Traffic Signs Regulations and General Directions; [67726]

(2) if he will make regulations under section 64 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 for the erection and maintenance of suitable traffic signs to mark the boundaries of the historic counties of the United Kingdom where they cross motorways and class A and B roads; and if he will make a statement. [67728]

Mr. Jamieson: This would not [illegible] appropriate. Traffic signs are provided for safe and efficient traffic management and should inform road users about current road conditions.

Road Accidents

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of (a) road accidents and (b) fatal road accidents occurred on minor single-carriageway roads in each of the past 20 years. [68226]

Mr. Jamieson: The percentage of personal injury road accidents and of fatal road accidents on public roads in Great Britain which occurred on single-carriageway roads of B classification or below was as shown in the following table.

	All injury accidents	Fatal accidents
1981	42	34
1982	46	36
1983	47	36
1984	47	35
1985	46	34
1986	46	33
1987	46	34
1988	46	34
1989	45	34
1990	46	35
1991	46	35
1992	46	36
1993	45	35
1994	45	35
1995	45	36
1996	46	36
1997	45	35
1998	45	36
1999	45	35
2000	44	36
2001	45	35

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans the Government have to reduce the number of road accidents. [68524]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government's wide-ranging road safety strategy is set out in "Tomorrow's roads—safer for everyone", published in March 2000. The strategy is aimed at delivering three road casualty reduction targets by 2010—each compared with the average for 1994 to 1998:

a 40 per cent. reduction in deaths and serious injuries;

a 50 per cent. reduction in child deaths and serious injuries; and a 10 per cent. reduction in the rate (by vehicles kilometres) of serious injuries.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Government will commission a study to investigate ways of reducing the number of road accidents. [68474]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department continues to commission a substantial amount of road and vehicle safety research into the many and various causes of accidents to inform our road safety strategy. A synopsis of recently completed and on-going projects, as well as new research, may be found in its publications:

Road safety research: Compendium of projects 2001–02

Vehicle standards and engineering research: Compendium of projects 2001–02.

Copies of each publication have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the trend of (a) fatalities and (b) child fatalities in traffic accidents in residential areas over the period 1997 to 2001. [67432]

Mr. Jamieson: The numbers of fatalities on residential roads are shown in the following table. For this purpose, residential roads are defined as those with a speed limit of 40 mph or less and where street lighting is present.

Fatalities from accidents on residential roads: Great Britain

	Child	Adult	All[1]
1997	137	1,190	1,327

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of research by the IPPR showing that children from socially excluded backgrounds are more likely to be involved in road collisions than children from other socio-economic groups; and what plans he has to take action to reduce road collisions affecting these children. [67494]

Mr. Jamieson: We are aware of the work of the Institute of Public Policy Research in researching child pedestrian casualties and, while they have yet to report, know their preliminary findings.

Our own research had already drawn similar conclusions. When the Road Safety Strategy, "Tomorrow's Roads—Safer for Everyone", was published in March 2000, it included challenging targets to reduce killed and seriously injured road casualties by 40 per cent. by 2010. Recognising the particular issue of child casualties, there is a specific, more stretching target, to reduce child killed and seriously injured casualties by 50 per cent. in the same time period. The strategy acknowledged that children in the lowest socio-economic group (SEG) are five times more likely to be killed as pedestrians than their higher SEG counterparts.

Since child pedestrian casualties are a particular problem, we have begun a child pedestrian training project, making £10 million available to local authorities over five years, to improve practical roadside training. Deprivation is a significant factor in deciding which authorities are selected for this scheme. The results will be fully evaluated. The issues which suggest why children from the lowest SEG may be more vulnerable generally are complex and we are continuing to research them.

Wealden Line

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the electrification of the Wealden Line to be completed. [67943]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 July 2002]: My right hon. Friend has accepted advice from the Strategic Rail Authority that there is currently no case for electrifying the Wealden Line, as the costs far outweigh the benefits. Equivalent passenger and operational benefits will be secured, significantly earlier, by introducing modern diesel trains to replace the 40-year-old trains currently operating services on the line. However, it is recognised that circumstances may change over time and the SRA therefore intends to secure a full electrification study after the new South Central franchise has run for five years.

Strategic Rail Authority

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if the salary of the chairman of the SRA counts as public spending; [67058]

(2) if capital spending by the SRA counts as Government capital spending. [67059]

Mr. Jamieson: All SRA expenditure counts as public expenditure.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Strategic Rail Authority will remain a public sector body. [67246]

Mr. Jamieson: Yes.

Rail Infrastructure Investment

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the cost of infrastructure investment in the railways (a) before and (b) since privatisation. [66055]

Mr. Jamieson: No direct comparison can be made between investment before and after privatisation due to the different nature of individual projects and the externalisation of costs (such as possessions and the cost of capital) that were previously internalised under British Rail.

The Rail Regulator sets out the expected cost of infrastructure investment through the periodic review process.

Transport 10-year Plan

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has revised his forecasts for the growth in (a) passenger and (b) freight rail usage during the 10-year plan period. [66056]

Mr. Jamieson: Forecasts for (a) rail passenger growth and (b) rail freight growth are set out in the 10-year plan for transport.

Railway Industry

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what progress has been made on the introduction of special purpose vehicles on Britain's railways; when the first is expected to begin; what timetable is proposed; and if he will make a statement; [64099]

(2) what changes have taken place to the (a) timetable and (b) levels of investment in connection with the special purpose vehicle being developed by Govia; and if he will make a statement. [64098]

Mr. Jamieson: Special purpose vehicles will be commercial entities aimed at securing third party investment in major infrastructure works on the railway. Several possible opportunities for the establishment of SPVs have been identified, but no SPVs are currently in place.

Rail Safety

Mr. Kevan Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his policy on debris on railway lines. [67729]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for North-East Bedfordshire (Alistair Burt) on 8 July 2002, Official Report, columns 662–63W.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of safe limits on the number of passengers travelling in an individual railway carriage. [67702]

Mr. Jamieson: There are no statutory limits on the numbers of passengers that can be carried on trains. The Health and Safety Executive, has advised that all rolling stock is designed to operate safely even when fully loaded.

London Underground

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what success fees are to be paid to the sponsors and advisers of Tube Lines on the signing of the PPP contract; what services have been provided in return for these fees; and what effect these fees will have on the equity return of Tube Lines; [65488]

(2) how much is to be paid to sponsors and advisors in development costs on the closing date of the London Underground PPP contract; how much is to be paid to lenders and loan insurers on that date and what arrangements have been made for payments to Bakerloo Central Victoria (sub-surface lines) on the same date; and why these payments are being made before the commitment for improving underground performance is met. [65754]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Tom Brake) on 4 July 2002, Official Report, columns 459–60W. Any success fees contained in the bids will only be recovered by bidders, as part of the ongoing, performance-related Infrastructure Service Charge, after they have first been verified by London Underground.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the scheduled journey time for each month, and for the period from 1 April to the end of each month, for each of the last three years, for the London Underground. [66797]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Detailed in-year operational information of this nature is a matter for London Underground (LU).

The scheduled journey times (using LU's weighted measure) for each of the last three full financial years were:

1999–2000—35.58 minutes

2000–01—35.38 minutes

2001–02—35.33 minutes.

I understand from LU that the figures for scheduled journey times may fluctuate during the course of the year as a consequence of closures for engineering works and revisions to timetables.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of the London Underground network has a crowding ratio of actual passenger volumes to planned train capacity greater than 1 with regard to morning peak two way flows. [67720]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 July 2002]: I refer to the answer which my right hon. Friend the Minister for Transport (Mr. Spellar) gave to the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) on 5 December 2001 Official Report, column 378W.

Network Rail

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the financial statement for Network Rail will be consolidated in those for the Strategic Rail Authority. [67791]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The Comptroller and Auditor General, in his capacity as statutory auditor of the Strategic Rail Authority (SRA), has concluded that Network Rail should be accounted for as a subsidiary of the SRA. This means that the financial accounts of Network Rail will be consolidated on a transparent and open basis within the balance sheet of the SRA.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the total liabilities on the balance sheet of the SRA will be if it underwrites the proposed finance for Network Rail; if he will list the liabilities on the SRA balance sheet; what the total value of assets held by the SRA is; and which SRA assets banks whose loans to Network Rail are underwritten by the SRA will hold charges against. [66054]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 27 June 2002, Official Report, columns 971–973. The assets of the SRA were outlined in its 2000–01 annual report and will be updated in its 2001–02 annual report to be published shortly.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the legal status will be of the operating subsidiary of Network Rail, as described in the Minute to Parliament. [67166]

Mr. Jamieson: This is a matter for Network Rail.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Sales

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) overseas visits by Ministers in his Department and (b) visits to Ministers in the UK by overseas Government Ministers and officials have taken place in each of the last three years in which UK arms sales have been discussed. [65262]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information about Cabinet Ministers' overseas travel including the destination and purpose of each trip is published annually by the Cabinet Office. Copies of the lists covering the period 2 May 1997 to March 2001 are in the Libraries of the House. The list for the period 1 April 2001 to 31 March 2002 is currently being assembled, and will be published in due course. Information about visits to Ministers in the UK by overseas Government Ministers and officials is not held centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Russia

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what injuries were sustained by his Department's staff during the construction of the new Moscow embassy. [66109]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As far as our records show, UK-based members of staff sustained a total of 17 injuries on the construction site of the new embassy in Moscow during the period August 1997 to December 1999. Injuries included cuts, sprains, bruises and one case of fracture. We do not have access to records of injuries caused to local construction workers, but there was one fatality.

Thailand

Albert Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 26 March, Official Report, column 814W, on Thailand, when a report on the action taken by the Thai police into the case was received; whether it explains why Mr. Sinnott's body was moved to Bangkok; and for what reason the British Consular Agent in Bangkok was not informed. [65850]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The final report by the Thai police, detailing their investigation into the death of Peter Sinnott, has not yet been received. Our embassy in Bangkok is continuing to press the authorities for the report which we hope will deal with some of these issues.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many oral questions he has transferred to other Departments in each of the last 18 months. [65511]

Mr. Straw: According to our records, this Department has transferred out six oral questions to be answered by other Departments since June 2001.

Oral questions are only transferred out when it is more appropriate for another Government Department to answer the question, and when the other Government Department has accepted that they should answer. Also, we normally only transfer out questions that are unlikely to be reached on the day of oral questions and that would therefore be given a written answer. Of the six questions transferred out, only one would have been answered orally. This was a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, West (Kevin Brennan) asking about the Ilisu Dam, which was transferred to the DTI for answer.

Macedonia

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with representatives of the Government of the FYR of Macedonia regarding membership of NATO. [67181]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, discussed NATO issues with the Macedonian Foreign Minister on 22 May.

We strongly support the enlargement of NATO to countries ready for the responsibilities of membership.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the commitments are of the G8 regarding the situation in Zimbabwe. [67128]

Mr. MacShane: At Kananaskis on 27 June the G8 agreed that they would focus their development efforts "on cultures that demonstrate a political and financial commitment to good governance and the rule of law, investing in their people and pursuing policies that spur economic growth and alleviate poverty".

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British passport holders in Zimbabwe have a right of entry into the UK. [67580]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are approximately 26,000 British nationals registered with the High Commission in Harare. The overall size of the British community is estimated to be up to 40,000. The majority of these are British citizens who have right of abode in the UK and therefore enjoy unrestricted entry into this country.

India

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bolton, South-East (Dr. Iddon) of 10 June 2002, Official Report, column 814W, on India, if he will make a statement on the effect of the disturbances in

Gujarat on British citizens and their relatives; and what further assistance the High Commission has given them. [67762]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The violence in Gujarat which began on 28 February 2002 has now largely stopped. There were two reported British deaths from communal violence in June. However the situation is still tense in some urban and rural areas. We are continually monitoring the situation and ensure that our travel advice is always up to date.

Consular staff in India and London will continue to offer all possible assistance that it properly can to relatives and to all British nationals affected by the disturbances, though the British Consulate in Bombay has not received any such requests in recent months.

We remain in close contact with the Indian authorities over the safety of British nationals in Gujurat.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the outcome was of the General Affairs Council held on 17 and 18 June; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [67731]

Peter Hain: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary attended the June meeting of the General Affairs Council.

The Council took note of the resolutions, decisions and opinions adopted by the European Parliament at its May part sessions in Strasbourg and Brussels (Documents 9076–02 and 9316–02).

The Council adopted the 'A' points listed in Document 9830–02.

Copies of these documents have been placed in the Library of the House.

Progress of work in other council configurations

The Council took note of work under way in other configurations of the Council on the basis of a presidency progress report, in particular noting the importance of the political agreement reached on the 'pension funds directive', as well as the final adoption of the Framework Decision on the European arrest warrant.

Preparation of the Seville European Council

The Council discussed measures to prepare the Council for enlargement, on the basis of a report by the presidency and the Council Secretary-General. This set out proposals for consideration by the Seville European Council on the preparation, organisation and conduct of the European Council, the structure of Council formations, improvements to the functioning of the presidency and greater transparency in the Council's legislative activity. The UK supported the broad direction of the Presidency's proposals.

The Council discussed the EU's strategy in preparation for the World summit on sustainable development in Johannesburg. The Council agreed on the need for the EU to continue to be proactive, to show leadership and to take initiatives to contribute to a successful outcome at the summit. The UK strongly agreed. The Council agreed Conclusions setting out the EU's position, to be forwarded to the Seville European Council.

The Council took note of the contributions submitted to the Seville European Council by the Justice and Home Affairs Council on 13 June and discussed several aspects of immigration policy, in preparation for discussion at Seville. The debate focused in particular on how to co-operate with third countries against illegal immigration.

In discussion of enlargement, the Council reached agreement on a framework for handling the issue of direct payments which will be incorporated in the EU common positions on agriculture. This noted that,

> "In accordance with the timeframe agreed in Göteborg and Laeken, this decision [on direct payments] will be taken in due time to comply with the steps and timetable to be agreed in the Seville European Council in relation with the final phase of the enlargement negotiations, and without prejudging the forthcoming internal discussions on Community policies."

Middle East

Over lunch, Ministers discussed recent developments in the Middle East and the way ahead, in preparation for further discussion at Seville.

India—Pakistan

Over lunch, Ministers discussed the tensions between India and Pakistan. While welcoming recent improvements, they noted that the situation nevertheless remained precarious.

EU Special Representatives—Afghanistan

The Council agreed on the nomination of Francesc Vendrell as the next EU Special Representative for Afghanistan to succeed Klaus-Peter Klaiber, whose mandate expires on 30 June 2002.

ESDP

The Council approved a general framework for the financing of EU operations having military or defence implications. This framework covers two types of costs:

> common costs, i.e. costs that cannot be allotted to individual states taking part in an operation. This covers a number of costs for headquarters for EU-led operations (e.g. transport costs, administration, communications, transportation/travel, barracks and lodging/infrastructure) and for supporting the operational force as a whole (such as infrastructure); > all other costs, which will be considered individual and financed on a 'costs-lie where they fall' basis.

The Council agreed to decide on a case-by-case basis whether transportation of the forces, barracks and lodging for the forces would be funded in common.

A full review of this framework will take place after a first operation is concluded or by June 2004, or earlier if necessary, taking into account the lessons learnt from conduct of any operations and their administration.

Iran

The Council adopted Conclusions restating its support for the process of reform in Iran and its willingness to strengthen relations between the EU and Iran. The Council reached political agreement on negotiating directives for a trade and co-operation agreement with Iran, which would be linked to separate instruments on political dialogue and counter-terrorism. The Council stressed that the launching of negotiations and progress in matters of concern, such as human rights, non-proliferation and counter-terrorism, will contribute to strengthening dialogue and co-operation. The Union sees progress in all these areas as interdependent, indissociable and mutually reinforcing elements of the EU's overall approach to EU-Iran relations.

Western Balkans

The Council heard presentations from High Representative Solana on the implementation of the Serbia and Montenegro agreement and from EU Special Representative Le Roy on the situation in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia. It adopted Conclusions: welcoming progress in implementing the Serbia and Montenegro agreement; recalling the importance of the FRY's international obligations, including to the ICTY; supporting UNMIK's work in Kosovo and its co-operation with Macedonia on the 2001 border agreement; underlining the importance of a free and fair election campaign in Macedonia. The Council thanked the departing Bosnia High Representative, Ambassador Wolfgang Petritsch, for his efforts and congratulated Lord Ashdown on taking up his functions as new High Representative and EU Special Representative in Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Council welcomed the fact that the work on the negotiating mandate for a stabilisation and association agreement with Albania had been concluded. The mandate will be adopted and negotiations opened after the summer, depending on further progress on the reform agenda and political stability.

Zimbabwe

The Council adopted Conclusions expressing deep concern at the deterioration of the situation. The European Union believes that the Southern African Development Community (SADC) has an important role to play and will seek to build an enhanced dialogue with the SADC and other relevant international actors.

International Criminal Court (ICC)

The Council adopted Conclusions, recalling its Common Position on the ICC and welcoming the forthcoming entry into force of the ICC statute on 1 July. The EU expressed its concern about the draft US legislation which would restrict US participation in UN peacekeeping operations, prohibit transfer of information to the ICC or prohibit US military assistance to parties to the ICC.

Afghanistan

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people were taken prisoners in Kunduz since November 2001; when these arrests took place; what the nationality of these people was; and if he will make a statement. [67759]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have asked about this but the relevant authorities in Kabul have told us that there is no accurate information available on the number of prisoners taken at Kunduz or of their nationalities.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many prisoners-of-war were transported from Kunduz to (a) Sheberghan and (b) Mazar-i-Sharif since November 2001; when these transports took place; what the nationality was of the transported people; and if he will make a statement [67758]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have made inquiries but the relevant authorities in Afghanistan have said to us that there is no accurate information available on the transfer of prisoners of war from Kunduz to Sheberghan and Mazar-i-Sharif.

Korea

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to improve diplomatic relations between North Korea and South Korea following recent incidents. [67536]

Mr. MacShane: The United Nations Command Military Armistice Commission, of which the UK is a member, is investigating the recent confrontation between the naval forces of the DPRK and the Republic of Korea.

We maintain links with the Governments of both countries through our embassies in Seoul and Pyongyang, and we strongly encourage the preservation of regional stability, and the promotion of inter-Korean relations through a process of dialogue.

Visas

Mike Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when normal visa services will resume at posts in (a) New Delhi, (b) Mumbai, (c) Islamabad and (d) Karachi, and if he will make a statement. [68383]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In India, we continue to operate a full service in Chennai and Kolkata and the service in Mumbai and New Delhi continues to expand. But it is too early to say when a full service there can resume.

Because of the continuing terrorist threat, an early resumption of a full service in Pakistan is unlikely, although every effort is being made to maximise the number of applicants who can use the courier-assisted service.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

End-of-life Vehicles

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what estimate she has made of the cost to (a) local authorities in London and (b) all other local authorities if the European End of Life Vehicle Directive is implemented with the cost of (i) de-pollution, (ii) recycling and (iii) scrapping of the vehicle being placed on the last owner; [67552]

(2) what plans she has to fund the costs of removing abandoned vehicles by local authorities. [67553]

Mr. Wilson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) on 21 June 2002, Official Report, column 592W.

Fuel Companies

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps Ofgem is taking to ensure that fuel companies offer fuel efficiency advice in line with their Social Action Plan at the point when salesmen contact customers with a view to transferring. [67312]

Mr. Wilson: Current supply licence conditions require suppliers to prepare, and seek Ofgem approval of, a code of practice setting out how they will make energy efficiency advice available to customers. It is not a formal licensing requirement to do this in discussions over transfer from one supplier to another.

Ofgem has recently published its "Report on the quality of energy efficiency advice provided by gas and electricity suppliers", which concluded that all the companies could do more to help customers. Ofgem will be discussing the report with suppliers and considering the need for further action to ensure that companies meet their licence obligations in this area.

As regards marketing by gas and electricity suppliers, Ofgem has recently consulted on proposals to make the regulation of this activity more effective. Ofgem is currently considering the next steps, including areas of possible research.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many times consumers have been compensated by fuel companies, following erroneous transfers, in line with licence condition 48; and if she will make a statement; [67314]

(2) what steps Ofgem has taken to ensure that fuel companies are training their marketing staff to ensure that they are not misleading customers, in line with licence condition 48. [67313]

Mr. Wilson: These are matters for the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets (Ofgem). I have, therefore, written to the chairman and chief executive of Ofgem, setting out the questions raised and asking him to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Small and Medium-sized Enterprises

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the level of representation by members of small businesses on the boards of Government-funded organisations charged with supporting SMEs. [66749]

Nigel Griffiths: The Small Business Council advises my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and Chief Executive of the Small Business Service on the needs and concerns of SMEs. As of 1 July it has 23 members, all but one are from small businesses.

The Ethnic Minority Business Forum advises DTI Ministers and the Chief Executive of the Small Business Service on the right help and advice ethnic minority businesses need for growth and success. All 20 members are small business owners.

The Business Link Operators have an average of 55 per cent. SME representation on their boards.

The Small Business Service's new Strategy Board will include up to six non-executive independent members. At least two members will have a small business background.

Used Tyres

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the work of the joint Government/Industry Scrap Tyre Working Group since July 1999; and what the most recent figure is for the percentage of scrapped tyres from which the industry recovers value. [67680]

Mr. Wilson: The Used Tyre Working Group (UTWG) publishes a report each year which is distributed to interested parties and made available through its website at www.tyredisposal.co.uk. The latest report is dated July 2001 and copies have been placed in the Library of the House. The UTWG intends to publish its 2002 report later in the year in light of responses to the DTI's March 2002 discussion paper on used tyre issues. Copies of this paper can also be found in the Libraries of the House.

UTWG statistics for 2000 show that the industry recovered value from around 63 per cent. of the 450,000 tonnes of tyres disposed that year. This was less than in previous years due to the closure of the UK's single largest used tyre treatment facility in 2000. Since then, significant new processing capacity has been developed. The UTWG is currently compiling statistics for 2001 which are expected to show this processing capacity feeding through to an improved recovery rate.

Aggregates Industry

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people are employed in the United Kingdom aggregates industry. [67455]

Mr. Wilson: The Quarrying/Aggregates industry directly employs around 20,000 people.

Bolda Biofuels Ltd.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money has been granted by her Department to Bolda Biofuels Ltd. in the last three years, under what grant regime, on what date, for what purpose it was granted; and if she will make a statement. [64672]

Mr. Wilson: The following projects involving Border Biofuels have been supported under the Department's Sustainable Energy Programme in the last three years:

Project title	Start date	Contract grant Value (£)	End date	Total cost of project (£)	Percentage of funding from DTI	DTI spend[1] (£)

[1] To date

Employment Agencies

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she expects consultations to begin on draft regulations to prohibit the compilation of worker blacklists by employment agencies for the purposes of discrimination in relation to recruitment and the treatment of workers already employed. [66051]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 3 July 2002]: No date has been set for the commencement of consultations on such draft regulations.

North-West Development Agency

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs in (a) the north-west, (b) Lancashire and (c) Burnley have been (i) created and (ii) sustained in the last year as a direct result of the work of the north-west development agency. [65550]

Alan Johnson: During 2001–02, 14,655 jobs were created, and 14,868 jobs were safeguarded, across the north-west as a result of the work of the north-west development agency. Of these, 1,651 jobs were created, and 1,684 jobs safeguarded, in Lancashire; and 593 jobs were created, and 311 jobs safeguarded, in Burnley during the same period.

Construction Industry

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to her answer of 17 April 2002, Official Report, column 936W, on the construction industry, which organisations have made representations; what progress has been made to resolve concerns raised about the operation of the Construction Skills Certification Scheme; and if she will make a statement. [66042]

Mr. Wilson: I have received correspondence from a number of MPs, who have written on behalf of companies, about the operation of the Construction Skills Certification Scheme (CSCS Ltd.). Representations to the Department, are generally held to have been received in confidence and I have no plans to disclose details of correspondence made to me about CSCS Ltd., an independent private company.

As regards the question on progress made to resolve concerns raised about the Construction Skills Certification Scheme (CSCS), I understand from CSCS that discussions are on-going with the various associations about affiliation and the Department is being kept informed of developments.

Regional Development Agencies

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what level of her Department's funding of RDAs was spent on physical regeneration in financial years (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02. [66241]

Alan Johnson: In 2000–01, the RDAs had a number of programmes that could contribute to physical regeneration. None of the DTI's funding for RDAs was for this purpose. The reported spending on "Land and Property", the RDAs' main programme that includes physical regeneration, by the RDAs was £171.98 million (gross spend).

For 2001–02, final figures on spending by the RDAs on physical regeneration are not yet available; figures for the "Land and Property" programme will be published in the RDAs annual report.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many registered (a) architects and (b) chartered surveyors are working in each regional development agency. [66242]

Alan Johnson: There are two registered architects working for the Regional Development Agencies, both with Yorkshire Forward. A total of 131 chartered surveyors are employed by the Agencies and this figure is broken down as follows:

Area
Advantage West Midlands	13
East of England Development Agency	6
East Midlands Development Agency	10
North West Development Agency	25
One NorthEast	23
South East of England Development Agency	14
South West of England Development Agency	24
Yorkshire Forward	16

Brownfield Development

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the projected amount of brownfield land to be redeveloped is, broken down by regional development agencies. [66211]

Alan Johnson: RDAs were required to set targets for the amount of brownfield land they will remediate in 2002–03 and 2003–04. These targets are set out in the following table:

Hectares

Agency	2002–03	2003–04
North-east	80	60
North-west	442	602
Yorkshire Forward	86	127
East Midlands	119	125
West Midlands	299	468
East	20	20
South-east	40	43
South-west	140	140
London	30	30

Waste Disposal

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the vitrification process; and what studies the Department has undertaken of its validity as a form of disposal. [66099]

Mr. Wilson: Vitrification converts liquid high level radioactive waste into a solid and stable form. The Department has undertaken no studies of vitrification.

Industrial Training Construction Board

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to review the Industrial Training (Construction Board) Order 1964, amended by The Industrial Training (Construction Board) Order 1964 (Amendment) Order 1992 in respect of the Construction Industry Training Board levy; and if she will make a statement. [67429]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: I have been asked to reply.

The Industrial Training (Construction Board) Order 1964 (Amendment) Order 1992 defines the activities of the construction industry in relation to which the Construction Industry Training Board exercises its functions. The definition was decided in full consultation with the industry through its main employer organisations and would only be reviewed if it was felt necessary or desirable to remove an activity from the scope of the Board. I have not received any proposals from any part of the industry to amend the definition.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Performance Targets

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many performance targets she has set for her Department; and how many that were set for last year have been dropped this year. [64273]

Mr. Miliband: The Department's performance targets are set out in Public Service Agreements (PSA) agreed as part of Spending Reviews and are published in Spending Review White Papers, available from the House of Commons Library; or from the Treasury website at www.hm-treasury.gov.uk. The most recent targets were agreed as part of the Spending Review 2000; we have not dropped any of these. However, employment related targets transferred to the Department for Work and Pensions following machinery of government changes after the last general election.

Performance against our PSAs and other high level supporting targets is published in our departmental annual report, available from the House of Commons library or via our website, www.dfes.gov.uk.

Schools (Shrewsbury and Atcham)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) pupils and (b) teachers there are in each school in Shrewsbury and Atcham; and if she will make a statement. [65064]

Mr. Miliband: The available information is shown in the following table. This relates to numbers of pupils published in the Primary and Secondary School Performance Tables for 2001. Otherwise, school level information is not routinely published.

Amraf Training plc

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations she has received concerning the closure of Amraf Training plc and payments to it by her Department. [65492]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Administrative receivers were appointed to Amraf Training plc on 1 October 2001. To 28 June 2002, the Department has received 66 representations concerning the closure. Details of any payments made by the Department to Amraf Training plc are held as commercial in confidence.

Recycling

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of (a) paper and (b) other goods purchased by her Department was recycled paper in each year since 1997; what the annual total cost of these purchases was; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if she will make a statement. [65767]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: My Department changed stationery supplier in December last year because our previously contracted supplier ceased trading. As a result, we have been unable to obtain accurate data concerning the annual total cost of purchases. Mechanisms are now in place to ensure that this information will be available in future.

Green Minister

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills who her Department's Green Minister is; when they (a) have attended and (b) plan to attend meetings of the Green Ministers' Committee; what the outcomes of meetings were for her Department's activities; and if she will make a statement. [65985]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Our Green Minister is Baroness Ashton of Upholland.

Following the general election in June 2001, the previously informal Green Ministers Committee was upgraded to a Cabinet Sub-Committee of ENV and it is established practice under exemption two of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet Committees. Therefore I cannot relate progress or outcomes by my Department to anything that has been discussed.

However, I am happy to confirm my Department's commitment to promoting sustainable development, including green issues. Our departmental strategy to 2006 mentions sustainable development in relation to our investment strategy for schools, colleges and universities and in the modernisation of the Department's estate.

Rural Secondary Schools

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what (a) environmental assessment and (b) assessment of the traffic implications she has made with respect to the specialisation of secondary schools in rural areas. [66780]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 4 July 2002]: No assessment has been made of environmental or traffic implications of specialisation for secondary schools in rural areas. We do not expect specialist school designation to have a significant impact on transport in rural areas. Specialist school designation is about raising standards of achievement across the whole school. Specialist schools enrich the learning opportunities and broaden the range of courses in their designated specialism, but they continue to teach a broad and balanced curriculum and meet the needs of all their pupils.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment she has made of the extent of specialisation of secondary schools in rural areas. [66785]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Of the 992 specialist schools to be operational from September this year, 21 (2.1 per cent.) are located in areas defined in the Register of Educational Establishments as mixed, predominantly rural or wholly rural areas. This compares with 2.8 per cent. of secondary schools nationally.

From October 2002, in order to assist small mainstream schools (many of them in rural areas) with their specialist school applications we have reduced the sponsorship requirement. Those with under 500 pupils on roll will have to raise sponsorship on the basis of £100 per pupil, subject to a minimum of £20,000.

Buildings Insurance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the cost of buildings insurance to her Department was (a) before and (b) after 11 September 2001. [66938]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Departments are required to comply with the Government's general policy on insurance, which is set out in "Government Accounting", chapter 30, para 30.2.5, which notes that Government do not need to purchase insurance to protect the viability of its business, and should consider insurance only where the value of claims met would exceed the cost of insurance premiums. Commercial insurance of a building is acceptable in cases where (a) insurance is a condition of a lease (b) the lessor will not accept a Government indemnity (c) incurring the total cost of the accommodation in question, including the cost of the insurance, is more cost-effective than other accommodation options ("Government Accounting", para 30.2.11a).

My Department building insurance, however, is paid on an annual basis, so any impact from September 11 has not been reflected as yet. The total insurance paid in 2001–02 was £121,171.

Building Values

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the buildings owned by her Department and estimate the market value of each of them. [66956]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: A list of the buildings owned by my Department and their estimated market value are detailed within the National Asset Register, published in July 2001 (Cm5221). This register lists all assets owed by Departments and their valuation.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will provide detailed information on PFI schemes, withheld on the grounds of commercial confidentiality, to bona fide research bodies to make objective assessments of their value for money. [67076]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: My Department has no PFI schemes, which have been withheld on the grounds of commercial confidentiality.

Connexions

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment she has made of the piloting of Connexions in rural areas. [67087]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 5 July 2002]: Tackling rural issues was one of the aspects which was tested in the piloting of the Connexions Service, the results of which were published by the Department for Education and Skills in the 'Lessons Learned from Connexions Pilots' report on 17 October 2001 (Research Brief ref: RB 308, Research Report ref: RR308). The document is available in the House of Commons Library.

We have also recently commissioned the University of Hull to conduct a study into the relative costs associated with delivering Connexions in rural and urban areas. This study will run from July to November 2002 with a report to be published by the Department for Education and Skills within three months of the completion of the field work. The findings of the study will help to inform a planned review of the Connexions funding arrangements due to be undertaken during 2003. All Connexions Partnerships have been informed of the study and are welcome to be involved where they feel that they have a particular contribution.

The Connexions Service is also involved with the Countryside Agency's study developing practice in rural Connexions Partnerships. This study is at the commissioning stage, but we will in due course be disseminating examples of innovative approaches to help Partnerships deliver a high quality multi-agency support service to young people living in rural areas.

Diversity Pathfinder Scheme

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which local education authorities are taking part in the diversity pathfinder scheme. [67189]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 5 July 2002]: There are six Local Education Authorities involved in the Diversity Pathfinders Project. They are;

1. Birmingham
2. Cornwall
3. Hertfordshire
4. Middlesbrough
5. Newham
6. Portsmouth.

Warwickshire and North Tyneside have been invited to join the project as they are implementing interesting plans to promote diversity in their regions. Their activities are not being funded by the DfES but they are involved in the associated research project.

LearnDirect Plus

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many people have enrolled on LearnDirect Plus in West Derbyshire constituency since it began. [67431]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: 660 people have enrolled on learndirect courses in the West Derbyshire constituency since Ufi/learndirect was rolled out nationally in October 2000.

Post-16 Education

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment her Department has made of the percentages of pupils staying on in full-time education or training post-age 16 in (a) schools with sixth forms and (b) schools without sixth forms in the last period for which figures are available. [67629]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The primary source of information on the changes in the activities of young people after completing compulsory education is the Youth Cohort Study (YCS). The following table shows details in the figures requested.

	In full-time education or training post-age 16
Comprehensive schools—with sixth form	86%
Comprehensive schools—no sixth form	83%

These estimates are for England. Equivalent estimates for schools other than comprehensive schools are not available.

Formula Grant

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what plans she has to ensure that the costs associated with high pupil turnover in schools in London are compensated for (a) in the education service block in formula grant and (b) by specific grant. [67813]

(2) what plans she has to reflect the costs associated with educating children in areas of high ethnicity in (a) the education service block in formula grant and (b) by specific grant. [67814]

(3) what estimate she has made of the financial effect of changing the measure of ethnicity within the education formula grant from a country of birth indicator to an English as a second language indicator, broken down by local authority. [67815]

(4) what plans she has to redirect education funding to ensure that the Government's national child poverty targets are met. [67816]

(5) what plans she has to reflect problems associated with the recruitment and retention of teachers in London (a) in the education service block in formula grant and (b) by specific grant. [67817]

(6) what plans she has to reflect the costs of high population density in relation to school transport. [67818]

(7) what estimate she has made of the financial effect of changing the measure of ethnicity within the education formula grant from a country of birth indicator to school census data indicator, broken down by local authority. [67819]

(8) what plans she has to reflect the costs associated with educating children in areas of high social exclusion and deprivation (a) in the education service block in formula grant and (b) by specific grant. [67820]

(9) if she will make a statement concerning the impact of her proposed changes to the area cost adjustment on schools in London. [67825]

Mr. Miliband: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government announced today the issue of a consultation paper on options for reform of the distribution of grant to local authorities: copies have been placed in the Libraries. Within the consultation paper there are four options for reform of the education SSA formula. All these options have a common structure consisting of an amount per pupil together with top ups for areas of significant deprivation and areas where it costs more to recruit and retain staff. The options exemplify different measures of deprivation including children in families on income support or working families credit, children with English as an Additional Language, and children from ethnic minorities. The options do not include factors for high population density or high pupil turnover. The paper contains exemplifications of the changes to total SSA for 2002–03 that would result from each of the four options. It does not separately identify the contribution to change of each element of the formula, because it would not be meaningful to do so: nor does it identify the contribution of each element of the formula to the total. We will be making the data underlying the options available to interested parties, so that they may make a full contribution to the consultation. Decisions on specific grants will be announced following the spending review outcome.

London Academies

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the estimated timetable is for the opening of the proposed London academies; and if she will make a statement. [67838]

Mr. Miliband: Academies will open this September in Haringey and Bexley. We expect more to open year on year with at least 25 London academies open by 2007. Academies are an important strand of the Government's drive to raise standards, improve behaviour and widen choice across London.

School Violence

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what information the Government have collated on the number of teachers in maintained schools who have been the victims of serious assaults by (a) pupils and (b) parents in each of the last five years. [68260]

Mr. Miliband: The Government do not collect statistics in the form requested. However, 135 serious injuries to teachers caused by violence were reported to the Health and Safety Executive in Great Britain in 2000–01, the same number as in 1999–2000. Statistics for earlier years are not available. The provisional figure for 2000–01 was 130. The figures, which relate to all schools and cannot be broken down further, cover major injuries and others resulting in more than three days' absence from work. Information is not available on whether the assaults were carried out by pupils, parents or others.

School Inspections

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many schools have been inspected or reinspected in each year since 1997 by Ofsted and of those how many (a) were found to have serious weaknesses; (b) were found to be failing, (c) were found to have moved from 'serious weakness' to 'failing', (d) were found to have moved from 'failing' to 'serious weakness', (e) were found no longer to have serious weaknesses and (f) were found no longer to be failing. [68650]

Mr. Miliband: This is a matter for Ofsted. I have asked HM Chief Inspector, David Bell, to write to the hon. Member and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

Local Education Authority Inspection

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many local education authorities have been inspected or reinspected in each year by Ofsted since 1997; and of those how many (a) were found to be failing, (b) were found to be failing on reinspection and (c) were found no longer to be failing. [68651]

Mr. Miliband: This is a matter for Ofsted. I have asked HM Chief Inspector, David Bell, to write to the hon. Member and to place a copy of his letter in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Gibraltar

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister for what reason he has declined to meet the Chief Minister of Gibraltar in the last three months; and if he will make a statement. [68046]

The Prime Minister: My diary commitments have meant a meeting has not been possible. I have encouraged the Chief Minister to continue his dialogue with my right hon. Friend's the Foreign Secretary and Minister for Europe. The Foreign Secretary met the Chief Minister on 3 May.

SCOTLAND

National Minimum Wage

8. Mr. Russell Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action is being taken against employers in Scotland who are failing to pay the national minimum wage. [65305]

Mrs. McGuire: Inland Revenue has specialist enforcement teams in Aberdeen and East Kilbride who are responsible for enforcing the national minimum wage in Scotland. The teams follow up complaints made by workers and third parties about non-compliance and use other Revenue risk based data to identify employers for inquiry. Since April 1999, the teams have issued 19 enforcement notices and 29 penalty notices, leading to recovery of over £600,000 in wage arrears for low paid workers.

11. Ann McKechin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps are being taken to ensure the enforcement of the national minimum wage in Scotland. [65308]

Mrs. McGuire: Inland Revenue enforcement teams in Aberdeen and East Kilbride are responsible for enforcing the national minimum wage in Scotland. Since April 1999, they have completed over 1,700 investigations, discovered non-compliance in 27 per cent. of cases and recovered over £620,000 in wage arrears for low paid workers.

Defence Employment

9. Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs in Scotland are (a) directly and (b) indirectly related to the defence industry. [65306]

Mrs. Liddell: Expenditure on defence equipment is estimated to support approximately 6,000 jobs in Scottish businesses directly and a further 3,000 jobs indirectly.

Aircraft Carriers (Employment Prospects)

10. Mr. Joyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will estimate the number of potential defence related jobs in Scotland in connection with the two planned UK aircraft carrier contracts. [65307]

Mrs. Liddell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence expects to announce decisions around the end of the year on the selection of the prime contractor for the new aircraft carriers. The carrier programme will provide work for thousands of employees in defence industries across the UK. Scottish shipyards have been involved in supplying support to both of the competing prime contractors and clearly have good opportunities to secure a share of the work.

Waverley Line

12. Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions she has held with the chairman of the Strategic Rail Authority about the future of the Waverley line from Edinburgh to Carlisle. [65309]

Mrs. McGuire: I understand that the Waverley Railway Partnership recently launched a consultation process, which will run until the end of August, in conjunction with detailed technical assessments of the route to give the people of Midlothian, the Borders and Edinburgh an opportunity to comment on the re-establishment of the line.

I hope to discuss a range of issues including the proposed reopening of the Waverley line when my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I meet senior management of Railtrack later this month.

Nuclear Energy

13. Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will make a statement on the future of nuclear energy provision in Scotland. [65310]

Mrs. Liddell: The future role of nuclear energy in the UK is one of the issues included in the current consultation which follows the PIU review of energy policy to 2050 and which forms part of the preparation for a Government White Paper around the turn of the year.

Scottish Regiments

14. Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions she has had with the Secretary of State for Defence regarding the implications for Scotland of the future of Scottish regiments. [65311]

Mrs. McGuire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Newark (Patrick Mercer).

Enterprise

15. Mr. Luke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when she last met CBI Scotland to discuss enterprise in Scotland. [65312]

Mrs. Liddell: I attended a dinner with CBI Scotland's Growing Business Forum on 24 June, together with the Scottish Executive Minister for Enterprise, Transport and Lifelong Learning, to discuss a range of issues relating to enterprise in Scotland.

Cross-border Road Links

16. Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions she has had with the Scottish Executive on cross-border road links, with special reference to the A1. [65313]

Mrs. McGuire: I have regular discussions with Scottish Ministers on a variety of transport issues including cross-border road links. The Scottish Executive plan to upgrade the A1 to dual carriageway standard between Howburn and Houndwood in the Scottish Borders at a cost of nearly £5 million. Construction is due to start on 15 July and should be completed in 2003.

Euro

17. Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent meetings she has had with business and industrial leaders regarding the impact on Scotland of the United Kingdom joining the euro. [65314]

Mrs. Liddell: I have regular meetings with businesses and industrial leaders to discuss a wide range of issues.

The Government's policy on membership of the single currency remains as set out by the Chancellor in October 1997, and restated by the Prime Minister in February 1999.

The five economic tests will define whether a clear and unambiguous case can be made.

Scottish Parliament

18. Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when she plans to make a statement on the consultation process on the size of the Scottish Parliament. [65315]

Mrs. Liddell: I expect to be in a position to announce the outcome of the consultation on the size of the Scottish Parliament in the autumn.

Airports

19. John Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment she has made of the ability of Scotland's airport infrastructure to keep up with projected growth in passenger numbers. [65316]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government will, jointly with the Scottish Executive, very shortly publish a consultation document on the future of Scotland's air services and airports for the next 30 years. We intend to undertake an extensive consultation process. I hope that this will result in a productive debate on all aspects of the matter.

Drug Crime (Asset Seizures)

20. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will make a statement on the action being taken to seize the assets of drug barons in Scotland. [65317]

Mrs. McGuire: Strengthening the powers to confiscate illegal gains, from drug dealing and also other serious crimes, is a priority for the Government. The Proceeds of Crime Bill will put in place an enhanced and effective system for seizing assets that have resulted from criminal activity.

Common Fisheries Policy

21. Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will make a statement on the European common fisheries policy as it affects Scotland. [65318]

Mrs. McGuire: Responsibility for fisheries policy in Scotland rests with the Scottish Executive.

The European Commission has recognised that the Common Fisheries Policy is in need of reform. HM Government and the Scottish Executive are working together to ensure that the United Kingdom's and Scotland's interests are fully represented as member states discuss the Commission's reform proposals.

Asbestosis Compensation

22. Jim Sheridan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in securing the payment of compensation to asbestosis victims in Scotland. [65319]

Mrs. Liddell: There continues to be good progress. In relation to Chester Street, over £3 million has now been paid out by the Association of British Insurers and the Financial Services Compensation Scheme in cases where the insurance policyholder is insolvent. In addition, the Government have welcomed the recent judicial decision by the House of Lords in relation to the Fairchild case.

Manufacturing

23. Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will make a statement on the recent performance of the manufacturing industry in Scotland. [65320]

Mrs. McGuire: The manufacturing sector continues to be very important to the economy of Scotland, employing around 281,000 in December 2001 and supporting a further 180,000 jobs in the Scottish economy.

Oil and Gas Taxation

24. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to the oral answer of 11 June 2002, Official Report, column 708, on oil and gas taxation, what action she has taken to investigate the procedures for subcontracting work in the oil industry. [65321]

Mrs. Liddell: I take every opportunity in discussions with the oil and gas companies to underline the strengths of the UK supply and contracting industries. Provided that the UK supply and contracting industries can remain competitive in the European and global context I am confident that they will continue to win work.

Financial Exclusion

25. Mr. Tom Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when she next plans to meet representatives from credit unions in Scotland to discuss financial exclusion. [65322]

Mrs. McGuire: I am very aware of the importance of credit unions' role in tackling financial exclusion in Scotland and look forward to meetings with representatives. The Financial Services Authority commenced its new regulatory regime for credit unions at the beginning of July. This regime is in place to ensure that depositors are appropriately protected. The Scottish Executive have made available funding support which, among other aims, is designed to help unions adjust to the new arrangements.

ADVOCATE-GENERAL

European Law

30. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Advocate-General what role she has in relation to challenges which are alleged to be contraventions of European law. [65327]

The Advocate-General: Court actions against the Scottish Executive or challenges to legislation of the Scottish Parliament alleging failure to comply with European law must be intimated to me as devolution issues. I then decide whether it would be appropriate for me, as Advocate-General, to intervene. That will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case.

European Convention on Human Rights

31. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Advocate-General what representations she has received in the previous month relating to possible breaches of rights within the scope of the European Convention on Human Rights. [65328]

The Advocate-General: In the past month 22 devolution issues, intimated to me in terms of the Scotland Act, have concerned matters under the European Convention on Human Rights. I have received no other representations about the ECHR.

Devolution

32. Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Advocate-General what devolution issues have been raised with her since 11 June. [65329]

The Advocate-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Harris).

33. Mr. Alan Reid: To ask the Advocate-General what devolution issues have been raised since 11 June under the Scotland Act 1998. [65330]

The Advocate-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Harris).

34. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Advocate-General what devolution issues have been raised since 11 June under the Scotland Act 1998. [65331]

The Advocate-General: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Harris).

35. Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Advocate-General what devolution issues have been raised since 11 June under the Scotland Act 1998. [65332]

The Advocate-General: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Harris).

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Census 1901 Website

36. Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the 1901 online census service will be fully functional. [65333]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I cannot give a firm date when the 1901 Census will be fully functional. However I can state that QinetiQ Ltd., who are the contractors responsible for setting up the site and providing the online service, have been making technical improvements to it. QinetiQ Ltd. is currently testing the site and the Public Record Office is also carrying out its own independent test programme. Once the final results of these tests are available, it will be possible to decide whether the service is sufficiently robust for it to go live. The final testing is under way and we anticipate that it will be completed by the end of July.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the 1901 Census Online is expected to be available at service centres; and at what date he expects that internet access will be restored to the Census. [67577]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on this day to the hon. Member for Mitcham and Morden (Siobhain McDonagh).

Mental Incapacity

41. Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to implement the proposals in Making Decisions; and if he will make a statement. [65339]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Government remain committed to reforming this important area of the law. When parliamentary time allows, it will legislate to improve and clarify the decision-making process for those who are unable to make decisions for themselves or who cannot communicate their decisions. In advance of securing parliamentary time, the Government are taking forward a number of initiatives that will benefit people, and enable legislation to be effective quickly. We are supported in this work by our recently established Consultative Forum on Mental Incapacity, involving a wide range of stakeholders, to develop a shared understanding of how we can best improve the lives of people with mental incapacity and their carers.

48. Stephen Hesford: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures she is taking to protect people with mental incapacity in the courts system. [65346]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Government are working with the Consultative Forum on Mental Incapacity to develop a shared understanding of how we can best improve the lives of people with mental incapacity and their carers, and we remain committed to reforming this area of law.

Also, in civil proceedings the Official Solicitor can act on behalf of parties with mental incapacity. Guidance has been issued to court staff in the Crown and county courts on the service they should provide under the Disability Discrimination Act.

Rape

42. Vera Baird: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will take steps to draw the attention of the Judicial Studies Board to the comments about rape trials made in the HMIC/CPSI Thematic report on rape; and if he will make a statement. [65340]

Yvette Cooper: Judicial training is the responsibility of the Judicial Studies Board (JSB) chaired by Lord Justice Waller.

The board provides specialist training to those judges authorised to hear cases of rape through its regular Serious Sexual Offences Seminars.

The Criminal Committee of the JSB will be considering the comments made in the joint inspectors report over the coming months.

Transsexuals

43. Kali Mountford: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress has been made with the review of the law relating to transsexuals; and if he will make a statement. [65341]

45. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the inter-departmental working group on transsexual people. [65343]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Inter-departmental Working Group on Transsexual People's Report was presented to Parliament in 2000. The report has been under active consideration within Government since then. The working group has now been reconvened to look further into the implications of the possible changes in policy identified in the report. The group will report to Ministers later this year.

Electoral Register

44. Mr. Bryant: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to make copies of the marked electoral register more widely available. [65342]

Yvette Cooper: We are reviewing the legislation relating to the current availability of the marked electoral registers in the light of the Representation of the People (Amendment) Regulations which the House has been asked to approve. In reaching any conclusion the Government will in addition wish to take account of the Electoral Commission's review of absent voting.

Sheriffs

46. Mr. Swayne: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will make a statement on her review of Under High Sheriffs, Under Sheriffs and Sheriffs' High Court enforcement functions. [65344]

Yvette Cooper: The review of High Court enforcement is part of the comprehensive review of the enforcement of civil court judgments which has been going on since 1998. On May 8, 2002, my noble Friend Baroness Scotland of Asthal, QC, announced the publication of the post-consultation report for the Green Paper "Towards Effective Enforcement—A single Piece of Bailiff Law and Regulatory Structure for Enforcement" (set out in her reply of 8 May 2002, Official Report, column 1242).

Court Dress

47. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to her answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 713W, on wigs, if she intends to canvass the views of all members of the legal profession in connection with her review of court dress. [65345]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Lord Chancellor will publish a formal consultation document on court working dress, informed by the results of the public opinion survey, later this year. The views of all members of the legal professions will be welcomed, but the consultation will be public and we hope other interested parties, such as the general public, court users, judges and court staff, will also respond.

Fines

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of fine-defaulters were in full-time employment since 1990. [65123]

Yvette Cooper: This information is currently not collected centrally but we are examining whether it would be possible by research or sampling to estimate the data requested, as well as new ways to collect information on defendants' means.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of fine-defaulters in full-time employment had attachment of earnings orders imposed in each year since 1990. [65122]

Yvette Cooper: This information is currently not collected centrally but we are examining whether it would be possible by research or sampling to estimate the data requested. This department has commissioned research into the can't pay/won't pay divide. The outcome of that research will inform future enforcement policy. In addition we are considering new ways to collect information on defendants' means.

Norman Baker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to ensure fines handed out by magistrates are subsequently collected. [65654]

Yvette Cooper: Fines are imposed by both Magistrates' Courts and the Crown Court, but all are collected by Magistrates' Courts and their staff.

The Government is committed to improving the enforcement of financial penalties. We have transferred lead responsibility for warrant execution from the police to Magistrates' Courts Committees, on 1 April 2001. We have established an information-sharing scheme, which enables Magistrates' Courts to obtain basic information on defaulters from the Department for Work and Pensions. We have set performance targets for 2002–3 and Magistrates' Courts Committees have also been given nearly £10 million extra from April 2002, ring-fenced for enforcement purposes. Further measures are being developed as part of the Criminal Justice White Paper. We will monitor the position carefully to check that performance improves.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of fine-defaulters had one or more county court judgments against them in each year since 1990. [65121]

Yvette Cooper: The information requested is not kept centrally.

Child Contact Centres

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the mapping exercise of child contact centres (a) started and (b) is expected to be completed; how many whole-time equivalent staff are working on the mapping exercise; and what budget is provided for the mapping exercise. [67633]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The work is being carried out under the auspices of the Child Contact Working Group, which is facilitated by the Lord Chancellor's Department. The mapping exercise forms part of the working group's consultation on a new referral mechanism to ensure families are directed to the service that meets their needs. The consultation was launched on 11 May and concludes in October. The mapping exercise will initially be conducted in three areas—Inner London, Manchester and Norfolk. Currently, two LCD staff support the work on a part-time basis. There is no specific budget for the working group, but expenses are paid to members.

Statistics

Mr. Laws: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will list the statistics that are collected by her Department by English parliamentary constituency; and if she will make a statement. [67103]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the letter sent to him by the National Statistician dated 8 July 2002.

Solicitors

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans she has to meet the Independent Commissioner who will deal with complaints against solicitors. [67934]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Sir Stephen Lander's appointment as the Law Society's first Independent Commissioner has recently been announced. Ministers look forward to meeting him after he takes up his new post overseeing the Law Society's Consumer Redress Scheme in November 2002.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the backlog of cases is at the Office of Supervision of Solicitors. [67933]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The most recent progress report from the Law Society shows that as at 31 May 2002, the total outstanding caseload at the Office for the Supervision of Solicitors was 8,255.

Judiciary (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many complaints he has received since April 1998 concerning the conduct in Northern Ireland of individual (a) judges, (b) officers of tribunals and (c) resident magistrates. [38291]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I apologise for the delay in providing this reply which is due to an administrative oversight. There have been three complaints concerning the conduct of members of the judiciary in Northern Ireland since 1998.

(a) Judges—1 complaint was received concerning a High Court Master in 2001

(b) Tribunals—no complaints have been received

(c) Resident Magistrates—2 complaints have been received concerning Resident Magistrates in 1998 and 2000.

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he plans to issue his consultation document in response to the OFT report on the reform of the QC system. [65347]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Queen's Counsel system is one of a number of issues relating to the legal profession raised in the OFT report, which fall to my Noble and Learned Friend the Lord Chancellor to consider. The Government plans to consult on those issues before 30 July.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Parliamentary Questions

54. Mr. Luff: To ask the President of the Council what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the Procedure Committee on parliamentary questions. [65354]

Mr. Robin Cook: I broadly welcome the Report on Parliamentary Questions. The Procedure Committee is to be congratulated on their thorough study. The recommendations are far-reaching and justify careful study. It may be sensible for the House to debate this at the same time as the parallel report from the Modernisation Committee.

Scrutiny

55. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the President of the Council what plans he has to ensure that more Bills in the next session are subject to pre-legislative scrutiny. [65355]

57. Helen Jones: To ask the President of the Council what plans he has to ensure more Bills in the next Queen's Speech are subject to pre-legislative scrutiny. [65357]

Mr. Bradshaw: I refer my hon. Friend's to the reply given earlier by my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House.

Privy Council

56. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council when the Privy Council last met; and if he will make a statement on arrangements for convening meetings of the Privy Council. [65356]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Privy Council last met on 26 June. The Queen normally holds a Council every month except January, August and September. Additional meetings are convened if urgent business requires it.

Lords Reform

58. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the President of the Council what discussions he has had with representatives of peers about when they will confirm their membership of the Joint Committee on the Future of the House of Lords. [65358]

Mr. Bradshaw: The House of Lords agreed their membership of the Joint Committee on 4 July and the first meeting took place this morning.

Programming Motions

59. Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the President of the Council what assessment he has made of the impact of programming motions on the number of amendments to Bills discussed. [65359]

Mr. Bradshaw: I understand that some groups of amendments on programmed bills have not been reached. If there is engagement on all sides, I hope the number of such groups can be minimised. We should also remember that in the past, many groups of amendments on guillotined bills were not discussed.

Modernisation

60. Miss McIntosh: To ask the President of the Council what further proposals he plans to put before the Select Committee on Modernisation of the House of Commons on working hours of the House. [65360]

Mr. Bradshaw: My right hon. Friend's proposals were set out in his memorandum to the Select Committee on Modernisation of the House of Commons which the Committee published last December.

Westminster Hall

62. Sandra Osborne: To ask the President of the Council what assessment he has made of the Westminster Hall experiment; and what plans he has to develop the experiment. [65362]

Mr. Bradshaw: Westminster Hall has offered backbenchers and select committees vastly increased opportunities for debate. The Select Committee on Modernisation of the House of Commons will need to review its operation before the end of the Session and I hope their recommendations will build on its success.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Council how many statutory instruments have been (a) introduced, (b) removed and (c) amended by his Department since 1 January; and what the (i) cost and (ii) saving has been in each case. [64638]

Mr. Robin Cook: Eight statutory instruments have been introduced by my Department since 1 January, of which none removed others and one amended an earlier one. None of these instruments were introduced in my capacity as Leader of the House. A larger number of Orders in and of Council, introduced since the date mentioned, are also statutory instruments. These are included in the parliamentary answers given by the Departments from which they originated, so as to avoid double-counting.

The other information sought is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Visitors' Facilities

61. Jim Knight: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what assessment he has made of the new visitors' facility in Westminster Hall; and what plans he has to extend the facilities further. [65361]

Mr. Kirkwood: Opening up Parliament to the public is one of the Commission's strategic aims, and the Jubilee Café, which was opened by Mr. Speaker in May, is a welcome development. It seats 100, serves modestly priced light refreshments and is fully wheelchair accessible. It also provides long-overdue toilet facilities for visitors. It is still too soon to make any formal assessment of the success of the new facilities, although early feedback from visitors indicates a high level of satisfaction with the range and quality of food provided. The Finance and Services Committee has asked for a full report from the Director of Catering Services in the autumn.

More generally, a feasibility study on visitor facilities for Parliament is currently under way and will shortly make recommendations. These will include options for an information and visitor centre.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Pathways

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how her Department measures ease of use on country paths. [66764]

Alun Michael: A definition of "ease of use" was developed by the Countryside Agency in conjunction with our officials an the County Surveyors Society and the Audit Commission in order to provide an appropriate measure for performance indicators. This was refined last year when it became a Best Value performance indicator under the provisions of the Local Government Act 1999. The definition can be revised each year if necessary but there are advantages in avoiding change so that there is consistency in the data collection over a period of years.

Ease of use is measured according to the percentage of total length of footpaths and other rights of way which are easy to use by members of the public. This involves consideration of the extent to which a footpath or other right of way is signposted or waymarked; the extent of unlawful obstructions and other interference, including overhanging vegetation, to the public rights of passage; and consideration of the good repair of the surface and lawful barriers, such as stiles and gates, to a standard necessary to enable the public to use without undue inconvenience.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the reasons for which no English county council has met the national target of easy-to-find pathways. [66778]

Alun Michael: The Countryside Agency's Rights of Way Condition Survey 2000 was conducted to establish how easy it is to find, follow and use public rights of way. Whilst it found there had been a substantial improvement in "easy to find" category, I am concerned that no survey region met the national target of 95 per cent. of their paths signposted. No formal assessment has been made of the reasons for this, although lack of funding and low priority are generally seen to be the cause. It is because the Government wants to be able to establish where the performance of local highways authorities could be improved, that we introduced a provision in the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000, section 71, that will enable the Secretary of State to require local highway authorities to publish reports on the performance of their functions relating to rights of way.

Rights of Way

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the Government plans to implement powers in the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 which will allow local authorities to divert or close rights of way for the purpose of crime prevention; which areas the provision will apply to; if she will make a statement. [66831]

Alun Michael: I have published proposals to implement the provisions in 'Crime Prevention on Rights of Way: Public Consultation paper on the Designation of Areas and Other Procedural Matters'. This was published on 19 June and a copy placed in the Library of the House. Once the arrangements are in place it will be for the appropriate authorities to apply for designation. Normally the application will be made by the highway authority for a ward area or areas, but I have proposed some flexibility in my proposals. I am arranging for a copy to be forwarded to my right hon. Friend.

Incinerators

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what assessment has been conducted by (a) her Department and (b) the Environment Agency into the destination of waste from municipal waste incinerators; if she will place copies of this documentation in the Library; and if she will make a statement; [65624]

(2) which UK heat stations have supplied incinerator ash for construction; if she will list (a) the total amount of ash produced by each station and (b) the proportion of ash for each method of disposal or use; and if she will make a statement. [65622]

(3) if she will list those applications where incinerator ash, waste lime or dust was ultimately released to land by (a) site location, (b) year, (c) tonnage, (d) source and (e) end-use in 2001; and if she will make a statement. [65623]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency has completed their investigation into the destination of ash from municipal solid waste incinerators (MSWIs). The Agency has accounted for all the solid residues produced between 1996 and 2000 by MSWIs in England and Wales, and has evaluated the environmental implications of the residues' use, including use in construction. It has also looked at what steps may be needed in the light of these findings.

Four municipal waste incinerators sent ash for processing with a view to its subsequent use in construction during the study period. Details of the total amounts of ash produced from each plant and the proportions sent for processing and landfill are in the table as follows (IBA—Incinerator Bottom Ash, ESP—Electrostatic Precipitator Ash):

Percentages

Incinerator	Total ash (1996–2000) in tonnes	Proportion to landfill	Proportion to processors
Teeside	212,000 IBA	67	33
Edmonton	717,000 IBA/ESP	70	30
Lewisham	577,000 IBA	59	41
Birmingham	343,000 IBA	79	21

The Agency's investigation, summarised in their report "Solid Residues from Municipal Waste Incinerators in England and Wales" has now been published and I will ensure that the hon. Member receives a copy of it. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of the House. It is also available on the Agency's website at www.environment-agency.gov.uk.

The Agency's investigation covered the period 1996 to 2000. The report itself lists annual tonnages of ash for the period covered by the investigation, and sites where MSWI residues were sent for disposal or reprocessing. Data on the end use of residues for 2001 are not available. Figures for 2001 for air pollution control residues will be available later in the year.

I have asked the Chief Executive of the Agency to contact the hon. Member in due course, to see whether she should require further information after having had the opportunity to consider the report.

Used Refrigerators

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what financial help her Department is giving to county councils with the task of disposing of used refrigerators. [67687]

Mr. Meacher: In December 2001, we announced a payment of £6 million to go to local authorities to cover their costs up until March 2002 for the disposal of refrigerators. We realise local authorities are in need of further funding and intend to make an announcement as soon as possible.

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to her answer of 2 July 2002, ref 64247, what financial aid is being made available to each local authority in 2001–02 to help with the storage and disposal of refrigerators. [67533]

Mr. Meacher: £6 million was allocated to local authorities for the extra costs they faced from 1 January to end March this year as a result of the disposal of refrigerators regulations. This money was added to local authorities' general grant for the current financial year and distributed using standard spending assessments. It is not possible to provide a meaningful allocation for each authority.

Crabs

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make it her policy to limit the landing of crab-claws to 75 kilos per trip. [64381]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 June 2002]: Yes.

Bovine TB

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what average number of hours per week is spent on veterinary surgeons in her Department in herd testing programme for Bovine TB; and if she will make a statement. [65469]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 1 July 2002]: Veterinary Officers of the State Veterinary Service (SVS) are supported by approximately 100 Temporary Veterinary Inspectors (TVIs). During the six-month period December 2001 to May 2002 these veterinary surgeons spent approximately 15 per cent. of their time on TB-associated duties.

In addition over 4,000 Local Veterinary Inspectors (LVIs) are eligible to carry out TB testing.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many veterinary surgeons in each regional office of her Department work on the herd testing programme for Bovine TB. [65470]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The State Veterinary Service (SVS) comprises five regions and 23 divisions. Veterinary Officers of the SVS are supported by approximately 100 Temporary Veterinary Inspectors (TVIs). During the six-month period December 2001 to May 2002 these veterinary surgeons spent approximately 15 per cent. of their time on TB-associated duties.

In addition over 4,000 Local Veterinary Inspectors (LVIs) are eligible to carry out TB testing.

Provision of the number of veterinary surgeons who work on the bovine TB herd-testing programme, broken down by region, could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will list the pilot areas for the use of the gamma interferon test for bovine TB; [61606]

(2) when the use of the gamma interferon blood test for bovine TB commenced in pilot areas. [61607]

Margaret Beckett [holding answers 19 June 2002]: Pilot areas have not yet been identified. The matter is currently being considered by our veterinary and scientific advisers.

Molluscs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to protect harvested molluscs from pollution. [67204]

Mr. Meacher: We are committed to protecting and improving the quality of water in which bivalve molluscs grow. Under the EC shellfish waters directive we have designated 93 waters in England, harvested for shellfish, and have agreed water company spending of over £50 million on improvements to coastal sewage treatment and storm overflows up to 2005 specifically to improve water quality at these sites. Our target is for all commercial harvested shellfish beds to achieve at least category B under the EC shellfish hygiene directive, which includes provisions to protect public health.

EU Committees (Scottish Representation)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU committee for the adaptation to scientific and technical progress of the directive on protection of waters against pollution caused by nitrates from agricultural sources is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64883]

Mr. Meacher: The committee last met on 17 June 2002. No date has yet been set for the next meeting but the committee usually meets every six months. A representative from the Scottish Executive is invited to attend each meeting as part of the UK delegation.

Committee Mandates

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the mandate of the Scientific Committee on Food is; how many times it has met over the last 12 months; what the UK representation on it is; what the annual cost of its work is to public funds; if she will list the items currently under its consideration; if she will take steps to increase its accountability and transparency to Parliament; and if she will make a statement. [61697]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

The mandate for the scientific committee for food (SCF) is set out in European Commission (EC) Decision 1997/579/EC. The committee advises the Commission on any problem relating to the protection of the health and safety of persons arising or likely to arise from the consumption of food, in particular on nutritional, hygienic and toxicological issues.

The committee has met six times in the last 12 months and there have been numerous working group meetings. The SCF is composed of independent experts (with experience in related scientific fields) and does not represent the views of the member states in which they work. Three members with expertise in food toxicology and microbiology are based in the UK.

The committee is accountable solely to the EC which pays the travel and subsistence costs of members. There are no additional costs to UK public funds.

The committee is currently considering a number of issues relating to food additives, flavourings, constituents of packaging material, aspects of nutrition and genetically modified food. Minutes, current agendas of meetings and opinions of the committee can be found on the SCF website.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the Adaptation to Technical Progress and Application of the Community Award Scheme for an Eco-label is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68547]

Mr. Meacher: The next meeting is scheduled for 25 September this year. The European Commission has not yet circulated a final agenda, but the Committee's normal business is to vote formally on new or revised technical criteria that manufacturers need to satisfy to obtain the eco-label award for their products.

The Committee—now called the Eco-label Regulatory Committee—consists of member states' nominated representatives. The UK is represented by an official from this Department. Representatives from the Scottish Executive have not attended, because the Executive has asked DEFRA to carry out all functions in relation to the EU eco-label on its behalf, as have the new Administrations in Wales and Northern Ireland. We liaise with the Administrations on relevant matters, and before each Regulatory Committee meeting DEFRA consults the new Administrations about the matters to be voted on.

We actively support the eco-label award scheme, whose aims are to promote products which can reduce negative environmental impacts, and to help provide consumers with accurate information about these aspects. The scheme was set up in 1992 by EU Regulation 880–92, which was revised in 2000 by Regulation 1980–2000. To obtain the award, companies must prove that their products meet the appropriate environmental criteria agreed by EU member states, which are published on the Commission's website at http://europa.eu.int/comm/environment/ecolabel/.

Sustainable Development

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which Government Ministers will attend the World Summit on Sustainable Development. [67016]

Mr. Meacher: We are currently in the process of considering the delegation for the forthcoming World Summit on Sustainable Development but the final decision on the make up of the delegation will rest with the Prime Minister. However, both the Prime Minister, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I will attend the summit. Ministerial representation at the summit will reflect the cross cutting nature of sustainable development.

Johannesburg Earth Summit

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what proposals her Department will take to the Johannesburg Earth Summit. [66641]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 3 July 2002]: We hope that the summit will complement the Doha Development Agenda and the Monterrey Consensus by accelerating implementation of Agenda 21 and the Millennium Development Goals. We strongly support the priority areas of water, energy, health, agriculture and biodiversity identified by the UN Secretary-General.

DEFENCE

Expenditure Plans

Gillian Merron: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to publish the 2002–03 to 2003–04 expenditure plans for his Department. [68864]

Mr. Hoon: The Government's expenditure plans 2002–03 to 2003–04 for the Ministry of Defence are published today. The document provides details of the Government's plans for defence expenditure for the two years 2002–03 to 2003–04. It complements the MOD's Performance Report 2000–01 (Cm 5290, November 2001) submitted to Parliament last year.

The document is part of a series of departmental reports which, along with the main estimates, and the document "Public Expenditure: Statistical Analyses 2002–03", present the Government's expenditure plans for 2002–04.

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the EU directives relating to his Department which have been (a) amended and (b) repealed in 2002. [64953]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence is consulted by other Government Departments on the negotiation or implementation of various European directives (for example, those concerning employment and workers' rights). But EU directives do not generally relate specifically to the MOD and the MOD has not been the lead Department dealing with any amendment or repeal of the directives in 2002.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the EU directives and regulations that have been implemented through his Department in 2002; and what was the cost of each to public funds. [64974]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence is consulted by other Government Departments on the implementation of various European directives or regulations (for example, those concerning employment and workers' rights), but is not generally the lead Department dealing with implementation and has not been in relation to any directives or regulations in 2002.

As I stated in my answer on 10 April 2002, Official Report, column 32W, the information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Macedonia

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much unexploded ordnance was dumped into Lakes Prespa and Dolnolipkovsko in Macedonia in September 1999; and what other waste was dumped there; [64721]

(2) for what reason KFOR will not allow independent researchers to investigate what kind of waste was dumped into Lakes Prespa and Dolnolipkovsko and with what impact. [64722]

Mr. Ingram: I am not aware of the dumping of either unexploded ordnance or other waste into lakes Prespa or Dolnolipkovsko in Macedonia although I am aware of reports published on the internet. If the hon. Member would care to write with more details, I will investigate further.

Sub-continent (Weapons Capability)

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations his Department has received regarding increases in Pakistan's (a) offensive and (b) defensive weapons capabilities from November 2001 to June 2002; [65447]

(2) what representations his Department has received regarding increases to India's (a) offensive and (b) defensive weapons capabilities from November 2001 to June 2002. [65446]

Mr. Hoon: The Ministry of Defence have received a number of representations regarding Pakistan's and India's weapons capabilities from members of both Houses of Parliament and from members of the public. Currently the number of Parliamentary Questions stands at 39, and approximately 30 letters have been received from members of the public.

I am aware that other Departments have also received representations. We are continuing to monitor the situation.

Astute Class Submarine

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what the scheduled launch date is for each of the Astute class SSNs; [66030]

(2) what the in-service date is of HMS Astute. [67565]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The first Astute class nuclear powered attack submarine, HMS Astute, had been expected to enter service in June 2005. The prime contractor, BAE Systems is achieving improvements in cost compared with previous submarines. However, the company has made slower progress in the detailed design and in the build up of production than anticipated. The first of class, HMS Astute, is now not expected to enter service before late 2006, although this date has yet to be agreed with the contractor. BAE Systems is taking a range of management and other actions to minimise the slippage: this includes a re-assessment of the optimum time to perform the launch during the build sequence. Revised launch dates will not be available until later in the year.

After the initial entry into service, the plan calls for a considerable trials and work up period before the boat will become fully operational. The Ministry of Defence will work with BAE Systems to recover as much as possible of the delay in this period. BAE Systems is working to minimise any delay to the other two submarines on order, HMS Ambush and HMS Artful.

Married Quarters

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 25 June 2002, Official Report, column 749W, on married quarters, what plans he has to improve the standard of service families' accommodation in Wiltshire. [66239]

Dr. Moonie: I regret that the information given was incomplete and gave numbers of houses managed by only one of the four areas of the Defence Housing Executive (DHE) involved. The reply therefore understated DHE's achievement in improving the overall quality of service housing. There are 5,921 properties in Wiltshire, of which 1,389 (23 per cent.) are at standard 1 for condition, 3,404 (57 per cent.) at standard 2, 1,005 (17 per cent.) at standard 3 and 123 (3 per cent.) at standard 4.

There is a major project under way in Tidworth which will provide 484 new properties by 2004. 47 have been completed so far. Additionally, the following upgrade projects are planned for possible implementation in due course, to deliver 696 upgrades at an estimated cost of £30 million:

Upavon—158
Colerne—160
Bulford—205
Larkhill—63.

Arms Fairs

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the arms fairs organised, supported and sponsored by his Department in each year since 1997, indicating the (a) name, (b) location and (c) cost to the Department and organisations attending each event. [65791]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the arms fairs that are to be organised, supported and sponsored by his Department in 2002 and 2003. [65792]

Dr. Moonie: Since September 1997 the Ministry of Defence no longer organises defence exhibitions.

However, in support of the Government's commitment to a strong United Kingdom defence industry, the Ministry of Defence undertakes a broad range of activities in support of the organisers of defence exhibitions. Normal marketing support to UK exhibitors is provided by the Defence Export Services Organisation, and other assistance includes helping the organisers ensure maximum exposure of UK products to potential customers by supporting officials' inward visits.

This year the MOD will participate in the Farnborough Airshow, which is a commercial event organised and run by the Society of British Aerospace Companies. In 2003, the MOD will participate in the Defence System and Equipment International exhibition, organised by Spearhead Exhibitions Ltd.

In addition to these events, DESO have either supported or currently expect to support the following shows:

2002

Aid & Trade International, Switzerland
Pacific 2002, Australia
Asian Air, Singapore

DEFEXPOL, India
FIDEA, Chile
DSA Malaysia, Malaysia
Eurosatory, France
Africa Aerodef, South Africa
Defendory, Greece
Sofex, Jordan
Euronaval, France
Euronaval, Chile

2003

Avalon, Australia
Aero India, India
IDEX, Abu Dhabi
Aviation World Fair, USA
LAD, Brazil
IMDEX, Singapore
Paris Air, France
Aviation North America, USA
IDEF, Turkey
Kormarine, South Korea
Seoul Air, South Korea
Dubai Air, Dubai
LIMA, Malaysia.

Building Values

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the buildings owned by his Department and estimate the market value of each of them. [66941]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury gave him on 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 339W.

A400M

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what A400M spares will be stored in the United Kingdom; [66759]

(2) where the spares store for the A400M will be located. [66758]

Dr. Moonie: The United Kingdom, together with its partner nations, has initiated work to produce a Common Support Strategy for A400M. We plan to make a decision on this aspect of the programme by 2005, after considering a range of options. It is not yet possible, therefore, to say what A400M spares will be held in the UK, and where A400M spares will be held.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the wings for the A400M will be transported from Filton to the main construction site in France. [66757]

Dr. Moonie: Final assembly of the A400M aircraft will take place in Seville, Spain. A400M wings will be transported to Seville by the Beluga aircraft (a modified Airbus A300) already used by Airbus UK to deliver wings for Airbus commercial aircraft.

Thailand

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Government of Thailand about the sale of warships. [66760]

Dr. Moonie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence held discussions, during his recent visit to Thailand, with his Thai counterpart and other senior Thai officials in support of proposals put forward by United Kingdom companies.

Police (Accommodation)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what MOD properties are being used by police forces to house police officers undergoing their initial training; and if he will make a statement. [66821]

Dr. Moonie: All initial training for Ministry of Defence police recruits is conducted at the MDP Police Training Centre (MDP PTC), Wethersfield, Essex. In addition to this CENTREX have been conducting initial training for Home Office police force recruits at MDP PTC Wethersfield since January 2001. The recruits have been accommodated in the standard student accommodation blocks.

A number of former married quarters at Mill Hill, now owned by Annington Homes Ltd. are occupied by Metropolitan police cadets.

Barracks Deaths

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the date was of each death of a member of HM armed forces through non-natural causes (a) in and (b) in the vicinity of military property since 1990; and what the name of the barracks was in each case. [66697]

Dr. Moonie: Between 1 January 1990 and 1 July 2002 there have been 1,748 deaths in the regular armed forces due to injury. The following table shows these injury related deaths broken down by geographical region. Information on precise location of deaths is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost and it would compromise Service personnel confidentiality.

Canberra PR9

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost is of the Canberra PR9 reconnaissance aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [67142]

Mr. Ingram: For the last financial year 2001–02, the total resource running costs of the five Canberra PR9 aircraft in 39 Squadron was approximately £15.5 million.

Army Vehicles

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the content of British manufacturing in vehicles used by the Army. [67140]

Dr. Moonie: Information relating to a selection of vehicles used by the British Army (Warrior Armoured Personnel Vehicle (APV), Challenger 2 Main Battle Tank (MBT), Landrover and the Demountable Rack Off Load and Pick up System (DROPS) vehicle) is set out in the table.

Information on the content of British manufacturing for every vehicle used is not held centrally and as such an overall assessment could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The British manufacturing content of each of the vehicles, set out in the table, is 85 per cent. or more.

Vehicle	Manufacturer
Warrior APV
Vehicle design authority	Alvis Vehicles Ltd. (UK owned)
Hull manufacture	Alvis Vehicles (UK manufactured and owned)
Engine and transmission	Perkins (UK manufactured—now owned by Caterpillar, a US company)
Turret design authority	Vickers Defence Systems (UK manufactured and owned)
Track	William Cook Defence (UK manufactured and owned)
Challenger 2 MBT

Armed Forces Pension Scheme

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the proportion of the rise in Government liabilities resulting from unfunded parts of the armed forces pension scheme in the last five years due to (a) wage inflation, (b) longevity, (c) extension of the rights of part-time workers and (d) other factors; and if he will make a statement. [67023]

Mr. Ingram: A detailed breakdown of reasons for the increased liabilities of the armed forces pension scheme cannot be provided. However, the most significant factors in the increase from 43.7 billion at 1 April 1997 to 51 billion at 1 April 2001 have been price inflation and real wage increases. Trends in pensioner longevity will also have had an impact but the effect of rights of part-time workers is considered to have been minimal.

Tank Warfare

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to conduct a cost and effectiveness comparison of alternatives to using depleted uranium in gun-launched Kinetic Energy penetrator projectiles to defeat threats from tanks; and if he will make a statement. [67840]

Dr. Moonie: Operational analysis (OA) studies into the cost-effectiveness of tank-launched depleted uranium ammunition have taken place since the 1970s when it was assessed that the existing tungsten Kinetic Energy (KE) projectile for our main battle tank would not be able to penetrate the frontal armour of the next generation of battle tanks. OA and scientific research showed that a battle winning UK capability against emerging armour technologies could be achieved by replacing the tungsten penetrator with one made from DU.

Although research to identify more effective alternative KE tank rounds has been undertaken, no satisfactory alternative to DU has yet been identified which achieves the level of penetration needed to defeat the most modern battle tanks. At this time, the use of DU ammunition remains the most operationally effective capability and the use of non-DU ammunition would significantly threaten operational success and potentially could lead to increased UK casualties.

We will, however, continue to carry out work on alternatives to DU. The DU research proposal which was announced earlier this year, 14 March 2002, Official Report, columns 1177–78W—also published on the web at www.mod.uk/issues/depleted_uranium/du_research.htm—includes, at section 2.5, OA studies on the types of engagement where DU ammunition is required and the consequences of not using DU, together with cost-effectiveness studies into other means of defeating heavy armour. The proposal also includes, at section 2.6, work into radical alternatives (for example, guided missiles) to DU KE penetrators to defeat heavy armour.

Skyguard Radar

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to bring back Skyguard radar to the Somerset area in the next year. [67590]

Dr. Moonie: Use of the Skyguard mobile radar system to monitor military aircraft activity is covert and details are not made public in advance of deployment. As is customary, I shall let the hon. Member know in confidence when the next deployment of Skyguard is imminent in his area of Somerset.

Eurofighter

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what extra costs (a) have been and (b) will be incurred by the delayed introduction of the Eurofighter into RAF service until the end of the year. [67707]

Dr. Moonie: No additional costs have been incurred by the delayed introduction of the Eurofighter into Royal Air Force service, and none are expected to be incurred. Initiation of contract support of initial flying will not commence until the first RAF aircraft has been accepted. We believe we will be able to maintain the planned operational employment date for Eurofighter, therefore, allowing existing aircraft to be withdrawn from service as scheduled.

Warship Construction

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department intends to spend in each of the financial years from 2004 to 2008 inclusive on new warship construction; and what the cost of refit and repair work will be. [67567]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 8 July 2002]: Based on current plans, we expect to spend the following sums on new warship construction (including submarines):

	£ million
2004–05	735
2005–06	1,890
2006–07	1,146
2007–08	1,126

The planning cycle for naval support expenditure covers four financial years. We estimate that the cost of planned maintenance (including refits) and repair work on warships (including submarines) and Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels will be in the region of £500 million in each of the years 2004–05 and 2005–06. These figures exclude the cost of upgraded equipment. Estimates for 2006–07 and 2007–08 are not available.

Figures are for planning purposes only and are subject to regular review.

Overseas Naval Procurement

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent expressions of interest he has received from the Government of Thailand about the purchase of Royal Navy warships; and if he will make a statement. [67568]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The Ministry of Defence's Disposal Services Agency (DSA) has received no formal expressions of interest from the Government of Thailand about the purchase of Royal Naval warships in recent years.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expressions of interest he has received from the Chilean Government in respect of the possible purchase of type 23 frigates. [67569]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The Chilean Government have expressed an interest in the possible purchase of type 23 frigates in the future. Discussions are currently ongoing.

Search and Rescue Helicopter

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the plans to move the Portland search and rescue helicopter to Lee-on-Solent. [68371]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are committed to a continuing helicopter search and rescue capability along the south coast. Discussion between the Maritime and Coastguard Agency and other organisations about the future location of the helicopter based at Portland are continuing. No final decisions have been made.

Asylum Centre (Throckmorton)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he is making to conduct an environmental impact assessment for the proposed asylum accommodation centre at Throckmorton; and when that assessment will be available to the planning authority. [59085]

Beverley Hughes: I have been asked to reply.

We have agreed with Wychavon District Council that an environmental impact assessment will be submitted with the planning notification.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Women's Organisations

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what women's organisations have been consulted on proposed legislation by his Department during 2000–01 and 2001–02 Sessions; and if their responses have been published. [66528]

Jane Kennedy: The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland consulted the following groups during the period in question.

Lesbian Line
Omagh Women's Area Network
Women's Resource and Development
The Women's Centre
Women's Forum NI
NI Women's Aid Federation
Mid-Ulster Women's Network
Family Planning Association NI
Derry Well Woman
Newry and Mourne Women
Fermanagh Women's Network
NI Women's European Platform
Gay and Lesbian Youth NI
Women's Support Network
Women's Information Group
NI Women's Coalition.

The responses from these consultations have not been published.

Data Commissioning

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what new data series separated by gender, race, disability and age have been commissioned by his Department since August 1997. [66527]

Jane Kennedy: During 2001, the Northern Ireland Office commissioned the 2001 sweep of the Northern Ireland Crime Survey, which contains data on the gender, race, disability (or activity-limiting long-standing illness) and age of each of the 3,010 respondents.

Also, in 2002 the NIO published "Gender and the Northern Ireland Criminal Justice System", which presents a wide range of statistical data and research findings on the Northern Ireland criminal justice system in terms of gender comparisons. Similar Northern Ireland criminal justice system publications focusing on age and race are planned for 2002–03.

Gender Impact Assessment

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the subject of each gender impact assessment drawn up by his Department since June 1997, indicating in each case whether the outcome has been (a) put out to consultation and (b) published. [66525]

Jane Kennedy: There have been no specific single gender impact assessments put to consultation or published by the Northern Ireland Office since 1997.

Equal Treatment

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has established a baseline for policy appraisal against which to measure progress on equal treatment; and what progress has been achieved. [66526]

Jane Kennedy: Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, requires public authorities to have due regard to the need to 'promote equality of opportunity' and have regard to 'promoting good relations' within Northern Ireland. The legislation also requires them to produce an 'Equality Scheme' stating how they will fulfil these requirements. In January 2000 the Northern Ireland Office (NIO) commissioned the preparation of an 'Equality Scheme' which was approved by the Quality Commission for Northern Ireland on 20 November 2001. The Scheme sets out how the Department and its Agencies fulfil their duties and obligations with regard to all of their policies, functions and duties.

An 'External Assessor' has recently produced the first Annual Progress Report on the operation of the NIO's Equality Scheme. The report looked at the work of the Department to date and commented favourably on progress.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefit Fraud Inspectorate

Ann McKechin: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will publish the next programme of inspections for the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate. [69184]

Malcolm Wicks: The Benefit Fraud Inspectorate's (BFI) latest programme of activity includes inspections of both central and local government.

The local authority inspections will focus on various aspects of benefits administration and counter fraud performance in the following local authorities:

Crawley district council
Barnsley metropolitan council
Basingstoke and Deane district council
Waveney district council
Castle Morpeth district council
East Renfrewshire council.

This is the first programme of inspections following the publication of the "Performance Standards for Housing Benefits" in March 2002. The BFI inspections will consider, among other things, the progress councils have made in assessing their own performance against the standards.

BFI will also inspect a number of councils to test compliance against the Race Relations Amendment Act 2001 in the area of benefits administration.

BFI will be writing to Chief Executives with more details in the coming week.

BFI will also be undertaking an inspection of Jobcentre Plus to establish how the new organisation is taking forward the recommendations made in the BFI report on the Benefits Agency's relationship with local authorities, published in September 2001.

Alongside these inspections, BFI will continue to contribute to the comprehensive performance assessments of local authorities.

Poverty

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether he will consult on the definition of older persons' poverty. [59601]

Mr. McCartney: Poverty can be caused by a number of factors and no one measure can capture all of these factors. Accordingly, we have developed a number of measures of poverty which we track and report on in the annual "Opportunity for All" report.

Child Support Agency

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many people have been prosecuted for making a false statement to the Child Support Agency in respect of their income; and if he will make a statement; [65782]

(2) what measures are taken by the Child Support Agency to ascertain that details of claimed income by an absent parent are correct; and if he will make a statement; [65783]

(3) how many cases were raised by hon. and right hon. Members with the Child Support Agency in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [65784]

Malcolm Wicks: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Bob Russell, dated 8 July 2002:

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in replying to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency promised a substantive reply by me.

You ask three questions:

1. How many people have been prosecuted for making a false statement to the Child Support Agency in respect of their income; and if the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions will make a statement.

Our aim is to encourage parents to support their children. In the majority of cases our demonstrated intention to take a case to court has been sufficient to encourage the non-resident parent either to provide the correct requested information or to make arrangements to pay maintenance.

Against that background since April 2002, four cases have been taken to court in regard to the provision of false information.

2. What measures are taken by the Child Support Agency to ascertain that details of claimed income by an absent parent are correct, and if the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions will make a statement.

The Agency requests verification of all income declared by our clients before the maintenance is calculated.

If we are unable to get the necessary information from the client, either because they are unable or unwilling to provide it, we will contact third parties who might reasonably be expected to hold relevant information.

3. How many cases were raised by hon. and right hon. Members with the Child Support Agency in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Members of Parliament have written to the Agency through Parliamentary Correspondence Unit about the following total number of cases in each of the last five years:

April 1997 to March 1998: 6962

April 1998 to March 1999: 7690

April 1999 to March 2000: 5338

April 2000 to March 2001: 4218

April 2001 to March 2002: 3050

Members of Parliament are also encouraged to contact our offices directly in relation to cases. We do not have a central record of the total number of those cases.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, pursuant to the answer of 19 April 2002, Official Report, column 1212W, on the Child Support Agency, when testing of the child support reforms new rules implementation IT project will be complete. [66588]

Malcolm Wicks: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 8 July 2002:

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in replying to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency promised a substantive reply by me.

You ask pursuant to the Answer of 19th April Official Report column 1212W on the Child Support Agency when testing of the Child Support Reforms New Rules Implementation IT project will be complete.

The testing of the new IT system to support Child Support Reform is progressing. When this work is complete I will advise the Secretary of State accordingly.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many people were committed to prison because they had committed offences relating to the work of the Child Support Agency in each year since the Agency was established; [62577]

(2) how many parents have faced criminal sanctions under the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Act 2000 because they have (a) failed to provide the Child Support Agency with required information and (b) provided false information. [62606]

Malcolm Wicks: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. David Willetts, dated 8 July 2002:

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in replying to your recent Parliamentary Question about the Child Support Agency promised a substantive reply by me.

You ask two questions;

how many people were committed to prison because they had committed offences relating to the work of the Child Support Agency in each year since the Agency was established and how many parents have faced criminal sanction under the Child Support Pensions and Social Security Act 2000 because they have (a) failed to provide the Child Support Agency with required information and (b) provided false information.

Our aim is to encourage parents to support their children. In the majority of cases our demonstrated intention to take a case to court has been sufficient to encourage the non-resident parent either to provide requested information or to make arrangements to pay maintenance.

Against that background:

Since April 2001, one person has been committed to prison. Prior to this, the information wasn't centrally gathered.

There have been no cases taken to court in respect of failing to provide required information.

Since april 2002, four cases have been taken to court in regard to the provision of false information.

I hope this is helpful.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, pursuant to his answer of 25 January 2002, Official Report, column 1140W, on incapacity benefit, what data his Department hold on (a) the number of incapacity benefit claimants who have been required to attend repeat Benefits Agency medical assessment, (b) the number of incapacity benefit claimants who have lost their entitlement as a result of a repeat Benefits Agency medical assessment and (c) the number of incapacity benefit claimants transferred to a different benefit as a result of a repeat Benefits Agency medical assessment. [66592]

Malcolm Wicks: Data collected on the number of people referred for a Personal Capability Assessment does not distinguish between initial and subsequent referrals.

Industrial Injuries Advisory Council

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's review of the schedule of occupational diseases for which benefits are paid will be published. [65046]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: In February 1997 the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council announced that it would review the schedule of occupational diseases in respect of which benefit can be paid.

This review is a major task. The Council has therefore decided to publish reports on discrete parts of the list of diseases as the review progresses rather than producing a single report. The findings of the review that have been published so far are; Diseases induced by Ionising and Non-Ionising Radiation (Cm 4280) published in March 1999 and Conditions due to Chemical Agents (Cm 5395) published in February 2002.

The Council will continue to review all the evidence it receives and reports of its further findings will be published in due course.

Change Programme

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the savings achieved under the change programme. [57139]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Department is in the early years of a major change programme with considerable savings planned for the later years. The savings achieved by the former DSS change programme in 2001–02 are £3.1 million administrative expenditure and £73.3 million programme expenditure.

Consultants

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many contracts the Department of Work and Pensions has with consultants; what level of professional indemnity insurance is standard in contracts with small consultants; whether he can make exceptions to the level of professional indemnity insurance; and what recent discussions he has had with other Government Departments about the level of professional indemnity insurance. [50834]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Department currently has 177 consultancy contracts in place let via framework agreements, including the Office of Government Commerce's Service Categories IT and Business Services Catalogue. Each agreement has its own standard set of Terms and Conditions—including levels of professional indemnity insurance.

Standard terms set Limitation of Liability for damage to property at a maximum of £1,000,000 and other defaults at a maximum of £50,000 or 150 per cent. of the value of the contract. Professional indemnity insurance is generally set at a level appropriate to the size of the contract and the level of risk involved.

In addition to framework standard Terms and Conditions, special terms specific to the requirement in hand can be agreed to adjust the limitation of liability.

On discussions with other Government Departments I refer the hon. Member to the written answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 6 February 2002, Official Report, column 689W.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people have been in receipt of housing benefit in (a) Angus and (b) Scotland in each of the last five years. [67327]

Malcolm Wicks: The available information is in the table.

Housing benefit case load at February of each year from 1998 to 2002

	Angus	Government office region of Scotland
1998	8,300	530,000
1999	8,000	518,000
2000	7,600	487,000
2001	7,600	467,000
2002	7,300	453,000

Notes:

1. Data for Angus relate to the Angus council area.
2. The data refer to households claiming housing benefit which may be a single person, a couple or a family. More than one benefit household can live in one property, for example two or more adults in a flat or house share arrangement.
3. Figures for Angus council are rounded to the nearest 100; figures for Scotland are rounded to the nearest 1,000.
4. Figures for any non-responding authorities have been estimated.

Retirement Age

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what changes he has made to his policy on the age of retirement since 1998. [68076]

Mr. McCartney: We have made no change in the policy on state pension age since 1998. Legislation was introduced in 1995 to equalise state pension age for men and women. Women's state pension age will be increased gradually from 60 to 65 between the years 2010 and 2020.

But we are looking at the factors that help determine the age at which people actually retire. Too many people experience a cliff edge between work and retirement. We need to be able to provide real opportunities and incentives to enable people to stay in the work place for longer—where they want to. We also need to tackle the perverse incentives to retire even when it might suit people to carry on working, perhaps part-time, for longer. We are looking at options for providing people with greater flexibility about when they retire.

Correspondence

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he will respond to the letter of 13 May from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) regarding a constituent, Mrs. P. Baker, New Dear, Aberdeenshire. [67650]

Maria Eagle: A reply to the letter of 13 May from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan was sent on 8 July.

Self-employed Disabled People

Mrs. Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to allow greater flexibility in the calculation of the annual permitted work rules in respect of average rather than actual weekly earnings for self-employed disabled people. [59756]

Maria Eagle: The new permitted work rules, introduced on 8 April, give all people receiving incapacity benefits the chance to start moving back into full-time work. When attributing income from irregular work undertaken by self-employed disabled people, decision makers must treat each case on its merits. Guidance advises decision makers to look at income and hours worked over a period of time so that income can be attributed in a fair and equitable way.

We keep all our policies under review. However, we believe that there is sufficient flexibility within the present rules and have no plans to change them.

Public Service Agreement Targets

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what has been the (a) cost and (b) saving from the pursuit of the Department's public service agreement targets in each year since they were introduced. [60889]

Mr. McCartney: The Department's public service agreement sets out the key outcomes it is committed to deliver with the resources provided, and its service delivery agreement sets out the key steps towards delivery of those targets. Each year the Department publishes performance against its targets—including on value for money—and the resources it has used in its departmental report.

Performance Targets

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the (a) cost and (b) saving has been from the Department's pursuit of service delivery agreement targets in each year since they were introduced. [61632]

Mr. McCartney: The Department's public service agreement sets out the key outcomes it is committed to deliver with the resources provided, and its service delivery agreement sets out the key steps towards delivery of those targets. Each year the Department publishes performance against its targets—including on value for money—and the resources it has used in its departmental report.

Benefit Statistics

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how much benefit was paid, by category, in (a) the UK and (b) rural areas in each of the last 10 years; [63646]

(2) how many benefit claimants, by category, there were in (a) the UK and (b) rural areas for each of the last 10 years. [63645]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 24 June 2002]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available has been placed in the Library.

TREASURY

Heavily Indebted Poor Countries Initiative

Norman Lamb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration is given by (a) his Department and (b) the IMF to the recent human rights record of the country concerned during the consideration of providing assistance under the HIPC initiative. [68509]

John Healey: The UK continues to be at the forefront of the international debate on debt relief issues, and continues to press for the rapid and full implementation of the heavily indebted poor countries (HIPC) initiative. One of the necessary conditions for countries to qualify for debt relief under HIPC is the formulation of a Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (PRSP). For low-income member countries, the IMF has placed PRSPs at the centre of its efforts. Pro-poor growth policies help to increase the amount of resources available that are required for the progressive realisation of human rights, including civil and political rights, and social justice. These strategies are designed in collaboration with civil society and the private sector and describe a country's macroeconomic, structural and social policies, setting out the policy action governments propose to take to reduce poverty. They provide a budgetary framework, not only for spending the savings from debt relief, but also for allocating other government revenue and support from the World bank, IMF and donor countries, hence enhancing transparency over fiscal expenditure. IMF programmes in HIPC countries pay particular attention to promoting pro-poor growth and improving governance.

Home Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the VAT treatment of the services of home care agencies and home carers. [67634]

John Healey: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for mid-Sussex (Nicholas Soames) on 5 July 2002, Official Report, columns 627–28W.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Barker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the total revenues were which he received during 2001–02 as a result of the climate change levy. [60478]

John Healey: Table 2.1D in the ONS publication "Financial Statistics" (May 2001) shows cash receipts from CCL to be £551 million for the year 2001–02; on an accruals basis this is equivalent to £831 million.

Aggregates Levy

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many opencast mines have applied for exemption from the Aggregates Levy in respect of their sales of surplus aggregates by-product; [67231]

(2) for what reason aggregates created as by-product from open cast mining are excluded from the Aggregates Levy; [67232]

(3) what assessment he has made of the proportion of aggregates used in the United Kingdom that will be exempt from the Aggregates Levy; [67228]

(4) what systems are in place to detect fraudulent avoidance of the Aggregates Levy. [67230]

John Healey: Open cast mines which do not produce any taxable aggregate are not required to register for the levy.

Current revenue forecasts use only those aggregate arisings which are subject to the levy, and therefore no assessment has been made of the proportion of aggregates used in the UK that will be exempt from the levy.

The spoil arising from the separation of coal from rock after it has been extracted from an open cast mine is exempt because it is a waste material and its use as aggregate is specifically encouraged in the Government's mineral planning guidelines.

Customs are utilising audit trails which already exist within business accounting records and are targeting resources in accordance with perceived risk. Where fraud is detected, Customs will use their powers to recover the revenue due and impose penalties.

Aerospace Industry

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken to help alleviate the problems experienced by the aerospace industry since 11 September 2001. [68216]

Dawn Primarolo: In Budget 2002, the Chancellor announced the extension of the R&D tax credits to all companies, following the introduction of an R&D tax credit for small companies in Budget 2000. The credit will be worth £400 million per annum. Aerospace manufacturers, which undertake 10 per cent. of the UK's R&D, will be significant beneficiaries of this measure.

Tax Returns

Chris Grayling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason the electronic filing of tax returns requires a password to be sent by post. [68369]

Dawn Primarolo: To electronically file a tax return using the Internet Service for Self Assessment a user must first register. There are two methods by which a customer can register, they can register on-line by choosing a password and a user ID will be sent to them by post or by using a digital certificate. For security purposes we need to be confident of the identity of the user and our registration process enables us to do this.

Tax Offices

Chris Grayling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason tax offices do not offer e-mail contact points. [68370]

Dawn Primarolo: Most tax offices do not offer e-mail contact points but as part of an external e-mail trial, 10 Inland Revenue offices are offering e-mail contacts to customers.

The trial findings will be used to inform the Department's strategic solution for improving electronic customer contact.

Regional Funding

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff within his Department are allocated to consideration of regional funding mechanisms. [67930]

Mr. Boateng: There are 10 people in the team responsible for advising Treasury Ministers on regional policy in England, EU structural funds, the Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales Offices, and funding arrangements with the devolved Administrations. Devolved funding arrangements are set out in the Statement of Funding Policy.

Barnett Formula

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the 2002–03 Scottish Executive budget is affected by the Barnett formula. [67931]

Mr. Boateng: Around 83 per cent. of the 2002–03 Scottish Executive total managed expenditure is the Departmental Expenditure Limit assigned budget, increases in which are determined by the Barnett formula.

Network Rail

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether loans provided by the Strategic Rail Authority and drawn upon by Network Rail under the arrangements announced by the Secretary for Transport on 27 June will be included in the net cash requirement for the year in which they are drawn down. [68215]

Mr. Boateng: Yes. Lending to the private sector by Government is a determinant of the public sector net cash requirement. So lending by the SRA to Network Rail would increase the public sector net cash requirement in the year the loans were made.

Departmental Spending

Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the levels of departmental spending. [69035]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I propose to make a statement to the House on Monday 15 July.

Double Taxation Agreement (Taipei)

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the British Trade and Cultural Office, Taipei, has concluded a Double Taxation Agreement with the Taipei Representative Office in the United Kingdom. [68863]

Dawn Primarolo: The Double Taxation Agreement was concluded between unofficial representative offices because Her Majesty's Government do not recognise Taiwan as a state and so do not enter into treaties with the Taiwanese Government. The agreement was signed on 8 April. The text has been deposited in the Library of the House and made available on the Inland Revenue's website. It will be scheduled to a draft Order in Council and laid for consideration by the House at the earliest convenient opportunity.

Retail Investment Review

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Sandler review of retail investment will be published. [68662]

Ruth Kelly: Ron Sandler's report is being published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office and in the Library of the House. It is also accessible on the Treasury website.

Ron Sandler's recommendations have the potential to bring benefits for consumers, for the retail investment industry and to improve the workings of the market. They will mean more competition, greater efficiency and more productive investment.

Simpler, safer investment products of the kind Mr. Sandler proposes would be easier for consumers to understand. Greater focus on product design could clear the way for a more streamlined sales process. This would make it profitable for providers and distributors to sell to a wider range of less well-off people. That will encourage people to save.

Building on Mr. Sandler's suggestions, we will be consulting consumers' representatives, the industry and the FSA on these stakeholder products and how they might be designed. We will be working closely with the FSA who will separately want to consult on how a regime for their sale might be implemented.

The proposals also represent a real opportunity for the industry and others to think radically about the provision of financial advice. They offer the potential to extend access to low cost, good quality, generic advice to the mass market.

Mr. Sandler has tackled long-standing concerns about with profit policies, while at the same time recognising the value that many people give to being able to smooth out investment returns. He has recognised that change in this market cannot come over night. Mr. Sandler's balanced approach represents an opportunity to move to a new stable future for with profits.

The FSA will be consulting on Mr. Sandler's proposals on with profits—which build on earlier work they have carried out—as part of their own continuing consultations on with profits.

Mr. Sandler's proposals on distribution of investment products, consumer education and investment will produce a more transparent, better-informed and hence more competitive market.

We will consider Mr. Sandler's proposals on tax as part of the Budget process in the usual way.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Charitable Status

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) for what reasons the Budget proposal to offer mandatory 80 per cent. rate relief to amateur sports clubs has been limited to clubs prepared to register as charities; and if she will make a statement; [67080]

(2) what tax concessions will be available to amateur sports clubs that do not have charitable status, with particular reference to those relating to mandatory rate relief; and if she will make a statement. [67083]

Mr. Caborn: For those clubs who do not fulfil the criteria for charitable status, the Chancellor has announced a package of tax reliefs, available directly from the Inland Revenue. The main features are: fundraising income up to £15,000 exempt from tax; income from interest exempt from tax; rental income up to £10,000 exempt from tax; disposals exempt from capital gains tax; gift aid on individual donations; inheritance tax relief on gifts; gifts of assets on no-gain, no-loss basis for capital gains; business relief on gifts of trading stock. Eligible sports will initially be defined with reference to those recognised by the national Sports Councils.

The presentation of taxation policy is a matter for HM Treasury and the tax relief package for amateur sports clubs proposed in the Treasury consultation document "Promoting Sport in the Community" did not include mandatory rate relief. However, any non-profit making sports clubs that do not meet the expanded definition of charitable purposes remain eligible for the existing 100 per cent. discretionary rate relief. They could also benefit from the new mandatory relief of up to 50 per cent. proposed for small businesses and non-profit making bodies, where they fall within the rateable value limits of that scheme. This scheme was introduced by the Department of Transport, London and the Regions in the White Paper "Strong Local Leadership—Quality Public Services" published in December 2001.

Supporters Direct

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the work of Supporters Direct; and what Government resources are available to it. [67677]

Mr. Caborn: I fully support the work of Supporters Direct, and I congratulate its staff and Board on their efforts in helping to establish supporters' trusts at 57 of the 92 professional clubs in England. I am also very pleased that, with the assistance of funding from the Scottish Executive, the work of Supporters Direct is to be extended to Scotland.

Supporters Direct receives £250,000 per year from income from the Reduction in Pool Betting Duty under arrangements which expire in March 2003. My Department has, in principle, approved the extension of funding from this source until March 2004. This is subject to the provision of a satisfactory business plan. I expect to receive this shortly with Supporters Direct's assessment of its 2003–04 funding needs.

Drug Testing

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the report produced for the Chief Executive of UK Sport by Dr. Roger Jackson on the UK system of drug testing; and if she will place a copy in the Library. [67682]

Mr. Caborn: The issues raised by Dr. Roger Jackson in his informal commentary to UK Sport's Chief Executive were fully considered by UK Sport during its review of anti-doping procedures in the UK. The review formed part of two years' intensive work undertaken by UK Sport in the preparation of the new national anti-doping policy, launched in January 2002. DCMS officials have been in regular discussions with UK Sport about all aspects of the development and implementation of the national anti-doping policy.

It would not be appropriate to place a copy in the Library as it was not commissioned by UK Sport as a public document. It was a private, informal commentary prepared for the Chief Executive of UK Sport.

Gaming Industry

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if she will make a statement on the gaming industry and its potential role in the regeneration of coastal towns in the UK; and what recent discussions she has had with gaming companies; [68240]

(2) which coastal resorts in the United Kingdom are to be locations for resort casinos; and what assistance will be given to companies to encourage them to locate there; [68340]

(3) what proposals she has for a pilot project for a gaming designated area; and if she will make a statement on the progress of the development of casinos and gaming shops in coastal areas. [68241]

Mr. Caborn: Under our proposals for reform of the laws governing gambling in Great Britain, as set out in "A Safe Bet for Success", current statutory barriers to the establishment of resort casinos—whether in coastal towns or elsewhere—would be removed. Whether such casinos are established will be primarily determined by local authorities, exercising planning and premises licensing responsibilities, and prospective operators themselves, in considering whether and where to make the necessary investment. My Department has had a number of discussions with prospective operators, who anticipate that resort casino developments could have a part to play in local regeneration strategies. It is not, however, the Government's intention to establish a pilot project or to make any special arrangements to encourage the establishment of a resort casino in any individual location.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

World Bank

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she expects the World Bank's research, supported by the British Government, into the impact of service liberalisation in developing countries to be published. [67689]

Clare Short: The World Bank Research Programme on Trade in Services started in 1997 and is due to continue until 2004. The programme aims to generate and draw together data and research, with the objective of improving services trade policy formulation and facilitating the services negotiations at the WTO. One of the central components of the programme is the creation of a database on measures affecting trade in services. Other components include policy research projects, which are expected to result in a series of conceptual and empirical papers.

All papers and studies produced by the Programme are published on the World bank website http://www1.worldbank.org/wbiep/trade/services.htm/#overview as they are completed. This website will also provide access to the Trade in Services database, for which the first results are expected to be available by the end of August.

Jenin Refugee Camp

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent assessment she has made of the humanitarian situation in the Jenin Refugee Camp in the occupied territories. [67036]

Clare Short: Jenin remains under military curfew, and has been subject to intermittent military incursions since the beginning of April 2002, when the Government of Israel began Operation Defensive Shield in the west bank. UNRWA estimates ten per cent. of the camp was destroyed. Over four hundred families have been made homeless, while another 1,200 shelters are in urgent need of repair. The social and economic well being of both the camp and town residents is deteriorating as the incursions and restrictions continue. UNRWA is responding to the situation in Jenin Camp by providing humanitarian supplies, clearing unexploded munitions and rubble, and reinforcing, or removing, damaged buildings. We are in the process of recruiting and funding, on behalf of UNRWA, a small team of engineers to manage the camp rebuilding process.

Dengue Fever

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans are in place to provide funding for the development of a vaccine for dengue fever. [67034]

Clare Short: We recognise that dengue is a major public health concern in many developing countries. Global prevalence has grown dramatically in recent decades, with the disease now endemic in more than 100 countries. The World Health Organisation (WHO) estimates that 500,000 people are hospitalised with dengue haemorrhagic fever and shock every year.

In response, vector control and clinical management strategies for dengue require further strengthening. New vaccines would also be of considerable benefit, if used appropriately. Vaccine development for dengue is difficult because any of four different virus strains may cause disease. However, progress is being made in developing vaccines which may protect against all four strains. WHO estimate it may be at least 7–10 years before vaccines are available for public health use.

The WHO Tropical Disease Research programme and Health Technology and Pharmaceutical Cluster are leading international efforts to develop an effective and safe dengue vaccine. DFID support to these efforts is through our partnership with WHO, assisting them to develop a collective, coherent organisational response and to work closely with other agencies. DFID has also prioritised the strengthening of health systems to effectively deliver vaccines and other interventions.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much her Department has committed in 2001–02 to control programmes for dengue fever. [67035]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to my previous answer on dengue (67034).

My Department's support to dengue control is principally through our partnership with the World Health Organisation (WHO). In addition to their priority work on dengue vaccine development and other research, WHO are engaged in disease surveillance, prevention and control. DFID's contribution to WHO in 2001–02 was £10.4 million. We are also providing support to tackling dengue in Central America through a Communicable Disease Control Project with the Pan American Health Organisation, for which £500,000 was disbursed in 2001–02.

We have also prioritised efforts to strengthen developing country health systems and improve environmental health, both essential in tackling dengue and other communicable diseases of poverty.

Urban Development Projects

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on sustainable livelihoods in infrastructure and urban development projects. [67522]

Clare Short: The Infrastructure and Urban Development department currently allocates a £3 million annual budget for specific sustainable livelihood projects in both rural and urban areas.

1998–99: No budget

1999–2000: £615,303

2000–01: £2,119,726

2002–03 (so far): £389,149.

It should be noted, however, that sustainable livelihoods is a flexible approach, applicable to many different contexts. Sustainable livelihoods approaches are therefore also incorporated into many other infrastructure projects including Water and Sanitation, Energy, ICT, Human Settlements and Engineering Knowledge and Research projects.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on information development as part of infrastructure and urban development projects. [67519]

Clare Short: My Department has spent £8.75 million since 1998–99 on focused programmes on 'information and communications technology for development' as part of our infrastructure and urban development work.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on appropriate technology as part of infrastructure and urban development projects. [67517]

Clare Short: My Department's expenditure on appropriate technology as part of Infrastructure and Urban Development projects since 1998–99 has been as follows:

	£ million
1998–99	9.581
1999–2000	17.398
2000–01	9.436
2001–02	13.413

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on promoting private sector initiatives as part of infrastructure and urban development projects. [67520]

Clare Short: My Department supports a number of important initiatives aimed at promoting various aspects of private sector participation in the provision of infrastructure and urban services, particularly to the poorer sections of the developing world's population.

These are primarily undertaken in association with other bilateral and multilateral development agencies. During the period in question the Department has contributed the following:

To the Private/Public Infrastructure Advisory Facility—£14.83 million.

To the Public/Private Partnership for the Urban Environment—£1.53 million.

To the Emerging Africa Infrastructure Fund—£26.72 million.

Business Partners for Development—£1.72 million.

AID to various small activities—£1.70 million.

Millennium Development Goals

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the total amount was of her Department's financial contributions in 2001–02 to the Millennium Development goals. [67480]

Clare Short: DFID's total consumption of resources in 2001–02 is provisionally estimated at £3,310 million. Of this, £129 million is accounted for by overseas superannuation payments and our contribution to the Gibraltar Social Insurance Fund. The remainder, estimated at £3,181 million, contributes towards the achievement of the Millennium Development goals.

Pakistan

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial contribution her Department will make in 2003–04 and 2004–05 in support of Pakistan's Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility. [67482]

Clare Short: My Department has made a three-year commitment to provide £105 million, in support of the IMF Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility, which was agreed in December of last year. In 2001–02 DFID disbursed £20 million financial aid to Pakistan. We are planning to provide a further £40 million in 2002–03, and £45 million in 2003–04.

International Humanitarian Agencies

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the improvements in the work of international humanitarian agencies that have been assisted by financial support from her Department. [67486]

Clare Short: My Department supports improvements in various international humanitarian agencies through jointly agreed Institutional Strategy Partnerships (ISPs) with the agencies which identify long-term priorities. Focus is on developing better systems and procedures at headquarters to ensure that programmes in the field are delivered in a timely, appropriate and effective manner in the event of a crisis. All ISPs are independently evaluated. This funding is provided in addition to grants made to the international humanitarian agencies for response to specific emergencies.

Social Development Programmes

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on social development knowledge programmes. [67518]

Clare Short: The figures given in the table represent an estimate of centrally funded expenditure.

£ million

	Social development research	Social science research
1998–99	2.0	5.1
1999–2000	1.4	6.0
2000–01	1.7	6.6
2001–02	2.3	8.1

Social development knowledge is also generated from my Department's regional programming, and from support for enhancing research capacity in poorer countries. However, provision of this additional information would entail disproportionate cost.

Bilateral Expenditure

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of the expenditure described as 'other bilateral' on page 81 of the Departmental report 2002. [67483]

Clare Short: A detailed breakdown of this expenditure is provided in table 4 of annex 1 of the Departmental report, on pages 102 to 105. A revised version of annex 1 of the report with corrected figures will shortly be made available on DFID's website, and a copy placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

Engineering Resource Centre

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on the engineering resource centre. [67523]

Clare Short: My Department has engaged, on a competitive basis, a number of engineering resource centres to provide specialist technical advice and expertise in the infrastructure and urban development sectors. Expenditure on the engagement of these services since 1998–99 has been as follows:

	£ million
1998–99	0.937
1999–2000	1.165
2000–01	2.007
2001–02	1.263

Overseas Offices

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the investment made by her Department in information systems to improve her Department's communication links with overseas offices. [67488]

Clare Short: We have an on-going programme of upgrades, the core of which is the Enhanced Overseas Communications Links (EOCL) project costing £8 million. Part of this is a system we are implementing jointly with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO).

The links include virtual private networks where sufficient bandwidth is available in country from local internet service providers, and satellite links to other countries. We are also installing internet protocol enabled switches, which allow voice communication (telephone calls) to be carried on the network. 98 per cent. of our overseas staff now have direct links to our central systems.

The links are capable of carrying video conferencing (VC) facilities and we will shortly commission a 'VC bridge', which will allow simultaneous conferences to up to eight locations.

Social Policy Initiatives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on Social Policy Initiatives. [67515]

Clare Short: Provision of the information requested would entail disproportionate cost.

UN Programmes

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what reforms in the UN Development Programme and the UN Education, Scientific and Cultural Organisation have been assisted by financial support from her Department. [67485]

Clare Short: UNDP has embarked on an ambitious and wide-ranging reform programme which includes sharpening the focus of UNDP's programmes, improving the quality of its Resident Co-ordinators and developing its results-based management system. DFID has committed about £3.5 million in technical co-operation to support UNDP's reform programme. Our support is helping UNDP to strengthen its results-based management; to strengthen its partnerships with civil society, international financial institutions and the private sector; to focus the UN system around the Millennium Development Goals; and to develop the competencies for senior UNDP posts overseas. DFID is also providing significant support to build UNDP's capacity to respond to crisis and emergency situations.

DFID has collaborated with UNESCO to develop its results-based programming system and helped with training to the value of £100,000 for UNESCO's staff in project cycle management. DFID is supporting training (£750,000) for UNESCO staff in the use of new financial, budget and accounting systems, which support the results-based programming system. DFID also provides support (£250,000) for the evaluation work of UNESCO's new internal oversight system.

Departmental Office, East Kilbride

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of the costs of the refurbishment of the Department's offices in East Kilbride. [67487]

Clare Short: The estimated total budget for the full rehabilitation and the new annex is £17.6 million. The final design of the rehabilitation has still to be completed but the estimates are:

Annex—£2.1 million
Main building rehabilitation—£11.6 million
Professional fees—£1.4 million
VAT @ 17.5 per cent.—£2.5 million.

Statistical Capacity

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will provide a breakdown of her Department's expenditure since 1998–99 on Statistical Capacity referred to on page 104 of the 2002 departmental report. [67514]

Clare Short: The Department for International Development is committed to improving the capacity of Governments in developing countries to produce, analyse and disseminate statistical information. This is essential to provide Governments with the information needed to prioritise scarce resources, to develop and monitor effective policies, and to monitor progress towards the Millennium Development Goals.

The majority of DFID's activities in this area consist of working with partner Governments directly to support their statistical capacity building programmes.

Recognising that there is a limit to what we can do individually, the Department is also increasingly supporting international statistical capacity building initiatives. This is the 'Statistical Capacity' expenditure given on page 104 of the Departmental Report. This includes providing funding to a World Bank Trust Fund for Statistical Capacity Building (TFSCB), supporting the Partnership in Statistics for development in the 21st Century (PARIS21) initiative (a consortium of statisticians, policy makers and civil society working to improve statistical capacity globally) and supporting poverty monitoring as part of Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers (PRSPs) and similar country-owned poverty reduction strategies.

A detailed breakdown is provided in the following table. Please note that this excludes expenditure going directly to countries, which is included within the bilateral country and regional programme expenditure. It also excludes any expenditure on statistics spent through sector programmes such as health or education.

DFID expenditure on international statistical capacity building initiatives

	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
World Bank TFSCB	227	1,451	1,720
PARIS21 initiative	—	401	410
PRSP poverty monitoring	—	—	400
International comparisons programme	—	—	210
World Bank poverty statistician	—	163	116
Training and research	3	33	241
Total	230	2,049	3,097

As a comparison, the total expenditure going directly to statistical capacity building programmes in 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02 was £0.5 million, £3.6 million and £5.7 million, respectively. In addition to the expenditure in the table, these totals include some country statistical programmes. But these figures still exclude the majority of statistical capacity building assistance which is normally provided as part of broader development programmes and not recorded separately in our systems as statistical capacity building.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Social Housing

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many English planning appeals in each of the past three years have resulted in increased social housing provision. [68615]

Mr. McNulty: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether a decision has been taken to authorise the replacement of the existing ozone-depleting CFC-based air conditioning chillers at the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre with a new refrigerant system. [68861]

Mr. Leslie: The existing QEII Conference Centre air conditioning system uses CFC as a refrigerant. Legislation resulting from the Montreal Protocol proscribes the supply and topping-up of CFCs for the maintenance of refrigeration and air-conditioning systems. Taken together with the age of the existing plant, a replacement system is required.

Following extensive consultations and evaluation, I have decided to authorise the replacement of the old ozone-depleting CFC air conditioning chillers at the Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre.

The optimum replacement solution has been identified as ammonia-based chiller technology, which has no ozone or global warming depletion potential. Ammonia-based chiller technology is widely accepted as the most efficient and environmentally friendly refrigerant, has better whole life costs and represents value for money.

This decision has been taken fully in accordance with Government policy and the UK climate change programme.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Watts: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to pay grant to local authorities under round 4 of the Invest to Save Budget and under the local government on-line programme. [68860]

Mr. Leslie: I have today laid before the House a report which sets out my Department's intention to pay some £21.7 million of grant to local authorities to support 23 innovative projects under round 4 of HM Treasury's Invest to Save Budget (ISB).

As is often the case with pioneering work, there have been some delays for a minority of projects funded under previous ISB rounds in achieving their key milestones. The report therefore contains powers to roll forward unclaimed grant to these projects to enable them to complete their work.

The report also contains powers to pay grant under the £350 million local government on-line programme of up to £47 million to help develop and support 64 e-government partnerships and up to a further £1.75 million to support further dissemination of best practice from the 25 e-government pathfinders.

Development Plans

Lawrie Quinn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when his Department will publish guidance on the better management and preparation of development plans. [68765]

Mr. McNulty: Today I am pleased to announce that we are launching a document called "Making plans".

Development plans are a way of mapping the future for communities and are critical to improving our towns and cities. So it is vital these must be up-to-date to reflect the changing aspirations and priorities of the community. Plans which do not have people at their heart are destined to fail.

It is time for councils to get on with these plans and not wait for any new legislation as the basic principles of good planning won't change. Plans need to be clear and they need to involve the community.

The guide makes it clear that many of the principles set out in last December's planning Green Paper can be acted on now. It emphasises the need for a clear strategy with an implementation programme.

But most of all it stresses a principle central to the Green Paper that real, proper participation by the community from the start of any planning process leads to much better plans at the end.

The report, produced by the consultants Baker Associates with BDOR and Gradwell Corporate Design, is available in the Library of the House.

Homelessness

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) how many homeless households were living in (a) bed and breakfast and (b) temporary accommodation in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement; [65853]

(2) how many households are living in accommodation arranged by local authorities under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Acts 1985 and 1996; and if he will make a statement; [65859]

(3) what estimate he has made of how many homeless people living in (a) bed and breakfast and (b) temporary accommodation are ex-service men; and if he will make a statement; [65991]

(4) how many homeless people are living in (a) bed and breakfast and (b) temporary accommodation, broken down by ethnic group; and if he will make a statement; [65852]

(5) what estimate he has made of how many children were homeless in England and Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [65855]

Mr. McNulty: Summary information on activity under statutory homelessness provisions is reported to the Department by local authorities in England. This includes the number of households accepted under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 and 1996 Housing Acts as being eligible for assistance, unintentionally homeless and in priority need, and the number of these households resident in various types of temporary accommodation at the end of each quarter.

National and some regional information on local authorities' activity is provided in a quarterly Statistical Release published by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. Table 6 presents a breakdown of numbers of households in various types of temporary accommodation, including bed and breakfast, as at the end of each quarter since 1995. Copies are available in the Library, and also via the ODPM's website. The latest edition, published on 17 June 2002, presents statistics up to the end of March 2002. A copy is enclosed for the hon. Member's use.

Available information collected centrally on the number of households living in various forms of temporary accommodation does not distinguish those including ex-service personnel, nor an analysis by ethnic group.

Precise information on the total number of children in households accepted as homeless is not collected, but rounded estimates derived from data reported by local authorities in England are as follows.

Households accepted as unintentionally homeless and in priority need during the year

	Total households with children	Estimated number of children
1997	58,780	104,100
1998	61,400	109,100
1999	62,000	108,400
2000	64,980	112,600
2001	66,970	112,700

For corresponding information about Welsh authorities, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many people were homeless in (a) England, (b) the South-West, and (c) the Yeovil constituency in each year since 1985–86; and if he will make a statement. [66297]

Mr. McNulty: The Yeovil constituency is within South Somerset district council area, which also includes part of the Somerton and Frome constituency. The available information is as follows:

Households accepted by local authorities as unintentionally homeless, and in priority need

	England	South West	South Somerset district council
1985–86	[1]83,710	6,580	171
1986–87	[1]91,960	6,940	170
1987–88	[1]98,890	7,260	173
1988–89	[1]102,500	7,640	124
1989–90	[1]110,380	8,140	189
1990–91	[1]128,090	9,040	209

National and some regional information on local authorities' activity in recent years is provided in a quarterly Statistical Release published by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. Copies are available in the Library, and also via the ODPM's website. The latest edition, published on 17 June 2002, presents statistics up to the end of March 2002.

Public Consultations

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the public consultations undertaken by his Department since 1997, indicating for each consultation (a) if copies were available online, (b) if copies were available in print (c) the date the time period given for responses opened and (d) the date the time period given for responses closed. [66041]

Mr. Leslie: A full list of the public consultations undertaken by the Office or its predecessors since 1997 has been placed in the Library, including the dates for which the period for responses opened and closed. The list is based on central records and reflects the public consultations undertaken within the areas for which the Office is currently responsible. The Office does not, however, keep central historical records relating to the availability of consultation documents online or in printed form.

Rural Housing

Mr. Breed: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for Transport, Local Government and the Regions of 2 May 2002, Official Report, column 902W, on rural housing, how many households were identified as being in priority need for housing in each year since 1996 in local authorities defined as rural, broken down by region. [61191]

Mr. McNulty: Summary information on activity under the statutory homeless provisions of the 1996 Housing Act is reported to the Department by local authorities in England. This includes the number of households accepted as being eligible for assistance, unintentionally homeless and in priority need. The numbers of these households in authorities classified as either "mixed rural" or "deep rural" are as follows:

Households accepted as unintentionally homeless and in priority need: rural authorities in England

Consultation Papers

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the White, Green and consultation papers his Department plans to issue within the next year. [61615]

The Deputy Prime Minister and First Secretary of State: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will issue whatever White, Green and consultation papers are necessary for the conduct of its business.

Queen's Jubilee Medal (Fire Service)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many firemen will receive the Queen's Jubilee Medal; and how many fire controllers will not receive the Queen's Jubilee Medal. [61920]

Mr. Leslie: Records are currently being checked by brigades to ascertain how many firefighters meet the detailed eligibility criteria for receipt of the Jubilee Medal. While there are 33,200 whole-time firefighters and 15,000 retained, we estimate that around 6,000 of these will not meet the criteria. There are approximately 1,500 control room staff none of whom will qualify for the award under the eligibility criteria set up by the Inter-departmental Steering Group established for this purpose.

Housing Investment

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what was the cash value of Government investment in housing, excluding (a) housing benefit, (b) mortgage tax relief and (c) council tax relief in each year since 1997. [64370]

Mr. McNulty: The following table shows housing capital resources allocated to local authorities in each year since 1997.

Housing capital resources[1]

[1] Figures exclude extra resources for housing PFI schemes (£760 million for 2001–02 to 2003–04).

[2] Estate Action allocations, which were treated as housing allocations up to 1994–95 but now come under regeneration, are excluded. Capital grants for gypsy sites are also not included.

[3] The Housing Investment Programme (HIP) figures exclude the element for expenditure financed from authorities' capital receipts included in allocations to individual authorities.

[4] Other allocations cover: Major Repairs Allowance (from 2001–02), Arms Length Companies (from 2003–03), and Cash Incentive Schemes (1997–98 to 1998–99).

[5] The Housing Corporation ADP figures are net figures and include support for City Challenge(1997–98 to 1998–99), Rough Sleepers Initiative, ERCF schemes, Major Repairs Initiative (from 1999–2000), and remodelling works (from 1999–2000).

[6] This covers the Starter Homes Initiative and the Safer Communities Supported Housing Fund.

House Building

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many houses have been built in (a) London, and (b) each county in the south of England in each year since 1997. [64372]

Mr. McNulty: The figures for the number of permanent dwellings completed since 1997 are given in the table. They are shown in the county structure of 1997 prior to local government restructure.

Station Houses

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many station houses have been provided for key workers in London in each year since 1997. [64371]

Mr. Raynsford: The Fire Service has single person quarters in four dwellings in London. Each provides accommodation for four fire fighters, let on a non-secure tenant basis.

Mayoral Management

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister for what reasons he decided to end the practice of compulsory referendums for mayoral management of local authorities. [65997]

Mr. Raynsford: I set out the reasons behind the Government's approach to the use of the Secretary of State's powers to direct councils to hold mayoral referendums in the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Keith Vaz) on 25 June 2002, Official Report, columns 812–13W. Within the framework of freedoms and flexibilities that we are introducing for councils, we believe it is more appropriate for councils themselves to make and justify to local people their own judgments on the outcome of any consultation about proposals for a new constitution.

It continues to be the case that where 5 per cent. or more of a local authority's electorate sign a petition calling for a mayoral referendum to be held, the council will be required to hold such a referendum.

Social Landlords

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the Government plan to introduce financial incentives to encourage the transfer of council homes to social landlords; and if he will make a statement. [65992]

Mr. McNulty: We have no plans to do so at present.

Decent Homes Target

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what progress has been made on achieving the Government's decent homes target; and if he will make a statement. [65864]

Mr. Raynsford: Based on social landlords' current plans, we believe we are on course to meet our 2004 milestone target to reduce by one-third the number of households living in social housing that is not of a decent standard. We will be able to report on progress during 2001–02 later in the year once Government offices have completed their assessment of local authority business plans and the Housing Corporation has considered housing association decent home returns.

Thames River Crossing

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 26 June 2002, ref. 63796, on a new Thames crossing, if his Department has been invited to the Thames Gateway South Essex Partnership's meeting in July on the possibility of a new Thames crossing; and if he will make a statement. [66077]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has not been invited to a meeting with the Thames Gateway South Essex Partnership in July to discuss proposals for a new Thames crossing.

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when local councillors and local hon. Members will be invited to the summit between Government Ministers, hon. Members, officials and council leaders, to discuss plans for a new Thames river crossing, east of Dartford; and if he will make a statement. [66000]

Mr. McNulty: No such summit is planned at this time.

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much money was spent by the relevant pension fund on paying pensions to retired (a) local government employees and (b) firefighters in 2001–02; if he will estimate the corresponding amounts to be spent in (i) five years' time, (ii) 10 years' time, (iii) 20 years' time and (iv) 30 years' time; if he will estimate in each case the proportion of such liabilities which will arise from (A) unfunded pension schemes and (B) pre-funded pension schemes; and in the case of pre-funded schemes, if he will estimate the value of the corresponding pre-funded funds in each of these years. [66563]

Mr. Raynsford: The Local Government Pension Scheme (the LGPS) is a funded scheme administered at local level by authorities in England and Wales. For the year 2000–01, the latest for which we hold information, payments for LGPS pensioner members amounted to £3.5 billion.

The Firefighters' Pension Scheme (the FPS) is also administered locally by individual fire authorities. Its liabilities are not subject to pension funds. For 2000–01, the latest year for which returns are available, the provisional net total of payments under the scheme for fire authorities in England was £250 million.

Estimates of projected liability expenditure from both the funded LGPS and the unfunded FPS are not held centrally for the periods in question.

Housing (South-west)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what action he is taking to increase the supply of affordable housing in south Somerset; and if he will make a statement; [66296]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effects of the increase in property prices in south-west England since 1999; and if he will make a statement. [66299]

Mr. McNulty: The Government recognise the pressures on affordable housing in many parts of the country, including south Somerset. Through the Housing Corporation the Government will provide £1.8 million towards delivering affordable housing in south Somerset this year. This represents an increase of £200,000 on last year, when 160 affordable housing units were provided most of which were for rent.

According to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's Survey of Mortgage Lenders, house prices in south-west England rose by 31.8 per cent. during the three years 1999 to 2001. Home ownership is affordable for most people. Homeowners are benefiting from low interest rates, low unemployment and robust income growth. For people purchasing a home in south-west England during 2001, total mortgage payments averaged 17.44 per cent. of their income. This compares to 28.42 per cent. of income in 1990, and is lower than 1999 (17.91 per cent.) and 2000 (19.43 per cent.). However we are well aware that there can be serious problems for many first time buyers in areas of high demand.

Public Amenity Buildings

Sue Doughty: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many (a) schools, (b) hospitals, (c) housing and (d) other public amenities were built on (i) greenfield, (ii) brownfield and (iii) former landfill sites in each year since 1997; on each occasion what was the nature of funding for the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [65600]

Mr. McNulty: For housing, the number of dwellings completed in England each year between 1997 and 2001 was as follows:

1997: 149,100

1998: 141,400

1999: 140,200

2000: 136,700

2001: 127,700 dwellings.

The proportion of dwellings built on previously developed land ('brownfield land'), including conversions, was as follows:

1997: 56 per cent.

1998: 58 per cent.

1999: 59 per cent.

2000: 60 per cent.

2001: 61 per cent. (provisional).

The proportion on former landfill sites is not available annually but is estimated at around 0.1 per cent. of all dwellings.

For the other categories requested, the latest available reliable estimates are for 1997 and for the area of land. In England in 1997, an estimated 575 hectares changed to community buildings, covering (a), (b) and (d), excluding leisure and recreational buildings. Of these, around 355 hectares (62 per cent.) came from previously developed land. Less than five hectares came from minerals and landfill.

Information on funding is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many houses in multiple occupation have had their licences revoked in areas where local authority licensing schemes are in place, broken down by local authority, in the last year. [66677]

Mr. McNulty: The information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which local authorities have compulsory registration schemes for houses in multiple occupation; and how long each of these schemes has been in place. [66678]

Mr. McNulty: The following local authorities in England have adopted compulsory registration schemes for houses in multiple occupation. The date in column three is the date on which the scheme began (if known).

Starter Home Initiative

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which companies submitted bids for the grant awarded to Northcote KeyStart Homes under the second round of the Starter Home Initiative; and if he will make a statement. [67447]

Mr. McNulty: Bids for Starter Home Initiative (SHI) Round 2 funding were invited from registered social landlords, local authorities and key worker employers. Northcote Housing Association was allocated £1.056 million SHI Round 2 funding to assist a total of 103 key workers in Buckinghamshire, Slough, Reading and Oxford. The funding will be used to provide £10,000 equity loans to key workers in these areas to assist their house purchase. The funding allocated also includes £25,750 towards the Association's costs in administering the scheme.

Local Authority Staff

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of how many people were employed by local authorities in England in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [67448]

Mr. Raynsford: The numbers of employees in local authorities in England in the last five years are given in the table.

Housing (North-East Lancashire)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps he is taking to improve housing conditions in North-east Lancashire; and if he will make a statement. [67205]

Mr. McNulty: We have selected east Lancashire as one of nine Market Renewal Pathfinders, aiming to provide lasting solutions for communities blighted by low demand housing. Under this initiative east Lancashire has been allocated £2.66 million of pump-prime funding to undertake background analysis and help develop a delivery process and master plan. Substantive funding is being considered as part of the comprehensive spending review specifically to tackle this issue of housing abandonment.

Nationally housing capital resources through the housing investment programme will rise to some £2.6 billion in 2003–04 and east Lancashire should benefit from this increase. Four east Lancashire authorities are receiving from the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund some £20 million over the three years to 2004 in addition to other European and domestic funding for regeneration. Housing investment is more effective when used in conjunction with wider regeneration initiatives.

Children in Care

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer regarding children in care of 1 July 2002, Official Report, column 196W, what information he collates on children in care who are (a) homeless, (b) in bed and breakfast accommodation and (c) in temporary accommodation. [67690]

Mr. McNulty: Local authorities are obliged to ensure that children in care are placed in settings that are approved to meet their needs. Therefore they would not be homeless. Given local authorities' responsibilities towards children in their care it would be rare for a child in care ever to be placed in temporary or bed and breakfast accommodation.

On 31 March 2001 38,400 (65 per cent.) children were placed with foster carers, 6,200 (10 per cent.) were placed in children's homes, 3,100 (6 per cent.) were placed with families approved under the Adoption Agency regulations and there were 6,900 (12 per cent.) children who were placed with parents.

Planning

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether planning authorities are obliged to take into account relevant sections of the Human Rights Act 1998 before reaching conclusions on planning matters; and if he will make a statement. [67639]

Mr. McNulty: The introduction of the Human Rights Act means that all public authorities, including central Government and local authorities, must act compatibly with rights under the European Convention on Human Rights. In planning this means that decision makers at all levels in the planning process must consider what impact their decisions may have on the human rights of parties affected by them before reaching a conclusion.

Homelessness

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister for each London borough for the latest available date, how many families were in bed-and-breakfast accommodation under homelessness provisions; and what the average cost was to the housing benefit budget for each family. [68616]

Mr. McNulty: Latest available information, in respect of all homeless households as reported by London boroughs, is as follows:

Housing (Learning Disability)

Mr. Love: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what discussions are taking place with the local authority associations regarding the housing needs of people with a learning disability who live with older parents; and if he will make a statement; [66306]

(2) what guidance is forwarded to local authorities regarding the priority for housing provision to be given to people with a learning disability whose elderly parents are no longer able to care for them; and if he will make a statement; [66305]

(3) what steps are being taken to ensure that all local authorities are developing a comprehensive support programme for people with a learning disability; and if he will make a statement. [66304]

Jacqui Smith: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's strategy for improving services for people with learning disabilities and their families is set out in the White Paper "Valuing People: A New Strategy for Learning Disability for the 21st Century" (Cm 5086), published in March 2001. Implementation guidance HSC 2001/016: LAC(2001)23 was issued to local authorities on 31 August 2001. Copies are available in the Library.

Our strategy sets out a range of targets and objectives to support and improve the lives of people with learning disabilities and their families. Key to the implementation of these changes are learning disability partnership boards now established in each local authority area. All partnership boards have prepared local joint investment plans to improve services for this vulnerable group of people. Partnership boards are being supported in the delivery of the White Paper objectives by a director of implementation and a valuing people support team with members based in each of the nine social services regions. There is also the learning disability task force which will monitor implementation and report progress to Ministers who in turn will report to Parliament.

"Valuing People" recognises the concern about the position of people with learning disabilities living with older carers. They and their families must be able to plan for the future in good time. Promoting supported living for this group of people is one of the priorities for both the revenue and capital elements of the £42 million learning disability development fund announced in the White Paper. The fund has been distributed to the new learning disability partnership boards from April 2002 to support the implementation of "Valuing People". The needs of elderly carers and the development of supported living approaches for people with learning disabilities living with older carers are also identified as priorities in the implementation guidance, which was sent to all local authority chief executives, social services directors and directors of housing.

Partnership boards, working with local housing authorities, people with learning disabilities, carers and service providers; are required to develop local housing strategies by winter 2002–03. Joint guidance will be issued shortly by the Department of Health and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister to help partnership boards develop their local housing strategies. The valuing people support team will also provide specialist support and advice to help this process. An important element in the development of each strategy will be the assessment of both current and future need which will include identifying people with learning disabilities and their carers who need support now and in the future. The joint guidance will restate the priority that should be given to people with learning disabilities living with older carers. Local housing authorities also have a responsibility to produce a housing strategy which sets out plans addressing the range of housing needs in their area. This includes all groups with special needs where the strategy must link into provision of associated support services.

Both the local government association and the association of directors of social services are represented on the new learning disability task force. A key function of the task force is to oversee implementation of "Valuing People". the director of implementation also met recently with the local government association to discuss housing issues.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Accommodation Centres

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what area of land is required to construct each of the proposed asylum accommodation centres. [45558]

Beverley Hughes: I apologise for the delay in answering this question due to an administrative oversight in my Department. It is envisaged that in order to provide a full range of on-site services for a total of 750 asylum seekers, a site of around 20 to 25 acres will be required.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact on local (a) labour markets and (b) small businesses of the establishment of asylum accommodation centres in remote rural locations; and if he will make a statement. [59273]

Beverley Hughes: These assessments are being made as part of the planning process.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 10 June 2002, Official Report, column 803W, on RAF Turnhouse, for what reasons his Department has not reached a final decision on the suitability of RAF Turnhouse for an asylum seeker accommodation centre. [62063]

Beverley Hughes: Immediate priority has been given to the three sites for which it has been decided to submit planning notifications. A final decision on the sites still under consideration, including the Royal Air Force (RAF) Turnhouse, has not been reached simply because further work on evaluation is still in progress. As I have stated previously, we will reach a decision as soon as possible on the suitability of RAF Turnhouse.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 10 June 2002, Official Report, column 803W, on RAF Turnhouse, which of the criteria listed (a) Killingholme and (b) Hooton Park failed to meet. [62178]

Beverley Hughes: We do not consider there to be any genuine public interest in disclosing the reasons why sites have been found to be unsuitable for the development of accommodation centres.

Special Advisers

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times special advisers have accompanied Ministers on overseas visits in each of the last five years; which countries were visited; and what the total cost of each individual visit was. [47140]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 10 April 2002]: All travel by special advisers is undertaken in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

Between 1 April 2000 and 31 March 2002, special advisers have accompanied the Home Secretary abroad on six occasions at an average total cost of £2,030.02 for all involved in the trip. the countries visited were Spain, France and Belgium. Information for the period 2 May 1997 to 31 March 2000 is already in the public domain.

Digital Television

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of subscriptions to (a) digital terrestrial, (b) digital satellite and (c) digital cable television held by his Department for services in any departmental building from which Ministers work, stating for each subscription its (i) cost and (ii) purpose. [48357]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 10 April 2002]: The Home Department does not pay any subscription to (a) digital terrestrial and (b) digital satellite television. The Department does pay subscriptions to (c) digital cable television used in a departmental building from which Ministers work. Use of these services is limited to Ministers' private offices, the Legal Advisers Branch and the Communications Directorate. Details of cost and purpose are as follows:

Subscription: 37 digital cable subscriptions £420.00.

Cost per year: £15,540.00.

Purpose: To monitor upcoming and breaking news, and parliamentary news to brief Ministers.

Private offices which support Home Office Ministers, pay an annual maintenance cost of £1,231 for a range of services, including a live feed from the Commons and Lords chambers, and access to House of Commons/Lords annunciator.

Ministerial Salaries

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the annual cost was of ministerial salaries in his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 2001–02. [60938]

Mr. Blunkett: The level of ministerial salaries are recommended by the Senior Salaries Review Body.

During the period May 1997 to March 1998, in this Department there was one Cabinet Minister, at an annual salary of £43,991; two Ministers of State, at an annual salary of £31,125; and three Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State, one in the Lords at an annual salary of £43,632 and two in the Commons at an annual salary of £23,623.

From June 2001, there was one Cabinet Minister, at an annual salary of £68,157; three Ministers of State, two in the Commons at an annual salary of £35,356 and one in the Lords at an annual salary of £68,283; and three Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State, at an annual salary of £26,835.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much and what proportion of the departmental expenditure limit for 2002–03 will be accounted for by staff costs; what the figures were for 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [61022]

Beverley Hughes: The information requested is provided in the following table.

	2001–02	2002–03
Annual departmental expenditure limit (DEL) (£ million)	10,731	10,230
Staff costs (£ million)	1,477	1,688
Staff costs as proportion of annual DEL (Percentage)	13.8	16.5

The 2001–02 DEL includes £826 million from the DEL Reserve, voted in the Spring Supplementary Estimates, mainly to fund asylum expenditure. If this is discounted, the staff costs for 2001–02 constitute 16.1 per cent. of the DEL.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Joyce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers living in Falkirk, West constituency are awaiting (a) the outcome of their asylum applications and (b) the outcome of appeals against decisions made in respect of their asylum applications. [63380]

Beverley Hughes: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Harris) on 11 June 2002, Official Report, column 1231W.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of in-kind support is available to asylum seekers in NASS accommodation. [66873]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) accommodation is fully furnished including items such as crockery and kitchen utensils. The costs of accommodation including associated utility bills and council tax are met centrally.

Access to Information

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the administrative manuals and internal guidance which his Department has made public as required by Part 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information; and which of these were first made available after May 1997. [45400]

Mr. Blunkett: Since the Home Office publishes considerable amounts of information, it is not possible to identify all that falls in this category without disproportionate diversion of resources and further delay. However, as work proceeds on the development of a publication scheme under the Freedom of Information Act, we intend to increase the volume of such material in accordance with recommended practice. The publication scheme will be operational in November this year and will set out the classes of information that the Home Office will publish routinely. We aim to include information from administrative manuals and internal guidance.

Firearms

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths were attributable to firearms in the last year in Portsmouth, South; how many of these were with licensed firearms; and if he will make a statement. [64725]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: There were no deaths attributable to firearms, recorded by the police in Hampshire for 2000–01 (year ending March).

The Home Office firearms database does not hold figures for locations below police force area. Information relating to the number of licensed firearms is recorded on a calendar basis, figures for 2001 are not currently available.

Drug Arrests

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug arrests there were in the Portsmouth, South constituency in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [64588]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Information on the number of persons arrested for notifiable offences is collected by police force area only. Available data on the number of persons arrested for drugs offences within the Hampshire police force area are given in the table for the years 1999–2000 and 2000–01. Statistics for 2001–02 will be available in the autumn.

Number of persons arrested for drug offences in Hampshire police force area

	Number of persons
1999–2000	3,768
2000–01	3,059

Crack Cocaine

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals were arrested for possession of crack cocaine in Weston-Super-Mare in the past five years. [64934]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The information is not collected centrally at the level required.

Marsham Street

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what art will be incorporated within his new headquarters on Marsham Street; and what resources have been allocated to art as (a) an overall figure and (b) a percentage of the final capital value of the new headquarters. [65069]

Beverley Hughes: This is a Private Finance Initiative (PFI) project being carried out by Annes Gate Property plc for the Home Department. The current scheme design agreed by Annes Gate Property with Westminster city council includes provision for art as this was a key consideration in the planning application discussions. The indicative capital sum provided in Annes Gate Property's cost plan is approximately one per cent. of the total capital spend. The art element is generally integrated into the scheme and relates to treatment of external finishes, elements of the hard landscaping, external lighting and other items as detailed in the planning consent.

Brixton Prison

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many Irish prisoners who died in Brixton during the last six years were on suicide watch; and whether in each case guidelines were followed; [65439]

(2) whether the relevant cell alarm system was in working order on each occurrence of a cell death in Brixton during the last five years; [65438]

(3) how many prisoners have died in HMP Brixton since 1995. [65442]

Hilary Benn: The tables detail the 14 self-inflicted deaths and three deaths by natural causes that have occurred at Brixton since 1995. Four of the 14 were Irish citizens and a further three of Irish extraction. One prisoner of Irish extraction was subject to intermittent observation and the investigation under way is reviewing the care he received.

Cell alarm systems are checked as a matter of routine, but there is no record available to show that alarms, in every cell where deaths occurred, were working at the time. Cell alarms checked, or their use noted, as part of an investigation into a death in custody, but only where it is considered relevant.

Issues about the use of a cell alarm were addressed in one investigation, with no evidence found to support claims made that an alarm was activated but not responded to.

Visitors' Bonds Scheme

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on Government proposals to introduce a visitors' bonds scheme. [65607]

Beverley Hughes: A consultation paper, "Financial Bonds for Visitors", was issued in October 1999. This sought views on a number of key questions, including the scope of any scheme, the nature and amount of the bond, and the locations for the proposed pilot study.

The response to the consultation paper was generally negative. Many respondents—particularly those from the ethnic minority communities—simply did not support the idea of a bond scheme, either in principle or because of worries over discrimination or affordability. Of those who responded more positively, many wanted a very low level of bond that would not have offered sufficient disincentive to fraud. The scheme also attracted considerable adverse reaction from the countries proposed for a pilot study.

Simultaneously, work on moving towards a more flexible approach to the operation of the immigration control made it difficult to design a simple, quick scheme for providing a bond facility for visitors and recording their entry to and departure from the United Kingdom.

It was also considered that the re-introduction of a right of appeal for family visitors in October 2000 would provide a more effective way of addressing the concerns of the ethnic minority community about visa refusals for family visits.

For all these reasons it was decided not to pursue the proposed pilot scheme—a decision that was generally widely welcomed. An announcement to this effect was made in a response to a parliamentary question from my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 28 July 2000.

The White Paper "Secure Borders, Safe Haven", published in February 2002, explained the negative response to the financial bond scheme proposals. It also referred to exploring community-based or other collective mechanisms, or a way of requiring people to report back to posts when they return, and invited views. We are currently considering the responses.

0870 Telephone Numbers

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on using 0870 telephone numbers for inquiries by the public to the Department and its agencies. [66191]

Beverley Hughes: The Home Department has no central policy on this matter. Each case is decided on its merits.

Indefinite Leave to Remain

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons came to the UK as visitors in 2001 and subsequently applied for indefinite leave to remain. [66335]

Beverley Hughes: The requested information is not currently available.

Air Weapons

John Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many offences were recorded involving the use of an air weapon in each year since 1997; [65288]

(2) what advice he has received from the Firearms Consultative Committee on the purchase, possession and use of air guns; and if he will make a statement; [65287]

(3) what progress he has made in implementing the recommendations which the Government accepted from the Home Affairs Committee's report, "Controls over firearms"; and if he will make a statement; [65284]

(4) if he will introduce a licensing scheme for air rifles; and if he will make a statement; [65285]

(5) how many offences resulting in injury to the person were recorded involving the use of an air weapon; and how many of these are recorded as attempted murder or other acts endangering life in each year since 1997; [65289]

(6) what action he plans to take on controls on air rifles following the shooting with an air rifle; and if he will make a statement. [65286]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The Government totally condemns the misuse of air weapons and has the deepest sympathy for Tommy Morris and those others who are seriously injured by people who use their guns in an irresponsible or criminal manner. The question of introducing a licensing regime for air weapons as recommended by the Home Affairs Select Committee has been carefully considered by the Government. As the committee recognised, there are resource implications in setting up and running an effective registration system and we are reviewing these practical issues as part of an overall assessment of the effectiveness of the existing wide range of controls governing the sale and use of air weapons.

Information about the number of offences involving the use of air weapons, and the number of resulting injuries in each year since 1997, is given in the following table:

Violence against a person

	1997[1]	1998–99[2]	1999–2000	2000–01
Air weapon offences	7,506	8,665	10,103	10,227
Offences resulting in slight injury	1,065	1,381	1,806	1,654
Offences resulting in serious injury	129	133	171	166
Homicide	—	—	—	1
Attempted murder and other acts (including wounding) endangering life	75	88	80	62

[1] Calendar year.

[2] There was a change in counting rules for recorded crime on 1 April 1998. Crime figures no longer exclude offences where the value of criminal damage is under £20. 75 per cent. of air weapon offences consisted of criminal damage.

The laws concerning air weapons are already very strict, as are the penalties for misuse. We believe that much can be done to improve the situation through the enforcement of existing legislation and public education, and we are at present considering the Firearms Consultative Committee's advice on how this should be taken forward. The shooting associations and the police are already working closely together and have launched a campaign designed to create a greater awareness of the requirements of the law and to emphasise the basic principles of safe and responsible shooting. We believe that this will help to check the rise in criminal damage and to sustain the welcome reduction last year in the total number of injuries.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason he has not yet replied to the letter to him dated 18 March from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to an Afghan asylum-seeker ref. DEV/OU/1506. [66486]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer I provided to him on 2 July 2002, Official Report, column 264W.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will respond to the letter from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan of 1 May on animal experimentation. [67648]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 8 May 2002.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 30 April from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. F. A. Malik. [66209]

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 27 June 2002.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason he has not yet replied to the letter to him dated 9 April, from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. Rahemi Aminullah. [66487]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer I provided to him on 1 July 2002, Official Report, column 180W.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason he has not yet replied to the letter to him dated 22 April from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. S. Balekey. [66485]

Mr. Blunkett: My right hon. Friend's letter of 22 April 2002 was not received by the Home Office until 7 June 2002. It was then immediately forwarded to the Immigration and Nationality Department (Integrated Casework Directorate) for consideration.

A reply was sent to my office for signature on 27 June 2002, and despatched on the same date.

Drug and People Smuggling

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with European counterparts regarding increased co-operation between police forces in tackling drug smuggling and people smuggling. [66633]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth [holding answer 3 July 2002]: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I have regular discussions with our European counterparts about increased police co-operation in tackling organised and international crime. Most recently, at the Justice and Home Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 13 June 2002, the Home Secretary stressed the need for action at European Union (EU) level to combat illegal immigration and trafficking in human beings. This was subsequently reflected in the conclusions of the Seville European Council.

In advance of the Danish presidency of the EU, the Home Secretary met with the Danish Justice Minister on 19 June 2002 and discussed the issue of drug trafficking at EU level. The United Kingdom (UK) will work with the Danish presidency to ensure that the framework decision on drug trafficking is agreed as soon as possible, and that the mid-term review of the EU Action Plan against Drugs is productive in taking forward co-operation at EU level.

The Home Secretary also met with the French Interior Minister, M. Sarkozy, for bilateral talks on 25 June 2002 and they agreed that joint UK-French teams should work together to tackle people trafficking.

Based on the Framework Decision on Joint Investigation Teams, which was adopted by the Justice and Home Affairs Council in June, work is under way on the formation of a joint investigation team to combat cocaine smuggling.

Youth Justice Board

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Youth Justice Board will publish its annual review for 2001–02. [68764]

Hilary Benn: The Youth Justice Board annual review for 2001–02 has today been laid before Parliament. Copies have been placed in the Library. The Youth Justice Board was established in 1998 by the Crime and Disorder Act to reform the youth justice system. The annual review provides evidence of success in meeting the principal aim of the reformed youth justice system to prevent offending.

The Government's pledge to halve the time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders has been achieved. It has been reduced from an average time of 142 days in 1997 to 67 days in the first quarter of 2002.

The review shows that effective use has been made of police Final Warnings, bail supervision and support programmes, robust new sentences and the new Intensive Surveillance and Supervision Programme to reduce re-offending.

The review also presents evidence that targeted prevention work with young people at risk, use of parenting programmes and education, employment and training initiatives are effective to prevent and reduce offending rates.

HEALTH

Hospital Construction

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) medium-sized and (b) major hospital schemes are planned under the NHS plan; when (i) construction is due to commence and (ii) schemes will be completed; and what the cost is of each scheme. [56939]

Mr. Hutton: The NHS Plan states that there will be further major expansion in new hospital buildings which mean over 100 new hospital schemes in total between 2000 and 2010.

Lists of medium-sized and major hospital schemes which are planned under the NHS plan, giving details of the capital cost of the scheme; when the scheme is expected to reach financial close and when the scheme is expected to become operational are in the following tables. The total number of projects is 107.

Fees

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which fees his Department, its agencies and associated public bodies collect; how much has been raised or is anticipated will be raised from each of these fees in each year from 1989–90 to 2004–05; which of these fees count as negative expenditure; and if he will make a statement. [59876]

Mr. Lammy: The Department, its agencies and associated bodies collect fees or charges on a statutory basis and make charges where legislation allows on commercial services. Listed in the table is information where a fee or charge can be separately identified in accounts or departmental returns. Where fees or charges are not separately identified income has been attributed to the receiving body.

1. Figures are for completed financial years only. Subsequent years will be reviewed in light of changes in costs in the coming periods and cannot be forecast at this stage.

2. All income is either appropriations in aid on votes, consolidated fund extra receipts or is retained by the body concerned to offset expenditure.

Natural Health Products

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will respond to the request of 25 April by Consumers For Health Choice for a meeting with the Under-Secretary to discuss regulation of the Natural Health Products Sector. [60201]

Ms Blears: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Lord Hunt), and I will be holding meetings during July with representatives of a range of interest groups in the herbal sector, including consumers for health choice, to discuss the regulation of herbal remedies and supplements.

Correspondence

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight of 26 April, about NHS dental services. [61953]

Ms Blears: A reply was sent on 8 July.

Secondments

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people from organisations outside his Department have been seconded to start work in his Department since 1 January 1999. [63087]

Mr. Lammy: The information requested is shown in the table.

Hospices

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much National Cancer Plan funding has been allocated to hospices in (a) Suffolk and (b) the eastern region. [63807]

Mr. Lammy: Voluntary hospice services in eastern region are, in common with the rest of the country, funded from a variety of sources in addition to voluntary funding.

Priorities for development are determined by each cancer network board (of which health authorities; primary care trusts and national health service trusts are part).

Palliative care priorities for development (including hospices) are first determined within each network's palliative care strategy and then prioritised against other cancer priorities as part of the network's overall three year strategic plan.

Suffolk Health Authority invested £1,460,858 in voluntary hospices in 2001–02 rising to £1,527,757 in 2002–03.

During the same period the whole eastern region invested £8,177,426 in voluntary hospices in 2001–02 rising to £8,545,111 in 2002–03.

Hepatitis C

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on making financial arrangements for sufferers, and their families, of Hepatitis C caused by infected blood products. [64262]

Ms Blears: We deeply regret that so many people with haemophilia were infected with hepatitis C through blood products. But the fact is that as soon as a technology became available to make blood products free from hepatitis C the national health service introduced it. There is therefore no legal liability to justify compensation for people with haemophilia and hepatitis C.

This Government and their predecessor have held that compensation is only paid to patients when the NHS has been at fault and that an exception to this rule is not justified in the case of haemophiliacs infected with hepatitis C.

We met the haemophilia society and members of the all party group on haemophilia on 12 June to discuss the 'Report of the Hepatitis C Working Party' which was produced for the haemophilia society and published by them on 17 June. We will respond to this report when we have given it our full consideration.

Cancer and Mental Health

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was earmarked for cancer and mental health treatments for (a) PCT and (b) health authorities in the latest year for which figures are available. [64337]

Ms Blears: Health authorities share their total recurrent allocation between their constituent primary care trusts in line with guidance issued by the Department.

In 2002–03, health authorities were instructed to allocate earmarked funding to primary care trusts on the same basis allocations were made to health authorities.

Primary care trust shares of health authority earmarked funding for cancer and mental health are shown in table 1 and the health authority totals in table 2.

NICE

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 18 June 2002, Official Report, column 247W, on NICE, what assessment he has made of the level of non-compliance by healthcare professionals with the recommendations of NICE. [64485]

Ms Blears: Detailed audit of the implementation of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence's guidance is only feasible at local level. The Institute has however commissioned a research project through the national health service research and development methodology programme to evaluate the impact of its guidance on clinical and managerial practice. A team from York University has been appointed to carry out this project. Preliminary results are expected in December 2002.

Building Capacity Grant

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people benefited from the building capacity grant. [64515]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 17 June 2002, Official Report, column 168W.

This approach has already led to over 1,000 hospital beds no longer occupied by people awaiting discharge from hospital over the period from September 2001 to March 2002. Half of the £100 million allocated in 2001–02 was spent on additional packages of care, either in residential homes or patients' own homes.

Annual Leave

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average annual leave entitlement is for staff in his Department in 2002. [64644]

Mr. Lammy: The Department holds no information on the average annual leave entitlement. Actual leave entitlement for staff is currently set at 30 days.

Electronic Health Records

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the introduction of electronic health records. [65187]

Mr. Lammy: On 12 June my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, (Lord Hunt of Kingsheath) outlined a programme to deliver information technology in the national health service "Delivering the NHS Plan" based on the principles of "Information for Health". The programme states that by December 2005 we will have developed an electronic record service which will be accessible nationally for out of hours emergency reference. By December 2007 we will have expanded the records to contain more data and reference links to primary care and hospitals in order to support integrated care.

Taiwan

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions his Department has had with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in relation to Taiwan's application for observer status at the World Health Organisation. [65216]

Mr. Lammy: Prior to the May 2002 world health assembly, the Department consulted the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on the position the UK should take in EU co-ordination discussions on Taiwan's application for observer status of the world health organisation.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many members of his Department have been employed in its regulatory impact unit in the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [65969]

Mr. Lammy: Two officials (full time equivalent) have been employed within my Department's regulatory impact unit for each of the past five years. The unit works with the Department's policy officials and the Cabinet Office regulatory impact unit to prepare regulatory impact assessments and identify suitable regulatory reform measures.

Respiratory-related Diseases

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will develop a national service framework for treatment of respiratory-related diseases. [66433]

Jacqui Smith: We have no plans to extend the national service framework (NSF) programme at present to include respiratory related diseases. People with respiratory related diseases will benefit from other initiatives to improve quality of treatment and care, and to improve access to services.

The NSF programme currently includes frameworks for mental health (1999), coronary heart disease (2000) the national Cancer Plan (2000), older people (2001) and diabetes standards (2001). The diabetes NSF delivery strategy is due to be published in 2002 and work is in hand on national service frameworks for renal services, childrens services and long term conditions. These frameworks amount to a significant programme of quality improvement across the national health service.

Green Ministers

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who his Department's green minister is; when they (a) have attended and (b) plan to attend meetings of the Green Ministers' Committee; what the outcomes of meetings were for his Department's activities; and if he will make a statement. [65989]

Ms Blears: I am the Department's Green Minister. I took up my post on 10 June 2002 and I am scheduled to my first Green Ministers' Committee meeting on 15 July 2002.

The Department's previous Green Minister my hon. Friend the Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Yvette Cooper), regularly attended all Green Ministers' Committee meetings.

The Department takes a close interest in all Green Ministers' Committee discussions and takes action where appropriate to implement decisions or set work in train. For example, climate change adaptation was considered by Green Ministers' Committee in March 2002. Although the Department is not the lead Department on this issue, it does have an important role in assessing the likely impact on health of climate change. The Department's report "Health Effects of Climate Change in the UK" has been circulated widely for comment and is due to be published in August. Also discussed at the March meeting of Green Ministers' Committee was target setting for the Government Estate in respect of environmental management systems (EMS). The Department is implementing EMS across its estate as appropriate.

National Human Stem Cell Bank

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the institutions being considered to host the National Human Stem Cell Bank; and when he will make a decision. [66088]

Ms Blears: The recommendation to establish a stem cell bank came from the Chief Medical Officer's expert group (the Donaldson Committee) in 2000. Since then the Medical Research Council (MRC) has been making progress in establishing the national stem cell bank and invited interested centres to tender in March 2002.

As the process of considering bids is, as yet, incomplete, it is not possible to provide a list of those under consideration.

The MRC is expected to make an announcement about the location of the bank later this year.

NHS Dentists

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population is registered with an NHS dentist; and if he will make a statement. [66076]

Mr. Lammy: Arrangements are now in place to ensure that patients can gain access to national health service services simply by calling NHS Direct. This means that even if a patient chooses not to register with a dentist it will still be possible for that patient to access all forms of dentistry that are provided by the NHS.

47 per cent. of the population, 60 per cent. of children and 43 per cent. of adults were registered with a general dental services (GDS) dentist in England at 30 April 2002. Registrations lapse if patients do not return to the dentist within 15 months.

Underspend

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much of his Department's allocated spending is forecast to not be spent by the end of the financial year; and if he will make a statement. [65582]

Mr. Lammy: Details of 2001–02 underspends will be published in the Public Expenditure Outturn White Paper. There are no planned underspends in 2003–04.

Podiatry and Chiropody Services

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the level of unsatisfied demand for podiatry and chiropody services in Essex. [66340]

Mr. Lammy: Primary care trusts (PCTs) are best placed to assess the needs of the local community. They are now responsible for providing local national health service services, including chiropody, and have to clinically prioritise their services to meet local demand. Each PCT is free to determine its local priority criteria.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he will take to increase the provision of chiropody and podiatry care in the South of England; and if he will make a statement; [66430]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the introduction of commissioning primary care trusts on the provision of podiatry and chiropody services in the South of England; [66431]

(3) if he will issue guidance to PCTs setting out the level of service that should be provided for podiatry and chiropody by patient classification; [66432]

(4) if he will issue a national strategy on the provision of podiatry and chiropody services. [66342]

Jacqui Smith: We have no plans to issue any guidance on the level or strategic provision of podiatry and chiropody services. Chiropody/podiatry services are essential parts of the national service frameworks for older people and diabetes as stated the Department's literature. We have also launched a national primary and care trust programme designed to support primary care trusts (PCTs) in delivering their key functions which will be:

Improving the health of the community

Securing the provision of high quality services

Integrating health and social care locally.

As local organisations, PCTs are best placed to understand the needs of their patient populations. This will ensure that the right services are delivered to the right people in the right location at the right time.

Asylum Seekers (Children)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children seeking asylum who have arrived in the UK in the last five years have been placed as children in care. [67635]

Jacqui Smith: Unaccompanied asylum-seeking children are being separately identified for the first time in the Department's statistical collections on looked-after children for the year ending 31 March 2002. At present these data are still being collected and validated. It is anticipated that preliminary figures will be available in the autumn of 2002.

Mental Illness

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prescriptions were issued in 2001–02 for medicines used to treat mental illness. [68052]

Jacqui Smith: The number of prescription items dispensed in the community in England for the treatment of mental illness during the financial year ending 31 March 2002 is given in the table.

Information about the diagnosis for which the drugs were prescribed is not available. Drugs used to treat mental illness have therefore been defined as those within British National Formulary paragraphs Hypnotics and anxiolytics (4.1), Drugs used in psychoses and related disorders (4.2) and Antidepressant drugs (4.3).

Notes:

1. The therapeutic classifications are based on British National Formulary, Number 42 (September 2001).

2. These data are based on items dispensed by community pharmacists, appliance contractors, dispensing doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered. The data are from the Prescription Cost Analysis system.

Mental Health

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which prisons have mental health in-reach services; [68054]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 4 March 2002, Official Report, column 127W, what the distribution to young offender institutions is; and if he will make a statement; [68269]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 13 February 2002, Official Report, column 470W, on prisons with no mental health in-reach services, if he will list the prisons for which mental health in-reach services are planned by 2004. [68264]

Jacqui Smith: During 2001–02 mental health in-reach services were being established in the following 18 prisons in England:

HMP Birmingham
HMP Belmarsh
HMP Brixton
HMP/YOI Bullwood Hall
HMP/YOI Chelmsford
HMP Durham
HMP/YOI/RC Eastwood Park
HMYOI/RC Feltham
HMP Frankland
HMP/YOI Holloway
HMP Leeds
HMP Leicester
HMP Pentonville
HMP Wandsworth
HMP Whitemoor
HMP Winchester
HMP Woodhill
HMP Wormwood Scrubs.

It is planned to establish in-reach services in the following 26 further prisons in England during 2002–03:

HMP/YOI Ashfield
HMP Bedford
HMP Blakenhurst
HMP Bristol
HMP/YOI/RC Brockhill
HMP Dorchester
HMP/YOI/RC Exeter
HMYOI/RC Glen Parva
HMP Holme House
HMP Hull
HMP/YOI Lewes
HMP Lincoln
HMP Liverpool
HMP Long Lartin
HMP Manchester
HMP/YOI Moorland
HMP/YOI New Hall
HMP/YOI Norwich
HMP Nottingham
HMYOI/RC Onley
HMP Parkhurst
HMYOI Portland
HMP Preston
HMP Rochester
HMP/YOI Styal
HMP Wakefield.

The distribution of new mental health in-reach services for 2003–04 has not yet been decided.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what meetings have taken place between Ministers in his Department and Home Office Ministers since 27 February concerning mental health services in prisons; [68053]

(2) when he last met the Home Secretary to discuss the training of prison nurses to carry out mental health assessments. [68056]

Jacqui Smith: We are in regular contact with our counterparts in the Home Office on a range of prison health issues, including mental health services in prisons and the training of nurses and other health care staff working in prisons.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 10 April 2002, Official Report, column 457W, on mental health, what conclusions have emerged from the work of the Homelessness Directorate as to the reasons for refusals of offers of help by rough sleepers in so far as they relate to health issues. [68265]

Jacqui Smith: The reasons why some rough sleepers refuse help are complex. A significant proportion of those rough sleepers who are still sleeping rough have some kind of mental health problem, and the large majority have some physical health problems. These health needs are often compounded by alcohol and drug misuse.

The Homelessness Directorate's report, 'More than a roof', acknowledges that there is much more work to be done to help those that remain on the street and that addressing their health needs is a critical part to help them to start to rebuild their lives.

The Department is working with the Homelessness Directorate to ensure that there are appropriate and effective health services for vulnerable rough sleepers that will enable them to get relevant treatment for their health needs. The Mental Health Bill will also help to target services on some of those who are unable to request treatment for themselves.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many places have been delivered at Rampton and Broadmoor for dangerous and severe personality disorder sufferers. [68055]

Jacqui Smith: Work is well under way to deliver two new units at Rampton and Broadmoor that will deliver 140 places for people suffering from dangerous and severe personality disorder (DSPD). There will be a 70-bed unit at each special hospital and both developments are currently on target for completion by 2004.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to publish the consultation responses he received in respect of the draft Mental Health Bill. [67962]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The consultation responses received in respect of the draft Mental Health Bill will be made publicly available subject to respondents' requests for confidentiality.

Care Homes

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how his Department plans to publicise the amendment to Regulation 5 of the Care Homes Regulations 2001 to (a) local authorities, (b) care home owners and (c) residents and their families; [43897]

(2) who will be asked to be members of the consultation exercise on the amendment of the Care Homes Regulations 2001 Standard 5; how it will be publicised; how much he expects the exercise to cost; and when he will publish the results. [43900]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 18 March 2002]: The draft amendment to Care Home Regulations 2001 was issued for consultation on 19 June for comments by 18 July. A copy has been placed on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/jointunit/freenursingcare.htm. The national health service and local authorities were notified via the chief executive's bulletin on 21 June. Copies of the draft regulations have also been sent direct to the bodies that represent the interests of providers and the elderly and care home residents and their relatives. It is, of course, open to any individual or organisation to comment on the proposed amendments.

Care Homes (Darlington)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) care homes have been closed and (b) care beds have been lost in each year since 1997 in the Darlington constituency. [53327]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 29 April 2002]: Information on care homes and places is not available at constituency level. The available information presented in the table shows the number of registered care homes and places in the Durham area at 31 March each year.

Residential and nursing care homes and places in Durham area at 31 March

Department of Health annual returns

Prescriptions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prescriptions of (a) dextroamphetamine saccharate, (b) amphetamine aspartate, (c) dextroamphetamine sulfate and (d) amphetamine sulfate (dexidrine) were issued in each of the last five years for (i) attention deficit disorder and (ii) attention deficit and hyperactivity disorder dispensed in the community broken down by (A) health authority and (B) region. [63813]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 24 June 2002]: We have no prescribing records for drugs named dextroamphetamine saccharate and amphetamine aspartate. Amphetamine sulfate (dexidrine) was last prescribed in the community in 1997 when two items were dispensed.

Information on the prescribing of dexamphetamine sulphate, for all treatment uses, is shown in the table. Information prior to 1999 is not available.

NHS Complaints Procedure

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress his Department has made with reforms to the NHS complaints procedure. [66262]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 3 July 2002]: We are currently considering reform of the NHS complaints procedure following the independent evaluation in 1999–2000 and the subsequent listening exercise completed in October 2001, as well as the Chancellor's Budget statement and the subsequent publication of "Delivering the NHS Plan" in April this year. "Delivering the NHS Plan" set out the proposal to establish a new Commission for Health Care Audit and Inspection among whose responsibilities will be the independent scrutiny of complaints. The Chief Medical Officer is also considering the scope for closer links between the systems for dealing with complaints and clinical negligence claims among the possible alternatives for clinical negligence reform. We hope to be able to indicate the way forward on the reforms soon.

Changes to the complaints procedure will need to take place in the context of the wider measures to empower patients and increase patient involvement in the development of health services. For example, patient advice and liaison services have already been or are being established in NHS and primary care trusts to help sort out problems on the spot.

Emergency Admissions

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of the annual growth rate of emergency admissions for people aged over 75 years for each year since 1997–98 to the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [66287]

Jacqui Smith: [holding answer 4 July 2002]:

The information requested is set out in the table.

Year	Emergency admissions for people aged 75 and over	Percentage increase on previous year
1997–98	912,347	–
1998–99	939,276	2.95
1999–2000	954,542	1.63
2000–01	961,275	0.71

Note:

Data in this table are adjusted for both coverage and unknown/invalid clinical data, except for 2000–01, which are not yet adjusted for shortfalls.

The emergency admissions targets, as set out in the Planning and Performance Framework, are being met and good progress is being made.

NHS (West Surrey)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much the funding of NHS services in west Surrey has been reduced since 1997 to bring it into line with the requirements of the Resource Allocation Working Party. [67456]

Ms Blears [holding answer 5 July 2002]: Actual funding for the national health service in west Surrey has risen from £369.8 million in 1997–98 to £485.9 million in 2002–03. This represents an increase of 31.4 per cent.

Real terms percentage allocation increases in west Surrey and nationally are shown in the table.

Percentage

Year	Real terms increase	Average increase in England
1997–98	2.54	2.04
1998–99	1.35	1.90
1999–2000	2.91	4.00
2000–01	3.67	4.18
2001–02	5.91	5.85
2002–03	6.89	7.20

During this period, changes in the resource allocation formula have meant that west Surrey has moved from being 1.71 per cent. above its target in 1997–98 to 3.63 per cent. above target in 2002–03.

Castle Award for Equal Pay

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department has applied for a Castle award for equal pay. [65226]

Mr. Lammy: The Department has not applied for a Castle award in 2002. We are committed to review our pay systems in response to the Equal Opportunities Commission Task Force "Just Pay" report, in which the Government have committed Departments and Agencies to review their pay systems by April 2003 and prepare action plans to close any equal pay gaps.

CJD

Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the tenth annual report of the National Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease Surveillance Unit. [69001]

Ms Blears: The National Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease Surveillance Unit's tenth annual report has been published today. The report documents the unit's findings in relation to sporadic, familial and iatrogenic Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (CJD), and also variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease (vCJD), up to 31 December 2000. Copies have been placed in the Library, and are available on the unit's website at www.cjd.ed.ac.uk

Care Leavers

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 27 June 2002, Official Report, column 1047W, on leaving care, how many care leavers have been assisted by their local authority to stay within education and training on an agreed programme by health authority. [67622]

Jacqui Smith: Further to my previous reply of 24 June 2002, Official Report, column 736W, we do not hold this information centrally at present. However, we will be publishing, in the autumn, information on care leavers in education and training. This will include data on the percentage of those young people who were looked after on 1 April in their 17th year (aged 16) who were in education, training or employment at the age of 19. These data will show how progress is being made towards the Government's objective of increasing the level of employment, training or education among young people aged 19, who were looked after at age 16.

Radiotherapy Waiting Lists

Mr. Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the meetings he and his Ministers (a) have had and (b) propose to have with NHS trust and health authority chairmen and chief executives to discuss (i) reducing radiotherapy waiting lists and (ii) the associated financial implications of such action. [59286]

Ms Blears: Ministers have not met chairmen and chief executives specifically to discuss reducing radiotherapy waiting times. However, we are taking wide-ranging action to improve radiotherapy waiting times, including a number of initiatives aimed at tackling the shortage of professionals associated with radiotherapy delivery, major investment in radiotherapy equipment, streamlining radiotherapy delivery through the cancer services collaborative and increasing the number of training places for radiographers.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Foreign Ownership

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will change the rules on providing help to firms for which more than 25 per cent. of ownership is in foreign hands. [65029]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 27 June 2002]: I am not aware of any such general rules. However, there are certain schemes of assistance which are only open to small and medium sized enterprises (SMEs). This would exclude a firm which was more than 25 per cent. owned by a non SME, whether that was a UK or overseas undertaking. Whether it is appropriate to extend schemes of assistance to larger companies is a matter to be addressed on a scheme by scheme basis. In some circumstances, though, EC state aid rules would preclude such extensions.

Brownfield Development

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much brownfield land has been redeveloped by each regional development agency in each year since their formation. [66243]

Alan Johnson: During the three years after the RDAs were created on 1 April 1999 up to the introduction of their Single Programme funding on 1 April 2002, the RDAs reported to each funding Department individually on the outcome of their separate programmes. Brownfield land redevelopment was funded by what is now the Office of my right hon. Friend, the Deputy Prime Minister. Accordingly DTI does not hold any figures for these years.

Consumer Credit

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will introduce measures to reform the Consumer Credit Act 1974 to ensure that time orders can be used to the advantage of debtors in Scotland. [65621]

Miss Melanie Johnson: As part of the Government's review of consumer credit legislation, we will be looking at how we can make the consumer protection measures in the 1974 Act more effective. The Scottish Executive have also recently consulted on the Enforcement of Civil Obligations in Scotland and this consultation mentions time orders under the 1974 Act while recognising that any changes to the 1974 Act would be a reserved matter. The Government will take account of any comments made about time orders under the 1974 Act in our review of consumer credit legislation.

WorldCom

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has for reform of (a) company law and (b) corporate governance as a result of the WorldCom fraud; and if she will make a statement. [66747]

Miss Melanie Johnson: In February a group was set up to coordinate the response of key regulators to the issues for accounting, auditing and aspects of corporate governance raised in the aftermath of Enron. It will produce an interim report by the end of July. The Government will also publish in July its first formal response to the recommendations of the Company Law Review.

Company Auditors

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she has reviewed the rules relating to company auditors in light of the situation at WorldCom; and if she will make a statement. [67115]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Co-ordinating group set up in February to co-ordinate the responses of the key regulators to issues for audit and accounting raised in the aftermath of Enron, and now WorldCom, will produce an interim report by the end of July. The Government have made clear that it is important to restore confidence in the independence of auditors.

Multi-disciplinary Professional Practices

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her policy is on multi-disciplinary professional practices; and if she will make a statement. [68249]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Multi-disciplinary professional practices can be beneficial for both the parties concerned and consumers. Any restrictions on such practices should be no more than is necessary to ensure that conflicts of interest are avoided, standards of ethical and professional conduct are maintained and consumers are properly protected.

Inward Investment

Mr. Mole: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on how successful the UK has been in attracting inward investment. [69036]

Ms Hewitt: With my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, I am pleased to inform the House that the UK is still Europe's top inward investment location, despite a fall from last year's record totals in the number of investment projects and jobs created.

Invest.UK has announced in its annual review published today, that for the period between 1 April 2001 and 31 March 2002, the number of direct investment projects by foreign owned companies into the UK reported to Invest.UK by its partner agencies in Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the English Regional Development Agencies totalled 764.

The UK is an excellent place to do business and this is reflected in our success in attracting consistently high levels of inward investment since Invest.UK was founded in 1977 as the Invest In Britain Bureau. Indeed we continue to be the top inward investment location in Europe.

Today's Invest.UK figures show that the UK is not immune from the global economic downturn. New inward investment projects in to the UK have fallen 12 per cent. from last year's record figures. This reflects international investment falls across the world, caused particularly by reduced activity in the technology sectors. In the UK the sharpest fall is in US investment in the technology sectors.

In the current economic climate international business is more cautious. Many investors will have postponed decisions until confidence returns and we must be ready to secure these opportunities as recovery comes.

I am arranging for a copy of Invest.UK's annual review to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

European Working Time Directive

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she will take to encourage employers in the offshore sector to implement the terms of the European Working Time Directive in advance of the date when the directive must be enforced. [68350]

Alan Johnson: The Government have had regular contacts with both employers and employee representatives in the offshore sector about the implementation of the directive, which is due in August 2003. The Government will carry out a full public consultation on its proposals for implementation. It is for the industry to decide whether to take steps to implement the directive ahead of the August deadline.

Regional Development Agencies

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the board members of each regional development agency were (a) living and (b) working in their respective region in (i) 1999, (ii) 2000, (iii) 2001 and (iv) 2002. [68664]

Alan Johnson: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost as records containing this information are not held regionally or centrally. However, in each appointment round for board members, an understanding of the issues affecting the region has been a core selection criterion. For example, the current appointment process for board members includes the criterion "Applicants must have a good knowledge of the region, with a good operational network of regional contacts and in-depth experience in at least one area of the RDA's work".

Oil and Gas Infrastructure

Lawrie Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on her powers to settle disputes over access between oil and gas infrastructure owners and potential third party users. [69676]

Mr. Wilson: Following extensive consultation through the Department's consultation 'Oil and Gas Infrastructure: Guidance on Applications for resolution of Disputes over Third Party Access', the Department has, today, issued guidance to clarify how the Secretary of State would use long standing powers in the Petroleum Act 1998, Pipe-lines Act 1962 and the Gas Act 1995. This Guidance sets out how the Department would handle applications and the principles that would be applied in making a determination.

We have also published today a summary of responses to the consultation. Copies of both documents have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Working Hours

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the average number of working hours per week is for full-time UK workers; what information she collates on the EU average for full-time workers; and what plans she has to move the UK average closer to the EU average. [66900]

Alan Johnson: The average number of working hours per week for all full-time workers in the UK was 44.2 in 2000. This data was collected from the EU Labour Force Survey, which is also used to determine the EU average for full-time workers.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will be leading a tour, later this year, to examine working practices in the US and in EU member states.

Yachts (French Nationals)

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will hold discussions with (a) the European Commission and (b) the French Government on the operation of the French national rules requiring that yachts registered in France must be captained at all times by French nationals, with regard to the freedom of movement of labour within the EU; whether she has assessed the impact of these rules on the employment of UK nationals; and if she will make a statement. [62098]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 18 June 2002]: I have been asked to reply.

We support the principle of free movement of labour within the EU and the need to ensure that exceptions are clearly justified.

Government officials have previously been in contact with the European Commission about the French national rules, which the French Government have argued in the past reflect public duties placed on the captains of French vessels. The Commission has expressed the view that these appear compatible with Community law. My Department will consider any particular case that is brought to our attention.

UK Petrol Stations

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many petrol stations in the United Kingdom have installed vapour recovery equipment in the last year to comply with EC directives. [65248]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

Under Directive 94/63/EC, implemented under the Environment Protection Act 1990, from 31 December 2001 all existing petrol stations in the UK with an annual throughput greater than 500 cu m are required to have installed Stage I petrol vapour recovery controls. It is estimated that this measure is likely to have effected around 1,700 petrol stations in the UK over a six year period, based on 1998 site figures. In England and Wales local authorities are responsible for the implementation of Stage I equipment at petrol stations in their region. In Scotland this is the role of SEPA and in Northern Ireland the local enforcing authority.

DEFENCE

Ministerial Visits

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how often Ministers in his Department visited United States Government military bases and establishments on United Kingdom territory between 1 January 1997 and 1 January 1999; which Ministers were involved; what the date of the visit was; and which United States military facility was visited on each occasion. [53383]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 30 April 2002, Official Report, column 745W.

Sub-continent (Weapons Capability)

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what discussions he has held with the Secretary of State for International Development regarding increases in overall weapons capability of (a) India and (b) Pakistan between December 2001 and June 2002; [65430]

(2) what discussions he has held with the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry regarding increases in the overall weapons capability of (a) India and (b) Pakistan between December 2001 and June 2002; [65449]

(3) what discussions he has held with the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs regarding increases in the overall weapons capability of (a) India and (b) Pakistan between December 2001 and June 2002. [65429]

Mr. Hoon: In light of the recent tensions between India and Pakistan, I have discussed the weapon capabilities of India and Pakistan with Cabinet colleagues on several occasions during the period in question.

Munitions Depots

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are in place for (a) staff consultation, (b) assistance to staff from the employment service and (c) consultation with the local planning authority in respect of the closure of West Dean munitions depot. [65713]

Mr. Ingram: Defence Munitions (DM) entered into formal consultation procedures with the national trade unions on 24 June. Consultation is due to complete on 2 August. Each member of staff at the depot has been given a copy of a consultative document. As part of the Staff consultation process the local trade unions have been invited to an open day on 10 July, to be briefed on the background, conduct and findings of the work which led to the recommendation to close the DM site at Dean Hill.

Although their involvement in no way precluded the formal consultation process, TU representatives also provided valuable advice throughout the process.

The Ministry of Defence outplacement scheme will be involved should the depot close as proposed, and would help staff find alternative opportunities. This would include help in CV preparation, coaching in interviewing techniques, and retraining skills if appropriate.

The local planning authority (Test Valley) are aware of plans to close DM Dean Hill. They, Defence Estates and Defence Munitions have already met to discuss the potential impact of depot closure and options for developing the site.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the consultation period will end on his proposal to close Dean Hill munitions depot; and if he will list the consultees. [67833]

Mr. Ingram: The formal consultation period began with the issue of a Consultative Document on 24 June 2002 and was originally due to complete on 2 August. However, following recent representations from the trade unions the consultation period has been extended by two weeks and will now conclude on 16 August 2002. Formal consultation with the trade unions is being carried out at departmental level, i.e. with the MOD Council of Civil Service Unions (MOD CCSU) and the MOD Industrial Whitley Council (MOD DIWC). For completeness the Defence Police Federation and the Chief Police Officers' Association are also involved in this consultation exercise.

The formal consultation process is being supplemented by informal contact with the trade unions and staff within Defence Munitions. Officials of the DM Whitley committees have received personal copies of the consultation document, as has every member of staff in the Dean Hill depot. A copy has also been posted on an internal MOD website. The formal study report has also been sent to key members of the national trade unions and is available to DM staff and other TU representatives upon request. A DM trade union open day has been arranged for 10 July at which DM trade union representatives will hear about the background to the proposal to close the depot.

Low Flying

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact Apache training will have on Somerset; and if low-flying will be conducted in the county. [67589]

Dr. Moonie: Unfortunately, there are no uninhabited areas of the United Kingdom large enough to meet all our essential military aircraft training needs. It is, therefore, our policy that, in principle, the whole of the United Kingdom is open to low flying by military aircraft in order to spread the disturbance as thinly as possible.

The Ministry of Defence is fully committed to ensuring that our relationships with local communities are as harmonious as possible. To that extent, we will do all that we can to keep disturbance to an absolute minimum, while maintaining the training of the armed forces which is vital to their operational readiness. It is inevitable, however, that Somerset will see some proportion of military aircraft activity, including that of the Apache.

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints about low-flying military aircraft have been made by (a) residents of the county of Somerset and (b) residents of Taunton Deane in each of the last five years. [68546]

Dr. Moonie: The information requested is set out in the table below for each of the last five training years running from 1 April to 31 March. The numbers quoted will include a small number of inquiries as well as complaints.

Training Year	Complaints from residents of Somerset	Complaints from residents of Taunton Deane
1 April 1997–31 March 1998	241	36
1 April 1998–31 March 1999	224	23
1 April 1999–31 March 2000	236	37
1 April 2000–31 March 2001	195	24
1 April 2001–31 March 2002	230	26

Syd Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the pattern of military low flying activity in the United Kingdom during training year 2001–02. [69357]

Dr. Moonie: The ability to fly fast and low continues to be an essential skill in our armoury of tactics. Training for aircrew to achieve and maintain these skills is vital.

The amount of low flying training carried out in the UK Low Flying System (UKLFS) during the training year April 2001 to March 2002 was the minimum necessary for aircrew to reach and maintain these skills. Hours booked for low flying training in the UKLFS (excluding the Rotary Wing Dedicated User Areas, where different booking arrangements apply) during this period amounted to an overall increase of 8.7 per cent. compared to the previous training year. It is likely that there are a variety of reasons for this increase, such as preparation for operations, the return of Royal Air Force squadrons from Germany and low flying by the Eurofighter and Apache aircraft in preparation for their introduction into service. Since detailed records of hours booked began in 1995, the annual total has reduced by some 31 per cent.

The distribution of low flying training across the UK has not changed significantly over previous years. It is spread as widely as practicable, but for a variety of reasons including population distribution, and geographic and climatic considerations, it is inevitable that some parts of the country will see more low flying than others.

I have today placed in the Library of the House a report giving a detailed account of low flying training in the UK Low Flying System for the period April 2001 to March 2002.

Further copies of the report can be obtained from the following address: Directorate of Air Staff, Ministry of Defence, Room 6/62, Metropole Building, Northumberland Avenue, London WC2N 5BP or it can be viewed on the MOD's website: www.mod.uk/issues/lowflying.

Red Dragon Project

Syd Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what capacity of fixed wing aircraft work will be required for the Red Dragon Project in the Defence Aviation Repair Agency; and from where a shortfall will be made up by rotary wing aircraft work. [67733]

Mr. Ingram: Currently, there are 90 aircraft, on average, undergoing work in the St. Athan Fixed Wing Business Unit. Existing plans envisage Red Dragon project would cater for 48 fixed wing aircraft, and takes account of process improvements and future fleet reductions. Filling the facility will be dependent on the Defence Aviation Repair Agency successfully winning competitions for this work after the guaranteed order book expires in April 2004. There are no current plans to transfer rotary wing work to St. Athan.

War Graves

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with (a) the British Embassy in Paris, (b) the Commonwealth War Graves Commission and (c) the French Government concerning the graves of soldiers killed at the Somme. [68611]

Dr. Moonie: I have had no recent discussions with the British embassy in Paris, the Commonwealth War Graves Commission or the French Government about war graves in the Somme. However, the embassy is maintaining close contacts with the French authorities who are involved with proposals for a third airport for Paris. Early indications had suggested this project might affect war grave cemeteries maintained by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission in the Chaulnes area of the Somme.

The Ministry of Defence has had no further discussions on this subject since the new French Government made clear that it would be looking again, from first principles, at the need for a third airport in the Paris basin. We are monitoring this review process very closely; we do not expect an early conclusion to be reached.

Gurkha Soldiers

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will take steps to equalise the pensions paid to former Gurkha soldiers who served with the British forces with the pensions paid to other soldiers; [68452]

(2) what steps he will take to provide equality of terms and conditions of employment for the Gurkha soldiers serving with the British armed forces. [68453]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. and learned Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Hereford (Mr. Keetch) on 7 May 2002, Official Report, columns 44–45W.

Royal Marines

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people joined the ranks of the Royal Marines in the past five years; what regions they were from; and how many of them are below the age of 17 years. [68538]

Mr. Ingram: In the last five years a total of 219 officers and 5,379 other ranks (RMORs) have joined the Royal Marines, as follows.

	Officers	RMOR
2001–02	61	1,159
2000–01	41	1,117
1999–2000	39	1,148
1998–99	38	1,048
1997–98	40	907

Details on the regions of origin are not recorded. We do however, record for RMORs only, a southern and northern split from the Humber to north Wales. The figures for these two areas are:

Southern region: 2,906

Northern region: 2,473.

Service Children's Education

Mr. Bailey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the key targets are for 2002–03 for the chief executive of Service Children's Education. [69356]

Dr. Moonie: The chief executive has been set the following Key Targets for 2002–03:

Key Target 1—To meet the following percentage of pupils achieving Level 2 or above at the end of Key Stage 1 in:

Reading: 90 per cent.

Writing: 92 per cent.

Spelling: 82 per cent.

Mathematics: 95 per cent.

Key Target 2—To meet the following percentage of pupils achieving Level 4 or above at the end of Key Stage 2 in:

English: 78 per cent.

Mathematics: 75 per cent.

Science: 92 per cent.

Key Target 3—To meet the following percentage of pupils achieving Level 5 or above at the end of Key Stage 3 in:

English: 77 per cent.

Mathematics: 78 per cent.

Science: 76 per cent.

Key Target 4—To maintain the following three-year rolling average percentage of Year 11 pupils in Service Children's Education (SCE) achieving five or more higher (A*-C) grades in GCSE of 52 per cent.

Key Target 5—To maintain the following three-year rolling average of subject entries achieving passes at grades A-C at 'A' Level of 64 per cent.

Key Target 6—The following percentages of SCE schools are to achieve the grades stipulated below against the four attributes in Ofsted reports of:

School climate: Grade 2 or above: 100 per cent.

Standards; Quality; Management and Efficiency.

Grade 3 or above: 100 per cent.

Grade 2 or above: 85 per cent.

Key Target 7—To respond in full to customers seeking education advice from SCE(UK) within the following time scales:

93 per cent. within 10 working days of receipt.

Remainder within 20 working days of receipt.

Key Target 8—To develop 'value added' performance criteria for incorporation in Key Targets 1–5 for 2003 and beyond.

Key Target 9—Demonstrate customer satisfaction with a survey result of:

For Army Continuous Attitude Surveys: 69 per cent. satisfaction or more.

India

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the talks with India concerning (a) India's acquisition of spare parts and strategic equipment for Indian Air Force Jaguar ground-attack fighters, (b) the purchase of a British aircraft carrier and (c) conclusion of the Hawk-100 Advanced Jet Trainer deal. [66019]

Dr. Moonie: In accordance with his ministerial responsibilities, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has the opportunity to discuss a range of defence matters, including defence export opportunities, with Ministers and senior officials from the Government of India. The purchase of a British aircraft carrier has not been formally raised by the Indians.

SanEagle

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to use the SanEagle for British reconnaissance missions; and if he will make a statement. [67423]

Mr. Ingram: The SanEagle equipment is not part of our current reconnaissance inventory, and is not known to the Ministry of Defence.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General with reference to the proposal to introduce a system where, before trial, interviews of certain key witnesses are conducted by the prosecutor in a limited category of cases, what categories of cases are being considered; and what criteria were used to establish categories of cases. [59342]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 12 June 2002]: No such proposal has been made. The Attorney-General has asked the Director of Public Prosecutions, as part of his review of the handling of the Damilola Taylor murder trial, to consider whether the time has come to introduce a system where, before trial, interviews of certain key witnesses are conducted by the prosecutor in a limited category of cases. The Director is due to report to the Attorney-General later this year and an announcement will be made at that time.

Damilola Taylor Case

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what the terms of reference are of the review being undertaken by the DPP in relation to the Damilola Taylor case. [59341]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 12 June 2002]: The DPP's review has the following terms of reference:

> To review the handling of the Damilola Taylor case, and in doing so, > consider the implications for the conduct of future cases and to make recommendations;
> examine whether the time has come to introduce a system where, before trial, the prosecutor in a limited category of cases conducts interviews of certain witnesses.

The DPP is expected to report by the end of August.

Criminal Justice and Trial Units

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General which of the co-located criminal justice and trial units are located within the court; and what assessment she has made of the benefits of co-locating criminal justice and trial units within the court complex. [59465]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 12 June 2002]: There are currently no co-located criminal justice units or trial units located in court accommodation. It follows that no assessment of the benefits of co-locating within the court complex has been made.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs on how many occasions in the last 12 months the requirement to engage in a competitive tendering process has been waived by her Department due to national security obligations under paragraph 6(h) of the supply regulations. [62816]

Mr. Morley: From information held centrally there have been no occasions in the last 12 months when the requirement to engage in a competitive tendering process has been waived by the Department due to national security obligations under paragraph 6(h) of the supply regulations.

Annual Leave

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average annual leave entitlement is for staff in her Department in 2002. [64657]

Mr. Morley: Following machinery of government changes and the creation of the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, all staff outside the senior civil service were given an annual leave entitlement of 30 days from 1 August 2001. This was done as one of the first steps towards harmonising terms and conditions of service for the then ex-MAFF and ex-DETR staff who joined together to form the new Department.

The annual leave entitlement for members of the senior civil service is currently set by Cabinet Office at 30 days.

Staff working part-time or alternative working patterns are entitled to a proportional amount based on either the number of days or hours they work.

Responsibility for leave matters within the Central Science Laboratory, the Veterinary Laboratories Agency and the Centre for Environmental Fisheries and Aquaculture Agency—all former MAFF Agencies—has been delegated to the Agency Chief Executives and I have asked them to reply direct. The Pesticides Safety Directorate, the Rural Payments Agency and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate Agencies are covered by the departmental response.

Letter from Professor Mike Roberts to Mr. John Bercow, dated July 2002:

> The Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs has asked me to reply, in respect of the Central Science Laboratory, to your question concerning annual leave entitlement in 2002.
> CSL staff outside the Senior Civil Service receive an annual leave allowance as follows:
> Staff with less than 10 years service: 25 days
> Staff with over 10 years service: 30 days
> Based on the above, the average annual leave entitlement for CSL staff in leave year 2002 is 26.5 days.
> Annual leave entitlement for members of the Senior Civil Service is currently set by the Cabinet Office at 30 days.

Letter from Professor Steven Edwards to Mr. John Bercow, dated June 2002:

> The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question on what the average annual leave entitlement is for staff in her Department in 2002.
> All VLA staff outside the Senior Civil Service are entitled to 25 days annual leave on appointment and 30 days when they have completed 10 years service. Staff working part-time or alternative working patterns are entitled to a proportional amount based on either the number of days or hours they work.
> Information about the average leave entitlement could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Letter from Mr. Greig-Smith to Mr. John Bercow, dated 4 July 2002:

> The Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs has asked Agency Chief Executives to reply to your question concerning the average annual leave entitlement for their staff.
> Staff at the Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science have an annual leave allowance of 25 days on entry, rising to 30 days after 10 years service.

EU Directives

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the EU directives relating to her Department which have been (a) amended and (b) repealed in 2002. [64940]

Mr. Morley: In answer to part (a) the table lists directives adopted in 2002, for which DEFRA is the lead Department, which amend previously adopted directives alongside the numbers of the amended directives.

In answer to part (b), the only directive to have been repealed in 2002 for which DEFRA is the lead Department is 1974/649/EEC (on marketing material for the vegetative propagation of vine). This was repealed by Directive 2002/11/EC.

Directive number	Directive name	Amending directive
2002/48/EC	Amending Council Directive 91/414/EEC to include Improvalicarb, Prosulfuron, and Sulfosulfuron as active substances	1991/414/EEC
2002/42/EC	Fixing of maximum levels of pesticide residue in cereals, foodstuffs of animal origins and certain products of plant origins	Certain Annexes to 1986/362/EEC, 1986/363/EEC and 1990/642/EEC
2002/37/EC	Amending Council Directive 91/414/EEC to include Ethofumesate as an active	1991/414/EEC
2002/36/EC	Protective Measures against introductions of organisms harmful to plant or plant products	Certain Annexes to 2000/29/EC
2002/29/EC	Certain protected zones exposed to particular plant health risks	2001/32/EC
2002/28/EC	Measures against the introduction of organisms harmful to plants	Certain Annexes to 2000/29/EC
2002/23/EC	Maximum levels of pesticides residues	Certain Annexes to 1986/362/EEC, 1986/363/EEC and 1990/642/EEC
2002/18/EC	Placing of plant protection products on the market isoproturon	Annex I to 1991/414/EEC
2002/11/EC	Marketing of material for the vegetative propagation of vine	1968/193/EEC
2002/8/EC	Minimum conditions for examining vegetables and agricultural varieties	1972/168/EEC and 1972/180/EEC
2002/5/EC	Maximum levels for pesticides residues	Annex II to 1990/642/EEC

Littering Offences

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total amount of fines levied against those prosecuted for littering offences in the United Kingdom was in each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement. [64732]

Mr. Meacher: The total amount of fines levied with respect to Fixed Penalty Notices (FPNs) issued for littering offences in England in each of the last five years was:

No data in 1996–97

£16,505 in 1997–98

£63,240 in 1998–99

£39,075 in 1999–2000

£28,475 in 2000–01.

For those FPNs not paid within 14 days, offenders may then be prosecuted in a magistrates court up to a value of £2,500. Data for fines issued by a magistrates court show that during the year 1999 the total fine was £28,732, in addition to those listed. We do not hold data prior to, nor subsequent to 1999 for fines issued by magistrates courts for non-payment of fixed penalty notices.

Benthic Fauna

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment her Department has (a) made and (b) intends to make of the impact of (i) dredging and (ii) other marine activities on benthic fauna; and if she will make a statement. [65503]

Mr. Morley: The Department does not regulate dredging but does provide advice to the Department of Transport and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on the effects of navigation and aggregate dredging respectively on the marine environment, including benthic fauna.

With regard to other marine activities, the Department assesses the potential impact on benthic life of proposals which are the subject of applications for licences under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to deposit substances or articles in the sea. This includes proposals to dispose of dredged material and for a wide range of marine construction activities.

The Department is funding a programme of research on the effects of aggregate dredging, including the rate of recovery of benthic life after dredging has ceased. In addition the Department's Centre for Environment Fisheries and Aquaculture Science are involved in ongoing research on the impact of fishing activities on the seabed and on the wider marine environment.

0870 Telephone Numbers

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is on using 0870 telephone numbers for inquiries by the public to the Department and its agencies. [66192]

Mr. Morley: DEFRA operates helpline numbers for people seeking information or assistance. Some of these services are free of charge but most use local rate call numbers with 0845 prefixes; however one, the Pets Travel Scheme Helpline, uses the prefix 0870.

The decisions on which category of number to allocate are taken after assessing the cost effectiveness of each service in terms of meeting the needs of potential users while minimising expenditure.

Bovine TB

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what staff and resources were allocated in each year since 1999 towards the bovine TB problem in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Herefordshire and (d) Worcestershire. [65690]

Mr. Morley: The information requested on a county basis is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Expenditure by the State Veterinary Service (Field) on the bovine TB programme is shown in Table 1. This includes the cost of local and temporary veterinary inspectors but does not include compensation.

Table 1: State Veterinary Service (field) expenditure on the bovine TB programme in England and Wales

	Expenditure
	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
England	7,757,183	7,574,217	7,955,962
Wales	920,011	1,472,469	1,240,032

The amount of compensation paid for cattle slaughtered to control bovine TB from 1999 to 2001 is shown in Table 2. Compensation figures are only readily available for Great Britain as a whole and are collated on a calendar year basis.

Table 2: TB compensation in Great Britain

Expenditure	£
1999	5,770,983
2000	7,307,797
2001	7,074,125

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of Central Science Laboratory research relating to badgers feeding in cattle troughs. [66347]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The study by Central Science Laboratory and Sussex university showed that badgers frequently visited buildings on two farms in Gloucestershire, to exploit a range of food items. During some visits cattle feed was contaminated with badger faeces and badgers came into close direct contact with housed cattle. Given that there is a substantial body of circumstantial evidence implicating the badger in the transmission of bovine TB to cattle, such situations could potentially carry a high risk of infection. CSL will embark on a wider-scale DEFRA funded study later this year to investigate this phenomenon further.

These findings emphasise the need for good biosecurity on farms and the need to minimise access of this kind from badgers.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many cattle were slaughtered after a positive TB test in each year since 1997. [66805]

Mr. Morley: The number of animals compulsorily slaughtered as TB reactors or as direct contacts is given in the table.

Number of cattle compulsorily slaughtered as TB reactors or contacts in Great Britain

	Number of animals slaughtered
	TB reactors[1]	Contacts[2]	Total[3]
1997	3,213	456	3,669
1998	4,958	926	5,884
1999[4]	5,910	862	6,772
2000[4]	7,031	1,322	8,353
2001[4]	5,347	904	6,251

[1] Animals which gave a positive result (i.e. reacted) to the tuberculin test and were compulsorily slaughtered.

[2] Animals which, under the terms of Directive 64/432 as amended, were considered to have been direct contacts exposed to TB and therefore compulsorily slaughtered.

[3] Animals compulsorily slaughtered because they reacted to the tuberculin test of because they were considered to be direct contacts. Not all the animals will necessarily be confirmed as being infected with Mycobacterium bovis.

[4] Provisional: data for 1999 onwards will remain provisional until all culture results are available and final data validation carried out.

Buildings Insurance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the cost of buildings insurance to her Department was (a) before and (b) after 11 September 2001. [66936]

Mr. Morley: Departments are required to comply with the Government's general policy on insurance, which is set out in "Government Accounting", chapter 30, para 30.2.5, which notes that Government do not need to purchase insurance to protect the viability of its business, and should consider insurance only where the value of claims met would exceed the cost of insurance premiums. Commercial insurance of a building is acceptable in cases where (a) insurance is a condition of a lease (b) the lessor will not accept a Government indemnity (c) incurring the total cost of the accommodation in question, including the cost of the insurance, is more cost-effective than other accommodation options ("Government Accounting", para 30.2.11a).

Commercial insurance is not usually payable in respect of leasehold properties where the Department is the sole occupier. In the case of leasehold property shared with other tenants, the cost of insurance is not always identified separately by our landlords. Furthermore, premiums are payable at different times of the year and our landlords may not have had to renew cover since 11 September 2001.

It is not possible, therefore, to provide a precise assessment of the cost of commercial buildings insurance paid by the Department either before of after 11 September 2001. However, where insurance premiums have been separately charged this year, they have increased by between 3 per cent. and 90 per cent. It is impossible to say what proportion of these increases is due to the events of 11 September 2001.

Building Values

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the buildings owned by her Department and estimate the market value of each of them. [66954]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 339W.

Contamination Risk

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the process by which her Department analyses risk from (a) crops and (b) animal feed contaminated with (i) industrial chemicals, (ii) pesticides and (iii) drugs. [66348]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The Government undertake an extensive surveillance programme for pesticide residues. Priority is given to the surveillance of crops but some animal feed is also tested. A total of some 4,000 samples are analysed each year for a wide range of pesticides generating over 100,000 individual test results. The results for the testing programme are all published in the quarterly reports of the independent Pesticide Residues Committee (PRC) available on its website at www.pesticides.gov.uk/committees/PRC/prc.htm

A consumer risk assessment is conducted in relation to all residues which exceed a statutory maximum residue level or are otherwise of potential concern. The methodology used in these risk assessments and their outcomes are described in the PRC's reports.

The methodology of risk assessment for residues in animal feeds is more complex. It assesses both the potential risk to the animal and the potential risk to humans consuming animal products from the animal. Ministers are advised on the aspects of risk assessment for pesticides by an independent expert committee, the Advisory Committee on Pesticides (ACP). Details of the committee are available from its website at www.pesticides.gov.uk/committees/acp/acp.htm

While the VMD does not analyse feed for contamination with drugs, it does operate a surveillance programme for veterinary drug residues in animals and animal products. If residues are found in excess of specified limits, the cause is investigated.

Japanese Knotweed

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her Department's policy is on controlling the spread of Japanese Knotweed. [67922]

Mr. Morley: Japanese Knotweed is a large, vigorous weed. It is a non-native introduction which appears to have no natural enemies in Britain. It is an offence under Section 14 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act (1981) to plant or otherwise cause Japanese Knotweed to grow in the wild. There is no obligation on landowners to control Japanese Knotweed on their own land.

The Department is currently undertaking a fundamental review of policy on invasive non-native species, with other Government Departments, industry and conservation bodies, considering the causes of, and problems arising from, the introduction and spread of non-native species.

With regard to relevant research, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Matthew Taylor) on 25 June 2002, Official Report, column 760W.

Temporary Staff

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many part- and full-time employees under contract from temping agencies work within her Department; and how much was spent on temporary staff (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the total staffing budget in her Department and its predecessors for each of the last five years for which figures are available. [66743]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 July 2002]: The number of employees working under contract from temping agencies is not held centrally by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The cost of staff employed under contract from temping agencies for each of the last five years is shown in the table. For the years 1997–98 to 2000–01, the amounts shown are for the former MAFF only. Costs relating to the parts of the former Department for Environment, Transport and the Regions that transferred to DEFRA could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

	Cost of temping agency staff (£)	Percentage of total staff costs
1997–98	995,205	n/a
1998–99	1,468,559	1.03
1999–2000	1,792,277	1.20
2000–01	3,645,881	2.26
2001–02	906,899	0.41

Forestry Commission

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs for what reason the Forestry Commission is seeking a licence to fell trees on land at the rear of The Gables, West Moors Road, Ferndown. [68000]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The Forestry Commission does not apply for felling licences, it issues them. In this particular case, the Commission received an application for a licence to fell trees with an aim to improve the management of the woodland area. The trees were subject to a tree preservation order, so the Commission consulted East Dorset district council who then raised an objection to the proposed felling. The application now therefore falls to be determined by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister under the terms of the tree preservation order. A hearing to consider the application is scheduled to take place on 23 July.

Welfare of Laying Hens Directive

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what (a) variations and (b) additions she plans to introduce when the EU Welfare of Laying Hens Directive is transposed into UK law. [68378]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The EU Welfare of Laying Hens Directive has now been transposed into law in England by the Welfare of Farmed Animals (England) Amendment Regulations 2002. These Regulations came into force on 25 June.

Our approach in drawing up these regulations was to implement the directive without adding to it or varying from it.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she will take to ensure that poultry farmers in the United Kingdom meet the same standards of animal welfare as other EU nations following the implementation of the EU Welfare of Laying Hens Directive. [68379]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 9 July 2002]: EU member states are responsible for bringing into force the necessary regulations to implement the EU Welfare of Laying Hens Directive and for communicating the main provisions of the national law to the commission.

The EU commission is responsible for monitoring enforcement by member states.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to ensure that egg importers meet the same animal welfare standards as those set within the United Kingdom and across Europe under the forthcoming EU Welfare of Laying Hens Directive. [68377]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 9 July 200]: Current WTO rules prevent discrimination on the basis of production method and it is illegal under WTO rules to ban egg imports from countries which do not meet the same animal welfare standards as those produced in the EU.

However, the EU has been successful in getting non-trade concerns, which include animal welfare, firmly written into the Doha development agenda.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the compliance cost to poultry farmers in meeting the EU Welfare of Laying Hens Directive in respect of (a) capital expenditure and (b) additional annual revenue implications. [68376]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 9 July 2002]: A regulatory impact assessment estimating compliance costs to poultry farmers in meeting the EU Welfare of Laying Hens Directive was produced following public consultation. This was laid before the House along with the Statutory Instrument to implement the directive.

Wood for Good Campaign

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will make a statement regarding the Government's objectives for the Wood for Good campaign; [68098]

(2) what guidance her Department has provided on the Forestry Commission's Wood for Good website (a) to the public and businesses to help them ensure they do not buy wood which may have come from illegal or non-sustainable sources and (b) in the promotion of certified timber. [68101]

Mr. Morley: The Wood for Good campaign is sponsored by the Forestry Commission (the Government's Department for forestry throughout Great Britain), the Northern Ireland Forestry Service, the Nordic Timber Council, the UK Sawn Wood Promoters, the Timber Trade Federation and the Forestry and Timber Association. All sponsors are committed to sustainable forest management and they encourage independent certification. The Government support the campaign's objectives, which are to "increase the consumption of wood; change perceptions about wood; encourage its use in interior and exterior design, and building; to tackle issues surrounding the use of wood; and to encourage good practice in the industry". The Forestry Commission's own website, which links to the Wood for Good website, covers issues such as illegal and non-sustainable sources of timber, and on certification.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much funding the United Kingdom Government have allocated to the Forestry Commission in each year since 1997; and how much of this allocation the Forestry Commission has dedicated to the Wood for Good campaign in each of the years the campaign will be running. [68102]

Mr. Morley: The funds voted to the Forestry Commission each year since 1997 are given in the table.

		£000
1997–98	England/Scotland/Wales and GB activities	52,426
1998–99	England/Scotland/Wales and GB activities	51,325
1999–2000	England/Scotland/Wales and GB activities	[1]76,115
2000–01	England/Wales and GB activities	[2]80,165
2001–02	England and GB activities	70,608
2002–03	England and GB activities	59,793

[1] Scottish Parliament responsible for funding Forestry Commission activities in Scotland from 1 July 1999.

[2] National Assembly for Wales responsible for funding Forestry Commission activities in Wales from 1 April 2001.

The Forestry Commission's contribution to the Wood for Good campaign is £250,000 in 2000–01, £205,000 in 2001–02, £125,000 in 2002–03 and £125,000 in 2003–04.

Camelid Movements

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether she intends to amend the current rules on camelid movements; and if she will make a statement. [69537]

Mr. Morley: Orders made today will simplify the current rules on livestock movements from 31 July. Camelids (including llamas) and zoo animals will no longer require movement licences or be subject to biosecurity requirements for livestock shows and sales. In addition, sheep dipping, tagging and scanning will no longer require a licence. The rules for multiple pick-ups and multiple drop-offs of livestock will also be simplified.

Graffiti

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what action (a) has been taken and (b) is planned by her Department to tackle problems of graffiti; and if she will make a statement; [64733]

(2) what advertising campaigns (a) have taken place and (b) are planned by (i) her Department, (ii) the Environment Agency and (iii) other Government bodies in relation to tackling problems from graffiti; how much these have cost; what assessment has been made of their effect; and if she will make a statement; [64735]

(3) what (a) advice and guidance has been given by her Department and (b) legislation is in place with relation to tackling problems of graffiti; and if she will make a statement. [64734]

Mr. Denham: I have been asked to reply.

Tackling graffiti requires action by several Government Departments. It is one of the subjects that is being addressed in the cross cutting review on Improving Public Spaces.

Writing graffiti is an offence under the Criminal Damage Act 1971. Where criminal proceedings are not appropriate it can also be dealt with through a number of measures designed to address anti-social behaviour, including anti-social behaviour orders.

Neighbourhood wardens programmes and proposals for community safety officers will also help to reduce yobbish behaviour, such as graffiti writing. Crime and Disorder Partnerships are also working with local communities to tackle graffiti.

I understand that the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs has not undertaken any advertising campaigns that are specific to graffiti.

Sand and Gravel Extraction

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement about her policy with regard to inshore sand and gravel excavation; and whether environmentally sensitive areas will be protected. [67478]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to answer.

There is no UK-wide policy on sand extraction.

Guidance on sand and gravel extraction from above mean low water in England is set out within Minerals Policy Guidance Notes 6 (MPG6) and 15 (MPG15). Draft revised national estimates of demand, and indicative regional forecasts of supply, of construction aggregates within England for the period to 2016 will be published for public consultation during the summer. Consideration will be given to review of the policies in MPG6 and MPG15 during 2003.

Proposed Government Policy for sand and gravel dredging from below mean low water in English waters was set out in Draft Marine Minerals Guidance Note 2: Guidance on the Extraction of Sand, Gravel and Other Minerals from the Seabed. This was published for public consultation in February 2001. It is intended that final guidance for English waters will be published within the next few weeks.

Policy and guidance on sand extraction in Wales is a matter for the Welsh Assembly Government.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

UN Children's Fund

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what support her Department is giving to the UN Children's Fund in addressing child rights in its programmes. [67489]

Clare Short: My Department is collaborating with UNICEF to assist in building its capacity to apply human rights approaches to all areas of its programming. The current programme began in early 2000 and runs until the end of 2003 at an overall cost of about £3.78 million. The work includes:

the development of guidance and training materials;

human resource development;

documentation, assessment, monitoring and dissemination of experiences; developing indicators for monitoring;

strengthening regional capacities;

strengthening the rights-based approach to integrated management of childhood illness.

We also contribute to this objective through a range of partnerships with UNICEF regional programmes. The goal is to ensure promotion and facilitation of sustained poverty reduction for children and women, particularly those from excluded families, communities and groups.

Structural Reforms

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent analysis the World bank and IMF have sent to her Department of the poverty and social impact of structural reforms supported by their programmes in poor countries; in how many instances the impact has been found to be negative; and what mitigating measures the World bank and IMF have agreed to in order to support in such instances. [67771]

Clare Short: Over recent months the British Government have pressed both the World bank and IMF for a timetable of poverty and social impact analysis (PSIA), setting out the policy reforms that need to be analysed and who will support countries to do the analysis. We welcome the commitment of both institutions to PSIA. We have also supported PSIA pilots in six countries in order to demonstrate how it can be carried out.

Of the 35 IMF Poverty Reduction and Growth Facility (PRGF)-supported programmes considered by the IMF Board between 1 July 2000 and 30 September 2001, IMF staff papers show that roughly 60 per cent. include some form of PSIA—though only around a third of PRGF-supported programmes had full studies undertaken to assess the effects of specific policies ('formal' PSIA).

Figures are not available on the number of instances in which PSIA has shown IMF structural reforms to have been negative. However around two thirds of PRGF-supported programmes over the period included some measures aimed to offset potentially adverse short-term effects of either macroeconomic reforms, structural reforms or exogenous shocks on the poor. There is also evidence of PSIA influencing the design of economic policies. Examples include Uganda, where plans to liberalise the sugar industry were changed; Senegal, where 15–20 per cent. diesel and kerosene subsidies were maintained rather than eliminated; and Cambodia, where large-scale retrenchment of civil servants was delayed until safety nets for retrenchees could be put in place.

The World bank have made similar commitments to use PSIA in their Poverty Reduction Support Credits. The British Government see all these documents, given our membership of the World Bank Board. IMF and World bank reviews of PRGFs and Poverty Reduction Strategies respectively contain further information on PSIA. These can be found at www.imf.org and www.wordbank.org.

Africa

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much aid in real terms the Government have given to (a) Africa and (b) Zimbabwe over the last five years. [68544]

Clare Short: The UK has given the following amounts to Zimbabwe and Africa, in current and constant prices, over the last five financial years.

GPEX[1] in Zimbabwe and Africa in current and constant 2000–01 prices

£ thousand

	Africa	Zimbabwe
Current prices

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking to help bring down the cost of anti-retroviral drugs for those suffering from HIV/AIDS in developing countries. [68324]

Clare Short: The UK's Working Group on Access to Medicines, which I chair, is looking at options for bringing about widespread, sustainable and predictable differential pricing of essential medicines, so that such medicines can be made available to the world's poor at affordable prices. The group's final meeting is on 25 July, after which it will report back to the Prime Minister. Differential pricing could apply to anti-retrovirals, which are now on the World Health Organisation's (WHO) essential drug list. We are encouraging key partners—pharmaceutical industry, developing countries, donors and international organisations—to play their part in making widespread differential pricing a reality.

The Government recognise that affordability is only one of four key factors that WHO has identified as influencing access to medicines. There is also a need for sustainable financing, the rational selection and use of existing drugs, and reliable health and supply systems.

On sustainable financing, we have pledged $200 million over five years to the Global Fund to Fight TB, AIDS and Malaria (GFATM). We have also committed over £1 billion, since 1997, to strengthening developing countries health systems, building their capacity both to deliver medicines to the poor and to make effective choices about the selection and use of drugs.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures her Department is taking to (a) help with humanitarian aid and (b) educate people in areas with a high risk of AIDS. [67797]

Clare Short: The purpose of DFID humanitarian assistance policy is to save lives and relieve suffering; hasten recovery, and protect and rebuild livelihoods and communities; and reduce risks and vulnerability to future crises. The poor, and those whose vulnerability is increased due to disease, such as HIV/AIDS, are disproportionately affected by disasters and conflict. For example, in southern Africa, a serious drought has led to food shortages, which have stretched the coping capacity of the poorest families, many of whom are already suffering from having one or more of their family with HIV/AIDS. I have recently allocated £45 million to support the most vulnerable people in Zimbabwe, Zambia, Malawi, Lesotho and Swaziland.

My Department supports comprehensive HIV/AIDS prevention programmes tailored to local needs and situations. These can include interventions such as condoms, harm reduction, educating youth and safe needle exchange programmes. As part of DFID's HIV/AIDS strategy, we have identified a focus on working with the most vulnerable groups in the society, which often include women, commercial sex workers, injecting drug users and men who have sex with men. Education leading to behavioural change is a central element of our strategy towards fighting the HIV/AIDS epidemic. It forms the basis for any prevention, treatment and intervention programme.

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many and what proportion of the public service agreements of her Department set out in the document, "Public Services for the Future 1998", have been met; and if she will make a statement. [68709]

Clare Short: My Department's 1999–2002 public service agreement (PSA) set 13 outcome targets of which eight were met, three were not updated due to lack of data, and two were not met. It also set 26 productivity targets, of which five were not met.

Full details of progress against the 1999–2002 PSA can be found in DFID's 2002 departmental report.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Victims of Terrorist Violence

5. Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Government's policies on the support given to victims of terrorist violence in Northern Ireland. [65803]

7. Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent policy initiatives he has undertaken regarding the treatment of victims of terrorist violence. [65805]

Dr. John Reid: This Government were the first to acknowledge the needs of all the victims of the troubles; this remains a priority. Since 1998 the Government have allocated over £18.25 million to victims' initiatives.

Police Service

8. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to consolidate public support for the new Police Service of Northern Ireland. [65806]

Jane Kennedy: Together with the Police Service of Northern Ireland and the Policing Board we are working to bring about a new beginning to policing. The Policing Board, with nationalist participation, has an extensive range of powers to hold the police to account. The 50:50 recruitment campaign has produced a strong cross-community response, with 35 per cent. of applications coming from Catholics. There are around 350 new recruits who have completed or who are now in training.

Later this year, District Policing Partnerships will be established. They will have a significant role in increasing local accountability and will provide a forum for the police to work more closely with the community they serve.

The Government believe that, in the light of the enormous changes made to date, all parts of the community should support the police.

15. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on commitments given to Sinn Fein on further reform of the police service of Northern Ireland. [65813]

Jane Kennedy: The only commitments we have made on further reform of policing are those set out in the updated implementation plan which was issued to all Northern Ireland political parties and placed in the Library of the House in August last year.

A review is currently under way after which the Government will bring forward legislation to reflect further the Patten recommendations. All Northern Ireland political parties have been invited to contribute.

Decommissioning

9. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the decommissioning of illegally held weapons in Northern Ireland. [65807]

Jane Kennedy: The Government have consistently called for decommissioning from all paramilitary organisations. We have had two acts of decommissioning from the IRA. That must be the start of a process. It is imperative that we now see reciprocation from loyalists, so that all groups are committed to the normal political process in resolving its problems, and thereby creating a better Northern Ireland.

25. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent progress has been made towards decommissioning. [65824]

Jane Kennedy: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton and Shepherd's Bush (Mr. Soley).

Implementation Group

10. Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the recent meeting of the implementation group; and what the implications are for the future of the devolved institutions. [65808]

Dr. John Reid: At the implementation group on 26 June, and the meetings of the Northern Ireland parties with the Prime Minister and Taoiseach on 4 July, participants recognised the Belfast Agreement had brought great gains; but also that continuing violence and signs of paramilitary activity threaten community confidence. The Government agreed to reflect further on how best to address concerns about the necessary transition from violence to democracy. Before Parliament rises we will set out how we believe the necessary sense of confidence—which underpins the Agreement and the devolved institutions—can be restored.

Bill of Rights

11. Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the proposed Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland. [65809]

Dr. John Reid: The Belfast Agreement tasked the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission with consulting and advising on the scope for defining, in Westminster legislation, rights supplementary to those in the European Convention on Human Rights and to reflect the particular circumstances of Northern Ireland.

The Commission published a consultation document, "Making a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland", in September 2001 and is currently considering the responses it has received to that document.

The Government will reach no policy conclusions on the proposals until the final advice is received from the Commission. This advice is expected in 2003.

Community Safety Partnerships

12. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what role he plans for voluntary and community organisations in the proposed community safety partnerships. [65810]

Dr. John Reid: Community Safety Partnerships are made up of the statutory organisations responsible for the delivery of services at a local level. The Partnership should engage with voluntary and community organisations to identify issues of concern at a local level and develop collaborative ways of tackling these issues. The Partnership should determine how best to interface with the voluntary and community sector.

Organised Crime

13. Colin Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what strategic issues are being considered by the organised crime task force; and if he will make a statement. [65811]

Jane Kennedy: On 23 May, the Secretary of State launched the second annual organised crime task force (OCTF) threat assessment and strategy.

The OCTF's strategy for countering the threat sets priority stress for concerted multi-agency action by the OCTF partners. These are extortion, drugs, oils-related fraud, tobacco and alcohol duty evasion, money-laundering, counterfeit goods and armed robbery.

In the year, the OCTF, which I chair, will keep a watching brief on emerging and new organised crime trends. The OCTF strategy also explains how we will measure and report on the overall impact we are having on organised crime in Northern Ireland.

16. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the areas of criminality in which organised crime networks are involved in Northern Ireland. [65814]

Jane Kennedy: On 23 May, the Secretary of State launched the second annual Organised Crime Task Force (OCTF) threat assessment and strategy.

The OCTF threat assessment shows that organised criminals engage in a wide range of criminal activities in Northern Ireland. These include: trade in illegal drugs; extortion; tobacco and alcohol smuggling and duty evasion; oils fraud; counterfeit goods; money laundering; counterfeit currency; organised vehicle theft; armed robbery and hijacking; abuse of social security payments; illegal livestock trade; evasion of tax and VAT; various financial frauds; identity fraud; motor vehicle licensing fraud; hi-tech crime; illegal immigration; and prostitution.

In the year, the OCTF, which I chair, will keep a watching brief on emerging and new organised crime trends. The OCTF strategy also explains how we will measure and report on the overall impact we are having on organised crime in Northern Ireland.

18. Linda Gilroy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action is being taken to tackle counterfeiting operations by organised crime gangs. [65816]

Jane Kennedy: On 23 May, the Secretary of State launched the second annual Organised Crime Task Force (OCTF) threat assessment and strategy.

Recognising the adverse impact of the counterfeit goods trade on the Northern Ireland business community and on society more generally, the OCTF has made this crime a priority for concerted multi-agency action by the OCTF partners.

There have been some significant operational successes in the last year. The police are doing excellent work every week to tackle the trade in counterfeit goods. At the last OCTF meeting, a strategy prepared by PSNI for tackling the counterfeit goods trade was agreed. The strategy includes raising awareness of the wider harm caused by this illicit trade, understanding better the reasons why people purchase such goods, working with the business community to address those reasons, and considering whether the existing legislation is sufficient.

Terrorist Activity

14. Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the level of illegal activities by terrorist organisations in Northern Ireland. [65812]

Jane Kennedy: The table provides details of the level of paramilitary activity from both sides during the last year.

Security situation statistics: 29 June 2001–28 June 2002

	By Loyalists	By Republicans
Number of deaths as a result of the security situation	9	4
Number of shooting incidents	209	115
Number of bombing incidents	271	52
Number of casualties as a result of paramilitary style assaults	81	36
Number of casualties as a result of paramilitary style shootings	110	66

Notes:

1. Includes all deaths due to the security situation.

2. The following types of incidents are included: shots fired by terrorists; shots fired by the security forces; paramilitary-style attacks involving shootings; shots heard (and later confirmed); other violent incidents where shots are fired (e.g. armed robberies).

3. An individual bombing incident may involve one or more explosive devices. Incidents recorded include explosions and defusings. Incidents involving hoax devices, petrol bombings or incendiaries are excluded.

N.B. 2002–03 statistics are provisional and may be subject to minor amendment.

27. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the levels of terrorist activity in the Province. [65826]

Jane Kennedy: We keep the security situation under constant review. The Secretary of State receives regular advice from the Acting Chief Constable, the GOC and his security advisers. The Acting Chief Constable is on record as saying that he believes that paramilitaries on both sides have been involved in orchestrating the recent street violence in Belfast. This is a worrying development.

Marching Season

17. Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what his assessment is of the potential for disorder during this summer's marching season. [65815]

Jane Kennedy: The vast majority of parades held this year have passed off peacefully. In relation to a small number of particularly contentious parades which have taken place, some disorder did occur but was quickly contained by the security forces. In the event of public disorder, the security forces have appropriate contingency measures in place to ensure the determination of the Parades Commission is upheld.

Belfast Agreement

19. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent assessment he has made of the confidence of the Unionist community in the Belfast agreement; and if he will make a statement. [65817]

Dr. John Reid: As the Prime Minister said at Hillsborough on 4 July, we recognise there is a lack of confidence in Northern Ireland, especially in the unionist community, about the process of transition away from violence to exclusively peaceful and democratic methods. We shall set out, before Parliament rises, how we believe the necessary confidence can be restored.

Loyalist Commission

20. Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the role of the Loyalist Commission. [65818]

Dr. John Reid: It is not for me to define the role of the Loyalist Commission. That is something for members of the Commission itself. I can say that I welcomed the statement issued by the Commission on 14 June 2002 which contained guidelines on reducing the tension and violence experienced by both communities over recent weeks and months. This was a positive step and I would urge everyone to give this initiative their most careful consideration, and act accordingly.

I also had a frank and useful exchange of views with members of the Commission on 1 July.

Politics (Violent Incidents)

21. Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the number of politically related incidents of violence involving weapons, indicating the organisations and individuals responsible, in the last three months. [65819]

Jane Kennedy: It is not possible to answer the question in the format requested. However, the table shows the number of security-related incidents during the last three months.

Security situation statistics 1 April to 28 June 2002

	By Loyalists	By Republicans
Number of deaths as a result of the security situation	—	1
Number of shooting incidents	42	31
Number of bombing incidents	51	10
Number of casualties as a result of paramilitary-style assaults	24	12
Number of casualties as a result of paramilitary-style shootings	21	12

Notes:

1. Includes all deaths due to the security situation.

2. The following types of incidents are included: shots fired by terrorists; shots fired by the security forces; paramilitary-style attacks involving shootings; shots heard (and later confirmed); other violent incidents where shots are fired (e.g. armed robberies).

3. An individual bombing incident may involve one or more explosive devices. Incidents recorded include explosions and defusings. Incidents involving hoax devices, petrol bombings or incendiaries are excluded.

N.B. 2002–03 statistics are provisional and may be subject to minor amendment.

Smuggling

22. Mr. Hendrick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress made in tackling smuggling in Northern Ireland. [65820]

Jane Kennedy: On 23 May, the Secretary of State launched the second annual Organised Crime Task Force (OCTF) threat assessment and strategy.

There have been some tremendous operations against smuggling. Since 1 April 2001 over 63 million smuggled cigarettes have been seized by Customs in Northern Ireland. The latest available figures show that deliveries of legal oils products to Northern Ireland have risen by seven per cent. in the last 12 months, the first time in five years.

However, the Government believe that oils related fraud remains at an unacceptably high level and is considering options for further initiatives to counter road fuel duty evasion and the associated problems in Northern Ireland.

26. Kali Mountford: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in tackling smuggling in Northern Ireland. [65825]

Jane Kennedy: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Preston (Mr. Hendrick), ref. 65820.

28. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress the Police Service of Northern Ireland has made this year in combating the illegal trade in fuel. [65827]

Jane Kennedy: On 23 May, the Secretary of State launched the second annual Organised Crime Task Force (OCTF) threat assessment and strategy.

Oils related fraud continues to be a major problem, although there is evidence that the position has stabilized and slightly improved. The latest available figures show that deliveries of legal product to Northern Ireland have risen by seven per cent. in the last 12 months, for the first time in five years.

There were some major operational successes in the previous year. In December, a major multi-agency cross border operation, in which PSNI played an important role, was undertaken during which 31 premises were searched. Nine people were charged in connection with the evasion of road fuel excise duty and money laundering offences.

Prison Service (Equality Training)

23. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of staff in the Northern Ireland Prison Service have taken part in equality training. [65822]

Jane Kennedy: The Northern Ireland Prison Service has provided 98 per cent. of staff with equality awareness briefings. The remaining 2 per cent. is made up of staff on long-term sick/maternity leave or career breaks and are not available to receive such training.

Electoral Identity Cards

24. Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made with the introduction of electoral identity cards in Northern Ireland. [65823]

Dr. John Reid: The Electoral Office is currently exploring options available for the design and form of the electoral identity card. The Chief Electoral Officer intends to advertise for prospective contractors by early August.

A question will be included on this year's annual canvass form asking electors if they require an electoral identity card. This will enable the CEO to target his efforts and resources towards those people who require one. The card will be issued after the publication of the new electoral register on 1 December this year.

Community Safety

29. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress made with community safety awareness seminars held in preparation for a draft community strategy. [65828]

Dr. John Reid: Nine awareness seminars took place between October 2001 and April 2002. Seminars were offered to all council areas and 22 participated. A total of 262 individuals attended representing statutory, voluntary and community organisations. The discussion at the seminars provided a valuable contribution to the development of the draft Community Safety Strategy.

Policing

30. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in developing a new approach to policing in Northern Ireland. [65829]

Jane Kennedy: Together with the Police Service of Northern Ireland and the Policing Board, we are laying the foundations of a new beginning to policing. There have been significant structural changes: we have a Policing Board with nationalist participation and broad powers to hold police to account. And there has been an excellent cross-community response to recruitment under new 50:50 provisions with 35 per cent. of applications coming from Catholics and around 350 new recruits now in training. There have also been other major changes: policing with the community is now the statutory core function of the Police Service; a major programme of action is under way to focus policing in Northern Ireland on a human rights based approach.

Looking ahead, the process of establishing District Policing Partnerships has been launched, which will increase accountability at the local level and bring the police still closer to the community they serve.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Clarence House

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the annual running cost to public funds of Clarence House was in the last five years; and if she will make a statement. [65653]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The annual maintenance costs met from the Property Services grant-in-aid for Clarence House over the last five years are as follows:

	£000
1997–98 (cash)	423,769
1998–99 (Cash)	446,376
1999–2000 (Accruals)	386,639
2000–01 (Accruals)	307,098
2001–02 (Accruals)	160,776

National Museums

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time employees there were in each of the past seven years in each national museum; and how many of these were over the normal age of retirement. [67178]

Dr. Howells: The number of full-time and part-time employees at the museums and galleries sponsored by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport is set out in the table below, other than for the Tate Gallery, National Museum of Science and Industry and National Museums & Galleries on Merseyside. My right hon. and noble Friend the Ministers for the Arts will write to the hon. Member as soon as this information is available, placing copies of her letter in the Libraries of both Houses. Information on the number of staff over the normal retirement age could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

[2] My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for the Arts will write to the hon. Member as soon as the information is available.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what her Department's policy is on retirement age in national museums. [67179]

Dr. Howells: The retirement age policy for national museums sponsored by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport is a matter for the museums concerned.

BBC

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations she has received on alternative sources of revenue for the BBC to the licence fee; and if she will make a statement. [67830]

Dr. Howells: Representations about alternative methods of funding the BBC are not recorded separately from other representations about television licensing received by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. In the year from April 2001 to March 2002, the Department replied to 272 letters from Members of Parliament and 611 letters from members of the public about television licensing issues, a minority of which related to alternative funding methods.

Tourism

Mr. Mark Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what her expenditure has been on the promotion of tourism in Britain in the last 12 months. [67785]

Dr. Howells: The British Tourist Authority (BTA) promotes Britain overseas as a tourist destination. Its baseline funding was £35.5 million in 2001–02 and is £35.5 million in 2002–03. In addition, the BTA received £14.2 million from the reserve in 2001–02 to combat the impact of the outbreak of foot and mouth disease and in 2002–03 the Government committed up to £20 million from the reserve for the "Million Visitor" tourism recovery campaign, to be matched by contributions from the industry in cash and in kind.

Baseline funding for English tourism rose from £10 million in 2001–02 to £12 million this year. The English Tourism Council has also been awarded funds for e-tourism projects: an award of £0.9 million was made in 2001 from the Capital Modernisation Fund and £3.6 million in 2002 from the Invest to Save Budget.

The promotion of tourism within Scotland and Wales is a matter for the devolved Administrations.

Television Technology (Disabled Access)

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if she will make it her policy to pursue harmonising measures at EU level to ensure that future generations of set top boxes and digital TVs (a) have a second sound channel built in and (b) support other key access features for blind, partially-sighted and other disabled people; [68304]

(2) if she will make it her policy to approve the use of general conditions at an early stage to require digital TV operators to supply blind and partially-sighted customers with set top boxes which are capable of receiving audio description and which support accessible electronic programme guides at no extra cost. [68303]

Dr. Howells: The Government have no plans to pursue such harmonising measures with the EU. The design features and production of set top boxes are matters for the manufacturers to decide. However, we have launched a joint consultation with the DTI to examine how integrated digital television sets will help achieve switch over. We are seeking comments on what conditions should apply to digital decoders in order to ensure that consumers with disabilities can get all the benefits of digital television. This will inform our future policy decisions on digital television.

Obesity

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when she last met the Secretary of State for Health to discuss the role of sport in tackling the problem of obesity. [67937]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 8 July 2002]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture Media and Sport has not met the Secretary of State for Health formally to discuss obesity, but is involved in the health inequalities cross cutting review discussions chaired by the Department of Health.

I chair monthly cross-governmental ministerial meetings, attended by Ministers from the Department of Health, where issues relating to sports policy are discussed, including sport and physical activity initiatives which have a role in combating obesity. The last meeting was held on 2 July.

My Department accepts that physical activity has an important role to play in combating the prevalence of obesity. We are committed to increasing the number and quality of opportunities for participation in sport and physical activity by all sectors of the community and especially for pupils in schools, and we are working closely with Department of Health and Department for Education and Skills to help achieve this objective.

Sport

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action the Government are taking to encourage local authorities to recognise the role that sports can play in society. [68532]

Mr. Caborn: Local authorities are key providers of sport and recreation and play a central role in the delivery of sport for local communities. The Government has taken significant action to encourage local authorities to recognise the important role that sport can play in society. These measures include forging successful partnerships with local authorities through Sport England to deliver a number of key sports programmes such as 'Active Sports' (which helps children and young people achieve more from their sport, delivered at local level by local authorities, sports clubs, education services, schools and governing bodies of sport), and 'Active Communities' (which involves working closely with local authorities and other partners in the community to increase life long participation in sport and to promote the improvement in the delivery of local sporting opportunities and services for the community).

Sport England has also published "The Value of Sport"—a major advocacy tool to help local authorities to respond in a positive way to the Government's Best Value and Modernising initiatives. The document responds to the challenge of 'Why invest in sport?', and highlights the key role of the public sector in enabling and providing sport at the local level. It actively champions the benefits and contribution that sport can make to the broader local authority policy agenda, including health, education, social inclusion, community safety, community regeneration, the economy and the environment.

The Government's Beacon Council Scheme aims to raise standards of local authority services by a programme designed to spread best practice. Beacon Council status recognises councils which are excellent in a particular service or cross cutting area and have good performance across the board. The scheme requires Beacon Councils to share best practice with other councils through a national co-ordinated programme of events. In 2001 the Beacon Council Scheme identified four successful councils excelling in Regeneration through Culture, Sport and Tourism, which were Knowsley, Sunderland, Gateshead, and Nottingham. These successful authorities will use their position as Beacon Councils to promote and share best practice with other authorities. My Department is also encouraging local authorities to develop Local Cultural Strategies by the end of 2002. These strategies will help local authorities express their own cultural visions and priorities in response to the needs and aspirations of local communities. They will provide a strategic overview, recognising the role of cultural services, such as sport, in tackling the wider objectives of social inclusion, regeneration, life long learning, and creating healthier and safer communities. Cultural Strategies will help local authorities to ensure equity and access for everyone to cultural activities.

TRANSPORT

Marine Regulatory Body

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to establish a marine regulatory body. [68751]

Mr. Spellar: None. The Department's Maritime and Coastguard Agency, which was established in 1988 on the merger of the Marine Safety and Coastguard Agencies, is the UK maritime regulatory body.

Fishing Vessels (Accidents)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many collisions have taken place between EU-flagged fishing vessels and local vessels where the former is operated under third-party waters access agreements in the last five years; what analysis has been made of the effects of those agreements on the mortality rates of local fishermen; and if he will make a statement. [68336]

Mr. Jamieson: There is no requirement for a EU-flagged fishing vessel operating under third country agreements to notify the UK when it is involved in a collision. UK registered fishing vessels are required to report accidents to the Maritime Accident Investigation Branch. The reports do not require information on whether the vessel is operating under third country agreements. We therefore do not have these figures.

Pilotage Act

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what contraventions of the Pilotage Act 1987 there have been in the Humber estuary in the last five years. [68753]

Mr. Spellar: This information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which body will determine the competence of a competent harbour authority under the terms of the Pilotage Act 1987; and what criteria this body will apply. [68750]

Mr. Spellar: Competent harbour authorities are those which met the criteria in section 1 of the Pilotage Act 1987. These harbour authorities are obliged under section 2 of the Act to keep under consideration certain general duties as to the provision of pilotage services.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many times a ship's authorised pilot has debarked inside a compulsory pilotage district in the last five years. [68752]

Mr. Spellar: The Department does not hold this information.

Provincial Airports

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement of security arrangements in the handling of passengers' baggage in provincial airports in the European Union following the events of 11 September 2001. [63533]

Mr. Jamieson: International standards for aviation security are set down by the International Civil Aviation Organisation and, within Europe, by the European Civil Aviation Conference. Responsibility for the implementation of those standards, which apply to all airports handling relevant flights, including provincial airports, rests with the appropriate states. The UK has a programme in place to meet international standards. In addition, the UK has a programme of security measures for UK airlines to follow when operating overseas to supplement the host states' requirements.

Following the events of 11 September, legislation is before the European Parliament to strengthen aviation security standards throughout the EU, including a requirement to screen all hold baggage by 31 December 2003. In the UK, hold baggage on international flights has been screened since 1998. Screening of cabin baggage has been in place in the UK and throughout Europe for many years.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of construction of the Birmingham northern relief road. [66890]

Mr. Jamieson: The construction of the M6 toll motorway, formerly known as the Birmingham northern relief road, is the responsibility of the concessionaire, Midland Expressway Ltd. The road is on programme for opening early in 2004.

Road Accidents

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the percentage of the elderly involved in road accidents in the last available year; and what plans the Government have to reduce these numbers. [68525]

Mr. Jamieson: Information is not available about the total number or percentage of elderly people involved in road injury accidents. However, a provisional estimate for 2001 is that around 10 per cent. of those killed or injured in road accidents in Great Britain were aged 60 or over.

The Government has set out a wide range of proposals for reducing road traffic casualties significantly by 2010, including casualties among the elderly, in the Road Safety Strategy document, "Tomorrow's Roads—Safer For Everyone", copies of which are in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received on road accidents, with specific reference to the elderly. [68475]

Mr. Jamieson: My right hon. Friend receives many representations about all aspects of road accidents, some of which relate to elderly road users.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road accidents there were in each region; and what was the regional total as a percentage of the total, in each of the last five years. [68473]

Mr. Jamieson: The numbers of personal injury road accidents in each region are shown in the table:

Injury road accidents by region: Great Britain 1997–2001[1]

Wales	4	4	4	4	4
Great Britain	100	100	100	100	100

[1] Figures for 2001 are provisional

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what proportion of (a) road accidents and (b) fatal road accidents excess speed was identified as a major factor on (i) all roads and (ii) minor single-carriageway roads in each year since 1982. [68225]

Mr. Jamieson: The effect of excess speed on accident causation has been extensively researched based on accident data taken from a number of sources including national road accident statistics. The overall conclusion is that excessive speed, is a contributory factor in about one third of all accidents.

Specific information about particular roads is not held centrally but reference to TRL Report 421 "The effects of drivers' speed on the frequency of road accidents" published in 2000 and TRL Report 511 "The relationship between speed and accidents on rural single-carriageway roads", published in 2002 would provide a fuller explanation of the effects of excess speed on accident causation. Copies of both reports are available in the Library of the House.

Road User Charging

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ask the Highways Agency to start work on developing a policy for road user charging for inter-urban motorway and trunk roads. [68081]

Mr. Jamieson: There are no plans to do so.

Road Traffic Forecasts

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research and work has been conducted (a) by and (b) for his Department in relation to the revision of targets under the national road traffic forecasts; and if he will make a statement. [66672]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department publishes forecasts, but not targets, for road traffic. The Department has been conducting and commissioning work to improve its modelling capabilities, with the aim of developing from the National Road Traffic Forecasting framework a fully multi-modal approach, as announced in the 10 Year Plan for Transport. This work continues.

Road Noise

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to reduce road noise levels. [68229]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government's proposals for reducing the noise levels near the strategic network of English trunk roads, including motorways, were published in the 10 Year Plan for Transport. These include a commitment that over 60 per cent. of the network, including all lengths having concrete surfaces, will be resurfaced with quieter materials by the end of the plan period. All proposals for new or improved trunk roads will include the use of quieter surfacing. In addition, other noise reducing measures will be provided in the most serious and pressing cases where there is no early prospect of the road being resurfaced. Priority in such cases will be given to roads where there are severe effects on adjacent properties and no such measures were provided when they were built or last improved.

Variable Speed Limits

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the roads covered by variable speed limits, sub-divided by road classification, indicating the total length of these roads in each case; what plans there are to change the length of roads covered by variable speed limits; and if he will make a statement. [66006]

Mr. Jamieson: Local highways authorities are responsible for setting speed limits on their roads, and the roads on which particular limits apply are a matter for local decision. This information is not held centrally.

Bus Services

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 1 July 2002, Official Report, column 105W, on bus punctuality, what information he collates on the punctuality of buses; and if he will provide such statistics for the last six years. [68471]

Mr. Jamieson: Bus punctuality information is not collected or collated by the Department centrally. However, Bus Compliance Officers employed by Vehicle Inspectorate survey the performance of bus operators in each Traffic Commission Area where a complaint has been made about an operator's bus services. Traffic Commissioners have set operators a target of running 95 per cent. of registered bus services within a six minute 'window of tolerance'—no more than one minute early or five minutes late.

Transport for London (TfL) monitors punctuality on the London bus routes operated under contract to London Buses. Results are published on the TfL web site: http://www.tfl.gov.uk/tfl/service_performance.shtml

Lord Birt

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on Lord Birt's role regarding transport policy. [64486]

Mr. Jamieson: The position remains as set out in the answer given by right hon. Friend the Member for Tyneside, North (Mr. Byers) on 21 January 2002, Official Report, column 568W.

Regulatory Impact Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many members of his Department have been employed in its regulatory impact unit in the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [65974]

Mr. Jamieson: The new Departmental Regulatory Impact Unit was established in October 2001 and it works for both the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Department for Transport.

Figures for earlier years are not comparable with the current baseline due to the different policy responsibilities. The resource position for 1997–2001 were parts of a Grade 7, SEO, EO and AO.

1997–98 (1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998) = 4

1998–99 (1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999) = 4

1999–2000 (1 April 2000 to 31 March 2001) = 4

2001–02 (1 April 2001 to 31 March 2002) = 4 staff, 2 full time, 2 job share.

It is the job of Departmental Regulatory Impact Units to establish and promote the principles of good regulation in their Departments. The staff in each unit work closely with the officials responsible for developing policies within their Department and the Regulatory Impact Unit within the Cabinet Office. They focus on those regulations that impact on business, charities, and the voluntary sector.

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many and what proportion of the public service agreements of his Department set out in the document "Public Services for the Future", 1998 have been met; and if he will make a statement. [68718]

Mr. Jamieson: Information relating to my Department's Public Service Agreements targets can be found in DTLR's annual report 2002.

Gas Explosion, Newton Heath

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the TRANSCO health and safety official report into the gas explosion in Newton Heath, Manchester on 17 November 2001. [68096]

Mr. Jamieson: Yes. Arrangements are in hand to provide a copy of the report to the Library of the House.

Public Safety Zones

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decisions he has reached about his proposed circular to local authorities for use in considering applications for development within public safety zones; and if he will make a statement. [69219]

Mr. Jamieson: Since the issue of the draft circular for consultation in 1999 my Department has held extensive discussions with local planning authority and airport representatives, and we are grateful for their assistance in refining our proposals. We are today publishing the definitive version of the circular for application in England.

Meanwhile, following a recent improvement and updating of their model, the Department's consultants have remodelled the risk around the airports which already have public safety zones. In the light of that work the Department is today notifying the English local planning authorities and airports concerned of the grid co-ordinates of redefined public safety zones. In addition, in the light of the modelling work now completed, we are establishing public safety zones for Sheffield city airport, as previously anticipated, and for Cambridge and Norwich airports. We shall establish public safety zones at other airports for which modelling work suggests that this would be justified.

Large Stadiums

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his policy is on the provision of transport infrastructure to large stadiums. [67263]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government's integrated transport policy is set out in the White Paper "A New Deal for Transport: Better for Everyone", published in July 1998 and underlines the need for the planning of developments to be closely linked with the consideration of transport priorities and investment.

Our Planning Policy Guidance note 13 on Transport (PPG13) of March 2001 requires that development comprising jobs, shopping, leisure and services should offer a realistic choice of access by public transport, walking and cycling. It also sets a national maximum parking standard of one space per 15 seats at stadiums with 1,500 or more seats.

Devolution

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee on Measures to be Taken in the Event of a Crisis in the Market in the Carriage of Goods by Road and Laying Down the Conditions under which Non-resident Carriers may Operate National Road Haulage Services within a Member State is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68583]

Mr. Jamieson: No date has been set for a meeting of the committee nor do we expect it to meet in the foreseeable future. The remit of the committee is to advise the Commission on measures proposed to deal with a serious disturbance of the national transport market due to either international haulage or cabotage. As no member state has ever reported such a disturbance to the Commission, the committee has not been convened.

In the event of it being convened, officials from my Department would represent the UK on the committee as policy responsibility on the functioning of the single market in road haulage is a reserved matter. However, my officials would consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee for the Harmonisation and Comparability of the Accounting and Annual Accounts of Railway Undertakings is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68586]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 16 May 2002, Official Report, column 791W.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee on Access for Community Air Carriers to Intra-Community Air Routes is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68593]

Mr. Jamieson: The Advisory Committee on Access for Community Air Carriers to Intra-Community Air Routes, established under the provisions of Article 11 of regulation (EEC) 2408–92, meets only on an ad-hoc basis and no future meeting is currently scheduled. Since regulation of aviation and air transport is a reserved matter, officials from my Department represent the UK on the committee. However, my officials would consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee for the Application of Legislation on the Conditions under which Non-resident Carriers may Operate National Road Passenger Transport Services within a Member State is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68582]

Mr. Jamieson: No date has been set for a meeting of the committee nor do we expect it to meet in the foreseeable future. The remit of the committee is to advise the Commission on measures intended to resolve a serious disturbance of the internal passenger transport market due to cabotage. As no member state has ever reported such a disturbance to the Commission, the committee has not been convened.

In the event of it being convened, officials from my Department would represent the UK on the committee as policy responsibility for road passenger transport cabotage is a reserved matter. However, my officials would consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee for a transparent system of harmonised rules for restrictions on heavy goods vehicles involved in international transport on designated roads is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68589]

Mr. Jamieson: No such Committee exists. In May 1998 the European Commission published a proposal for a Council Directive on a transparent system of rules for driving restrictions on heavy goods vehicles involved in international transport on designated roads. The proposal made provision for an advisory Committee composed of representatives of the Member States and chaired by the Commission. The proposed Directive was never adopted.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee for the application of uniform principles on costing for railway undertakings is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68579]

Mr. Jamieson: The Council Regulation (EEC) No. 2183–78 of 19 September 1978 which established this Committee is no longer in force. The Committee has not met in recent years.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee on implementation of Protocol 9 to the Act of Accession of Austria concerning transport by road and rail and combined transport (Ecopoints) is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68591]

Mr. Jamieson: The Committee is next due to meet on 18 July. Officials from my Department represent the UK on the Committee as policy responsibility for the implementation of Protocol 9 to the Austrian Act of Accession is a reserved matter. However, my officials consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the Devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Community-Switzerland Transport Committee (rail and road) is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68576]

Mr. Jamieson: The inaugural meeting of the EU–Switzerland Transport Committee was held on 5 July. No date has yet been fixed for the next meeting of this Committee. Officials from my Department represent the UK on the Committee as policy responsibility for the EU—Switzerland Agreement is a reserved matter. However, my officials consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the Devolved Administrations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Advisory Committee for the application of legislation on the development of the Community railways is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68578]

Mr. Jamieson: No date has yet been fixed for the next meeting of the Developing European Railways Committee but we expect it to be held in December. Officials from my Department represent the UK on the Committee as policy responsibility for the development of railways is a reserved matter. However, my officials consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the devolved Administrations.

East Thames River Crossings

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the east Thames river crossings that (a) have been completed in the last two years and (b) are under construction, giving the expected opening date, and (c) are being considered. [68358]

Mr. Jamieson: No new east Thames river crossings have been completed in the last two years. A tunnel between Thurrock and Swanscombe is to be constructed as part of the channel tunnel rail link and is due to be completed by 2007.

Cross London Rail Links Ltd. (CLRL), a joint venture between Transport for London and the Strategic Rail Authority, is currently consulting on two options for a crossrail crossing between Canary Wharf and Woolwich (via the Royal Docks or Greenwich Peninsula/Charlton). The Mayor and TfL are also considering three possible river crossing schemes. They are as follows:

an extension of the Docklands Light Railway (DLR) to Woolwich;

a bridge to the east of the Royal Docks, which would incorporate dedicated lanes for public transport;

a road bridge or tunnel between north Greenwich and Silvertown.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is not considering any proposals for other new crossings at this time.

Public Transport (Customer Satisfaction)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the most recent statistics relating to customer satisfaction on the (a) DLR, (b) Tyne and Wear Metro, (c) Manchester Metrolink, (d) South Yorkshire Supertram, (e) Midland Metro and (f) Croydon Tramlink, with the source for each data set used. [68256]

Mr. Jamieson: Information for (a) DLR, (b) Tyne and Wear Metro, (c) Manchester Metrolink, (e) Midland Metro and (f) Croydon Tramlink has been placed in the Libraries of the House. Information on customer satisfaction is not available for the South Yorkshire Supertram.

State Aid Rules

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he expects to receive a response from the European Commission with regard to whether (a) the money and (b) the guarantees being provided by the Government are acceptable under state aid rules. [66535]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: We expect their decision in due course.

Potters Bar Rail Accident

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he plans to take following the Health and Safety report of 4 July into the Potters Bar rail accident; and if he will make a statement. [68263]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The HSE report of 4 July, copies of which are in the Libraries of the House, was a progress report on their continuing investigation into the accident. The report made a number of recommendations. The HSE will monitor the implementation of those recommendations. Railtrack's chief executive is drawing up plans to improve the way that contractors' work is managed and monitored, and Network Rail will take this forward if they replace Railtrack.

Rail Services (South-West)

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for improving rural rail services in the south-west region. [68230]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority's (SRA) Strategic Plan sets out its short, medium and longer-term priorities, including a number of improvements to enhance rail services in the south-west. There is also funding available from the Rail Passenger Partnership scheme and Rail Performance Fund for regional and local initiatives.

Croydon Tramlink

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the Croydon Tramlink to have smartcard ticketing; and if he will make a statement. [68470]

Mr. Jamieson: This is a matter for the Mayor of London and Transport for London (TfL).

Further information can be obtained from:

Charles Monheim
Director of Ticketing
Transport for London
Windsor House
42–50 Victoria Street
London SW1H 0TL.

London Bridge Railway Station

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the daily capacity of London Bridge railway station was in each of the last three years. [68360]

Mr. Jamieson: "Capacity" has several definitions. For instance, it could mean the number of potential services, trains or passengers that could pass through the station, or simply the station size. The average number of national rail passengers passing through or disembarking at London Bridge station on weekdays during the morning peak (0700–1000) in each of the last three years is:

1999: 123,677
2000: 129,078
2001: 123,721.

Special Purpose Vehicle

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the first special purpose vehicle for the railways to be completed. [66058]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster) on 9 July 2002, Official Report, column 807W.

Railway Industry

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the occasions on which he (a) has met and (b) plans to meet the (i) Chairman of the Strategic Railway Authority and (ii) Rail Regulator, stating for each occasion the purpose of the meeting. [64129]

Mr. Jamieson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has met both the Chairman of the Strategic Rail Authority and the Rail Regulator since taking up this post, to discuss a wide range of issues relating to their work. He, and other departmental Ministers, will continue to do so as and when appropriate.

Strategic Rail Authority

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the status is of the SRA's accounts in relation to the accounting for departmental spending. [67057]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority is an executive non-departmental public body, whose accounts are not consolidated into the Department's accounts. Any grants paid by the Department to the authority are treated as programme expenditure in the Department's own accounts.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what existing loans and related liabilities the SRA has on its balance sheet; and if he will make a statement. [67060]

Mr. Jamieson: The balance sheet of the SRA was set out on page 87 of its 2000–01 annual report and will be updated in its 2001–02 annual report to be published shortly.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the powers he has over the management of the Strategic Rail Authority. [67163]

Mr. Jamieson: The statutory relationship between the Secretary of State and the Strategic Rail Authority is set out in the Transport Act 2000, the Railways Act 1993 and associated documentation, including directions and guidance from the Secretary of State and the SRA's Financial Framework.

Network Rail

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the rights of commercial lenders to exercise repayment rights by the SRA, will be determined; and what guidance he has given to Network Rail about these rights. [67173]

Mr. Jamieson: The rights of the commercial lenders are determined through commercially confidential loan agreements as and when they are entered into by the lenders and Network Rail. Details of the SRA standby support facilities are set out in commercial agreements between the SRA and Network Rail. It is not for the Secretary of State to give guidance to Network Rail on these matters.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Government have sought state aid clearance for the sums paid to Network Rail in order to establish the company and meet its initial costs prior to the completion of the takeover of the assets of Railtrack plc. [67162]

Mr. Jamieson: No sums have been paid by Government to Network Rail Ltd. Individuals and advisers are engaged by Government to secure that a bid for Railtrack plc by a company limited by guarantee is taken through to completion. This does not constitute a state aid.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the estimates of the total revenues for Network Rail for each of the next five years that he used in assessing the viability of the proposal to securitise revenues described in paragraph 12 of the Minute to Parliament. [67169]

Mr. Jamieson: Network Rail's revenues will continue to receive the revenues determined by the regulator's October 2000 Periodic Review and the April 2001 agreement between Railtrack and Government, reflecting the amendments noted in the regulator's statement of 27 June 2002.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to amend the Financial Framework of the Strategic Rail Authority as provided for in paragraph 16 of Schedule 14 of the Transport Act 2000 following the issuing of the Minutes to Parliament and the House. [67063]

Mr. Jamieson: The Financial Framework is reviewed regularly and may also be amended or augmented between reviews.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he applied to the European Commission for state aid approval for the (a) £300 million capital grant to Network Rail, Holdco Limited, (b) provision of £9 billion guarantee to Network Rail by the SRA, (c) provision of £10 billion of contingent funding for Network Rail, and (d) CTRL project. [66639]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 3 July 2002]: The financial support package which the Government has agreed to make available to Network Rail if it completes the acquisition of Railtrack plc was notified to the European Commission on 31 May 2002. That notification covered all of the elements of the funding set out in the two Minutes which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State laid before the House on 27 June 2002, and also the associated acquisitions of Railtrack Group's interests in the Channel Tunnel Rail Link.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances commercial lenders will have the right to exercise the option described in note 2 on page 5 of the Network Rail Minute to Parliament. [67170]

Mr. Jamieson: Commercial lenders of the bridge facilities have the right to require the SRA to purchase all amounts due to them from Network Rail Group in the event of the SRA defaulting on any obligation to make the standby loans available to Network Rail.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the future income streams that will be securitised, as described in paragraph 12 of the Minute to Parliament. [67167]

Mr. Jamieson: This is a matter for Network Rail.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what total amount of state aid approval sought by the Government are for (a) financial and (b) other support to Network Rail. [67084]

Mr. Jamieson: The details of the notification made to the European Commission in respect of the support which the Government has agreed to make available to Network Rail if it successfully completes the acquisition of Railtrack plc are confidential. However, the contingent liabilities which the Government would incur as a result of this support are set out in the two Minutes which were laid before the House by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 27 June 2002. These contingent liabilities are covered by the notification to the European Commission.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if Network Rail will be required to repay the loan facilities to finance legacy costs on 30 September 2004. [67055]

Mr. Jamieson: The repayment schedule for commercial loans to finance legacy costs will be determined through commercial loan agreements as and when they are required.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of Network Rail's future revenues he estimates will be securitised, as described in paragraph 12 of the Minute to Parliament. [67168]

Mr. Jamieson: This is a matter for Network Rail.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the other sums referred to in line 7 of paragraph 13 of the Network Rail Minute to Parliament. [67172]

Mr. Jamieson: "Other sums" refers to additional amounts that may be payable that are customary in facilities of this type, such as break costs. Break costs are costs which may be incurred if (i) the loan is prepaid (ii) an interest period is shortened by virtue of the prepayment and (iii) lenders are adversely affected. It is not possible to quantify these amounts in advance as they would depend on circumstances at the time, for example the level of interest rates.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the total value is of the tax indemnity outlined in paragraphs 24 and 25 of the Network Rail Minute to the House. [67062]

Mr. Jamieson: Government has been advised that Railtrack Group should be able to take advantage of the exemptions referred to in paragraph 25 of the Minute. This would ensure that, in all likelihood, Railtrack Group incurs no tax liability as a result of the Railtrack plc disposal.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the financing and funding of (a) RenewCo and (b) Network Rail for the purposes of what constitutes public expenditure under the assessment used by the Office for National Statistics. [67723]

Mr. Jamieson: The Office for National Statistics takes independent decisions in matters concerning the classification, preparation and publication of statistics. ONS decisions are consistent with the principles of the international statistical manuals, European System of Accounts 1995 (ESA95) and the system of National Accounts 1993 (SNA93) and supporting manuals and case law.

On 5 October 2001 the Department was informed that the ONS had determined that Railtrack's scheme for a new special purpose vehicle—RenewCo—would be classified in the public sector, if set up as proposed. On 27 June 2002 the ONS announced that Network Rail would be classified as a private sector corporation once its board has been ratified by its membership and on 5 July, it announced that Network Rail's borrowing will be classified as private sector borrowing in the national accounts.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what role his Department will play in selecting a representative of the Strategic Rail Authority to sit on the board of Network Rail. [67164]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority will decide whom to select.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Government would allow the SRA to exceed the borrowing limit outlined in paragraph eight, sub-paragraph six of Schedule 14 of the Transport Act 2000 in order to meet its liabilities as outlined in paragraph 21 of the Network Rail Minute to the House. [67061]

Mr. Jamieson: The provision of any funds necessary to meet the SRA's financial obligations would be made by way of grant under paragraph 7 of schedule 14 of the Transport Act 2000 or by permitting the SRA to borrow in accordance with paragraph 8 of that schedule. Whether, and the extent to which, the SRA would be allowed to borrow would be determined at the time. The SRA's borrowing could not exceed £3 billion without this limit being extended by statutory instrument, a draft of which had been approved by the House of Commons.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what commitments the SRA has made for the future grant scheme to Network Rail, as described in paragraph 14 of the Minute to Parliament; and for what amounts. [67171]

Mr. Jamieson: The SRA have committed to provide Network Rail with grants to remunerate legacy costs incurred in the period 1 April 2001 to 30 September 2004, up to a cap of £5 billion, to the extent they are not recognised in an interim review. The regulator set out his proposed approach to an interim review in his statement of 27 June.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Government have made a financial provision for the potential additional costs arising from an increased settlement to Network Rail resulting from an interim review by the Rail Regulator. [67165]

Mr. Jamieson: While the legacy of Railtrack and its cost overruns creates potential additional costs, the Government expects Network Rail to operate more efficiently than Railtrack with lower financing costs and a re-investment of operating surpluses back into the network. We cannot anticipate the outcome of the proposed interim review that would take all of these factors into account.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list outputs to be specified by Railtrack's successor, as negotiated by the SRA, in exchange for the provision of the funding package to Railtrack's successor. [68390]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 9 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 18 of the Regulator's statement of 27 June.

The SRA and Network Rail have entered into various agreements in relation to the financial support and output and enhancement obligations, all operating alongside the existing regulatory arrangements. In particular, the outputs will be developed further through Network Rail's business planning process.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the guidance issued to the SRA by the Office for National Statistics in relation to the structure of the funding package for Network Rail. [68389]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 9 July 2002]: No guidance was issued to the Strategic Rail Authority by the Office for National Statistics.

London Underground

[illegible] May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the methodology behind the Department's estimates of capacity on each London Underground line. [67792]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 July 2002]: My Department does not make estimates of capacity of London Underground lines.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many non-operational (a) lifts and (b) escalators there are on the London Underground Network; at which stations they are found; and what the estimated resulting loss in station capacity is in each case. [67719]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 July 2002]: This is an operational matter for London Underground (LU) who have provided the information in the table detailing non-operational (a) lifts and (b) escalators, as at 28 June 2002. I understand that LU do not make estimates of the loss of station capacity in such cases.

Note:
The number of lifts and escalators not in service can vary from hour to hour in the case of short-term faults.

Northern Line

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the maximum number of people allowed (a) on each platform and (b) in each station is for each station on the Northern Line, as determined by health and safety limits. [67715]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 8 July 2002]: London Underground inform me that there is no formal limit on the number of customers allowed on each platform. They monitor closely the numbers of customers in stations and on platforms and take appropriate action to ensure their safety.

Merseyrail

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the franchising process for Merseyrail; and what progress has been made. [68205]

Mr. Jamieson: The refranchising process for Merseyrail Electrics is currently being run jointly by the Strategic Rail Authority and Merseyside Passenger Transport Executive. Six bidders successfully prequalified for the competition. Initial bids are due on 12 July.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on rolling stock replacement on Merseyrail. [69120]

Mr. Jamieson: Proposals for rolling stock replacement on the Merseyrail Electrics network will be considered as part of the franchise/local concession replacement process currently under way.

Railtrack

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what tax liability Railtrack Group will incur as a result of the Railtrack plc disposal announced on 27 June. [66497]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 25 of the minute in relation to non-statutory contingent liabilities in support of Network Rail Limited which the Secretary of State laid before the House of Commons on 27 June.

Speeding Offences

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motorists in Lancashire and Burnley have been charged with speeding in a 30-mile-per-hour speed limit in the last 12 months. [65779]

Mr. Denham: I have been asked to reply.

Information on numbers of persons charged with an offence is not collated centrally. The data available centrally on prosecutions and fixed penalties issued for speeding offences are not broken down according to the speed limits that have been broken.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Changes

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the cost of replacing the Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Department of Transport; and if he will make a statement. [67436]

The Prime Minister: The new Departments will share the provision previously made for the Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions. No additional funds have been made available in the current year as a result of the machinery of government change.

Nuclear Power Programme (Russia)

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement of 1 July 2002, Official Report, column 21, on G7 nuclear management aid for Russia, how much of the $750 million commitment by the United Kingdom will be spent on the conversion of surplus military plutonium into MOX nuclear fuel for Russia's nuclear power programme. [68451]

The Prime Minister: The figure includes the commitment of £70 million over 10 years, which I announced at the G8 Okinawa summit in 2000, in support of the US/Russian agreement on secure disposition of plutonium no longer required for defence purposes.

Parliamentary Questions

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether special advisers are permitted to amend draft answers to written parliamentary questions prepared by civil servants in order to add a political dimension; [67694]

(2) if he will describe the stages in the administrative process followed in his Office following the receipt of a written parliamentary question prior to the final answer being provided to the hon. Member. [67695]

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware my Office follows the same administrative process for written parliamentary questions as used by my predecessors.

My parliamentary section identifies the questions from the Order Paper tabled to me. The section will then draft answers in consultation with other Downing Street staff, including special advisers, or commission answers from other Departments as appropriate. They are cleared by a senior civil servant and then sent to me for approval.

All answers are provided in accordance with the Ministerial Code, the Civil Service Code and the Special Adviser Code of Conduct.

Sellafield

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations he has received since 1 January 2001 regarding Sellafield; and what steps he has taken as a consequence. [67640]

The Prime Minister: Since January 2001 I have received over 187,000 letters and cards, including a very large number of pre-printed postcards as a result of a campaign organised in Ireland in April and May 2002. I have also had discussions with the Prime Ministers of Norway and Ireland about Sellafield issues.

The hon. Member will be aware that the Government published a White Paper on 4 July 2002 setting out our plans for dealing with the UK's nuclear legacy including the operation and clean-up of the Sellafield site.

Summits

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 330W, on summits, for what reason it was not possible for him to state the budget for the trip to the G8 summit in June and the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in March. [68655]

The Prime Minister: A detailed list of Cabinet Ministers' visits overseas, and information on spend by all Ministers on travel overseas for the period 1 April 2001 to 31 March 2002 will be published as soon as possible. The list for the period 1 April 2002 to 31 March 2003 will be published after the end of the current financial year.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Secondary Schools

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what organisations delivering and resourcing personal, social and health education in secondary schools receive funding from central Government sources; and how much was given to each in the last year for which figures are available. [66709]

Mr. Miliband: The Department for Education and Skills funds a number of organisations to support the delivery of PSHE in schools. In 2002–03, the following funding has been allocated:

The National Children's Bureau (including the Drug Education and Sex Education Forum), to promote good practice—£245,250

The Personal Finance Education Group, to support financial literacy—£10,000

The National Health Education Group, to support a network for PSHE practitioners—£14,000

Child Accident Prevention Trust, to support Child Safety Week—£17,000

BRAKE, to support Road Safety Week—£10,000

Drug Education Practitioner's Forum, to support the professional needs of drug education workers—£11,150

Jointly with the Department of Health, the Drug Education and Prevention Team at DrugScope/Alcohol Concern to promote good practice—£106,300.

Funding is not provided directly for the production of classroom resources.

Medical Schools

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what capital is being made available to the new medical schools for research laboratories and equipment. [67150]

Margaret Hodge: The Higher Education Funding Council for England issues capital grants to higher education institutions including those with medical schools, which are used for a number of purposes. The Department of Health has provided additional NHS research and development funding to the NHS Trusts associated with some of the new medical schools to facilitate the development of the research infrastructure in those localities.

Schools (Somerset)

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many schools in Somerset provide up to two hours of sport and physical education each week. [67588]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Government are committed to all children having two hours of high quality physical education (PE) and school sport a week, within and outside the curriculum. The Specialist Sports College and the School Sport Co-ordinator programmes are helping schools make that a reality. From September 1.8 million pupils will be benefiting from the School Sport Co-ordinator programme within 142 partnerships with nearly 750 co-ordinators and over 3500 primary or special school link teachers.

The Department for Education and Skills does not collect data on the number of schools in Somerset that are providing the two hour entitlement. However, we do know that Somerset currently has 1 School Sport Co-ordinator partnership (with 6 co-ordinators) and King Arthur's Community School will begin operating this September as a Sport College. Nationally we estimate that about 25 per cent. of schools—those within School Sport Co-ordinator Partnerships—are offering their pupils access to the two hour entitlement. However, an audit due to take place during the autumn term will check this assumption.

Discretionary Awards

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will list for each LEA where EMAs have been introduced the amount of resources allocated for discretionary awards in each of year since 1997. [67470]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 5 July 2002]: Prior to 1998–99, funding for discretionary support was made within the Education SSA. This is not broken down into specific funding lines and individual LEA allocations are therefore not available. In 1999, discretionary funding for young people post-16 in schools was transferred to the School Access Funds. The amount of School Access Funds made available to LEAs for discretionary support in the EMA pilot areas is set out in the table.

Separate allocations of Access Funds are also made available to colleges, including sixth form colleges. The amounts are listed in the Further Education Funding Council and Learning and Skills Council Circulars (FEFC Circulars 97/32, 98/29, 99/27,00/14, LSC Circular 01/08).

Education Maintenance Allowance

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many young people received educational maintenance allowance (a) by variant and (b) by region in each year since 1999. [67086]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 5 July 2002]: (a) The following table shows the number of young people in receipt of education maintenance allowance by variant.

All Our Futures: Creativity, Culture and Education

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps she is taking to implement the recommendations of the report, "All Our Futures: Creativity, Culture and Education"; and if she will make a statement. [67157]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The National Advisory Committee on Creative and Cultural Education reported jointly to the Secretaries of State for Education and Employment and Culture, Media and Sport in 1999 via the report "All our Futures". The report contained 59 detailed recommendations for action by a range of bodies including Government, schools and higher education institutions. My Department has worked closely with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, and external partners, to implement the recommendations.

Some of the main steps taken so far include funding of £270 million for the introduction of the Music Standards Fund to protect and expand LEA Music Services; the establishment of Artsmark, a national awards scheme now in its second year which recognises schools which offer a wide range of arts provision; and the recent joint announcement of £130 million for the Space for Sport and Arts programme which will fund almost 300 primary schools nationwide to modernise or build new multi-use halls and sports facilities and new music and arts studios.

Other major initiatives in progress include the development of 16 Creative Partnerships Pilots, with the aim of building long-term, sustainable relationships between creative professionals and schools. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority is undertaking a project focusing on pupils' creativity across the curriculum which will produce guidance for schools on ways to promote pupils' creativity.

Our White Paper, "Schools: achieving success", repeats our commitment that all pupils should have access to a broad and rich education with a variety of extra-curricula activities and that, over time, all primary school pupils who want to should have the opportunity to learn a musical instrument.

Nursery Centres of Excellence

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many nursery centres of excellence have been designated; how many centres there are in each local education authority area; and what total additional resource has been allocated to nursery centres of excellence. [67628]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 8 July 2002]: I announced, on 5 July, the designation of 33 new Early Excellence Centres (EECs) offering high quality integrated education and day care for young children, and services and opportunities for parents and the wider community. This brings the total number of EECs across the country to 91, taking us to within nine of reaching our manifesto commitment of 100 by 2004.

A table listing all the current EECs by local education authority area has been placed in the Library.

Jacques Delors Professorship

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the cost to (a) United Kingdom and (b) Communities funds of the Jacques Delors Professorship of Community Law, Oxford; and to which budget line it falls. [68333]

Margaret Hodge: My Department does not hold statistics about the costs to the UK nor to the European Union (EU) of individual Professorships, including those which are part funded by the EU. The funding of this particular Professorship is a matter for Oxford University and for the European Commission.

Examination Papers

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will list by (a) year, (b) date and (c) examining body, each mistake in external examination papers at (i) GCSE, (ii) AS and (iii) A Level that has been reported to her since 1997. [67476]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) advise that the data for 2002 is as follows.

AQA

January: 5 A level;

May/June: 6 GCSE, 2 A level, 2 GNVQ.

Edexcel

January: 4 A level, 1 GNVQ;

May/June: 2 GNVQ.

OCR

January: 1 A level, 1 AS, 1 GNVQ, 4 VCE;

May/June: 4 A level, 5 GCSE.

QCA has not systemically collected similar data for earlier years. QCA recently introduced a series of detailed performance targets for awarding bodies, which will require the collection of data on undetected errors in examination papers. This information will be published for future years.

Education Spending

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the total budget across all Government Departments was for spending on statutory education for 11 to 18-year-olds in schools and sixth form colleges in England in the last year for which figures are available. [68085]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The total budget or Local Schools Budget (LSB) for secondary schools for 2002–03 is £11,829.5 million. This is the amount appropriated by the authorities for meeting all secondary expenditure by them in that year, including expenditure on central functions such as transport, as well as schools' delegated budgets.

The Learning and Skills Council has allocated £452.0 million for sixth form colleges for 2002–03.

Further Education

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of students continue into further education after their GCSEs; and what efforts the Government have made to encourage pupils to stay on at school after their GCSEs. [66156]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The post-compulsory staying-on rate in all forms of learning is 86.5 per cent. In 2001–02, of the total number of 16-year-olds, 71.2 per cent. continue to participate full-time in schools, sixth-form colleges or other colleges of further education, after the completion of their compulsory education. The latter figure includes some still studying GCSEs, but does not include those in part-time education or in work-based learning.

We want all young people to continue after the age of 16 in high quality learning opportunities which best meet their needs and potential. This will give young people a range of high quality, general mixed and vocational options with the aim of ending the culture of dropping out of learning at 16. In addition to the Connexions Service role the Learning and Skills Council have put in place a number of measures to provide the support and incentives young people need to take up and succeed in learning. We are introducing a range of initiatives to overcome financial obstacles to participation. One of these is the education maintenance allowance, which is available in a third of the country. The impact of EMA on participation among eligible young people in the pilot areas has been to raise participation by six percentage points. We are presently considering responses to the 14–19 Green Paper "Extending opportunities, raising standards".

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many and what proportion of (a) colleges of further education and (b) sixth form colleges England and Wales were trading at a deficit in each financial year from 1997–98 to 2001–02; and if she will make a statement. [68512]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The number and proportion of colleges in England with an operating deficit (an excess of total expenditure over total income) in each financial year (1 August to 31 July) for the periods 1997–98 to 2000–01 is given in the table. Information on colleges in Wales is a matter for the Welsh Assembly.

Sixth form colleges	1997[illegible]	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
No. of colleges with a trading deficit	37	36	48	18
Percentage of colleges across the total FE sector	8.33	8.14	11.27	4.30
Percentage of colleges of the same type	33.94	33.64	45.28	17.65
Other FE sector colleges
No. of colleges with a trading deficit	148	141	159	94
Percentage of colleges across the total FE sector	33.33	31.90	37.32	22.43
Percentage of colleges of the same type	44.18	42.09	49.69	29.65

Notes:

1. Information for the financial year 2001–02 is not yet available.
2. Other FE sector colleges include general further education colleges, tertiary colleges, agricultural and horticultural colleges, art, design and performing arts colleges and designated colleges.

The further education sector is an important contributor to achieving our goal of a learning society. Further education colleges, including sixth form colleges, have a key role to play and we are continuing to increase our investment in this area. The Learning and Skills Council has procedures in place to identify colleges that have financial difficulties and will, as appropriate, give financial and practical support to enable them to implement effective plans to address these. However, prevention not intervention will be the aim.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many and what proportion of (a) colleges of further education and (b) sixth form colleges in England and Wales were in the Learning and Skills Council's weakest financial category at some point in each financial year from 1997–98 to 2001–02; and if she will make a statement. [68513]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The number and proportion of colleges in England in the weakest financial category at some point during the financial year (1 August to 31 July) for the periods 1997–98 to 2000–01 is given in the table. Information on colleges in Wales is a matter for the Welsh Assembly.

	Number in weakest financial category	Percentage of colleges across the total FE sector	Percentage of colleges of the same type

Devolution

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when the EU Advisory Committee on the training in architecture is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66455]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

The next meeting of the Advisory Committee on Training and Education in the Field of Architecture (ACETA) has been scheduled provisionally for 20 November 2002. The date is still to be confirmed by the EU Commission. No representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been or (b) are members of it.

The mandate of this Committee is to help to ensure a comparably high standard of education and training for architects throughout the Community, and permit free movement of people and provision of services as Single Market objectives. It normally meets once a year.

The UK Delegation to the ACETA consists of one Government official from this Office (Building Regulations Division), the Chief Executive of the Architects Registration Board, two representatives from the architectural profession, and two representatives from schools of architecture.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the President of the Council how many questions to Ministers for written answer have been tabled this session by the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow); and what has been the cost of responding to them. [68868]

Mr. Robin Cook: At the close of business on Tuesday, 9 July, the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) had tabled 4,382[1] questions at a total cost of £565,278.

Note:

Information supplied by the Table Office.

Female Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Council what percentage of the staff of his Department are women; and what the percentage was in June 1997. [66919]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, on 5 July 2002, Official Report, column 622W.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the President of the Council how many statutory instruments have been (a) introduced, (b) removed and (c) amended by his Department since 1 January; and what the (i) cost and (ii) saving has been in each case. [64638]

Mr. Robin Cook: [pursuant to his reply, 9 July 2002, c. 837W]: I regret to say that there was an error on the number of statutory instruments which have been amended by my Department. The figure given was one. The correct figure is two.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Election Nominations

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many parish councils (a) did not receive sufficient nominations to have an election in May and (b) are missing as a result. [66217]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, no parish councils would be "missing" as a result of insufficient nominations for election. Under powers in the Local Government Act 1972, the remaining councillors would be able to co-opt people on to the council or, if the council had become inquorate, the district council would be able to co-opt members to enable council business to continue.

Terminal 5

Keith Vaz: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the final cost was of the planning inquiry into Terminal 5. [66328]

Mr. McNulty: The total cost of Terminal 5 inquiry to all participants is estimated at over £83 million, including certain pre-inquiry costs.

Out-of-town Shopping Centres

Keith Vaz: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many applications for planning permission for out-of-town shopping centres have been agreed since 7 January. [66326]

Mr. McNulty: Local planning authorities provide quarterly statistical returns of planning decisions made, but details, such as their location, are not held centrally and therefore could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Facilities (Minimum Requirements)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the minimum requirements for (a) houses, (b) flats, (c) hotels and hostels, (d) houses in multiple occupation, (e) prisons and (f) university halls of residence for (i) space, (ii) lighting, (iii) ventilation, (iv) bathroom and toilet facilities and (v) fire escapes. [66679]

Mr. McNulty: There are a number of regulations in place in relation to minimum requirements for dwellings, including houses, flats, hotels and hostels, houses in multiple occupation and university halls of residence.

This reply deals with areas of regulation for which my Department is primarily responsible. As regards prisons, my Department is responsible for fire safety matters only. I will ensure that the relevant documents are in the Library.

Building Regulations

The minimum requirements for the construction of most new buildings and certain extensions and alterations of existing buildings in England and Wales are given in the Building Regulations 2000 (SI 2000 No. 2531) (as amended by SI 2001 No. 3335 and SI 2002 No. 440). Buildings which are owned and/or occupied on behalf of a Crown Authority, such as some prisons, are exempt from both the procedural and technical aspects of the Building Regulations.

The Building Regulations are made for the purpose of securing reasonable standards of health and safety, welfare and convenience of persons in or about buildings, and the design of buildings to further conservation of fuel and power. The technical requirements of the Building Regulations are divided into fourteen substantive parts. These include Part B (Fire safety -including fire escapes and escape lighting); Part F (Ventilation); Part G (Hygiene—including bathroom and toilet facilities); and Parts L1 & L2 (Conservation of fuel and power—including energy efficiency of lighting systems). The Regulations make no requirements with regard to the minimum size or amount of living space that should be provided in buildings.

These Regulations are performance based, rather than prescriptive, and are supported by Approved Documents which offer ways of satisfying the requirements of the Regulations.

Housing Fitness Standard

Under the housing fitness standard, set out in section 604 in the Housing Act 1985, as amended by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, a dwelling is unfit if, in the opinion of the local authority, it fails to meet one of nine specified requirements and, by reason of that failure, is not reasonably suitable for occupation. The requirements constitute the minimum deemed necessary for a dwelling house to be fit for human habitation. Among other requirements a dwelling should have adequate provision for lighting, heating and ventilation, have an adequate piped supply of wholesome water, have an effective system for the drainage of foul, waste and surface water, have a suitably located WC for exclusive use of the occupants, have a bath or shower and wash-hand basin, with hot and cold water.

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMOs) are subject to the general housing fitness standard in section 604 of the 1985 Act and in addition local housing authorities have discretionary power to ensure HMOs are fit for the number of occupants under s352. This includes ensuring such properties have adequate toilet and bathroom facilities and adequate means of escape from fire and other fire precautions. The Housing (Fire Safety in Houses in Multiple Occupation) Order 1997 (SI 1997/230) places a mandatory duty on local authorities to ensure, in consultation with local fire authorities, that HMOs of three storeys or more and occupied by more than four persons are adequately equipped with means of escape from fire.

The Housing (Management of Houses in Multiple Occupation) Regulations 1990 (SI 1990/830) place a duty on the manager of an HMO, among other things, to ensure that installations for lighting, toilet and bathing facilities in common use are maintained in repair, a clean condition and good order. The manager is responsible for ensuring means of escape from fire and other fire precautions and windows and other means of ventilation are maintained in repair and proper working order and in respect of fire escapes and other precautions, free from obstruction.

Hostels and most University halls of residence are classified as HMOs.

Overcrowding

Overcrowding standards are set out in Part X of the 1985 Act. The Room Standard is breached if two people of opposite sexes, who are not living together as husband and wife, must sleep in the same room. The Space Standard specifies the number of people who may sleep in a dwelling according to the number of rooms.

Fire Safety

Some hotels and boarding houses (including halls of residence at universities where these are used as sleeping accommodation for conference facilities etc), are designated under section 1 of the Fire Precautions Act 1971 as requiring a fire certificate. (Those that provide sleeping accommodation for more than six guests or staff or any accommodation above the first floor or below the ground floor are designated). It is a requirement, under section 5 of the 1971 Act that in order to gain a fire certificate the fire authority must be satisfied that the means of escape are such as may reasonably be required in the circumstances of the case. Guidance for owners/occupiers and enforcing authorities is contained in Chapter 13 of the publication "Fire Precautions Act 1971: Guide to Fire Precautions in Premises Used as Hotels and Boarding Houses Which Require a Fire Certificate" (TSO; ISBN 0–11–34–1005–0).

In hotels, boarding houses, prisons, university halls of residence, houses in multiple occupation, hostels and most other places where staff are employed to work (other than single private dwellings and private accommodation areas of flats) the Fire Precautions (Workplace) Regulations 1997 (as amended by the Fire Precautions (Workplace) (Amendment) Regulations 1999) will also apply. This regime utilises risk assessment of the premises to determine the fire precautions that are necessary in the circumstances of the case—including the means of escape. Regulation 5 imposes requirements in respect of means of escape. Guidance to employers is given in part 3 of the publication "Fire Safety: an employers guide" (TSO; ISBN0–11–341229–0).

Specific guidance on fire safety standards for prisons is given in HM Prison Service document: Fire Standards in Prison Establishments Principles of Design and Standards of Construction.

Homelessness

Ms Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to assist local authorities in the implementation of their duties under (a) the Homelessness Act 2002 and (b) Government targets on the reduction of families supported by local authorities in bed and breakfast accommodation. [67498]

Mr. McNulty: A new Homelessness Directorate has been established within my Department to take forward the new approach to tackling homelessness as set out in the Homelessness Directorate's report "More than a roof". Our specific measures include a £125 million investment in 2002–03 to tackle homelessness, and new legislation to strengthen the assistance to people who are homeless or at risk of being homeless.

The Homelessness Directorate published a good practice handbook to help local authorities conduct homelessness reviews and develop effective homelessness strategies. In addition, on 14 March 2002 the Homelessness Directorate invited local authorities to apply for £10 million funding, and submit proposals, for local homelessness strategies. These are being considered at the moment.

In addition, the Government has already provided local authorities with an additional £8 million per annum in Revenue Support Grant to help them meet their new statutory obligations under the Homelessness Act 2002. All housing authorities will also receive a share of an additional £10 million in 2002–03 to enable them to deliver our proposed Order to extend the priority need groups under Part VII of the Housing Act 1996.

Also in March 2002, a £35 million programme was launched to help local authorities ensure that by March 2004 no homeless family with children is in bed and breakfast hotels (B&B) other than in an emergency, and even then for no more than 6 weeks. On 17 June £25 million was allocated to the 42 local authorities with the highest number of families with children in B&B hotels to help them meet the March 2004 commitment.

We will now be working with the next 40 highest using authorities to see how we can help them reduce B&B hotel numbers.

Authorities have also been sent a 10-point checklist of good practice outlining the key 'building blocks' in reducing B&B hotel use. Regional seminars have been held and examples of good practice have been shared through a newsletter and via the ODPM website.

Social Housing

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what plans he has to extend the pathfinder projects on social housing to other areas of England; and if he will make a statement; [67440]

(2) what estimate he has made of the progress made in the nine pathfinder projects on social housing announced earlier this year; and if he will make a statement. [67439]

Mr. Raynsford: We have invited nine areas to work with the Government to establish long-term pathfinder projects to tackle most acute instances of low demand for—importantly—both public and private housing. Low demand, which occurs mainly in the north of England with pockets in the Midlands, is not specific to either sector. We are making available £25 million from the Capital Modernisation Fund to assist the pathfinder projects in undertaking vital preparatory work.

We are not seeking to add to the already large number of pathfinder projects at the present time. Nonetheless, we want those local authorities not directly involved but who do experience low demand to have the opportunity to learn the lessons of this new approach. We are currently considering how best to share the knowledge that is gained.

Council Homes

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the progress made in reaching the Government's target for improving the standard of council homes by 2010. [67442]

Mr. McNulty: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 9 July 2002, Official Report, column 881W.

Hull Council

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to intervene in Hull council; and if he will make a statement. [67579]

Mr. Raynsford: Kingston upon Hull council is due to respond to the Audit Commission's Best Value Inspectors draft Corporate Governance Inspection Report by 11 July. The Audit Commission will then finalise the report following the advice of the Referral Panel, and if considered appropriate will make any recommendations for referral to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Government will decide the best course of action to take on the final report when received.

Enterprise Bill

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what bilateral discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry regarding the provision in the Enterprise Bill which includes housing associations in the proposed insolvency law; and if he will make a statement. [67445]

Mr. McNulty: Following inter-departmental correspondence my noble Friend Lord Sainsbury announced on 2 July in another place during second reading of the Enterprise Bill our intention to bring forward amendments that will provide exemption from the insolvency provisions within the Bill for all RSLs, whether they are companies or industrial and provident societies.

Mobile Phone Mast

Mr. Norman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which (a) local authorities, (b) environmental groups and (c) other groups have been consulted on the revised Code of Best Practice for mobile phone operators on mast development. [67616]

Mr. McNulty: The revised Code is being drawn up by the Telecommunications Working Group which comprises representatives of the mobile phone network industry and of central and local government. We have not consulted other groups about the revision of the Code.

Planning

Dr. Cable: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what recent guidance he has given to the Planning Inspectorate regarding the weight to be given to health fears; in how many appeals this has been a determine factor in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [67781]

Mr. McNulty: Current planning guidance on telecommunications is set out in Planning Policy Guidance Note 8 (revised) (PPG8). PPG8 states that health considerations and public concern can in principle be material considerations in determining applications for planning permission and prior approval. Whether such matters are material in a particular case is ultimately a matter for the courts. It is for the decision-maker (usually the local planning authority) to determine what weight to attach to such considerations in any particular case.

However, it is the Government's firm view that the planning system is not the place for determining health safeguards. It remains central Government's responsibility to decide what measures are necessary to protect public health. In the Government's view, if a proposed mobile phone base station meets the International Commission on Non-Ionising Radiation Protection (ICNIRP) guidelines for public exposure it should not be necessary for a local planning authority, in processing an application for planning permission or prior approval, to consider further the health aspects and concerns about them.

Planning Inspectors should take account of PPG8 when considering appeals involving telecommunications development. Information is not held centrally about appeal decisions for mobile phone masts.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister to which level of authority he plans to give structure planning powers upon their removal from county councils where the unitary authority is a county. [67190]

Mr. Raynsford: Under the proposals in the Planning Green Paper structure plans are to be abolished. In areas where the unitary authority is a county, it would be responsible for preparing a local development framework.

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will introduce a restraint on the numbers of sequential planning applications which a developer may submit to a planning authority in respect of the same property; how many recent representations he has received on this subject; and if he will make a statement. [68116]

Mr. McNulty: Local planning authorities already have powers to decline to determine an application for planning permission if, within the previous two years, the Secretary of State has refused a similar application called in by him, or has dismissed an appeal against the refusal of a similar application, provided in each case there has been no material change in circumstances. The Planning Green Paper said that we propose to extend these powers to allow local planning authorities to decline to determine applications where a similar application has been refused and not appealed, or a similar application is still under consideration by them, or is at appeal, or has been called in.

We received over 16,000 responses to the Green Paper. We intend to make a statement about taking forward Green Paper proposals before the summer recess.

Car Boot Sales

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to increase the powers of local authorities over the granting of permissions for car boot sales. [67995]

Mr. McNulty: On 24 January 2002 a consultation paper was issued on possible options for change to the current temporary use provisions, including car boot sales. The paper put forward six options for change as well as inviting proposals for alternative options. A preferred option was not given. The closing date for responses was 24 April 2002.

We have had a significant response to the consultation paper. The views of respondents are currently being carefully considered prior to taking decisions on the way forward.

Public Consultations

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the public consultations undertaken by his Department since 8 June 2001, indicating the (a) length and (b) number of responses received in each case. [68702]

Mr. Leslie: A list of the public consultations undertaken by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister or its predecessors since 8 June 2001 has been placed in the Libraries of the House, including the dates for which the period for responses opened and closed. The list is based on central records and reflects the public consultations undertaken within the areas for which the Office is currently responsible. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not, however, keep central records relating to the number of responses received for each consultation.

Street Wardens

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what targets have been set, and what progress has been made, on the Street Wardens Initiative. [66892]

Mr. McNulty: The Prime Minister announced the introduction of street wardens at the Liveability Conference in April last year. 123 bids were approved in late October and schemes have since been developing their implementation plans. The first street warden scheme began in January this year and to date 106 schemes are up and running with about 700 wardens expected to become active during the coming year.

The targets set for the coming year include 80 per cent. of schemes focusing on crime to achieve a 20 per cent. reduction in burglary, auto crime or fear of crime and for those that focus on liveability, 80 per cent. of abandoned cars have removal notices placed within three days.

Council Tax

Mr. Watts: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he intends to use his reserve capping powers this year in respect of any local authorities' council tax increases; and if he will make a statement. [69416]

Mr. Raynsford: In our White Paper, "Strong Local Leadership—Quality Public Services", we made clear that we would use our reserve capping powers only in exceptional circumstances. We have carefully considered this year's increases and concluded it would not be appropriate to use the powers this year. (However, we remain concerned about the level of council tax increases and the willingness of local people to pay them. We have issued guidance on best practice on consulting local people about tax and spend decisions and we will be looking at how effectively authorities have engaged their local tax payers on future council tax increases.)

Affordable Housing

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what progress has been made on providing key workers with affordable housing in central London; [66895]

(2) what measures are in place to help key workers find affordable housing in London. [66896]

Mr. McNulty: The Government recognise the importance of affordable housing for key workers in London in maintaining balanced and successful communities.

£146 million of the £250 million Starter Homes Initiative has been allocated to London schemes and will help around 4,600 key workers to realise their aspirations of home ownership. We hope that the initiative will act as a catalyst, and encourage other innovative approaches to housing key workers.

The NHS in London is providing 2,000 units of affordable rental accommodation for health staff in the three years up to June 2003.

London will receive £558 million of funding through the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme in 2002–03. This is a 7 per cent. improvement over last year and is expected to achieve a completion target of 7,000 affordable homes, of which almost 2,000 will be for low-cost ownership.

In addition we are fundamentally overhauling the planning system to make it more effective overall and more responsive to the community's affordable housing needs. We have established an Affordable Housing Unit to work closely with partners in regional and local authorities, professional housing managers, developers and others in the public sector, and identify how each can contribute to improving the delivery of affordable homes in both the social rented low-cost ownership sectors.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what percentage of residential housing is planned to be (a) social housing and (b) housing for essential key workers in the proposed development of the Dome. [66894]

Mr. McNulty: Meridian Delta Ltd is currently working towards submission of a planning application for development of the Dome and land on the Greenwich peninsula, and the delivery of new housing, including social and key worker housing, will feature in its discussions with the planning authorities and other stakeholders. It would not be appropriate to speculate on the outcome of those discussions or of the planning process.

Sonae Factory (Kirby)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make the HSE findings on the recent explosion at the Sonae factory in Kirby available in the Library as soon as they are concluded. [68355]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for health and safety matters rests with the Department for Transport.

The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) investigation into the dust explosion which occurred on 1 June 2002 at the Sonae (UK) Ltd factory in Kirby is extensive and still continuing.

When the investigation is complete HSE will make the findings available in the House Library.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the improvement notices the HSE have issued to the Sonae factory in Kirby. [68351]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

As a result of the dust explosion on 1 June 2002, two enforcement notices were issued on plant and systems at the Sonae (UK) Ltd factory in Kirby.

A prohibition notice was issued on 25 June 2002. It prohibits the restarting of the plant involved in the recent explosion until a suitable and sufficient assessment of the risks associated with this plant is carried out.

An improvement notice was issued on 28 June 2002. It requires the company to carry out a suitable and sufficient assessment of the risks associated with wood dust in the other production areas on site not affected by the explosion. Compliance with this notice is to be achieved by 12 August 2002.

Four other enforcement notices have been served on the company:

May 2001—an improvement notice on work in confined spaces;

September 2001—a prohibition notice on the wood chip fuel feed area, following an explosion;

November 2001—an improvement notice concerning automatic self-propelled transfer carriages;

June 2002—an improvement notice on the safe use of industrial lift trucks.

Quiet Lanes

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will issue guidance to local authorities in respect of quiet lanes and the Transport Act 2000. [68476]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

The Department for Transport aims to publish statutory guidance on quiet lanes (and home zones) in parallel with the publication of regulations. The regulations will be laid before Parliament later this year.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Carers Allowance

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many appeals against refusal of applications for carers allowance (formerly invalid care allowance) in (a) Angus and (b) Scotland have been successful in each of the last five years. [62386]

Maria Eagle: The information requested for Angus is not available.

The available information for the total number of successful appeals in Scotland in each of the years from 1998 to 2001 is in the table.

	Number of successful appeals
1998	70
1999	85
2000	50
2001	40

Telford Job Centre

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many individuals have been assisted in the Telford Jobcentre Plus offices since their opening. [63376]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Precise figures for the number of individuals who have been assisted by the Jobcentre Plus office in Telford, and its linked offices in Madeley and Wellington, are not available. Many people, for example, call at the offices without an appointment simply to look at the job vacancies we hold and we do not keep records of such visits.

However, to give an approximation of the level of usage of the offices, we know that some 45,000 submissions to job vacancies have been made since the new offices opened last October. In the same period we have taken some 15,000 calls from customers inquiring about a claim to benefit and issued over 10,000 claim forms to them.

Benefits (Habitual Residence Test)

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people have been refused benefits under the habitual residence test rules in each of the last five years in the (a) Brighton, Pavilion, (b) Brighton, Kemptown and (c) Hove constituencies; and in how many of these cases the refusal has been reversed on appeal. [63494]

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people have been refused benefits under the habitual residence test rules in each of the last three years in the Portsmouth, South constituency; and if he will make a statement. [64723]

Malcolm Wicks: The purpose of the habitual residence test is to ensure that income-related benefits are paid to people with reasonably close ties to the UK and an intention to settle here. Introduced in 1994, its underlying principle is that UK taxpayers should not have to subsidise people with very tenuous links to the UK.

Data on claims subject to the habitual residence test are not available by parliamentary constituency. The table gives the available information by Jobcentre Plus district office.

Number of claims where the habitual residence test has not been satisfied

1. Data before 1998–99 are not available.

2. Excludes housing benefit and council tax benefit claims administered by local authorities. Information on the number of these claims where the habitual residence test has not been satisfied is not collected centrally.

Preserved Rights Residents

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much has been given to preserved rights residents in care homes for each region and local authority in each of the last five years; and how much has been transferred to local authorities for former preserved rights residents for 2002–03. [65142]

Maria Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table. The figures in the table show the actual preserved rights benefit expenditure by Government office region for the last five years. The figures reflect a case load that has had no new preserved rights cases since 1993 and declines by 10,000 cases each year. The total transfer payment to Department of Health was based on forecast expenditure for 2002–03. It included an amount to reflect the loss of disability benefits by preserved rights customers, but was net of on-going benefit liabilities which will continue to be met by this Department.

A total transfer of £714 million was made for Great Britain. £614 million was transferred by the Department for Work and Pensions, for 2002–03, to fund the transfer of preserved rights cases. In addition an extra £100 million was agreed by HM Treasury to cover the shortfall between care fees and preserved rights limits.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, pursuant to his answer of 19 November 2001, Official Report, column 145W, on preserved rights residents, if he will give comparable figures for the previous three years for which figures are available. [67697]

Maria Eagle: The information requested is in the following table which shows income support claimants with preserved rights in residential care/nursing homes for the years requested, May 2000, May 1999, and May 1998.

Manufacturing Redundancies

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what help has been given to manufacturing workers who have been made redundant in finding alternative employment. [66159]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 4 July 2002]: We recognise the devastating impact redundancies can have on local economies and the people directly affected. Wherever major redundancies occur, in manufacturing or any other sector, Jobcentre Plus together with other key regional partners, will set up a task force to identify and provide the support needed by those affected. This can include help through the Rapid Response Service where appropriate.

The aim of the Rapid Response Service is to provide support for those affected by redundancy and help people make the transition into sustainable new jobs. The nature of the help provided by the service will be tailored to the needs of the individuals, the employer, and the local labour market. This could include offering information, advice and guidance to those affected, help with jobsearch, facilitating retraining where necessary, or developing customised retraining programmes. People affected by redundancy can also have early access to Jobcentre Plus programmes such as the New Deals and Work Based Learning for Adults. Assistance is currently being made available to over 13,000 people from 47 different companies.

On 1 April 2002, the Rapid Response Service became fully operational, supported by a further investment of £6 million over two years.

Benefit Entitlements (Rural Areas)

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what measures he is taking to increase (a) awareness and (b) accessibility of benefit entitlements in rural areas. [66787]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 4 July 2002]: We are leading a fundamental overhaul of the welfare system, transforming it from a passive organisation paying out benefits to an active system that fights poverty, creates opportunity and helps people become self-sufficient and independent. To do this service delivery is being overhauled to offer distinct services that meet the different needs of the Department's client groups: pensioners, people of working age and children. We are investing in improved and modernised services that are easier for customers to access, make better use of technology, and are more accurate and secure.

Jobcentre Plus is addressing the difficulties faced by people living in rural areas, both in securing employment and gaining access to its services. A key part of the new Jobcentre Plus process involves initial contact being made by telephone, improving service for people whose nearest office is a distance from their home.

Customers can also access Employer Direct, Jobseeker Direct and the Benefit Enquiry Line (for people with disabilities) by telephone. In addition, they can access Worktrain, Learndirect and UK Online centres through the internet. Jobcentre Plus will continue to look for innovative ways of delivering and marketing its service, building on current experiments such as locating Jobpoints and other services in retail outlets and post offices.

The local service element of the Pension Service is being developed to reflect the communities it serves in rural areas and it will take full account of the needs of individual communities. Among other things, it will raise awareness and encourage the take-up of benefits to which pensioners may be entitled. At present, a visiting service is provided for customers. From October 2002, we plan that the local service will start to provide surgeries for both appointments and drop-in calls.

Drop-in surgeries will be available from April 2003 such as community centres or the premises of voluntary bodies regularly visited by pensioners, increasing awareness and accessibility of the Pension Service and its work. There will also be a network of formation points in similar locations and a benefits information service for care workers, volunteers and others to raise awareness of pensioner benefits.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to (a) the Government of Sudan and (b) the United Nations regarding plans to legalise female genital mutilation. [64600]

Mr. MacShane: Our embassy in Khartoum has made representations at ministerial level in Khartoum, both bilaterally and in co-ordination with EU partners, on the Sudanese Government's reported plans to legalise female genital mutilation (FGM). The Government of Sudan reassured us that there were no plans to legalise the practice. The embassy also works closely with Sudanese civil society groups in advocating the eradication of FGM. It forms part of the campaign for ratification of the UN Convention on the Eradication of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) in which we have actively supported the growing women's rights movement and UN attempts to address these issues. In particular, our embassy has on-going discussion with UNICEF. We have also funded various project aimed at eradication of FGM, including the national advocacy campaign for 2002–03.

Arms Sales

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the licence applications his Department has examined for arms exports to (a) India and (b) Pakistan since January 2000; and how many of his Department (i) supported and (ii) opposed. [65413]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: For a list of application approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department of Trade and Industry to the right hon. and learned Member for North-East Fife (Mr. Campbell) on 13 June 2002, Official Report, column 1377W.

However, views expressed by any individual Department involved in the licensing process fall under the description of "internal discussion and advice", the disclosure of which would harm the frankness and candour of internal discussion. Such information is exempt from disclosure under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government information.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with the (a) Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, (b) Secretary of State for Defence and (c) Secretary of State for International Development regarding arms export licences to (i) Pakistan and (ii) India. [65414]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary is in regular contact with his counterparts in the Department of Trade and Industry, the Ministry of Defence and the Department for International Development on export licensing issues but details of specific discussions fall under the descriptor of "internal discussions and advice" and are exempt from disclosure under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the European Union travel ban on President Mugabe. [65245]

Mr. MacShane: On 18 February, EU Ministers imposed a travel ban on 20 named members of the Zimbabwe regime (common position 2002/145/CFSP). Under Article 15 of the Treaty on European Union, all member states are obliged to implement common positions.

Mugabe was recently refused entry to France. Where international commitments to the UN and Interpol have obliged member states to let Mugabe and others into the EU, the terms of their entry have been as restrictive as possible.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what (a) Commonwealth, (b) European Union and (c) other countries have sanctions against Zimbabwe; and what form they take. [67127]

Mr. MacShane: On 19 March, Zimbabwe was suspended from the Councils of the Commonwealth.

On 18 February, the EU imposed a travel ban and asset freeze on 20 senior members of the Zimbabwe Government. It also imposed an arms embargo.

A travel ban has been imposed by the United States, Norway, Switzerland and New Zealand.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when and where the ZANU-PF members who are under travel sanctions have travelled since the inception of the travel sanctions. [67416]

Mr. MacShane: On 18 February, EU Ministers adopted a common position (2002/145/CFSP) which imposed a travel ban within the EU on Mugabe and 19 other named members of the Zimbabwe regime.

The EU common position allows member states to grant exemptions to the travel ban 'on the grounds of humanitarian need, including religious obligation, or on grounds of attending meetings of international bodies or conducting political dialogue that promote democracy, human rights and the rule of law in Zimbabwe'.

Under the terms of the EU travel ban, France was obliged to permit Police Commissioner Chihuri to attend an Interpol meeting in Lyon on 14–16 May, and Italy was obliged to permit Mugabe to attend a UN conference in Rome on 10–13 June.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) Government colleagues and (b) other Governments about potential measures the international coalition could take regarding the actions of the Mugabe regime. [67125]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend, the Foreign Secretary, has discussed Zimbabwe with Government colleagues. He remains in regular touch with EU, US and Commonwealth colleagues on further international responses to the situation in Zimbabwe.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was discussed at his meeting with the Southern African Development Community concerning Zimbabwe; and what the outcome of this meeting was. [67132]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend, the Foreign Secretary, has not attended a meeting with the Southern African Development Community.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met a member of ZANU-PF; and what was discussed. [67129]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend, the Foreign Secretary, raised the situation in Zimbabwe with Foreign Minister Mudenge, in New York on 10 November 2001.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings with non-EU countries he has scheduled in the next six months on the topic of Zimbabwe. [67121]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, will discuss Zimbabwe, at every appropriate opportunity, with concerned members of the international community.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with Nelson Mandela on his potential inclusion in seeking a solution to Zimbabwe's problems; and what his response has been. [67123]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, has not held discussions with Nelson Mandela on seeking a solution to Zimbabwe's problems. The Foreign Secretary discussed Zimbabwe with South African Foreign Minister, Zuma, on 20 June.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effect of the international community's freezing of ZANU-PF's assets. [67131]

Mr. MacShane: The UK has frozen £76,000 in assets belonging to the members of ZANU-PF who are covered by the EU common position (2002/145/CFSP on 18 February). The freezing of ZANU-PF assets has put the financial markets of the EU and Switzerland off limits to those on the banned list. It has also helped signal the increasing isolation of the ZANU-PF elite.

Nepal

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what level of military assistance is to be offered to the Government of Nepal; and if he will make a statement. [67426]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are very concerned about the situation in Nepal. The brutal Maoist insurgency is undermining Nepal's young democracy and fragile economy, and adding to the regional instability. The Nepalese Government will continue to have our full support in dealing with the political, military and developmental aspects of the crisis. We are working with our international partners to develop an integrated approach to security, reform and development. We believe military assistance should be considered as part of a comprehensive approach to a resolution of the conflict.

We have provided considerable assistance to the Nepalese Government in the form of training and logistical support for the RNA. This includes training for the Royal Nepalese Army in media operations training, civil affairs training and human rights awareness training. We have also provided low level assistance in the form of various items of logistical equipment. This includes communications equipment and a number of used vehicles.

We plan to give further assistance in the areas of intelligence, military training and equipment in the future.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his policy is on using 0870 telephone numbers for inquiries by the public to the Department and its agencies. [66204]

Mr. MacShane: Once the integrated voice recognition system for consular travel advice is operational, it will be accessible via an 0870 number. Travel advice is also available on the FCO website.

Macedonia

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom Government will ratify the Association and Stabilisation Agreement with the FYR of Macedonia. [67180]

Mr. MacShane: The EU has made clear that further progress in Macedonia's relations with the European Union is closely tied to the implementation of the August 2001 Framework Agreement. We will continue to monitor progress, particularly during the forthcoming election period. If the conditions in Macedonia are right the UK hopes to ratify the Stabilisation and Association Agreement after the summer.

Refugees

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's obligations pertaining to refugees under the 1951 Geneva Convention. [67126]

Mr. MacShane: As a State party to the 1951 Convention and its 1967 Protocol relating to Refugees, the UK has an obligation under international law to protect people fleeing persecution.

This is enshrined in Article 33(1) of the 1951 Convention relating to the status of refugees, which provides that > "No contracting state shall expel or return ("refouler") a refugee in any manner whatsoever to the frontiers of territories where his life or freedom would be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion".

Further rights include the right not to be expelled under certain, strictly defined conditions (Article 32); exemption from penalties for illegal entry into the territory of a contracting state (Article 31); the right to work (Article 17); the right to housing (Article 21); the right to education (Article 22); the right to public relief and assistance (Article 23); the right to freedom of religion and to free access to courts (Article 4 and 16); freedom of movement within the territory (Article 26); the right to be issued with travel documents (Articles 27 and 28).

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he discussed at his recent meeting with South African Foreign Minister Zuma; and what the outcome was. [67130]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, met South African Foreign Minister, Zuma, on 20 June. They discussed a range of issues including Zimbabwe and the world summit on sustainable development (WSSD).

European Institution Costs

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the total cost is in the latest available year of the (a) European Union, (b) Council of Europe, (c) Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe, and (d) Western European Union, including their respective parliamentary assemblies; and how much the United Kingdom contributes to each. [67760]

Peter Hain: The adopted EU budget for 2002 totals euro 95,655 million (or £58.2 billion). The UK financing share, after abatement, is 13.51 per cent. (approximately £7.863 billion). The Council of Europe's budget for 2002 is £103 million, of which the UK contributes £15 million. The 2002 budget for the Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe is euro 177.5 million: the UK contribution (including staff costs etc.) amounts to some £22.6 million. The Western European Union's budget for 2002 totalled euro 16.8 million, of which the UK share was approximately euro 2.7 million.

European Arrest Warrant

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what powers the Government have to withhold their consent to decisions reached at the Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement, with particular reference to the context of the European arrest warrant. [68331]

Peter Hain: The resolution of the House of Commons dated 17 November 1998 sets out the terms under which the Government may agree to legislative proposals in the Council of Ministers. The Government are required to withhold their consent to legislative proposals until parliamentary scrutiny has been completed. The resolution allows Ministers to give their agreement in certain limited circumstances before scrutiny has been completed.

In negotiations, the Government can withhold their consent to a proposal for legislative action by the Council of Ministers at any stage up to its formal adoption. However, opposing or abstaining on a proposal would not necessarily prevent the proposal being adopted if the voting was QMV.

On the question of the European arrest warrant, a general approach on the framework was agreed in December 2002. The framework decision was formally adopted at the Justice and Home Affairs Council in June 2002.

Gibraltar

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether an agreement has been reached to share sovereignty of Gibraltar with Spain. [R] [68456]

Peter Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to my statement in Westminster Hall on 18 June 2002, Official Report, column 38WH.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy that any (a) agreement concerning the sovereignty of the military base in Gibraltar and (b) agreements on any aspect of the future status of Gibraltar will be put to the people of Gibraltar in the form of a referendum. [68309]

Peter Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for North Dorset (Mr. Walter) on 16 April 2002, Official Report, column 451. As previously stated, the Government will continue to stand by their commitments to the people of Gibraltar as set out in the preamble to the Gibraltar constitution.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his policy that the military base in Gibraltar will remain under sole British sovereignty under the terms of any agreement on the future status of Gibraltar. [68311]

Peter Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for North Dorset (Mr. Walter) on 16 April 2002, Official Report, column 451.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on which occasions since 1996, and how, the Government raised with the Government of Gibraltar matters of concern relating to pensions and related benefits. [67848]

Peter Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 8 May 2002, Official Report, column 243W. I raised the matter again in a letter to the Chief Minister of Gibraltar on 16 May.

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role Lord Hannay performs in the present discussions taking place between the President of Cyprus and Mr. Denktash on Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [68439]

Peter Hain: Lord Hannay was appointed as the special representative of the British Government in 1996 to give support and new impetus to UN efforts to find a Cyprus settlement; he has worked hard at this for more than six years and the Government are grateful for his efforts.

The current direct talks to find a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement are attended by the two leaders in Cyprus and the UN. We understand and support the request of the Secretary-General of the United Nations that the content of the talks should not be publicised.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on a suitable settlement between the two communities in Cyprus. [68193]

Peter Hain: The Government are committed to seeing a major, sustained effort towards securing a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement in Cyprus and strongly support the direct talks in Cyprus between the two leaders which have been in progress since January under the auspices of the UN Secretary General's Good Offices Mission. Our aim is for a reunited Cyprus to accede to the EU.

It is for the two sides in Cyprus to agree the terms of a settlement.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the Government's policy that a settlement on the future of Cyprus should involve (a) the establishment of a new central state with a new flag, and (b) one Turkish state in the north and one Greek state in the south; if it is his policy to regard Turkish Cypriots and Greek Cypriots as two peoples; if Lord Hannay's recent statements on the matter represent the Government's policy; and if he will make a statement. [68195]

Peter Hain: It is for the two sides in Cyprus to agree the terms of a settlement and it is thus for them to agree on such matters as the powers and attributes of the common state and the component states, as they are currently being labelled in the negotiations. However, it has been common ground, since as long ago as the negotiations in 1992, that the outcome of any successful negotiations would be a new Cyprus, with different institutions from those in the 1960 constitution. These 1992 negotiations envisaged a Cyprus composed of a Greek Cypriot Federated State and a Turkish Cypriot Federated State.

I used the phrase "two peoples" when visiting the island of Cyprus in April 2002. Lord Hannay repeated this phrase in a recent interview in his capacity as the Government's Special Representative on Cyprus. I often refer to the Welsh and Scottish people. In no way am I suggesting that people cannot be Welsh, British and European at the same time.

International Criminal Court

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications of the International Criminal Court for British soldiers and citizens. [68542]

Mr. MacShane: The purpose of the International Criminal Court (ICC) is to ensure that the most serious crimes of international concern—genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity—do not go unpunished. The Rome Statute establishing the Court is based on the principle of complementarity: the ICC only steps in where states are unwilling or unable genuinely to investigate or prosecute. The crimes covered by the ICC have been incorporated into UK law. Since the United Kingdom would investigate any serious allegations, it is inconceivable that the ICC would assume jurisdiction.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to encourage the United States to accept the jurisdiction of the International Criminal Court. [67794]

Mr. MacShane: We are in regular contact with the US Administration in respect of this issue. Officials have made several approaches, both bilaterally and in conjunction with EU partners, encouraging the US to ratify the Rome statute. And we have repeatedly made clear that, while we understand US concerns that the court might bring malicious or politically-motivated charges against US personnel, we do not share them, since the statute contains safeguards against this.

EU Information/Communication Strategy

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy towards the European Commission document on a Strategy of Information and Communication for the European Union; and what measures he will undertake to ensure impartiality in such information campaigns. [68332]

Peter Hain: We welcome the Commission's document, which is a useful analysis of efforts so far by European Union institutions and member states to explain the European Union's work to the people of the European Union. It includes recommendations on how the institutions could do that job better, in partnership with member states.

The Government fully support the aim of explaining the practical benefits of British membership of the European Union to our citizens, in a straightforward and factual way. We look forward to working with our European partners to do just that.

European Council (Public Access)

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with reference to Presidency Conclusions of the Seville European Summit, Annex II, Section E, what plans the Government have for (a) providing public facilities for viewing and listening to Council deliberations on legislation adopted by the co-decision procedure with the European Parliament (i) in London, (ii) in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and (iii) in major towns and cities in England, (b) publicising such facilities and the dates and times of the relevant Council meetings and (c) ensuring that access to such premises will be free of charge. [68341]

Peter Hain: The detailed arrangements for greater Council transparency, agreed at Seville, are still under discussion. It is clearly too early to judge the likely extent of media take-up of Council proceedings. But the Government remain committed to the principle that the work of the European Council should be accessible to the widest possible European public.

Chagos Archipelago

Mr. Borrow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the latest phase of the feasibility study into resettling the outer islands of the Chagos Archipelago will be completed. [69418]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have now received Phase 2B of the consultants report on whether it would be feasible for the Chagossians to return and live on the outer islands of the British Indian Ocean Territory (the Chagos archipelago). Copies of the report will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. We are also sending copies to the Government of Mauritius and the Chagossians' lawyers in the United Kingdom.

While the report concludes that short term habitation for limited numbers on a subsistence basis is possible, it also emphasises that any long-term resettlement would be precarious and costly.

Minority Languages

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Government will submit its first report on implementation of the Council of Europe Charter for regional or minority languages. [69419]

Mr. MacShane: I am pleased to announce that the report was submitted to the Council of Europe on 1 July. The report details the measures taken by the Government and the devolved Administrations to fulfil the UK's obligations under the Charter for Welsh, Scottish Gaelic, Irish, Scots and Ulster-Scots. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

Drug Trafficking

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations, and when, his Department has made to the Governments of (a) Afghanistan, (b) the Bahamas, (c) Bolivia, (d) Brazil, (e) Burma, (f) Cambodia, (g) China, (h) Colombia, (i) Dominican Republic, (j) Ecuador, (k) Guatemala, (l) Haiti, (m) Hong Kong, (n) India, (o) Jamaica, (p) Laos, (q) Mexico, (r) Nigeria, (s) Pakistan, (t) Panama, (u) Paraguay, (v) Peru, (w) Taiwan, (x) Thailand, (y) Venezuela and (z) Vietnam, concerning the trafficking of illegal drugs to the United Kingdom through their territories; and if he will make a statement. [67696]

Mr. Straw: We are in regular dialogue with the Governments of countries where Class A drugs are produced or trafficked. Our strategy has been to build local law enforcement capability to interdict the supply of drugs destined for the UK as close to its source as possible.

In Afghanistan, which is the source of 90 per cent. of the heroin found on the UK's streets, we are co-ordinating international anti-narcotics assistance. By working with international partners and agencies we aim to eliminate opium poppy, build institutions, increase law enforcement capacity, assist the creation of alternative livelihoods and address growing drug demand. The UK also provides anti-drugs assistance, in the form of training and equipment, to Afghanistan's neighbours and other countries on the heroin supply route to the UK.

We also have regular contact with the Governments of Colombia, Peru and Bolivia, who together produce virtually all of the world's cocaine. We are providing training and equipment for local law enforcement agencies in all three states to assist their respective Governments to tackle the problem. We are also active in supporting projects to build local capability in other South American countries through which drugs are trafficked. The Caribbean, through which much of the cocaine trafficked to the UK is transshipped, has also been the focus for much of our assistance, both bilaterally, and through multi-lateral fora.

Laeken Declaration

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's understanding of the meaning of the phrase "political union" in the Laeken declaration; and if he will cite the previous occurrences of that phrase in documents agreed by the European Council. [67793]

Mr. Straw: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend the Minister for Europe gave to the hon. Member for West Suffolk (Mr. Spring) on 2 July 2002, Official Report, column 273W.

Ivory Coast

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government have taken to ensure that the recommendations of the National Reconciliation Forum in Côte d'Ivoire have been implemented, including the granting of nationality to Alassane Ouattara; and if he will make a statement. [66691]

Mr. Straw: The UK followed closely the National Reconciliation Forum in Côte d'Ivoire. The Minister for Africa, my noble Friend Baroness Amos, sent a message to the President of the Forum, welcoming its conclusions.

We have taken every opportunity, along with our European partners, to encourage the Ivorian Government to implement the forum's recommendations.

The Government consider the recent granting of a nationality certificate to Mr. Ouattara a positive step forward. We hope that further implementation of the forum's recommendations will follow.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government have taken to ensure that the election process in Côte d'Ivoire prior to the local elections on 7 July has been fair and free for all parties concerned, with special regard to the distribution of identity cards required for voter registration; and if he will make a statement. [66692]

Mr. Straw: Officials from our embassy in Abidjan have participated, along with our European partners, in several meetings with the CEI (Independent Electoral Commission) and made representations to the Ivorian Government to emphasise our concerns that the elections should be free, fair and inclusive.

We welcome the Ivorian Government's commitment to distribute new identity cards in advance of the poll on 7 July.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent tensions between Government supporters and opposition party supporters in Daloa, Côte D'Ivoire. [66693]

Mr. Straw: A state of emergency has been announced and Daloa placed under curfew until 15 July. The Ivorian Minister of the Interior, Boga Doudou, accompanied by the head of the armed forces, General Doue, visited Daloa on 26 June for talks with local political and community leaders in an attempt to defuse the situation further.

We welcome the Ivorian Government's actions to calm the situation and support their call to all political parties to exercise restraint during the election campaign.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many opposition supporters he estimates were killed during the clashes between Government supporters and opposition party supporters in Daloa, Côte d'Ivoire. [66694]

Mr. Straw: According to official Ivorian Government estimates, six people have been killed and approximately 50 injured in clashes in Daloa, Côte d'Ivoire, since 25 June.

UK/US Relations

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to strengthen ties between the United Kingdom and the United States. [67795]

Mr. MacShane: The United States is one of our closest allies. The closeness of the relationship was reinforced by the events of 11 September. There are regular UK ministerial meetings with State Department and other Administration officials in Washington. The Foreign Secretary talks regularly with the Secretary of State. Parliament has close links with Congress and our ambassador in Washington and his embassy have access to the US Administration across a wide range of issues. The UK probably has more high level daily contacts with the US than any other country allowing us to foresee problems and work hard to iron out our differences. HMG would welcome increased contact between legislators in the Commons and Congress.

We will maintain and build on these ties to strengthen the relationship with the US, our largest bilateral trading partner and inward investor.

EU Budget

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the contribution of an average UK family to the EU budget in 2000. [67796]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

No such estimate has been made. However, based on data published by the European Commission and European Court of Auditors, the UK's net contribution to the EC budget in 2000 was £63.1 on a per capita basis. This figure includes the UK's payments to and receipts from the EC budget, but does not, however, capture other benefits which membership of the EU brings to the UK through closer economic ties with our neighbours. For example, over three quarters of a million UK companies now trade with the rest of the EU, which accounts for over 50 per cent. of the UK's total exports, and affects around 3 million UK jobs.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Queen's Counsel

Keith Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many complaints she has received from applicants for appointment as Queen's counsel about the way the system has operated in the last three years. [67932]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Prior to the creation of the Commission for Judicial Appointments in March 2001, there was no formal complaints procedure for unsuccessful applicants for Queen's counsel. It has not been possible to identify from departmental records whether any complaints were received, and if so, how many prior to the creation of the commission. Since the establishment of the Commission for Judicial Appointments, three complaints have been received.

Child Contact Centres

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which members are undertaking work on the Child Contact Centre Working Group; and when it plans to set out standards for child contact centres. [67601]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Child Contact Working Group is facilitated by the Lord Chancellor's Department. It comprises 20 representatives from the National Association of Child Contact Centres (NACCC), other child contact centre services, the Children and Family Court Advisory and Support Service and legal practitioners. The working group launched its consultation on definitions of contact centre services on 11 May 2002. The consultation ends in October 2002. The working group aims to reach conclusions in December 2002.

Court Buildings, Somerset

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what damage has been sustained by court buildings in Somerset in the last two years. [67591]

Yvette Cooper: There have been two significant incidents of damage within the last two years. On 19 April 2002 at Taunton combined court there was flood damage caused by excessive water mains pressure. Works are due to be completed in July 2002 at a cost of £85,000. On 17 December 2001 at Yeovil county court, the coping stones in the car park wall were dislodged when hit by a car. Remedial work was completed in May 2002 at a cost of £1,410.

Justices of the Peace

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans she has to require employers to give paid leave to Justices of the Peace in their employment; and if she will make a statement. [67666]

Yvette Cooper: The Lord Chancellor has no such plans. Section 50 of the Employment Rights Act 1996 requires employers to allow reasonable time off for undertaking magisterial and other duties. Many employers do allow time off with pay, but where they do not, a magistrate may claim financial loss allowance at a fixed rate.

The Lord Chancellor has taken initiatives in the past, including a handbook for employers, produced in collaboration with the Magistrates Association to encourage employers to play an active part in the local community by allowing time off for staff to undertake magisterial duties. He will consider further ways of encouraging the support of employers as part of a national recruitment strategy.

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will revise the provisions under the guidance notes on justices' allowances, so as to base the daily allowance for loss of earnings on actual earnings; and if she will make a statement. [67665]

Yvette Cooper: The financial loss allowance is based on average earnings. I appreciate this may not fully compensate some justices for the loss they suffer, but using this method is considered the most equitable way of striking a balance to cover the differing trades and professions within the magistracy.

Crown Court, Buckinghamshire

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what criteria she is using to determine the best location for a new Crown court in Buckinghamshire. [68504]

Yvette Cooper: The Lord Chancellor's Department will consider a variety of factors including the following: population densities (current and projected), quality and range of existing transport links including public services, travel distances for court users, accessibility to court users including the disabled, availability of suitable accommodation, location of other justice agencies, security, cost, existing services and facilities.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what degree of importance he is giving to accessibility in deciding the location of a new Crown Court in Buckinghamshire. [68502]

Yvette Cooper: The Lord Chancellor's Department places a very high level of importance on the accessibility of any potential new courts. Consideration is given to a number of factors including public transport, road and rail links, parking and access for the disabled.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the accessibility of a new Crown Court in (a) Milton Keynes and (b) Aylesbury to people living in Buckinghamshire. [68503]

Yvette Cooper: To date, no detailed assessment has been undertaken on the accessibility of a potential new Crown Court for Buckinghamshire. Plans are at the preliminary stage and the Court Service is still considering all of the various options available, taking into account the outcome from the current Spending Review.

Legal Services Ombudsman

Ms Munn: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Legal Services Ombudsman intends to publish her Annual report for 2001–02. [69358]

Yvette Cooper: The Legal Services Ombudsman has today published her eleventh Annual Report, and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service Pension Scheme

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what assessment he has made of the proportion of the rise in Government liabilities resulting from unfunded parts of the civil service pension scheme in the last five years due to (a) wage inflation, (b) longevity, (c) extension of the rights of part-time workers and (d) other factors; and if he will make a statement. [67022]

Mr. Alexander: The principal civil service pension scheme (PCSPS)—the occupational pension arrangement for civil servants—is an underfunded pension scheme made under the Superannuation Act 1972. All payments of pension and related benefits to former members of the PCSPS or their dependants are made from the civil superannuation vote, for which the Cabinet Office is accountable.

The PCSPS is subject to regular actuarial review by the Government Actuary. Intermediate valuations are produced for resource accounting purposes which provide updated liability figures. The actuarial reviews include full allowance for the effects on the liabilities of the PCSPS of such factors as price inflation, salary growth, membership changes and pensioner mortality assumptions.

The liabilities of the PCSPS at the earliest review during the last five years were calculated to be £45.4 billion as at 30 September 1966. They were estimated at £58.6 billion as at 31 March 2000 in the latest resource accounts (HC 554). The increase over the period is in line with that expected by the actuary.

Information in the form requested is not readily available. However, allowance for the continuing improvement in pensioner longevity, price inflation and real wage growth are in order of importance the main factors behind the increase in liabilities. Extension of the pension rights of part-time workers is not a significant factor.

Ministerial Salaries

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the annual cost was of ministerial salaries in his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 2001–02. [60951]

Mr. Alexander: The level of ministerial salaries are recommended by the senior salaries review body. From May 1997, in this Department there were two Cabinet Ministers, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and the Leader of the House of Lords, at an annual salary of £43,991 and £58,876 respectively; one Minister of State at an annual salary of £31,125; and one parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at an annual salary of £23,623. From June 2001, there were two Cabinet Ministers, the Deputy prime Minister and First Secretary of State, and the Leader of the House of Lords, at an annual salary of £68,157 and £90,562 respectively; two Ministers of State, at an annual salary of £35,356, one Minister of State (the Minister for the Cabinet Office and Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster) at an annual salary of £70,283; and one Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, at an annual salary of £26,835.

TREASURY

Female Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the staff of his Department are women; and what the percentage was in June 1997. [66915]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office on 5 July Official Report, column 622W.

Infant Deaths

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many infant deaths per 1,000 live births there were in each constituency in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [67870]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the national statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Paul Marsden dated 10 July 2002:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking how many infant deaths per 1,000 live births there were in each constituency in each year since 1997. (67870).

Figures are available for the years 1997–2001. A combined rate for these years has been calculated for each constituency, as the number of infant deaths for individual years in some constituencies was too small to reliably calculate a rate or prevent disclosure. These rates have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Elderly People (Definition)

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the Government's definition of elderly is; and what proportion of the population in each region is considered elderly. [68535]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the national statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Bill Wiggin dated 10 July 2002:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your question concerning the definition of what elderly is, and what proportion of the population in each region is considered elderly. (68535).

In response to your question, there is no official definition of what elderly is, but it is usually taken to include those who have reached retirement age, currently 65 for men and 60 for women. On this basis, the percentages of total population by Government Office Region for England, and for Wales, are given in the attached table.

Estimated resident population mid-2000: retirement age population as percentage of total population by Government Office Region for England, and for Wales	Percentage of total GOR population
North East	18.8
North West	18.2
Yorkshire and The Humber	18.3
East Midlands	18.4
West Midlands	18.2
East	18.5
London	14.3
South East	18.5
South West	21.0
Wales	19.0

Statistics

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the figures on marriage, divorce and domestic violence will be added to the neighbourhood statistics section of the Office for National Statistics website. [68482]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. David Willetts, dated 10 July 2002:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning when the figures on marriage, divorce and domestic violence will be added to the neighbourhood statistics section of the Office of National Statistics website. (68482)

There are no plans to add information on marriage, divorce and domestic violence to the Neighbourhood Statistics section of the ONS website in the near future. The next major update to the site will be the addition of statistics from the 2001 Census in 2003 and these will include information about the marital status of the population in local areas. Further datasets for nine statistical domains will be added to the website from 2003/04 onwards, in line with the need for better information set out in the Report of Policy Action Team 18 Better Information to meet the priorities for the National Strategy for Neighbourhood Renewal.

Royal Mint

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Royal Mint independent review will be complete; and if he will make a statement. [68078]

Ruth Kelly: The Royal Mint has issued an invitation to tender for an independent review to be completed. They expect to award a contract within the next dew days. Those invited have been told that the Mint would like the review to commence as soon as possible and to be completed as soon as feasible.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the EU Contact Committee on Combating Money Laundering is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68605]

Ruth Kelly: The role and responsibilities of the Contact Committee on Money Laundering are set out in Article 13 of Council directive 91/308/EEC of 10 June 1991 on prevention of the use of the financial system for the purpose of money laundering ("Official Journal" L166, 28/06/1991 P.0077–0083).

The committee meets at the request either of the chair or of the delegation of a member state. Since May 2001, it has met three times. The UK is represented by officials from HM Treasury and the Home Office. Representatives of the Scottish Executive do not attend, as money laundering is not a devolved matter.

Bulk Tankers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to the United Kingdom marine insurance industry of the loss of bulk tankers in each of the past five years. [68328]

Ruth Kelly: None.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff have contributed to his Department's input to the spending review. [68687]

Mr. Boateng: A range of staff across the Treasury have contributed to work on the 2002 spending review. The work has been co-ordinated in the Public Services Directorate, which presently numbers around 220 staff.

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and what proportion of the public service agreements of his Department set out in the document, "Public Services for the Future 1998", have been met; and if he will make a statement. [68719]

Mr. Boateng: Information relating to the Treasury's public service agreement targets can be found in the Treasury's departmental report 2002 (Cm5425).

Devolved Administrations

Adam Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Treasury sets limits on the contingent liabilities into which the devolved Administrations may enter. [68027]

Mr. Boateng: No. Contingent liabilities entered into by the devolved Administrations fall to be met within their existing departmental expenditure limits if the contingent liabilities materialise.

Fire Prevention

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had on reducing the rate of VAT for fire prevention materials in the home. [66901]

John Healey: The Chancellor has had no recent discussions on this specific subject. Under the long-standing agreements which govern VAT law across the European Union, member states are only permitted to introduce reduced rates of VAT for a prescribed list of goods and services set out in annex H of the sixth VAT directive. General 'fire prevention materials' for use in the home are not among the items included in the annex H list.

However, the UK's zero rate for the construction of new dwellings does include fire retardant building materials, as well as fire alarms, smoke detectors and fire safety equipment installed when a new home is being built. Similarly, the 5 per cent. reduced rate for residential conversions and renovations includes fire retardant building materials, fire alarms, smoke detectors and fire safety equipment installed at the time of the conversion.

We have also reduced to 5 per cent. the VAT on grant funded installation of smoke alarms when these are installed at the same time as energy saving materials or central heating systems. This is part of the VAT reduced rate introduced to support DEFRA's home energy efficiency scheme (HEES). HEES grants are primarily targeted at less well off people aged over 60 or receiving specified benefits, so the related reduced rate is similarly well targeted at those who need help most.

Industrial and Provident Societies

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the increase in the Financial Services Authority fees for industrial and provident societies. [66902]

Ruth Kelly: The setting of fees is the responsibility of the Financial Services Authority in relation to the duties it performs under the relevant industrial and provident society Acts. The new level of fees has not yet been finalised and through consultation the FSA has listened carefully to the concerns that have been raised by some in the movement. That is why they have decided to review their proposals and have recently presented further options to societies and their representative bodies.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans to make deaf employees exempt from paying tax on their hearing aids; and if he will make a statement. [66702]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are continuing to remove barriers to work and ensure that disabled people do not face discrimination in the workplace. Regulations came into force on 9 July 2002, which will ensure that benefits for disabled employees which may be used both in and out of the workplace, such as a hearing aid, will not be liable to a tax charge.

Tax Credits

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax credit applications have been identified as appropriate for further investigation; how many have been investigated; how many of these investigations have proved fraudulent or non-compliant activity; how many penalties have been levied as a result; how many unsuccessful prosecutions have occurred; how many successful prosecutions have occurred; and how many custodial sentences have been passed in each of the last three years for the (a) WFTC and (b) DPTC. [58767]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is given in the table.

	1999–2000[1]	2000–01	2001–02

Air Passenger Duty

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many air journeys to and from (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scottish airports were subject to the (i) standard and (ii) higher rate of air passenger duty in each of the last five years. [67845]

John Healey: Air passenger duty is applicable only to journeys by chargeable passengers on chargeable aircraft departing from a UK airport. Journeys to the UK from outside the UK may be subject to duties and taxes in the country of departure.

Until 31 March 2001 there were two rates of duty, a lower rate for destinations within the European Economic Area (EEA) and a higher rate applicable to all other destinations. From 1 April 2001 four rates of duty have been in force, standard rates of duty for both EEA and non EEA destinations and reduced rates of duty for both EEA and non EEA destinations. An exemption from duty for flights from airports in the Scottish Highlands and Islands was introduced on 1 April 2001. The numbers of journeys made (in thousands) by chargeable passengers from the UK for the previous five financial years are given in the table.

Pharmaceuticals (Tax Incentives)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will respond to the letters from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan of 12 April and 5 June regarding tax incentives for pharmaceutical corporations that donate medicines overseas. [67647]

John Healey: I have done so.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the adequacy of staffing levels at customs declaration desks at ports and airports of entry to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [67780]

John Healey: Customs regularly review the allocation of their resources and deploy their staff based on the volume of work and an assessment of the risk related to the variety of international movements of freight and persons. Customs are also deploying their resources in a flexible and mobile way to optimise their ability to respond to the ever-changing patterns of international activity.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter being issued to working families tax credit recipients in advance of the renewal of their six-monthly awards regarding method of payment. [67860]

Dawn Primarolo: A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

National Insurance

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 2 July 2002, Official Report, column 291W, on National Insurance (Reduced Rates), on what basis the amount of the reduction in national insurance contributions available to married women paying the reduced rate is calculated. [68244]

Dawn Primarolo: There is nothing I can usefully add to what I said in my answer of 2 July 2002, Official Report, column 291W.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what obligation there is on (a) employers and (b) individual employees to inform the Inland Revenue of a change of employee's address; and if he will make a statement. [68989]

Dawn Primarolo: None.

Condemnation Hearings

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if a defendant at a condemnation hearing is allowed to view evidence prior to the hearing being brought by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in support of the case. [68122]

John Healey: In condemnation proceedings, it is Customs practice to disclose voluntarily the witness statements upon which they seek to rely, prior to the hearing. These statements are provided as a matter of courtesy once they are available.

Finance Bill

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many officials from his Department were in attendance in Parliament to Ministers during the proceedings on the Finance Bill on Wednesday 3 July. [68666]

Dawn Primarolo: As is customary, there were a number of officials from the Treasury in attendance, together with officials from the revenue departments appropriate to the issues tabled for the proceedings.

HEALTH

Waiting Lists

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the cases of waiting list manipulation his Department recorded in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999, (d) 2000, (e) 2001 and (f) 1 January 2002 to date. [61444]

Mr. Hutton: The National Audit Office report 'Inappropriate Adjustments to NHS Waiting Lists' (HC452 Session 2001–02, 19 December 2001) is available in the Library. The table lists the trusts involved in inappropriate adjustments and the timescales involved.

Trust	Timescale involved
St. Bartholomews and The London	1996 to November 2000
Guy's and St. Thomas'	Four years
Plymouth Hospitals	1998–1999
Salford Royal	September 1998 to July 2001
South Warwickshire General	May to September 2000
Stoke Mandeville	August 2000 to January 2001
Surrey and Sussex Healthcare	About one year
University College	May 1999

Since publication of the report a further case at Bath has come to light which was highlighted by a press release (2002/0211) on 3 May 2002.

The Government takes waiting list manipulation very seriously. The Department has asked the Audit Commission to initiate a system of spot-checks on waiting list statistics hospital-by-hospital. These spot-checks began this month.

We will also from this year move to publish on the internet and elsewhere regularly-updated information on waiting for all major treatments at all providers.In future, any manager found to have deliberately distorted waiting figures will face dismissal on grounds of gross misconduct. This will be supported by a new code of conduct for National Health Service managers. Anyone who breaches that code of conduct will not be re-employed as a manager—anywhere in the NHS.

Radiographers

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many radiographers in London have left the NHS and been re-employed as agency staff during the last year; and if he will make a statement. [60874]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect this information.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the projected average time is from conception to completion for a National Health Service Private Finance Initiative project; and if he will make a statement. [61671]

Mr. Hutton: There is no prescribed timescale set by the Department for schemes to progress through the stages up to advertising a project in the Official Journal of the European Commission (OJEC). The length of time taken to produce the outline business case, undertake necessary consultations and obtain outline planning permission will depend upon circumstances specific to each scheme.

The current indicative timetable from OJEC to financial close to eighteen months for major schemes; since March 2002 new initiatives have been introduced to further enhance the procurement process and ensure that the National Health Service obtains the best value from the current market and these aim to reduce this period.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service Private Finance Initiative projects (a) have been, (b) are and (c) are projected to be behind their initial completion date; what the (i) projected start date, (ii) actual start date, (iii) projected completion date and (iv) actual completion date is in each case; and if he will make a statement. [61669]

Mr. Hutton: Indicative timetables are set for all schemes as part of good project management. Complex schemes experience difficulties for a variety of good reasons; these have their timetables revised as appropriate.

Firm completion dates (for example when the hospital is open) are only set once contracts are signed for private finance initiative (PFI) schemes. The private sector suffers penalties if the completion date is not met. To date, all major PFI schemes have been opened on or ahead of their planned completion target date.

Arms-length bank

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in drawing up the legal and financial framework for the Arms-Length Bank controlled by the NHS. [64317]

Mr. Hutton: Details regarding the legal and financial framework of the National Health Service Bank are under consideration.

Consultants

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the relationship is between the professional and executive groups of a primary care trust and consultants in hospital trusts; and what guidance has he given to ensure regular meetings between hospital consultants and the primary care trust. [62313]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 25 June 2002]: The Department has not issued any guidance on this subject and has no plans to do so. Devolving power within the national health service recognises that frontline clinicians are best placed to make decisions on how to run the local health service and gives the freedom for them to decide how they will develop relationships in running the health service locally. However, 'Shifting the Balance of Power: The Next Steps' (January 2002) makes it clear that primary care trusts (PCTs) need to develop close working relationships with partners in NHS trusts. The relationship that PCTs develop with their colleagues in NHS trusts, including consultants, will be central to PCTs effectively discharging their functions for example planning and commissioning services for their local populations. PCTs will need to ensure that they engage in effective dialogue with clinicians working within NHS Trusts if they are to secure the best possible services to meet the needs of the local population. It is, however, a matter for PCTs and hospitals to decide the detail of how they do this.

Car Parking Fees

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he takes account of money received by hospital trusts from car parking fees in the allocation of funds; and if he will make a statement; [64712]

(2) what recent representations he has received on the levying of car parking fees for (a) hospital staff and (b) visitors to hospitals; [64715]

(3) if he will estimate how much money was received by hospital trusts from car parking fees in the last year for which figures are available. [64714]

(4) what policy guidelines he issues to hospital trusts over the levying of car parking fees for (a) visitors and (b) staff; and if he will publish such guidelines. [64713]

Mr. Lammy: National health service trusts can charge for car parking in order to raise additional income to improve the health service using income generation powers. Amounts collected from individual income generation schemes are not reported separately in trusts' accounts and the income raised is not taken into account in the allocation of funds to NHS trusts.

The Department issued guidance to NHS trusts in January 1996 in the booklet 'NHS income generation, car parking charges, A guide to Implementation'. A copy of this is available in the Library. It is left to individual hospitals to decide whether or not to charge for car parking and the cost of such charges in light of local circumstances. Where car parking charges are introduced, patients who are eligible to claim reimbursement of travelling expenses under the hospital travel costs scheme may have the charges reimbursed.

The Department of Health receives a small number of enquiries about car parking charges each year.

Psychiatric Beds

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many acute psychiatric beds were available for (a) children, (b) the elderly and (c) other ages in secure units within each (i) region and (ii) authority area in each of the last five years; what the occupancy rate was; and what delayed discharge issues occurred. [65251]

Jacqui Smith: Information is not available in the format requested.

Inappropriate Medication

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will estimate the (a) number and (b) percentage of over 75 year olds affected, and the cost to the NHS and the number of bed days lost from hospital wards from older people experiencing an adverse reaction or being prescribed inappropriate medication in the last 12 months; [65140]

(2) how many older people died from (a) experiencing an adverse reaction and (b) being prescribed inappropriate medication in the last 12 months. [65139]

Mr. Lammy: The Medicines Control Agency (MCA) and Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) receive reports of suspected adverse drug reactions (ADRs) submitted by doctors, dentists, pharmacists and coroners via the Yellow Card Scheme by doctors, and there is a legal requirement for companies to report 'suspected' ADRs to their drugs. In 2001, a total of 21,350 reports of 'suspected' ADRs were received through this scheme of which 1,964 (9 per cent.) occurred in patients over 75 years of age. The number of reports received via the yellow card scheme does not directly equate to the number of people who suffer adverse reactions to drugs for a number of reasons including an unknown level of under reporting. It is important to note that the reporting of a reaction does not necessarily mean it was caused by the drug and may relate to other factors such as the patient's underlying illness or other medicines taken concurrently.

According to the Department's hospital episode statistics (HES) it is estimated that 151,571 bed days were lost in patients over 75 years of age during 2001 due to the adverse effects of drugs, medicaments and biological substances in therapeutic use. This estimate is based on 16,747 finished consultant episodes (FCEs) where the primary reason for admission was due to adverse effects of drugs, medicaments and biological substances in therapeutic use. FCES are not the same as the number of patients treated because a hospitalised spell can consist of more than one FCE. These figures would only include adverse drug reactions occurring in hospital if a different FCE resulted where the primary cause was the adverse drug reaction. Cost of treatment is not recorded in HES.

Over the last 20 years, 'suspected' ADRs with a fatal outcome account for 2–3 per cent. of the reports submitted via the yellow card scheme. A total of 643 reports with a fatal outcome were received during 2001, of these 130 occurred in patients aged over 75 years. The Office of National Statistics also collates data on deaths certified by doctors and coroners as due to adverse effects of drugs in therapeutic use. The quality of these data may be inconsistent as many thousands of doctors write certificates with a wide variation in knowledge, training and practice. The latest available figures are for 2000, during which 84 of the 159 deaths that were certified as due to adverse effects of drugs occurred in persons aged 75 years and over.

Figures are not available on adverse reactions resulting from patients being prescribed inappropriate medication.

Medical Training

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of doctors registered in (a) the UK and (b) Scotland in the last year have trained outside the UK. [65415]

Mr. Hutton: The information available is shown in the following table. The General Medical Council, the body responsible for the registration of doctors, does not hold registers separately for different parts of the United Kingdom.

Renal Transplant Services

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about the proposal to transfer renal transplant services from St. Helier to St. George's hospitals. [54279]

Mr. Hutton: On 17 December 2001, I met with Lord Taverne to discuss the proposals to transfer renal transplant services from St. Helier Hospital to St. George's Hospital.

The Department has also received forty-seven items of correspondence and four parliamentary questions about the same issue.

GPs

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies for general practitioners there were in the Portsmouth, South constituency in (a) 1997 and (b) 2001; and if he will make a statement. [65371]

Ms Blears: We are aware of the difficulties experienced in the Portsmouth area in recruiting general practitioners. The reply of my hon. Friend the Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Ms Cooper) to the hon. Member of 4 February 2002, Official Report, column 784W, set out what action was being taken locally. As stated in that answer, information collected centrally on staff vacancies is published on the Department's website.

Smallpox Vaccine

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures were taken in awarding the contract for smallpox vaccines to Powderject, to ensure value for money. [54658]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 8 May 2002]: Since the eradication of smallpox worldwide, new, second-generation smallpox vaccine is not a well-established product subject to normal market pricing pressures. The price quoted by all the companies involved for their products were compared against each other, and the prices were also compared with the price being paid by the United States Government for its smallpox vaccine. Prices were also compared with those for current supplies from old vaccine stocks. On the basis of consideration of all the price information available relating to similar products, the vaccine was deemed to represent value for money at the price quoted.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when (a) the first official contact between ministers in his Department and Powderject concerning the smallpox vaccine and (b) the signing of the contract was; and if he will make a statement. [54656]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 8 May 2002]: Ministers had no contact with Powderject concerning the placing of the smallpox vaccine contact. The contract was signed on 11 April 2002. All meetings and subsequent discussions with the pharmaceutical companies were conducted by officials from the Department and the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the smallpox vaccine ordered from Powderject will need to be trialled before it can be used. [67546]

Mr. Hutton: No, the vaccine can be used without clinical trials. There are currently no plans to undertake clinical trials of the smallpox vaccine in the UK. Since smallpox does not currently exist in the population, trials of protective efficacy are not possible. The EU committee for proprietary medicinal products is currently developing the requirements for the manufacture of second generation smallpox vaccine, which will include guidance on the design of any clinical trials.

Capital Projects

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many major acute hospitals (a) have been procured and (b) are being procured via the non-PFI process; what the capital value of each project is; and what stage they are at in their procurement process. [59837]

Mr. Hutton: Since May 1997, the following schemes have been approved under the public capital procurement process.

Major publicly procured schemes operational

NHS Trust	Value (£ million)	Approved to go ahead	Operational date
Rochdale Healthcare	24.00	14 August 1998	1 August 2000
Central Sheffield University Hospitals	24.00	19 September 1998	1 February 2001

Major publicly procured schemes with tender awarded

NHS Trust	Value (£ million)	Approved to go ahead	Planned operational date
Royal Berkshire and Battle Hospital	75.00	24 August 1998	27 July 2002
Guys and St. Thomas	50.00	19 September 1998	1 May 2004

Front-line Staff

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings Ministers from his Department had with members of the advisory task force on utilising front-line NHS staff; and when. [56993]

Mr. Hutton: The national health service taskforce on staff involvement was established in 1998 to look at successful approaches to involving front-line staff and make recommendations to Ministers. It was disbanded once their report had been submitted to Ministers. The taskforce included thirteen representatives from across the NHS, a trade union and the private sector. The taskforce met the then Secretary of State for Health, the right hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson), in July 1999 at the launch of the taskforce's report on staff involvement. The Department is currently working with the Modernisation Agency, the unions and NHS trusts to implement the recommendations of the report.

Director of International Recruitment for Health Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the (a) salary and (b) support costs are of his Department's Director of International Recruitment for Health Services in 2002–03. [66167]

Mr. Hutton: The Department currently has no plans to recruit a Director of International Recruitment.

The central Department team has been strengthened to enable all strands of international recruitment to be brought together and ensure that we continue to build on the success of the last 18 months using the international recruitment networks that have been established and the work force development confederations.

Primary Care Trusts

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the decision-making powers of (a) primary care trusts and (b) the Department of Health in the contracting of one of the new international establishments in a primary care trust's area. [65574]

Mr. Hutton: Work is in hand, through the Department's Directorate of Health and Social Care, with the local leadership of the national health service to identify local health economies in which international establishment schemes can respond to real and sustained capacity needs. As the prospectus notes, NHS commissioners will have a key role, in conjunction with the Department, in defining requirements from such initiatives.

International Establishments Prospectus

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the international establishments prospectus, what more complex and larger-scale projects overseas companies will be involved in. [65573]

Mr. Hutton: As set out in paragraph 4.8 of the prospectus, these projects are likely to involve a wider range of specialities, to involve more substantial capital investment, and/or to raise more complex contracting challenges than the first projects that are expected, depending on the nature of demand in local health economies to focus on orthopaedic and cataract services.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the UK vaccine evaluation consortium is undertaking work on a vaccine against foot and mouth disease. [66087]

Ms Blears: The United Kingdom vaccine evaluation consortium evaluates vaccines for use in humans. As such, it would not be appropriate for this group to undertake work on a vaccine against foot and mouth disease.

Nursing

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps the Government have taken to recruit nurses to the NHS since 1 May 1997; [65537]

(2) what steps the Government have taken to improve recruitment to nursing in the NHS since 1 May 1997. [67618]

Mr. Hutton: The Government are implementing a range of measures to improve recruitment and retention of all staff, including nurses. These include an increase in pay, encouraging the national health service to become a better employer through the "Improving Working Lives and Positively Diverse" programmes, increasing training commissions, reducing student attrition, running national and local recruitment and return to practice campaigns, and supporting international recruitment where appropriate. Further information on improving working lives is available at www.doh.gov.uk/iwl.

Since 1997, the nursing work force has grown by 31,520. Between September 1999 and September 2001 there was a net increase in nurses working in the NHS of 20,740—the NHS Plan target has been reached two years early. Pay will have increased across the board for nurses and midwives by at least 26 per cent. since 1997 in cash terms.

Northwick Park Hospital

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects work to begin on modernising Northwick Park Hospital's maternity service. [66111]

Mr. Hutton: The full business case for the modernisation of maternity services at Northwick Park hospital was approved in April 2002. Work is expected to begin in March 2003.

Harrow Primary Care Trust Board

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the members of the Harrow Primary Care Trust Board and indicate which of them are resident in the Harrow, West constituency; [66112]

(2) if he will list the members of the North West London Hospitals Trust board; and which of them are resident in the Harrow, West constituency; [66113]

(3) if he will list the members of the Hillingdon and Mount Vernon Hospitals NHS Trust board; and which of them are resident in the Harrow, West constituency. [66114]

Mr. Hutton: Current membership of the three national health service boards, together with details of those living in Harrow, West constituency is as follows:

Harrow Primary Care Trust:

Chair:

Mr. Geoffrey Derek Rose (lives in Harrow, West)

Non-Executives:

Ms Patricia Anne English

Mrs. Maxine Offredy

Mr. John Hunter

Mr. Peter James Commins (lives in Harrow, West)

Dr. Gillian Schiller (lives in Harrow, West)

North West London Hospitals NHS Trust

Chair:

Dr. Alastair Hugh McDonald

Non-Executives:

Dr. John Green

Ms Sally Anne Kirkwood

Ms Marvelle Brown

Mrs. Lettyce Angela Heath (lives in Harrow West)

Ms Moira Black

Hillingdon Hospital NHS Trust

Chair:

Mr. Stephen John Coventry

Non-executives:

Mrs. Christine Beatty
Mr. Obaid-Ur-Rahman Siddiqui
Councillor Catherine Stocker
Mr. Anthony Edmund Valentine
Mrs. Ann Chapman.

NHS Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money was spent by the relevant pension fund on paying pensions to retired (a) NHS staff and (b) GPs in 2001–02; if he will estimate the corresponding amounts to be spent in (i) five years' time, (ii) 10 years' time, (iii) 20 years' time and (iv) 30 years' time; if he will estimate in each case the proportion of such liabilities which will arise from (A) unfunded pension schemes and (B) pre-funded pension schemes; and in the case of pre-funded schemes, if he will estimate the value of the corresponding pre-funded funds in each of these years. [66564]

Mr. Hutton: The national health service pension scheme for England and Wales does not keep a separate record of the pensions paid to retired NHS staff and general practitioners. However, the total amount paid for 2001–02 by the NHS pension scheme in respect of pensions to retired members and their dependents was £2.8 billion.

Using assumptions consistent with the periodic valuations of the NHS pension scheme the Government Actuary's Department has estimated the corresponding total amounts of pension expenditure in future years as follows (in constant earnings terms):

Five years: £3.1 billion
10 years: £3.5 billion
20 years: £4.7 billion
30 years: £5.8 billion.

The NHS pension scheme is an unfunded scheme with members and employers paying contributions, as determined by the Government Actuary, to defray the cost of benefit provision. Because there is no pre-funding of the scheme's liabilities, these contributions have not been included as an offset to the above figures, although in practice they will be an offset to the cost.

Cancelled Operations

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether statistics relating to cancelled operations include those cancelled at cottage and community hospitals. [65167]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 2 July 2002]: Data are collected on the number of operations cancelled by English national health service trusts for non-clinical reasons on, or after the day the patient was due to be admitted. This definition covers all elective operations carried out as in-patient or day cases. Elective operations carried out in a cottage or community hospital are therefore included, but not separately identified by unit.

Mumps Vaccines

Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what grounds the MCA in May ordered the destruction of mumps vaccines made in Switzerland that had been bought by Direct Health 2000 in the UK; and if mumps vaccines in the same batch were delivered to pharmacies in the UK. [66258]

Ms Blears [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The Medicines Control Agency has no record of ordering the destruction in May 2002, of mumps vaccine made in Switzerland and bought by Direct Health 2000 in the UK. Consequently the MCA is not in a position to comment on supplies of any of the alleged batch of mumps vaccine made in Switzerland being delivered to pharmacies in the UK.

Overseas Treatment

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the scheme to send patients overseas for treatment; and if he will make a statement. [66819]

Mr. Hutton: Following a competitive tender exercise, the York University Health Economics Consortium were commissioned to evaluate the scheme to refer national health service patients overseas. That evaluation is almost complete. Copies of the final report will be placed in the Library, and published on the Department's website.

Information Technology

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to increase the use of information technology across primary care; and if he will make a statement. [66813]

Mr. Hutton: The new national health service information technology programme was outlined in the document, "Delivering 21st Century IT Support for the NHS: National Strategic Programme", published by the Department in June 2002.

This outlines a major programme of investment in information technology, including the primary care sector. The NHS will build on the successful implementation of projects such as the Project Connect programme, which connected 98 per cent. of general practices to NHSnet, giving general practice staff full access to email and web resources, including the clinical evidence base; the electronic transfer of prescription pilots; and decision support developments such as PRODIGY.

Hospice Authorities

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends (a) blood products, (b) oxygen and (c) clinical waste to be financed by the NHS in connection with voluntary hospice authorities. [66365]

Ms Blears [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The Chief Executive Bulletin (10–16 May) issue 117 reminded them that hospices should be reimbursed the full agreed pharmacy costs for medicines. This arrangement includes blood products that are licensed medicines and oxygen, in so much as it is permissible to prescribe it on the national health service.

In the case of clinical waste, the responsibility for the disposal of clinical waste cannot be passed over to another party. Under the requirements of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, waste producers have a legal duty of care to properly dispose of their waste. In this case the hospice concerned would be the waste producer.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer of 21 May 2002, Official Report, column 309W, what funding is available in 2002–03 for the strategy for hepatitis C. [66847]

Ms Blears [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Advice from the multi-disciplinary steering group, set up to assist the Department in developing a strategic approach to hepatitis C, is currently under consideration as are related funding issues.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make a decision on the provision of recombinant to haemophiliacs. [66842]

Ms Blears [holding answer 4 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health my hon. Friend the Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Yvette Cooper) gave him on 11 June 2002, Official Report, column 1212W.

Teaching Hospital, Hertfordshire

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are to create a university teaching hospital in Hertfordshire; and if he will make a statement. [66767]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer Thursday 4 July 2002]: There are currently no plans to create a university teaching hospital in Hertfordshire.

Copaxone

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when Copaxone will become available on the NHS. [66740]

Ms Blears [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Copaxone (glatiramer acetate) is available on the national health service under the "risk-sharing scheme" for disease-modifying drugs for multiple sclerosis that came into operation on 6 May 2002.

Insulin Pump Therapy

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive guidance from NICE on insulin pump therapy. [66739]

Ms Blears [holding answer 4 July 2002]: I understand that the National Institute for Clinical Excellence's provisional publication date for its guidance on insulin pump therapy is April 2003.

DNA

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's proposals to prevent DNA samples being obtained from the public without consent. [66871]

Ms Blears [holding answer 4 July 2002]: It is a general legal and ethical requirement for a health professional to seek consent before starting to treat or examine a patient, which would include the obtaining of deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) samples. The position is laid out clearly in the Department's reference guide to consent for treatment and examination.

There are exceptions to the principle of consent for certain uses of DNA samples, for example the obtaining of non-intimate DNA samples by the police for use in the prevention, detection or investigation of a crime.

The human genetics commission's report "Inside Information" has recommended a new criminal offence of the non-consensual or deceitful obtaining or analysis of genetic information for non-medical purposes. The Government are still considering this report and will respond in due course.

Macular Degeneration

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive guidance from the National Institute for Clinical Excellence on the use of photodynamic therapy for age-related macular degeneration. [66877]

Ms Blears [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence published its final appraisal determination on photodynamic therapy on 12 June. This has been appealed against. An appeal panel will now be convened to hear the appeal and decide the outcome. If the appeal is not upheld then guidance will be published; however, if it is upheld, then the appeals panel will ask the appraisal committee to reconsider the evidence in light of the appeal panel's decision. The earliest guidance could be available to the national health service is early August.

Improving Working Lives Standard

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of (a) primary care and (b) hospital trusts have put Improving Working Lives standard into practice. [68286]

Mr. Hutton: "Improving Working Lives" (IWL) is an integral part of the human resources performance management process within the national health service. Existing NHS organisations are required to achieve "Practice" stage of the standard by April 2003, and the target for new organisations is April 2004.

Twenty trusts have already been assessed against the IWL standard and recommended as achieving "Practice" status ahead of the target date.

Prostate Cancer

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the use of PC SPES as a treatment for prostate cancer. [66870]

Ms Blears [holding answer 10 July 2002]: PC SPES has not been licensed as a medicinal product in the United Kingdom. However, I understand that it has been recalled by its American manufacturers as it has been found to contain undeclared prescription drug ingredients. The four research studies into its effectiveness that are being funded by the national centre for complementary and alternative medicine in the United States have also been put on hold.

"Feet First Two"

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the recommendations of the report, "Feet First Two", are regarding (a) removal of regional and local variations in service provisions and (b) improving the availability of services in the south of England. [66344]

Jacqui Smith: We currently have no plans to publish any findings from the review of "Feet First". In April 2001, my right hon. Friend the Minister of State made a statement about the review in his response to a question from the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Mr. Stunell). I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 10 April 2002, Official Report, column 604W.

NHS Appointments Commission

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of appointments to health trusts and authorities by the NHS Appointments Commission have been (a) women and (b) black or Asian. [68515]

Mr. Hutton: The latest figures available (for April 2002) show that since the National Health Service Appointments Commission was established, 44.6 per cent. of appointments made to NHS boards have been women, and 8.9 per cent. from black and ethnic minority communities.

Cardiologists

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cardiologists are working in the NHS; and how many will be working in the NHS in 2002–03. [68273]

Mr. Hutton: There were 590 hospital consultants working within the cardiology specialty in England as at 31 March 2002. This represents an increase of 26 per cent. since 1999[1].

We expect to see further significant growth this year.

Nurse Consultants

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurse consultants are employed in the NHS. [68281]

Mr. Hutton: Over 750 nurse, midwife and health visitor consultants' posts have now been approved in 10 tranches, the first in January 2000 and the latest in June 2002.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have died from AIDS in the United Kingdom in the last 12 months. [67798]

Ms Blears: There were 362 HIV/AIDS-related deaths in 2001 reported in the United Kingdom by the end of March 2002. This total, which includes deaths in HIV-infected individuals without reported AIDS, is likely to rise as late reports are received.

Diabetes

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department's estimate is of the average cost to the NHS of treatment for a diabetic in each of the last five years. [68008]

Mr. Lammy: The only cost data currently collected centrally on diabetes relate to treatments undertaken by National Health Service Trusts. These exclude costs for diabetes within general practice and other primary care settings. Costs in the financial year 2000–01 are shown in the table. Comparable data are not available for earlier years.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on his spending priorities relating to diabetes; [68011]

(2) if he will make a statement on the adequacy of funding for the Diabetes National Standards Framework to meet the costs of diabetics in the period up to 2010. [68009]

Mr. Lammy: Funding for diabetes is being considered as part of the current Government spending review, together with other priorities. The Budget provides the highest sustained growth in national health service history with annual average increases of 7.4 per cent. in real terms over the five years 2003–04 to 2007–08. Decisions about the allocation of the increased funding will be announced later this year.

The pace of change for delivery of diabetes national service framework will take account of the resources that will be available.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment his Department has made of the link between diabetes and CHD. [68010]

Mr. Lammy: There is a well established association between diabetes and coronary heart disease. There are a number of common risk factors. In particular, people who are overweight or obese, those who are not physically active and those who do not enjoy a balanced diet are at greater risk of both Type 2 diabetes and coronary heart disease. The standards for the diabetes national service framework, published in December 2001, highlight the importance of common strategies for prevention and treatment. In doing so, they build on the frameworks for coronary heart disease and older people.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department's estimate is of the likely rise in cases of diabetes by 2010. [68006]

Mr. Lammy: The Department provided the following prevalence projections to the Wanless review team for diabetes in England for the years up to 2010:

Year	Diagnosed prevalence	Total patients (million)
2002	2.63	1.316
2003	2.7	1.355
2004	2.78	1.399
2005	2.87	1.448
2006	2.97	1.502
2007	3.07	1.561
2008	3.19	1.624
2009	3.31	1.689
2010	3.44	1.759

There are considerable uncertainties involved in predicting the increase in numbers of people with diabetes, due to the many factors that affect estimates including obesity, aging and ethnicity.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department's estimate is of (a) the number of patients awaiting diagnosis for diabetes and (b) the percentage of newly diagnosed diabetics who show signs of complications. [68007]

Mr. Lammy: Estimates of the number of people awaiting diagnosis for diabetes vary depending on which study is consulted. The Department has based its estimates upon the health surveys for England. Extrapolation from the 1993 survey, the largest and most representative study on this question, leads to an estimate of around 550,000 people currently with undiagnosed diabetes. However, other smaller studies suggest that the number could be greater.

We have not estimated the percentage of people with newly diagnosed diabetes who show signs of complications.

Births and Abortions

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women aged under 18 have (a) given birth and (b) had an abortion, in each year since 1997. [68480]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. David Willetts, dated 10 July 2002:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking how many women under 18 have (a) given birth and (b) had an abortion in each year since 1997. (68480)

Figures are available for the years 1997–2000; these are shown in the table.

Private Sector

Ms Christine Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Government will publish its response to the First report of the Select Committee on Health on the role of the private sector in the NHS. [69218]

Mr. Hutton: The Government's response to the First report of the House of Commons Select Committee on Health, on the role of the private sector in the national health service, Cm 5567, has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Organs and Tissue

Syd Rapson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish his consultative report on the law on the removal, retention and use of human organs and tissue. [69417]

Mr. Lammy: I am pleased to announce that today, together with the Welsh Assembly Government, we have published a consultative report, "Human Bodies, Human Choices", on the law in England and Wales relating to human organs and tissue. Copies have been placed in the Library. Responses have been requested by 14 October.

We are doing this in response to one of the main recommendations made to the Government last year by the Chief Medical Officer of England, Sir Liam Donaldson, in "The removal, retention and use of human organs and tissue from post-mortem examination".

The knowledge that organs or tissue were removed from someone close to them has brought profound sorrow to many families. We understand their distress and are grateful to those families, and others, who have already offered their views on how things might be improved for the future.

This is a complex area, and while a number of interim measures have been put in place, we need for the future an effective and coherent framework that not only commands widespread support, but also has legal force.

The report seeks views on all issues, including organ donation and transplantation, relating to the use of human organs and tissue from the living as well as following post mortem examination. We look forward to receiving views from a wide range of organisations and groups.

Housing Adaptations

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department will produce the joint guidance on housing adaptations which will include a health and safety rating system. [57184]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Department of Health will publish joint guidance on housing adaptations as a consultation document in the autumn. The then Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions published a consultation paper on the housing health and safety rating system in March 2001. Full implementation of the rating system, which will replace the housing fitness standard, requires primary legislation which will be introduced as soon as a suitable legislative opportunity occurs.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Home Detention Curfew

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the prisoners under home detention curfew (a) broke their curfew and (b) re-offended while under curfew in (i) January, (ii) February and (iii) March; and if he will make a statement. [61473]

Hilary Benn: The table covers the period January–March 2002. It provides a breakdown of breaches of the Home Detention Curfew scheme as reported to the Prison Service by electronic monitoring contractors. A breach report may be submitted if an offender:

is absent during part or the whole of a curfew period; or threatens or attacks a monitoring officer; or damages the monitoring equipment; or is absent when the equipment is due to be installed.

The table also provides a breakdown of offenders who are reported to the Prison Service as having been cautioned, convicted or who are awaiting prosecution for an offence committed while they were subject to the Home Detention Curfew (HDC) scheme.

The Home Detention Curfew scheme is designed to ensure a better transition for short-term offenders between custody and the community. The safety of the public is paramount at all times.

Immigrants and Emigrés

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people successfully immigrated to the UK in each year since 1995, broken down by country of origin; [66473]

(2) how many people successfully emigrated from the UK in each year since 1995. [66472]

Beverley Hughes: Estimates are available from the Office for National Statistics (ONS) on the overall migration of persons to and from the United Kingdom (UK), where migration is defined in terms of a change of country of residence for a year or longer. These data include temporary migration of, for example, students and workers. The available statistics for 1995 to 2000, are given in the table.

Table 1: Total international migration to and from UK[1] 1995–2000

[2] Figures for all years include Hong Kong.

The Home Office measure of immigration is different from that of ONS. Our statistics relate to the number of people granted settlement in the UK. These are mainly current residents, who have already migrated and are making their stay legally permanent, ie allowed to stay indefinitely. Data for 1995–2000 are given in the table.

Unfortunately it is not possible for the Home Office to provide information on how many people have left the country, as the Immigration Service no longer routinely operates embarkation controls from which statistical information can be obtained.

Antisocial Behaviour

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many antisocial behaviour orders have been issued in North Tyneside. [65530]

Mr. Denham: Antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs) were introduced from 1 April 1999. The data given in the table covers the period up to the end of December 2001.

We are currently considering whether any further checks are needed to ensure the accuracy of this information.

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans to reduce antisocial behaviour among young people. [66716]

Mr. Denham: The Government are introducing a range of initiatives to reduce antisocial behaviour among young people. We are evaluating the success of Acceptable Behaviour Contacts and will be disseminating good practice for practitioners. We are enhancing the effectiveness of antisocial behaviour orders so the community can be protected more quickly. The range of other measures being introduced includes truancy sweeps and the safer schools partnerships scheme. These initiatives build on the work being delivered through the youth inclusion programmes and the Connexions Service as well as a range of programmes introduced by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) parenting orders and (b) antisocial behaviour orders have been brought into force in London in each year, broken down by London borough, since their introduction; and if he will make a statement. [66816]

Mr. Denham: The number of parenting orders imposed in London between 1 July 2000 to 31 December 2001 are set out in the table. This information comes from the Youth Justice Board.

Antisocial behaviour orders (ASBOs) were introduced from 1 April 1999. The data given in the table show the number of ASBOs reported to the Home Office covering the period up to the end of December 2001.

We are currently considering whether any further checks are needed to ensure the accuracy of the number of ASBOs reported.

Speeding

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he gives the police on the margins to be allowed in speeding offences. [65778]

Mr. Denham: The latest guidelines on speed enforcement thresholds were issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) in February 2000. They stress proportionality in applying the law, targeting of enforcement action and consistency of approach among police forces. I welcome the guidelines as providing a sound and transparent basis for police enforcement action in what is a sensitive area of policing. While they are designed to promote a consistent approach by police forces, the police retain full discretion to take account of the particular circumstances of any individual speeding offence.

The speed enforcement guidelines are available to the general public on the ACPO website at www.acpo.police.uk

Identity Theft

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the level of identity theft; what action he is taking to prevent it; and if he will make a statement. [66482]

Beverley Hughes: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply the Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Denham) gave the hon. Member for Chipping Barnet (Sir Sydney Chapman) on 9 April 2002, Official Report, column 702W.

Since my right hon. Friend's answer, these figures have been revised. The Cabinet Office published a report on 3 July 2002 stating that the minimum cost of identity fraud to the economy is now estimated to be in excess of £1.3 billion per annum. Two key reasons for this are the weaknesses in the process used to issue documents used as identity, and the weaknesses in processes used to check identity at point of use.

My right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary published a consultation paper on the subject of entitlement cards and identity fraud on 3 July 2002 which details, and seeks views on, the potential initiatives to counter identity fraud outlined in the answer to which I referred. The paper also sets out the Home Office's intention to set up a new Identity Fraud Forum to steer the work of the identity fraud work programme.

Crime and Disorder Act

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend section 17 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 to the private sector; and if he will make a statement. [66832]

Mr. Denham: The private sector has a key role in contributing to the delivery of crime and disorder reduction. The 1998 Act requires that the private sector are invited to participate in the development and implementation of crime and disorder reduction strategies for their area in co-operation with the local crime and disorder reduction partnership. We will shortly be embarking on extensive consultation with representatives from business organisations on how best to create a more effective partnership between business, Government and other key stakeholders to deliver reductions in crime and disorder.

Tetra Communication System

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the safety aspects of the Tetra Communication System used by police forces. [66719]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Airwave, which uses terrestrial trunked radio system (Tetra) technology, will enhance officer safety by providing the police with a modern and reliable communication system. Concerns have been expressed, in general, about the safe use of mobile phones and, in particular, about pulsed signals. Current evidence suggests that it is unlikely that the unique features of Tetra pose a hazard to health. However, a precautionary approach is being taken and the Home Office, advised by independent experts, is commissioning further scientific studies.

Anti-drug Programmes

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his estimate is of the total amount of money seized from drug barons and put back into anti-drug programmes in each year since 1996; and if he will make a statement. [66291]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The receipts remitted to the Secretary of State from confiscation orders made under the Drug Trafficking Acts 1986 and 1994, for each year from 1996 were:

£7,415,000 for 1996–97;

£9,458,000 for 1997–98;

£10,476,000 for 1998–99;

£9,333,000 for 1999–2000; and

£11,757,000 for 2000–01.

The figure for the year 2001–02 is not yet available.

Between April 1999 and March 2002 a total of £12 million was recycled through the Confiscated Assets Fund (CAF) and disbursed on anti-drug programmes. The amounts disbursed in each year were £3 million in 1999–2000, £5 million in 2000–01 and £4 million in 2001–02.

No recycling of confiscated assets to anti-drugs programmes occurred during the period between 1996 and 1999, the year when the Confiscated Assets Fund was established.

Extradition

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests he has received for extradition since 7 June. [68013]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The United Kingdom has received three extradition requests since 7 June 2002. In addition, requests are awaited for six fugitives who have been provisionally arrested since that date.

The figures do not include requests received from Ireland which are subject to a simpler backing of warrants regime. Those figures are not kept centrally.

Mayfield College

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what approaches he has received from Sabre Developments Ltd. regarding the potential use of Mayfield college, Mayfield, East Sussex, as an asylum accommodation centre. [67941]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 8 July 2002]: We have no contact from Sabre Developments Ltd. in respect of using this site as an accommodation centre for asylum seekers.

Air Weapons

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what recent representations he has received on banning the private ownership of air weapons; and if he will make a statement; [67154]

(2) what recent representations he has received on increasing the age at which unsupervised use of air weapons is allowed; and if he will make a statement; [67155]

(3) what steps he is taking to control the advertising of air weapons; and if he will make a statement. [67158]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth [holding answer 8 July 2002]: We have recently received a number of representations about the private ownership of air weapons, both for and against banning them or changing the age limits for unsupervised use.

The Government totally condemn the irresponsible use of air weapons and are presently reviewing the overall effectiveness of the current range of controls, including those regulating the age at which air weapons can be used without supervision and the way in which they are sold.

An absolute ban on the ownership of air weapons was considered by the Home Affairs Committee in their second report on controls over firearms. They concluded that such a ban would not be appropriate, but did recommend that the existing laws relating to air weapons be rigorously enforced and that this should be coupled with a programme of education on their safe and responsible use. We accepted that recommendation and are currently considering advice from the Firearms Consultative Committee on how best to take this forward.

There are no statutory restrictions at present on the advertising of air weapons. Generally, advertising in the non-broadcast media is subject to self-regulation under the advertising industry's British Codes of Advertising and Sales Promotion, compliance with which is overseen by the Advertising Standards Authority. The authority will investigate all complaints of non-compliance with the codes, including any about advertisements which appear to condone or are likely to provoke violence or anti-social behaviour.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions for selling an air weapon to a person under the age of 18 (a) were commenced and (b) resulted in a conviction in each of the past five years. [67153]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The available information is contained in the table and relates to 'selling or letting on hire an air weapon or ammunition to a person under 17'.

Statistics for 2001 will be available in the autumn.

Persons proceeded against and found guilty at all courts for selling an air weapon or ammunition to a person under the age of 17, England and Wales 1996 to 2000[1,2]

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 22 May from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. B. Benbaziz; [68199]

(2) when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 22 May from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. and Mrs. Islam; [68200]

(3) when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 22 May from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mrs. Um-Kalthovma; [68202]

(4) when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 22 May from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. A. R. Nazari; [68197]

(5) when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 22 May from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Sirwan Abdulrehman. [68203]

Mr. Blunkett: A reply was sent to my right hon. Friend on 9 July 2002.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Blackpool, South dated 26 March, ref 6529/2. [65620]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 1 July 2002]: A reply was sent to my hon. Friend on 27 June 2002.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received the letters of 23 January and 23 March from the solicitors to Mr. D M of Aylesbury (ref. M1002217); when he intends to reply; and if he will make a statement. [68507]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The letter of 23 January was received by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) on 25 January 2002 and a reply was sent on 2 May 2002. There is no trace of IND receiving a letter dated 23 March 2002, although a letter dated 25 March 2002 with copies of an application and other documents was received on 27 March 2002. Unfortunately, these documents were not linked to the file until after the reply was sent.

The application is now being considered urgently and Mr. D M's representatives will be contacted as soon as a decision has been made. I am sorry for the delay in IND actioning this case.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has received the recorded delivery letter RB 6205 2931 OGB, dated 1 May, from Mrs. O P of Aylesbury (ref. P404417) concerning her asylum application; when he expects to reply; and if he will make a statement. [68508]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: This letter has been received but regrettably has since been misplaced within the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND). Officials are contacting Mrs. O P to clarify her inquiry and will then reply to her as soon as possible.

Passports

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new passport applications were approved during 2001. [68448]

Beverley Hughes: Of the 5,668,272 passport applications made during 2001, 2,678,935 were classed as new applications. Of these, 1,209,017 were adult first-time applications and 1,469,918 were child applications. The remainder were made up of renewals, amendments and extensions.

Child Curfew Orders

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many child curfew orders have been imposed to date in Surrey. [68631]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 9 July 2002]: No applications have been received to impose child curfew schemes under section 14 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. Sections 48 and 49 of the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001, which took effect on 1 August 2001, extended the upper age limit to 15 and allowed the police, as well as local authorities, to initiate schemes. Local areas are assessing the implications of these changes and we know that local consultation is taking place.

Heartbeat Detectors

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions a heartbeat detector machine at Dover has broken down or failed to function in the last six months. [68627]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The heartbeat detector requires a structure to protect it from adverse weather, such as high winds. The mechanical doors allowing entry and exit from this structure have, on occasion, failed.

There have also been occasions when the heartbeat detector itself has required minor attention, but rarely has the fault caused the equipment to be taken out of service. Where it has, the Immigration Service has been able to rely on other methods to detect clandestines, including body detection dogs, carbon dioxide detectors, X and gamma ray scanners, to maintain an effective deterrent and detection capability.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many heartbeat detector machines are installed at (a) Dover, (b) Folkestone, (c) Coquelles and (d) Calais. [68625]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The Immigration Service currently deploys two heartbeat detector machines—one in Dover and one in Coquelles.

At present there are no ferry services using the port of Folkestone, and consequently, there is no current demand for the deployment of detection technology there. Freight vehicles using the Eurotunnel Freight Shuttle service do, however, arrive at Cheriton, near Folkestone. These are subject to search at or before the British Control Zone at Coquelles before travel.

A programme is now under way to procure additional heartbeat detectors and other detection technology for deployment at various continental ports serving the United Kingdom, including Calais.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of lorries passing through Dover from France are checked by a (a) dog, (b) heartbeat detector machine, (c) carbon dioxide stick and (d) X-ray machine. [68628]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: Based on collated intelligence and profiling, the Immigration Service currently checks approximately 12 per cent. of lorries which arrive at Dover on cross-channel ferries. Immigration Officers use a combination of all the methods of detection referred to, the choice of which is determined by the characteristics of the vehicle to be searched. No figures are held which illustrate the frequency of use of one method over another.

National Identity Card Scheme

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the (a) costs and (b) change in the levels of crime which would result from a compulsory national identity card scheme; and if he will make a statement. [67693]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary made a statement to the House on 3 July 2002 announcing the publication of a consultation paper on Entitlement Cards and Identity Fraud. The consultation period will last until 10 January 2003. The Government have made it clear that the introduction of an entitlement card would be a major step and that it would not proceed without consulting widely and considering all the views expressed very carefully. The consultation paper rules out a scheme where it would be compulsory to carry a card but does raise the option of a universal scheme where everyone would have to register and obtain a card.

The paper includes a number of estimates of what a scheme would cost, depending on the sophistication of the card. A reasonable estimate would be that a scheme would cost around £1.3 billion over a 13-year period covering the three years it would take to set up the necessary information technology systems and the 10-year period for which the first cards would be valid.

This would include much more stringent identity checks than currently apply for passports and driving licences in response to increased levels of fraudulent applications.

It would also include the costs of using biometric information (fingerprints or iris images) which would uniquely link the card holder with a card.

A universal entitlement card would be a powerful weapon in the fight against crimes of identity fraud which cost the economy at least £1.3 billion each year. It could also help to combat illegal immigration and illegal working. The degree to which a card scheme could reduce these crimes would depend on the type of card scheme introduced, to what services it was linked and the speed of its introduction. The Government will be consulting on these and other issues during the consultation exercise.

Police

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of general calls to the force switchboard were not answered within 20 seconds in each police force in England in each year from 1990–91 to 2001–02, ranked from best to worst performance for the most recent year for which information is available; and if he will make a statement. [66884]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The information requested is not collected centrally, and I understand that forces do not routinely measure how long it takes to answer calls to their general switchboards. Times for answering 999 calls are collected and this information has been provided in response to a separate question.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken since 7 June 2001 to ensure that vacancies for the post of chief constable are advertised as quickly as possible. [66334]

Mr. Denham: In April 2001, we established the Senior Appointments Panel, chaired by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary, to offer advice on the approval of chief officer candidates and to assist police authorities in the co-ordination and timetabling of the appointments process.

Work is currently under way to develop detailed guidance for police authorities on the recruitment and selection of chief officers, drawn up in close consultation with key stakeholders. That will replace the current guidance in Home Office Circular 52-96. The new guidance will set out a wide range of best practice on all aspects of chief officer recruitment and selection procedures, including the setting of an appropriate timetable for key steps in the process at the point a vacancy arises.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money was spent by the relevant pension fund on paying pensions to retired members of the police force in 2001–02; if he will estimate the corresponding amounts to be spent in (a) five years' time, (b) 10 years' time, (c) 20 years' time and (d) 30 years' time; if he will estimate in each case the proportion of such liabilities which will arise from (i) unfunded pension schemes and (ii) pre-funded pension schemes; and in the case of pre-funded schemes; if he will estimate the value of the corresponding pre-funded funds in each of these years. [66560]

Mr. Denham: The Police Pension Scheme is an unfunded scheme. The cost of police pensions in England and Wales in 2001–02 is estimated at £1.1 billion. Estimated costs to individual police authorities in 2001–02 are set out in the table. No projections of police pensions' costs in five, 10, 20 and 30 years' time are available. These are matters for individual police authorities.

As we made clear in the White Paper 'Policing a New Century: A Blueprint for Reform', we are aware of the need of police authorities and chief officers for a system which brings greater clarity about pensions obligations on individual police authorities. With the Treasury we are examining the options for a revised system of funding which would bring this about.

The Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy Police Statistics 2001–02 (Estimates)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police vehicles were involved in road accidents resulting in (a) slight injuries, (b) serious injuries and (c) fatal accidents in the last five years. [65786]

Mr. Denham: The available information is set out in table and relates to the number of injuries and deaths involving police vehicles engaged in immediate/emergency response or pursuit only.

	Deaths	Serious injury	Slight injury
1997–98	15	200	1,923
1998–99	11	210	1,653
1999–2000	14	115	1,645
2000–01	19	163	1,973
2001–02	24	168	1,768

Notes:

(i) The information has been provided by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC), to which forces submit statistical returns.

(ii) Data are missing from one force in 1998–99 and 1999–2000; and from two forces 2000–01.

(iii) All figures are for financial year.

(iv) The figures are numbers of deaths/injuries, not numbers of accidents.

(v) The figures include both police and civilian casualties.

(vi) The figures for 2001–02 are provisional only. Data are missing from four forces.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police vehicles committed traffic violations and what was the (a) nature of these violations and (b) number of prosecutions arising from them in the last 12 months. [65758]

Mr. Denham: The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many guns each police force possesses, broken down by type; how many officers each force has trained in the use of guns, broken down by rank; and how many incidents there have been in each force in which guns have been used by officers in each of the last five years; and how many fatalities have resulted. [65641]

Mr. Denham: Information on the numbers and types of firearms held by each force, and details of the ranks of authorised firearms officers, is not held centrally. The collection of this information could only be done at disproportionate cost.

I have attached the most recently published figures on the number of authorised firearms officers and also on operations in which firearms were issued. The number of persons shot by police over the same period and the number of those whose wounds were fatal, are also attached.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) policemen and (b) police women there were in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2001; and if he will make a statement. [66468]

Mr. Denham: At 30 September 1997 there were 107,505 full-time equivalent male police officers and 19,357 full-time equivalent female police officers in England and Wales.

At 30 September 2001 there were 105,136 full-time equivalent male police officers and 22,094 full-time equivalent female police officers in England and Wales.

We have reversed the long-term decline in police strength. Police officer numbers had reached a record number by the end of January 2002. We are on track for our target of 130,000 officers by spring 2003.

The proportion of female officers has risen from 15 per cent. to 17 per cent., and raising the representation of women in the Police Service is an area we are continuing to address.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are issued to police forces regarding (a) colour blindness tests for recruits and (b) the standards which recruits must attain to be accepted. [66465]

Mr. Denham: Guidelines issued by the Home Office (Home Office Circular 7/98) state that candidates for the police service need to be able to pass the City University Colour Vision Test and achieve 7/10 of the plates to pass.

The Home Office are currently funding research to develop new job related medical and eyesight standards. The research includes whether there is a continuing need for a colour vision requirement. Draft recommendations on eyesight requirements are due shortly. These will be discussed with The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and police interest groups and are expected to be introduced later this year. All forces will be expected to apply the new standards consistently.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish his review of police pension arrangements. [65633]

Mr. Denham: As we stated in our White Paper "Policing a New Century: A Blueprint for Reform", we are looking at ways of modernising police pensions to make them more flexible and affordable for future entrants and to reflect modern lifestyle patterns. This is a complex area, which needs careful consideration.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) arrests and (b) prosecutions there were in the Peterlee Sub Division for (i) use of illegal substances, (ii) possession of illegal substances and (iii) the dealing in illegal substances in (A) 1999, (B) 2000 and (C) 2001. [65586]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The available information, relating to illegal drugs, is as follows.

Persons[1] proceeded against in the Easington petty sessional area for the possession of and dealing in a controlled drug, 1999 and 2000

	Easington petty sessional area
Possession of a controlled drug
1999	21
2000	61
Dealing in a controlled drug[2]
1999	21
2000	61

[1] Persons for whom these offences were the principal offence for which they were dealt with.

[2] Includes offences of importation/exportation, production, supplying, possession with intent to supply etc.

The number of arrests within the Peterlee Sub Division of Durham Constabulary are not available centrally. The 'use' of illegal drugs is not an offence.

Statistics for 2001 will be available in the autumn.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on improving public access to police stations in local communities; and if he will make a statement. [62291]

Mr. Denham: The management of police property and allocation of resources are matters for each police authority and the chief officer who are best placed to assess local needs for the policing plan and local operational priorities, taking local opinion into account.

In guidance issued in 2001 we made it a requirement for police authorities to include in their annual policing/best value performance plans details of any police stations which have opened or closed in the previous financial year.

Special Constables

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special constables are serving, and what the total was on 1 May 1997, broken down by individual police authorities; how many special constables (a) were recruited to each police authority in each year since 1997 and (b) left; what regulations govern the method of recruitment and enlistment of special constables, and whether they vary between police area; and how long a gap there was on average in the last 12 months between a potential special constable's volunteering and eventual enlistment, broken down by police area. [65493]

Mr. Denham: Statistics on the strength of the special constabulary are collected by the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate for the end of March and September each year.

The tables show the strength of specials, by force, in 1997 and 2001 and details, by force, of recruitment and wastage for each year since 1997.

The Special Constables Regulations 1965 (as amended) specify that a person appointed as a special must have attained the age of 18 years and be of good character and health. Beyond that, the regulations leave qualification for appointment to the discretion of the chief officer. However, the Home Office has issued guidance on the eligibility and recruitment of specials, in particular, Home Office Circular 12/2000, copies of which have been lodged with the Library.

Information on time taken between the application and appointment of specials is not collected centrally.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in each of the last five years the Metropolitan police has lost the files of those seeking to enlist as special constables. [65612]

Mr. Denham: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that current records indicate there have been no missing files during the course of 2002. Information is not centrally available to the Metropolitan police service in order to indicate the position regarding the proceeding four years.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the establishment is of the Honourable Artillery Company's Metropolitan Special Constabulary; what its strength is; how many constables enlisted in each year since 1997; and what the delay between recruitment and enlistment was. [65611]

Mr. Denham: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that there is no specific establishment figure for the Metropolitan Special Constabulary Unit associated with the Honourable Artillery Company. The current strength of the unit is 14 special constables. It is understood that three special constables have joined the unit since 1997, but data on their year of joining or how long it took to process these individuals is not centrally available to the Metropolitan police service.

Yarl's Wood Fire

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons charged with criminal offences arising out of the fire at Yarl's Wood have received legal aid to instruct solicitors and counsel; [68635]

(2) in relation to the fire at Yarl's Wood, how many criminal charges have been preferred; what the nationalities of those charged are; and what the charges are; [68652]

(3) in relation to the fire at Yarl's Wood, what allegations of crimes against Kosovan women were reported which did not result in charges being preferred. [68633]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: These are all matters which should be addressed to the Chief Officer of the Bedfordshire police. However, I understand that 12 people have been charged with violent disorder in relation to the incident at Yarl's Wood. Of these, five are Nigerian, two are Algerian, two are Albanian, one is Kosovan, one is Yugoslav and one is from the Ivory Coast. I further understand that all of these people have received legal aid to instruct solicitors and counsel.

Reported allegations of crimes against Kosovan women is also a matter for the Chief Officer of Bedfordshire police. However, I understand that there have been no such allegations.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many potential witnesses in relation to criminal trials arising out of the Yarl's Wood fire have been (a) removed and (b) deported; and whether arrangements will be made for their return to give evidence. [68654]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: Information about the number of witnesses who have been removed is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by an examination of individual case files. There is, however, an existing procedure in place for the police to contact the Immigration Service should they wish to request the return of a prosecution witness to attend a trial where there is a reason to believe that a person will not qualify for entry.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in relation to the fire at Yarl's Wood, how many persons absconded following the fire; how many have been recaptured; and what criminal charges have been laid against those recaptured. [68653]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: In the immediate aftermath of events at Yarl's Wood on 14–15 February 2002 there were 21 detainees unaccounted for. Of these 15 remain unaccounted for. They are believed to have absconded during the fire and disturbance and efforts to trace and apprehend them are continuing.

Whether there should be any criminal charges against those concerned is a matter for the police.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the cause of the clashes between detainees and Group 4 staff at Yarl's Wood prior to the fire; and if he will make a statement. [67676]

Beverley Hughes: Stephen Moore is currently heading a Home Office investigation into the events at Yarl's Wood and we await his recommendations. It would be inappropriate to comment further at the present time.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been released from Oakington Centre pending their appeals; and what proportion are at addresses known to the authorities. [68632]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: From 20 March 2000 to 31 December 2001, 10,075 principal applicants received at the Oakington Reception Centre have lodged appeals. Of these, all would have been released either to an agreed address and required as a condition of their temporary admission to notify the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) of any change of address, or to a secure detention centre.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Deparment what plans he has to improve the asylum processing procedure. [66893]

Beverley Hughes: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary published a White Paper "Secure Borders, Safe Haven" on 7 February 2002, followed on 12 April 2002 by the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Bill, which is currently before Parliament. These both outline the steps that we are taking to improve the asylum processing procedure.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies he has made of the use of barges to house asylum seekers in the Netherlands; and if he will make a statement. [68621]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: No such studies have been made. The Home Office has, however, commissioned research to examine the reception policies and practice of four European countries (Sweden, Denmark, the Netherlands and Germany).

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase and improve the training of initial decision makers in asylum cases. [68641]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: There are no current plans to increase and improve the training of initial decision-makers in asylum cases.

Current training plan supports business delivery of asylum decision making targets.

Training is continually evaluated, post course and after several months in post to make sure that it is meeting needs.

Changes are made in light of feedback from asylum staff or in response to legislative/procedural changes.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in relation to initial decision makers in asylum cases, what educational or legal qualifications are required; what period of training is required; and what the relevant salary scales are. [68639]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The majority of initial decision makers in asylum cases are appointed at executive officer level within the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND).

No formal educational or legal qualifications are required for entry to this grade. Selection to the grade is competency based.

Those appointed to the posts receive a three day induction programme on the organisation of IND and the Integrated Casework Directorate, followed by a two week programme on asylum knowledge and processes. Thereafter, caseworkers receive two weeks mentoring in a dedicated unit and a three day training programme in interviewing skills.

The minimum starting salary for an executive officer in Croydon is £16,663 per annum.

Progression to higher salaries is based on an annual review of performance in the grade.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many initial decision makers in asylum cases were in post in January of each year since 1997. [68640]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The latest available information is shown in the table.

Number of initial decision makers in post in January of each year since 1997

	Number in post in January
1997	Records not available
1998	Records not available
1999[1]	Records not available
2000	174
2001	761
2002	697

[1] The Integrated Casework Directorate started recording staffing data in December 1999. Staffing records identifying initial decision makers in asylum cases before then are not available.

All data relates to asylum initial decision makers in the Immigration Nationality Directorate (IND).

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) current asylum seekers and (b) asylum seekers who have been refused asylum but have lodged appeals are held in custody in detention centres or prisons. [68638]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The latest available information on the number of persons detained solely under Immigration Act powers relates to 30 March 2002. As at that date, 1,140 persons (to the nearest five) were being detained at immigration service removal centres, immigration short-term holding facilities and prison establishments who are recorded as having claimed asylum at some stage.

I regret that information on the number of these persons who are awaiting an initial decision on their asylum claim or who have lodged an appeal is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by examination of individual case records.

Information on Immigration Act detainees as at 29 June 2002 will be published on 30 August 2002 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to identify on French territory asylum seekers who might have a valid claim to asylum in the UK. [68643]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: Intensive discussions are continuing between the United Kingdom (UK) and French governments on illegal immigration through France to the UK. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and his French counterpart Nicolas Sarkozy met on 25 June 2002. The two Ministers plan to meet again on 12 July 2002. There are no present plans for the UK authorities to process asylum applications in France.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will commission studies to ascertain the comparative costs of housing asylum seekers in (a) Germany, (b) the Netherlands and (c) the United Kingdom. [68622]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The Home Office is not planning to commission research on the comparative costs of housing asylum seekers in (a) Germany, (b) the Netherlands and (c) the United Kingdom. The Home Office has however, commissioned research to examine the reception policies and practice of four European countries (Sweden, Denmark, the Netherlands and Germany). This includes an analysis of the impact of accommodation centres on (1) application rates, (2) the speed of the determination process, (3) the facilitation of return and removals, and (4) integration.

Comparative costs of accommodation centres and dispersal support and accommodation in the United Kingdom will be evaluated as part of the accommodation centres trial.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his figures on removals of failed asylum seekers include dependants; and whether this policy has operated in each of the last five years. [68636]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: Information on dependants of asylum seekers removed was not routinely collected until April 2001. Asylum removals statistics prior to this time relate to only the number of principal applicants removed and exclude dependants. The statistics since April 2001 show both the number of principal applicants removed and the number of dependants removed.

Asylum removals statistics are published on a quarterly basis on the Home Office Research, Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html, as well as annually in the Home Office Statistical Bulletins 'Asylum Statistics' and 'Control of Immigration Statistics' and the Command Paper 'Control of Immigration Statistics', copies of which are available in the Library and on the Home Office website.

Asylum Accommodation Centres

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the changed circumstances are that have led to the decision not to use the special urgency provisions of circular 18/84 relating to proposed accommodation centres at Hemswell Cliff. [50497]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 16 April 2002]: We took the decision in response to representations from local councils and residents.

Immigration and Nationality Department

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent by his Department on advertising for posts in the Immigration and Nationality Department in 2001. [68014]

Beverley Hughes: The amount spent on advertising for posts in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate for the period 1 January 2001 to 31 December 2001 is £332,263.14.

Immigration and Customs Officials

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many British immigration or customs officials are deployed at (a) Coquelles, (b) Calais and (c) Brussels Station. [68626]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: A total of 129 immigration officers are currently deployed in the British Control Zone at Coquelles. There are no immigration officers currently deployed at Calais port or at Brussels station.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have an approximate complement of 270 officers who operate in both the tourist and freight lanes, of the United Kingdom Control Zone at Coquelles. There are no customs officers based at Calais or Brussels station.

Illegal Entrants

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many illegal entrants have been discovered at Waterloo Eurostar in each of the last six months. [68646]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: There have been no illegal entrants discovered at Waterloo International terminal in the last six months.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many illegal entrants have been discovered at Dover in each of the last six months. [68645]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: In the first six months of this year the Immigration Service at Dover detected and initially detained 275 illegal entrants in January, 230 in February, 207 in March, 268 in April, 322 in May and 329 in June.

These figures exclude illegal entrants who had evaded controls concealed in vehicles and were subsequently discovered by Kent Police and those illegal entrants who attempted to enter the United Kingdom concealed in rail wagons and were intercepted at the Dollands Moor freight yard at Cheriton.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of (a) lorries and (b) other vehicles passing through Dover from France were not checked for purposes of seeking to discover illegal entrants over the last 12 months. [68620]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 9 July 2002]: Approximately 2,500 lorries arrive at Dover every day on board cross Channel ferries. The majority of these vehicles will have undergone pre-boarding checks conducted by agents for either the carrier or the port authority. In addition, over the last 12 months the Immigration Service has checked on average of almost 8 per cent. of lorries on arrival at Dover. With effect from May 2002 the search ratio has increased to 12 per cent. Selection is based on collated intelligence and profiles.

Other vehicles such as private cars and vans are not systematically checked by Immigration Officers at Dover, but checks are carried out where a vehicle fits a particular profile or where the Immigration Officer's suspicions are otherwise aroused.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Wind Farms

9. Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences for wind farms have been granted since 1997. [66376]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department does not maintain a register of all approved wind farm projects, and approval is usually a matter for local determination. From the information available to us, which may not be complete, we are aware of 67 locally-granted approvals for wind farms since 1997. In addition, approvals for two wind farms over 50MW declared net capacity have been given centrally in accordance with section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989.

10. Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences for wind farms have been granted in (a) Workington and (b) the United Kingdom. [66377]

Nigel Griffiths: The Department does not maintain a register of all approved wind farm projects, and approval is usually a matter for local determination. From the information available to us, which may not be complete, we are aware of four approvals for wind farms in or near Workington, and 129 for wind farms in the United Kingdom. The UK figure includes two approvals given by central Government, in accordance with section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989, for wind farms over 50MW declared net capacity.

Aerospace

11. Mark Tami: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures she is taking to assist the aerospace industry. [66378]

Alan Johnson: This Government have a track record of providing significant support to this important sector. For example, we have committed nearly £1 billion in launch investment support over the past five years for major new airframe and aero-engine programmes.

In addition, support for civil aircraft research and technology currently runs at about £20 million a year. And, as large investors in R&D, aerospace companies will benefit from the recently announced tax credit scheme for larger firms.

We are working closely with other Government Departments on how best to address a wide range of problems faced by the UK aerospace industry. For the longer-term, this embraces a wide range of complex, cross-cutting policy issues—for example, support for research and technology, launch investment, export financing arrangements and defence procurement matters. For the nearer term, we are looking at how to make the most of our generic supports for productivity and competitiveness and the way they are deployed in the regions.

To help with this process, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, announced on 16 May the formation of the Aerospace Innovation and Growth Team, lead by Sir Richard Evans. This will enable key stakeholders to work together to produce a shared vision and strategy for the future success of the industry. I expect Sir Richard and his team to report by the end of March 2003. This will enable an informed debate to take place followed by an agreed action plan to take the industry forward.

Shopworkers

12. Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on employment protection for shopworkers. [66379]

Alan Johnson: In general, protection applies to shopworkers as it does to workers in other sectors of the labour market. For example, if any employer tries to change an employee's terms and conditions of contract without their consent, or dismisses the employee for no good reason, the employee may be able to make a claim. For historical reasons, there is specific additional protection for shopworkers in England and Wales who do not wish to work on Sundays.

Photovoltaics

13. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications there have been for her Department's PV grants. [66380]

Nigel Griffiths: Up to the end of June there have been 23 applications under the small-scale individual stream. 17 of these have been approved, including that of the hon Member for Blaby. The first system was installed on a house in Dover in June.

For medium and large-scale installations, the first of our quarterly calls for proposals closed at the end of June. This attracted 15 proposals for grants of around £2 million, representing some 450kW of new capacity. These proposals are currently being assessed and we expect to announce the outcome around the end of July.

Postal Services

14. Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many sub-post offices have closed since 1997; and what representations she has received regarding the future of the sub-post office network. [66381]

Ms Hewitt: Post Office Limited has advised me that the number of net closure of post offices since end March 1997 is 1,667. I receive representations on the future of the post office network from numerous sources. The Government are committed to the maintenance of a nationwide network of post offices.

20. Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the future of rural postal services. [66388]

Ms Hewitt: Rural postal services are safeguarded by the universal postal service obligation which the government laid down in primary legislation in the Postal Services Act 2000. The legislation says that the obligation consists of a service provided at an affordable price determined by a public tariff uniform throughout the UK and includes the delivery each working day to the home or premises of every individual in the UK and a collection each working day from access points. Under the Act it is the Postal Services Commission's (known as Postcomm) primary duty to ensure the provision of a universal postal service and it currently requires Consignia, in the licence, to provide the universal postal service.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which post offices in the Portsmouth, South constituency Consignia is planning to close; and if she will make a statement. [67554]

Ms Hewitt: The programme to restructure the urban post office network has not yet started and I am advised by Post Office Limited that, until it does, there are no specific plans for post office closures in the Portsmouth South constituency. When the programme starts it will be taken forward in consultation with individual subpostmasters, the community, local stakeholders and Postwatch. Under the Code of Practice, Post Office Limited is required to consult Postwatch on individual changes and is briefing it on the process envisaged for reaching decisions.

The objective of the urban network restructuring programme is to provide modernised and improved facilities which meet customers' needs and expectations and are in the right location for the local community.

Unincorporated Businesses (Hertfordshire)

15. Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the impact of her Department's policies on unincorporated businesses in Hertfordshire. [66382]

Nigel Griffiths: The Small Business Service provides, through the business Link network, advice, support and regulatory guidance to all types of small businesses.

Business Link Hertfordshire offer a broad range of provision to meet a very broad range of business needs. Last year the Business Link dealt with over 7,000 different businesses.

The SBS is working to: minimise the burdens imposed on small businesses by red tape; and make sure that the interests of small firms are properly considered, by encouraging every part of Government to 'Think Small First' when introducing new regulations.

Technology Transfer

16. Mr. Luke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she is taking to encourage technology transfer from academic institutions to industry. [66383]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's two White Papers, "Excellence and Opportunity", published in July 2000, and "Opportunity for All", published in February 2001, set out our science and innovation policy for the 21st century, and include a comprehensive range of measures to help promote technology and knowledge transfer between academia and industry. We are making excellent progress in this area.

We are considering, as part of the Government's spending review, how to further develop these initiatives to build on universities' potential as drivers of growth in the knowledge economy.

Small Business Seminar

17. Mr. Plaskitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the progress of the Small Business Seminar. [66385]

Nigel Griffiths: The Small Business Service was set up in April 2000.

Latest figures show that Business Links assisted 244,685 businesses during 2001–02.

In addition, Business Links have helped 18,163, new businesses to start-up.

In 2001–02 SBS spent over £154 million in BL programme expenditure—money spent in direct support of SMEs—not running costs—and over £164 million in 2002–03.

The SBS Annual Report 2002 will be published later this month, before the summer recess.

Miners' Compensation

18. Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she is taking to monitor progress on the payment of coal health claims. [66386]

Mr. Wilson: I chair the Coal Health Ministerial Monitoring Group which monitors progress, on a national and regional basis. All parties involved in the process attend these meetings.

In addition, there are regional monitoring groups in Scotland, Wales and England, which all report to the national group. In England I have recently established five regional sub-groups which are North East, Midlands/Lancashire, South/South East, Notts/Derby and Yorkshire.

A report on progress is issued monthly and placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Updates are also available on the Coal Health website.

Community Development Financial Institutions

19. Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to make a feasibility of community development financial institutions. [66387]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Small Business Service is currently supporting 41 community development finance institutions through its Phoenix Fund. These CDFIs are receiving almost £20 million of support over the next 2 years.

A number of the CDFIs supported are researching new and innovative ways of providing last resort finance to disadvantaged communities.

The Phoenix Fund has also been instrumental in supporting the formation of a trade association for CDFIs, the Community Development Finance Association. This organisation will help to disseminate best practice throughout the sector.

A community investment tax credit that will encourage the private sector to invest money into the community finance sector was announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in this year's budget.

Manufacturing Industry

21. Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to assist manufacturing industry. [66390]

Alan Johnson: The Government's Strategy for Manufacturing, published on 16 May this year, sets a strategic framework for working in partnership with key stakeholders to help manufacturing companies fulfil their potential in the UK by moving up the value chain to high-skilled, knowledge intensive operations. The strategy identifies seven pillars with objectives and actions for Government and industry to develop:

Macro-economic stability

Investment

Innovation

Best practice

Raising skills and education levels

Modern infrastructure

The right market framework.

It has been warmly received by manufacturers and trade unions.

24. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what role her Department plays in cases where companies with manufacturing plant in several EU countries, when rationalising their capacity, choose to close their plant in the United Kingdom. [66395]

Alan Johnson: It is always a cause of great regret when there are closures by any company operating in the UK. Where appropriate, the Department and its partners establish contact with the companies and see if there are ways of retaining the investment. This may include ministerial involvement.

However, when a company does announce plans to close, the Department's appropriate sector directorate will work closely with local and other partners, notably the Employment Service and relevant RDA, to manage the effects of the disinvestments and to look at employment opportunities for existing staff, and at re-training packages.

The network will also look at alternative uses for the site/plant or for a buyer. Invest-UK will ensure that Overseas Posts are aware of the situation to enable them to market the site/plant to overseas companies.

Small Business

22. Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she is taking to increase investment in basic skills in small firms. [66392]

Nigel Griffiths: The Government are committed to raising the level of adult literacy and numeracy in the workforce and has identified this as a priority area. This will help small businesses. The Government's 'Skills for Life' strategy will:

provide free, high quality, training and advice on basic skills for all small employers train workplace basic skills brokers who will put businesses in touch with local basic skills training providers. 447 brokers have so far been trained.

recruit employer champions, all with a proven basic skills track record in their sector, to help fellow businesses.

The Government are also helping small firms with:

the Union Learning Fund, which has enabled Union Learning Representatives to promote basic skills training within the workplace.

Learndirect, the online learning and information service, which offers free courses to learners on the foundations of reading, writing and numbers.

the six Employer Training Pilots announced in the budget, which will test out a range of approaches to increasing training levels and enable employees to attain basic and level 2 skills.

27. Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on her Department's policy on encouraging employment in the small business sector. [66399]

Nigel Griffiths: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington (Mr. Plaskitt) today.

Broadband

23. Mrs. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she is taking to encourage take-up of broadband. [66394]

Ms Hewitt: The Government believe that broadband services have an important role to play in increasing the competitiveness of the UK economy. Ministers have therefore taken several opportunities to promote the benefits of broadband, including by supporting the Demand: Broadband campaign run by the Communications Workers Union.

The UK Online Annual Report 2001 sets out the Government's broadband strategy. "To stimulate demand for current broadband content and applications the Government will:

"—work with the broadband supply industry to facilitate an industry-wide collaborative campaign to promote the benefits of broadband and give impartial advice on the different technological options available.

"—provide more encouragement to small and medium enterprises (SMEs) to adopt e-commerce solutions. The DTI are now expanding the £66 million UK online for business programme to:

"—provide more effective advice to businesses on the introduction and setting up of e-business solutions, with particular emphasis on the benefits of broadband; and

"—introduce a web-based guide to broadband availability for SMEs and a network of demonstrators of practical applications".

We have also established a £30 million fund to help the Regional Development Agencies (RDAs) and devolved administrations develop innovative schemes to extend broadband networks. Using this fund, some of the RDAs and devolved administrations are carrying forward work which demonstrates the benefits of broadband.

Since the beginning of 2002, ADSL prices have fallen by 22 per cent. Take-up is now over 600,000 and rising by 20,000 new subscribers per week. Around 66 per cent. of the population are able to access affordable broadband technologies, and increased take-up strengthens the case for further roll-out.

Nuclear Industry

25. Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much public expenditure on matters relating to the nuclear industry there has been since 1 May 1997; and what estimate she has made of future identified public liabilities in respect of existing activities. [66396]

Mr. Wilson: Public expenditure on matters related to the nuclear industry in this period related primarily to the activities of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) and BNFL. Regulation of the industry and the activities of UK Government Departments and the devolved Administrations with policy or other responsibilities relevant to the industry also necessarily involve public expenditure. However, precise information on the total expenditure involved in each of the years in question could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

For UKAEA, funding was provided in the form of grant and grant in aid to support fusion research and to discharge nuclear liabilities arising from past programmes. The sums provided in each year were as follows:

	£ million
	Grant, and grant in aid
1997–98	199.1
1998–99	302.6
1999–2000	212.1
2000–01	241.2
2001–02	311.9

BNFL is classified as a public corporation by the Office of National Statistics. Its expenditure and income is recorded in the public sector in the national accounts and so it contributes to the statistics that monitor the Chancellor's fiscal rules. BNFL's total gross expenditure in the financial years 1997–98 to 2000–01 as reported in "Public Bodies" was as follows:

	£ million
	Total gross expenditure
1997–98	1,733
1998–99	2,056
1999–2000	2,968
2000–01	2,694

The equivalent information for 2001/02 is not yet available.

At 31 March 2002 the total undiscounted cost of dealing with the nuclear liabilities of BNFL and UKAEA was estimated to be £47.9 billion. The White Paper "Managing the Nuclear Legacy—A Strategy for Action" published on 4 July set out the Government's proposals for establishing—a new Liabilities Management Authority with a specific remit to ensure that these liabilities are dealt with safely, securely, cost-effectively and in ways which protect the environment.

Sustainable Development

26. Roger Casale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to promote the sustainable development of the UK's poorest trading partners. [66398]

Ms Hewitt: The Government's key objectives for the World Summit on Sustainable Development in Johannesburg in August include: poverty eradication through sustainable development; promoting the integration of environmental issues into nationally owned poverty reduction strategies; working for sustainable prosperity by using resources more efficiently; and enhancing access to sustainable energy.

In addition, we will use WSSD to reaffirm the EU's commitment to the Doha Development Agenda (DDA) so as to add momentum to the negotiations in the WTO. These include negotiations to provide substantial improvements in market access for developing countries; to reduce, with a view to phasing out, all forms of agricultural export subsidies; and to make substantial reductions in trade-distorting domestic agricultural support.

Massey Ferguson (Coventry)

28. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance she has provided to keep the Massey Ferguson tractor plant in Coventry open. [66400]

Alan Johnson: Over a number of years Massey Ferguson has been aware of the Government programmes, such as Regional Selective Assistance, for which it has been eligible to apply. Its last application for Regional Selective Assistance was in 1988 and the final payment of the £750,000 grant was made in January 1994.

BNFL

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will place in the Library a copy of the conclusions reached by Andersen in their commissioned role as joint reporting accountants and assessors of BNFL's finances; when the reports were first delivered to her Department; and if she will make a statement. [67641]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 10 July 2002]: No. Andersen's findings were delivered to the Department and BNFL in a number of presentations and reports during the time they carried out the work from August 2000 to September 2001. The work is commercially confidential.

Arms Exports

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has held with the Secretary of State for International Development regarding arms export licence grants to (a) India and (b) Pakistan since December 2001. [65444]

Nigel Griffiths: Internal discussion on export licence issues are exempt from disclosure under Part II, Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

GATS

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the GATS consultation process will include publication of the text of the requests made (a) by and (b) of the EU. [67595]

Ms Hewitt: No. We do intend to publish a consultative document this autumn that seeks views on the requests that have been made of the EC and member states, to the extent that these affect the United Kingdom. And a summary of the EC's requests to other WTO members has already been put on the DTI and European Commission websites http://www.dti.gov.uk/worldtrade/service.htm and http://europa.eu.int/comm/trade/services/gats_sum.htm. But we will not be publishing the texts of the requests.

It is important for coherence that the European Commission and member states operate on the same basis. Commissioner Lamy has indicated in a recent reply to an open letter from a number of civil society organisations, "It is my aim to be as transparent as possible with all stakeholders, but an appropriate balance must be struck between transparency and our ability to negotiate in an atmosphere conducive to frank and open discussions. I believe that an appropriate balance has been struck and that there are ample opportunities for all interested parties to provide meaningful input if they so desire." (The full text of this letter can be found at http://europa.eu.int/comm/trade/services/plreply.htm.)

We must also respect the confidentiality that other WTO members require of us in relation to their own requests of the EC and member states.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, in the GATS negotiations, a country may reverse the commitment at any stage after committing a service sector to be liberalised under GATS; and if she will make a statement. [67594]

Ms Hewitt: Any WTO member may modify or withdraw any liberalisation commitment it has listed in its GATS schedule of commitments, in accordance with the time limits and other provisions of Articles XXI and X of the Agreement.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the GATS consultation process will include consideration of its impact on development; and if she will make a statement. [67592]

Ms Hewitt: My Department's consultation on the GATS negotiations will primarily concern the requests which the European Community will receive from other trading partners and the potential economic and legislative impact on the United Kingdom from meeting such requests. However, we have frequently said that we fully recognise the importance of the development dimension to these negotiations and will certainly cover this in our consultation.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what negotiating requests the EU is making of other countries and trading blocs in the GATS negotiations; if the development effects are considered before requests are made; and if the record of that consideration is publicly available. [67599]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for South Swindon (Ms Drown) on 8 July 2002, Official Report, columns 671–72W.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she plans to meet the Local Government Association to discuss GATS; and if she will make a statement. [67593]

Ms Hewitt: My officials are already in contact with the Local Government Association over a meeting to discuss the GATS negotiations and are currently awaiting their confirmation of a mutually convenient date. However, on 8 May the Local Government Information Bureau did attend a meeting of the Trade Policy Consultative Forum chaired by my right hon. noble Friend, Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean, the focus of which was the GATS negotiations. The LGA were invited to that meeting also, but were unable to attend.

Staff Numbers

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many staff were employed by her Department on (a) 2 May 1997 and (b) 31 May 2002. [60922]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office on 13 June 2002, Official Report, column 1402W.

Public Companies

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her policy is on securing independent non-executive directors for quoted public companies; and if she will make a statement. [68248]

Miss Melanie Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, together with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, has asked Derek Higgs to conduct an independent review of the role and effectiveness of non-executive directors, including the issue of independence.

Derek Higgs issued a consultation document in early June and he is expected to produce his report around the turn of the year.

Accounting Standards

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her policy is on accounting standards and compliance where a multi-national holding company is registered in a low compliance country and its shares are quoted on the London Stock Exchange; and if she will make a statement. [68251]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

Accountancy standards requirements for foreign-registered companies whose shares are listed on the London Stock Exchange's main market are governed by the Listings Rules administered by the UK Listings Authority.

These rules require compliance with UK GAAP (Generally Accepted Accounting Practice), US GAAP or the accountancy standards of the state where the company is incorporated. However, the UKLA can require International Accounting Standards to be applied if it is not content that the home state accountancy standards in place are sufficient to protect investors' interests.

Slightly different rules apply to non-listed securities.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has for UK accounting standards when international harmonisation occurs. [65608]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 1 July 2002]: On 7 June 2002 The Council of Ministers gave final approval to a Regulation that will require all UK companies listed on a regulated market in the EU to prepare their consolidated accounts, from 2005, on the basis of the accounting standards issued by the International Accounting Standards Board (IASB). The Regulation will apply directly to companies and does not need to be implemented by national legislation.

The Department will be publishing a consultation document in the next few months.

Export Credits (Iran)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in relation to pre-revolutionary debt owed by Iran to the UK Export Credits Guarantee Department, (a) what the total sum owed was, (b) how much has been paid back by Iran and (c) how much has been written off as a consequence of the accord signed with Iran this year broken down by (i) sector and (ii) public sector; and if she will make a statement. [67309]

Ms Hewitt: We are not able to disclose precise details of debt settlements such as this one. To do so could prejudice ongoing negotiations ECGD is currently having or intends to have in the future with similarly indebted countries.

World Trade

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to her answer of 24 June 2002, Official Report, column 687W, on world trade, if she will make it her policy to make a specific assessment of the annual cost of TRIPS to developing countries. [67770]

Ms Hewitt: I have no plans to make such an assessment.

Public Service Agreement

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many and what proportion of the public service agreements of her Department set out in the document 'Public Services for the Future 1998' have been met; and if she will make a statement. [68708]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 10 July 2002]: Of the Public Service Agreement targets referred to in the 1998 Public Services for the Future document, the majority (75 per cent.) have been met or are on course to be met. Detailed information on all the targets can be found in Chapter One of the Department's Expenditure Plans Report for 2002–03 to 2003–04 (Cm 5416), copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

Small Firms (Basic Skills)

Margaret Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she is taking to increase investment in basic skills among small firms. [66375]

Nigel Griffiths: The Government are committed to raising the level of adult literacy and numeracy in the work force and has identified this as a priority area. This will help small businesses. The Government's 'Skills for Life' strategy will:

provide free, high quality, training and advice on basic skills for all small employers;

train workplace basic skills brokers who will put businesses in touch with local basic skills training providers. 447 brokers have so far been trained;

recruit employer champions, all with a proven basic skills track record in their sector, to help fellow businesses.

The Government are also helping small firms with:

the Union Learning Fund, which has enabled union learning representatives to promote basic skills training within the workplace;

Learndirect, the online learning and information service, which offers free courses to learners on the foundations of reading, writing and numbers;

the six employer training pilots announced in the budget, which will test out a range of approaches to increasing training levels and enable employees to attain basic and level 2 skills.

Carlton House Terrace

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what funding is given to organisations to meet the cost of property in Carlton House Terrace. [63486]

Ms Hewitt: The only organisation occupying premises in Carlton House Terrace that is funded by this Department is the Royal Society. The Royal Society's grant in aid for 2002–03 is £29 million, and includes a contribution towards administration and premises.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her policy is on using 0870 telephone numbers for inquiries by the public to the Department and its agencies. [66190]

Ms Hewitt: The use of 0870 telephone numbers for inquiries by the public to my Department is determined by the individual business requirements. Currently my Department makes minimal use of such numbers.

The chief executives of the Department's agencies will reply direct to the hon. Member.

Textile Exports

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what figures she collates on support to textile exporters offered by other EU countries on (a) a per capita basis and (b) based on the volume of textile exports from each country. [60771]

Ms Hewitt: None.

Fitted Furniture

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received about the Kitchen Specialists Association, the Furniture Industry Research Association and the self-regulatory fitted kitchen organisation Qualitas; if her Department has oversight of the operations of these organisations; and if she will make a statement. [66833]

Miss Melanie Johnson: None.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will introduce legislation to provide further statutory protection for consumers purchasing fitted kitchens and other fitted furniture. [66834]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Consumers already have the right to seek damages where a service has not been carried out with reasonable skill and care. Further remedies, including repair and replacement, will be available when the regulations covering the Sale of Consumer Goods Directive (1999/44/EC) are transposed.

The Stop Now Orders (EC Directive) Regulations 2001 also give effective powers to consumer protection bodies to clamp down firmly on traders who do not comply with a wide range of legislation, including regulations on the sale and supply of consumer goods. The regulations empower the Director General of Fair Trading, trading standards departments and certain other bodies to apply to the courts for a Stop Now Order to stop a trader from breaching specified legislation where those breaches put consumers generally at risk of actual or potential harm. Failure to comply with a Stop Now Order would be treated as contempt of court punishable by fines or even imprisonment.

Oxford to Cambridge Technology Arc

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she is taking to encourage innovation along the Oxford to Cambridge Technology Arc. [66370]

Ms Hewitt: This Government are actively pursuing a policy for sustainable economic growth and increased productivity that is driven by innovation. We have charged the regional development agencies with taking this forward. The east of England and south-east England RDAs and local economic partnerships commissioned an economic study of the Oxford to Cambridge Arc that reported in October 2001. These bodies are represented on a steering group that is developing strategies as recommended by the study and addressing themes such as: branding, skills, and land and property issues.

I am confident that the actions of the Steering Group will encourage innovation along the Oxford to Cambridge Technology Arc.

World Trade Organisation (Doha)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people attended the WTO meeting in Doha in November 2001 from (a) her Department and (b) other UK Government Departments; and what the total cost of the visit was. [66216]

Ms Hewitt: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Trade and I attended the fourth WTO Doha Ministerial Conference in November 2001 for the Department of Trade and Industry. We were supported by 10 DTI officials.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development was present on behalf of the Department for International Development supported by three DfID officials.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment represented the Department of the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs with three officials from that Department.

In addition, five Foreign and Commonwealth Office officials were present, and one each from HM Treasury and the Department of Work and Pensions. In total, four Ministers and 22 officials attended.

Three NGO representatives (from the CBI, TUC and OXFAM—on behalf of the Trade Network) also attended as part of the official UK delegation.

The total cost of the visit was £156,500.

Trade Rules

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what volume of correspondence her Department has received since October 2001 regarding international trade rules and their effect on developing countries. [64602]

Ms Hewitt: My Department has received 601 such letters and approximately 24,000 postcards since October 2001 concerning international trade rules and their effect on developing countries.

Imported Energy

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of UK energy is imported; and what proposals she has to reduce dependence on imported energy. [68186]

Mr. Wilson: The UK was a net exporter of energy in 2001. The UK exported 115½ million tonnes of oil equivalent (mtoe) of oil and imported 77 mtoe. At the same time, gas exports were 12 mtoe while imports were 2½ mtoe. The UK was a net importer of coal of 23 mtoe (exporting ½ mtoe and importing 23½ mtoe) and a small net importer of electricity in 2001.

Overall, our gross exports were 128 mtoe and gross imports were 104 mtoe. These gross imports equated to 42 per cent. of the UK's total energy consumption.

There are no plans to limit the import of fuels. The consultation leading to the White Paper is considering all aspects of energy policy including the impact of the UK becoming a greater importer of fuels.

Performance Targets

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the performance targets that her Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies are required to meet, apart from those set out in the public service agreements for 1999 to 2002 and 2001 to 2004; and if she will specify for each target (a) who sets it and (b) who monitors achievement against it. [60461]

Ms Hewitt: Information on the Department's targets and priorities—including those in its Public Service and Service Delivery Agreements (both available on the Department's website)—and on how the Department is working towards them is contained in its annual Expenditure Plans Report, the next edition of which is to be published later this month covering 2002 to 2003–04. The targets are monitored as appropriate by the Department's Executive Board and Group Management Boards.

The performance of the Department's Executive non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) are set out in the individual NDPB's annual reports, copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House (the first annual reports by the Gas and Electricity Consumer Council and the Consumer Council for Postal Services will be available in the Libraries of the House in the summer). Key performance targets are agreed by the Department and achievement against them is monitored by the relevant sponsor directorate within the Department. Ministers are currently considering with the nine regional development agencies a range of new targets for their single budget which will be finalised with the agencies later this year.

I have asked the chief executives of the Department's agencies to write direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from Roger Heathcote to Mr. Tony Wright, dated 11 July 2002:

You tabled a Parliamentary Question on 24 May to Patricia Hewitt, Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, asking for the performance targets that her Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies are required to meet, apart from those set out in the public service agreements for 1999 to 2002 and 2001 to 2004. You also asked, for each target, (a) who sets it and (b) who monitors achievement against it. I have been asked to reply in respect of the Employment Tribunals Service (ETS), which is an executive agency of the DTI.

My Agency is currently required to meet the following targets:

(i) To bring 75% of single Employment Tribunal cases to a first hearing within 26 weeks of receipt.

(ii) Each office to achieve a minimum of 65% in relation to the above target.

(iii) To issue 85% of Employment Tribunal decisions within 4 weeks of the final hearing.

(iv) To achieve 85% of Employment Tribunal users being satisfied with the service offered by the ETS.

(v) To have 90% of appeals to the Employment Appeal Tribunal registered for a preliminary hearing ready for listing within six weeks.

All of the above targets are approved by DTI Ministers following consideration at a meeting of the ETS Steering Board.

Performance against all of the above targets is monitored by the ETS Management Board, by the Internal Auditors of the Department of Trade and Industry, by the ETS Audit Committee, by the Steering Board, by the National Audit Office and by Ministers.

After agreement with Ministers, the targets are set out in the ETS Annual Report and Accounts. This report is laid before Parliament before the summer recess, prior to publication by the Stationery Office and electronically on the ETS website www.ets.gov.uk.

Letter from Alison Brimelow to Mr. Tony Wright, dated 11 July 2002:

I am replying to this Parliamentary Question, tabled on 24 May 2002, to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, about the performance targets of the Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies are required to meet, apart from those set out in the public service agreements for 1999 to 2002 and 2001 to 2004. You also asked for details about who sets the targets and who monitors the performance against them.

The Patent Office is responsible for the establishment and maintenance of the national framework of intellectual property rights (patents, designs, trade marks and copyright).

The agency targets are set by the Minister, Melanie Johnson and are published in the Patent Office Corporate Plan, and Annual Report and Accounts. The agency targets for 2002–03 were announced by the Secretary of State in Parliament on Wednesday 20 March 2002 (Hansard reference column: 365W). The performance against these targets are checked by internal audit and I am accountable to the Minister for the performance of the Patent Office.

Customer Service Standards have been set by the Patent Office and are published in the Annual Report and on our website. The performance against these standards are monitored monthly and reported to our Steering Board.

The Patent Office provides secretariat support for the new Intellectual Property Advisory Committee (IPAC). The role of this committee is to give the Minister and officials advice on identifying strategic issues within the intellectual property arena. Their first Annual Report is due to be published in the Autumn.

Letter from Mike Goddard to Mr. Tony Wright, dated 11 July 2002:

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has asked me to reply to your Question concerning performance targets for my Agency, excluding those set out in Public Service Agreements.

The Agency has a series of annual published quality of service targets, covering our licensing and enforcement activities, and correspondence. The targets are prepared as part of the Agency's Corporate plan, are endorsed by our Steering Board, and are approved by Ministers. They are announced formally by PQ, and those for the current financial year were announced on 26 March 2002 and recorded in columns 809–10W of the House of Commons Official Report.

Performance is monitored by the Department and our Steering Board. It is reported in our Annual Report and Accounts, which are audited by the National Audit Office, and in the Expenditure Plans Report produced by the Department.

Letter from Claire Clancy to Mr. Tony Wright, dated 11 July 2002:

I am responding to your recent Parliamentary Question about Departmental performance targets on behalf of Companies House, which is Executive Agency of the Department of Trade and Industry.

The targets for Companies House are agreed and set by Ministers, announced in Parliament by means of a Parliamentary Question, and published in the Companies House Business Plan. As Chief Executive, I am accountable to the Minister responsible for Companies House (the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Competition, Consumers and Markets, Melanie Johnson, M.P.). Companies House's performance against the targets is monitored by the DTI and published in our Annual Report and Accounts.

The current targets are listed in the attached Annex and I hope that this will provide you with the information you require.

Companies House Executive Agency—Targets 2002–03

Operational Targets

To process 99% of statutory documents within 5 days of receipt at Companies House.

To achieve, on average, a monthly compliance rate for accounts submitted of 95%.

To ensure that 96% of all forms submitted to Companies House are captured error free.

To ensure that 98% of all images placed on the Companies House image system are error free.

Questions delegated to the Chief Executive

The Chief Executive to reply within 10 days to all letters from Members of Parliament delegated to her for reply.

Customer Service and Complaints Handling

To ensure that products and services on Companies House Direct are available for 98% of the time between the supported hours of 7am and 8pm, Monday to Friday.

To ensure that products and services on the Companies House website are available for 98% of the time between the supported hours of 7am and 8pm, Monday to Friday.

To achieve a score of more than 80% in each quarterly Companies House Customer Satisfaction Survey.

To clear up 90% of complaints within five days.

Financial Targets

To maintain a unit cost reduction of 3% in real terms on documentation registration.

To achieve, taking one year with another, a 6% average rate of return based on the operating surplus expressed as a percentage of average net assets.

To pay all bills due within 30 days, or other agreed credit terms, on receipt of goods or services or a valid invoice whichever is later.

Letter from Dr. J. W. Llewellyn to Mr. Tony Wright, dated 11 July 2002:

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory (NWML) to your question about the performance targets that the Agency is required to meet, apart from those set out in the public service agreements for 1999 to 2002 and 2001 to 2004; and to specify for each target (a) who sets it and (b) who monitors achievement against it.

Each year DTI Ministers approve a corporate plan submitted by the Chief Executive of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory. The plan includes a basket of performance targets that cover operational, financial and efficiency issues. Ministers publicise their approval by means of an arranged Parliamentary Question. The Agency is required to report performance against the targets in the Annual Report and Accounts presented each year to Parliament. In year monitoring is the responsibility of the Agency and the Finance and Resource Management Directorate of DTI.

The performance targets for 2001–02 were subject to a PQ on 18 July 2001 and performance against those targets will be published in the 2001–02 Annual Report and Accounts in the next couple of months. A list of targets is attached at Annex A.

The corporate plan and performance targets for 2002–03 are currently being considered by DTI Ministers.

Summary of Ministerial Targets—2001–02

To report a break-even situation in the Income and Expenditure Account for 2001–02.

To meet the Agency's net vote target in 2001–02.

To contribute to continuous efficiency improvement by ensuring that total overhead costs are less than 55% of total costs.

To satisfy all its customers as demonstrated by at least 95% of them rating NWML's provision of services as satisfactory or better.

To meet the expectations of its customers by completing at least 90% of European type approvals within 10 weeks.

To complete European type approvals within an average of 6 weeks.

To complete calibration jobs within the time requested by customers, with at least 95% of all jobs (including preparation of certificates) completed within 18 working days of acceptance of the work and an average completion time of less than 14 days.

To complete the National Measurement System (NMS) legal metrology programme, and achieve 72% of the milestones in the programme by their due dates.

To achieve continuous growth in its non-DTI income, with an increase of 7.5% in 2001–02.

Chief Executive to reply within 10 working days to all letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Civil Service

31. Julie Morgan: To ask the Minister what plans she has to encourage more flexible working in the civil service to enable more women to reach the top grades. [66404]

Ms Hewitt: My Department is working with the Cabinet Office to increase the availability of flexible working at senior levels, including tackling the design of senior posts.

The civil service continues to make progress on increasing the numbers of women at senior levels. In the top 600 posts, the proportion of women has increased from 12.7 per cent. in 1998 to 21.2 per cent. in October 2001. In the senior civil service as a whole, the proportion has increased from 17.6 per cent. to 25.3 per cent. over the same period.

Flexible Working

32. Gillian Merron: To ask the Minister what analysis she has undertaken of the business benefits of flexible working. [66405]

David Taylor: To ask the Minister for Women what analysis she has undertaken of the business benefits of flexible working. [66402]

Ms Hewitt: Surveys carried out when drawing up the Green Paper on work and parents (published December 2000) showed that most employers identified benefits from flexible working. We have since continued to compile extensive case study evidence which demonstrate that employers can see real business benefits by implementing flexible working patterns. Our campaign is based on what shrewd employers are already doing, because of their own business needs.

Management Training

33. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister what guidance she gives to public authorities on training women for managerial positions. [66407]

Ms Hewitt: While it is not my role to offer such guidance to public authorities, I do of course continue to work with others to ensure that women are encouraged to train for managerial positions and progress to senior and managerial positions in our public authorities. The Centre for Management and Policy Studies, which is at the heart of Government, offers a number of courses which specifically targets the personal development of women.

Gender Pay Gap

34. Tom Brake: To ask the Minister if she will make a statement on progress in reducing the gender pay gap in the financial services sector. [66408]

Ms Hewitt: The pay gap between men and women currently stands at 18 per cent, down from 20 per cent. in 1997. In the financial services sector, the gap has reduced from 30 per cent. to 29 per cent. over the same time period. The Government are taking a number of steps to reduce the pay gap further. As well as the introduction of the National Minimum Wage and the provisions in the Employment Bill, the Fair Pay Champions and Castle Awards, are helping to spread good practice on equal pay. All Government Departments are committed to carrying out a pay review by March 2003.

Affordable Child Care

35. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister what action she is taking to improve access to affordable child care for working women. [66409]

Ms Hewitt: The Government is committed through its National Childcare Strategy to ensuring that accessible, affordable and quality childcare is available in every neighbourhood. There has been a substantial expansion in childcare nationwide and with a wide range of providers, ensuring real choice for parents. 497,000 new childcare places have been created since 1997, benefiting over 906,000 children and on track to meeting the Government's target of creating new places for 1.6 million children by 2004.

Regional Assembly Elections

36. Dr. Starkey: To ask the Minister what representations she is making to ensure the involvement of women in proposed elected regional assemblies. [66410]

Ms Hewitt: The Sex Discrimination (Election Candidates) Act 2002 allows political parties to use positive measures, in certain circumstances, when selecting candidates to stand for existing UK elections.

We are keen for political parties to make full use of this legislation, and I will continue to press for them to do so. We stated in the regional government white paper, 'Your Region, Your Choice: Revitalising the English Regions', that we propose to apply the provisions of the Act to elections for regional assemblies.

PRIME MINISTER

No. 10 Downing Street

Mr. Laws: To ask the Prime Minister how many staff have been employed at No. 10 Downing Street in each year from 1979–80 to 2002–03, broken down by Department; what the total annual staff cost was in each year; and if he will make a statement. [66295]

The Prime Minister: The total staff costs for No. 10 Downing Street from 1997 are as follows:

1997–98: £4.1 million
1998–99: £4.9 million
1999–2000: £5.9 million
2000–01: £6.9 million.

At 1 April 1998, there were 121 members of staff and at 1 April 2002 there were 190 staff on the No. 10 payroll.

Staff numbers and costs before these dates are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Committee on Standards in Public Life

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will instruct Alastair Campbell and Jonathan Powell to accept the invitation of Sir Nigel Wicks to appear before his committee to give evidence. [68852]

The Prime Minister: The Government's position on these invitations is as set out in a letter of 5 July 2002 from the Secretary of the Cabinet to the Chairman of the Committee on Standards in Public Life. A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

CABINET OFFICE

Timber Procurement

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will make a statement on the outcome of his investigations into the concerns raised by Greenpeace on timber procurement in respect of the 22 Whitehall project. [69780]

Mr. Alexander: I am today placing a copy of the Cabinet Office's report on the issue of timber procurement for the 22 Whitehall project in the Libraries of the House.

The report shows that timber for the 22 Whitehall project was not procured in line with the Government's policy of seeking to procure timber from legal and sustainable sources. This has led to the procurement of sapele timber, for which there is no independent certification of sustainability available, from forests in Central Africa.

The report also sets out a number of actions that the Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and the Office of Government Commerce will be taking to improve the Government's adherence to the policy on timber procurement. The Cabinet Office is also taking a number of steps to improve its own domestic position on timber procurement.

I am grateful to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) for her interest in the issue of timber procurement. The specific case of the 22 Whitehall project has highlighted a significant level of confusion associated with the terminology used in connection with the specification of timber in contracts. This clearly has implications across Government Departments as employers of contractors, and among contractors themselves. The actions set out in the report published today reflect the importance the Government attaches to improving its position on the issue of timber procurement. The Government will also carefully consider any recommendations emerging from the Environmental Audit Committee's inquiry on the Government's role in promoting the use of timber from sustainable sources.

Departmental Waste

Sue Doughty: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what proportion of waste produced in his Department was (a) recycled, (b) composted and (c) re-used, broken down into (i) paper, (ii) plastics, (iii) aluminium cans and (iv) other in each year since 1997; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65702]

Mr. Alexander: Figures for the proportion of waste recycled for the period September/October 2000 to 31 March 2001 is published in the Third Greening Government Annual Report. Data prior to that period are not available. Figures for 2001–02 will be shown in the first Sustainable Development in Government Questionnaire 2002 (previously Greening Government Annual Report) which is due to be published later this year.

Figures are not available for the proportion of waste produced that was composted or re-used.

The Cabinet Office is actively working with both our newly appointed facility management provider as well as with our Agencies to maximise the amount of waste sent for recycling.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the estimated (a) level and (b) cost of energy use in his Department and associated agencies was in each year since 1997; what proportion of energy was generated from renewable sources; and if he will make a statement. [65947]

Mr. Alexander: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 3 July 2002, Official Report, columns 384–87W. Figures prior to 1997–98 are not available.

Since 1 October 2001 over 75 per cent. of the power used across the Cabinet Office's central London estate is being generated from renewable energy sources which are exempt from the climate change levy.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many oral questions he has transferred to other Departments in each of the last 18 months. [65514]

Mr. Alexander: I have been asked to reply.

My Department always makes sure that every question tabled receives an accurate answer by those best placed to provide it. Oral PQs are therefore transferred if it is more appropriate for other Departments to answer and they have agreed. Since June 2001 the figures are:

July 2001: 1
October 2001: 7
November 2001: 8
January 2002: 4
February 2002: 7
March 2002: 7
April 2002: 0
May 2002: 7
July 2002: 1.

TREASURY

North Sea Oil and Gas

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what the expected revenues from the North Sea are likely to be for 2002–03 based on an oil price of (a) $10, (b) $15, (c) $25, (d) $30 and (e) $35 a barrel at current US/UK exchange rates; [59398]

(2) what the expected revenues from the North Sea are likely to be for 2003–04 based on an oil price of (a) $10, (b) $15, (c) $25, (d) $30 and (e) $35 a barrel at exchange rates of £1/$1.40; [59392]

(3) what the expected revenues from the North Sea are likely to be for 2002–03 based on an oil price of (a) $10, (b) $15, (c) $25, (d) $30 and (e) $35 a barrel at exchange rates of £1/$1.50; [59400]

(4) what the expected revenues from the North Sea are likely to be for 2002–03 based on an oil price of (a) $10, (b) $15, (c) $25, (d) $30 and (e) $35 a barrel at exchange rates of £1/$1.40; [59399]

(5) what the expected revenues from the North Sea are likely to be for 2003–04 based on an oil price of (a) $10, (b) $15, (c) $25, (d) $30 and (e) $35 a barrel at current US/UK exchange rates; [59391]

(6) what the expected revenues from the North Sea are likely to be for 2003–04 based on an oil price of (a) $10, (b) $15, (c) $25, (d) $30 and (e) $35 a barrel at exchange rates of £1/$1.50. [59393]

Dawn Primarolo: Revenue is dependent on the price of oil, the exchange rate and the levels of production and expenditure. Decisions on levels of production and expenditure will be taken by companies on the basis of actual and expected prices. A significant and sustained change in oil prices would lead to different levels of production and expenditure. The yield will also be affected by differential movements in gas prices relative to oil. By way of an estimate, at current levels of planned production and expenditure, at an exchange rate of £1/$1.40, a movement in the oil price of $5 could be expected to affect revenue by about £2.2 billion in a full year. At an exchange rate of £1/$1.50, a similar movement would affect revenue by about £2.0 billion in a full year. These estimates assume that gas prices would move broadly in line with the price of oil.

Gamebirds

Norman Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what (a) assessment he has made and (b) representations he has received in relation to the valuation rating of gamebird (i) rearing and (ii) premises. [69026]

Dawn Primarolo: The Valuation Office Agency (VOA) is the executive agency of the Inland Revenue that is responsible for preparing and maintaining rating lists. It has received representations from a number of bodies including Wales Opponents of Pheasant Shooting and Animal Aid requesting confirmation that specified game farms are assessed for non-domestic rates (NNDR).

The VOA has also been requested by the Game Farmers Association to ensure that their membership and others in the industry are all treated fairly in relation to non domestic rates.

Game farms have been assessed for NNDR in the 1990, 1995 and 2000 rating lists.

The Valuation Office Agency has undertaken various initiatives over recent years to identify this class of property and to enter them in the non-domestic rating lists. Where the valuation officer is aware of a property operating as a game farm and it is not assessed for non-domestic rates, then the circumstances are investigated.

Hearing Aids

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to exempt deaf employees from paying tax on their hearing aids; and if he will make a statement. [68847]

Ruth Kelly: The Government are continuing to remove barriers to work and ensure that disabled people do not face discrimination in the work place. Regulations came into force on 9 July 2002, to ensure that benefits for disabled employees which may be used both in and out of the work place, such as a hearing aid, will not be liable to a tax charge.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from the manufacturing sector regarding the climate change levy. [66384]

John Healey: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Robertson) on 20 June 2002, Official Report, column 398.

Taxation

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the number of households facing marginal deduction rates of over 70 per cent. in each year since 1997. [69090]

Dawn Primarolo: Historical estimates of the number of households facing marginal deduction rates in excess of 70 per cent. for 1997–98 through to 1999–2000 are contained in the Social Security Departmental Report—The Government's Expenditure Plans 2000–01 to 2001–02. Forward-looking estimates, which include the impact of the tax and benefit changes made in Budgets since 1997, are contained in the Budget 2002 report. Tax and benefit changes made since 1997 have reduced the number of households facing marginal deduction rates in excess of 70 per cent. by around half a million.

VAT

Norman Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what recent (a) assessment he has made and (b) representations he has received regarding the imposition of VAT on game birds reared for country sports; [69027]

(2) how much VAT has been raised by the sale of shooting rights to operators for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [69028]

John Healey: Sales of game birds reared for country sport are zero-rated for VAT. There have been no representations on this subject since the hon. Gentleman tabled a question which was answered on 15 October 2001, Official Report, column 851W.

Estimates of VAT raised from the sale of shooting rights for the last 10 years are not available.

David Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of small businesses that have benefited from the simplification of VAT. [66397]

John Healey: It is not possible to give a meaningful estimate for the number of small businesses that have benefited from the many VAT simplification initiatives that have taken place over the years. The table gives estimates for the small businesses VAT simplification measures that were announced in the last Budget.

Measure	Estimate
Registration threshold increased to £55,000.	Keeps another 4,000 small businesses out of the VAT net.
Optional flat rate scheme introduced on 25 April 2002.	Allows approximately 500,000 small firms to cut their compliance costs. 1,400 applications by the end of May and will be extended to a further 200,000 more small firms with turnovers up to £150,000 next April.
Changes to the annual accounting scheme allowing businesses with a turnover up to £100,000 to join the scheme as soon as they register for VAT.	About 10,000 businesses are already using the scheme and the changes extend eligibility to another 100,000 businesses.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his definition of (a) domestic and (b) personal care in relation to VAT on home care services. [66148]

John Healey [holding answer 2 July 2002]: There is no definition of 'domestic' or 'personal' care in VAT law. In the absence of a definition in law, these terms are given their ordinary everyday meaning. Examples of personal care include bathing, feeding and toileting. Examples of domestic care include cleaning, cooking and shopping.

The take-up figures for the flat rate and annual accounting schemes are expected to increase later in the year as the changes bed in and the benefits are given wider publicity.

Government Debt

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether his Department has met its performance target of reducing the yield differential between (a) British and (b) German long-term Government debt; and if he will make a statement. [69089]

Mr. Boateng: The differential between yields on UK and German 10-year Government bonds at the start of May 1997 was 1.7 per cent. The Treasury Departmental Report 2002, published in June, reported that this differential had averaged 0.14 per cent. over the year to publication. The differential is currently 0.16 per cent. (8 July 2002).

Resource Accounting

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether comprehensive departmental resource accounts were fully in place in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [6[illegible]91]

Mr. Boateng: As part of the implementation of resource accounting and budgeting, Government Departments prepared resource and pension scheme accounts in parallel with the related appropriation accounts for 1999–2000. These accounts were laid before the House by the Treasury and published by Departments. All were subject to audit and examination by the Comptroller and Auditor General. Thirty nine of those accounts were laid before the House under the terms of the Exchequer and Audit Departments Act 1921 by the statutory deadline of 31 January 2001 and the remaining 10, with the agreement of the Treasury and the National Audit Office, were laid by 4 April 2001. Therefore these represent a comprehensive set of accounts for that period.

Housing Market

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies he has commissioned into sudden falls in the housing market in parts of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [68330]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested has been placed in the Library of the House.

PISA 2000 Survey

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 1 July 2002, Official Report, column 117W, if he will make a statement on the timing of the test in relation to GCSE exams. [67863]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: I have been asked to reply.

In England, the OECD PISA survey was conducted between 1 March 2000 and 14 April 2000, on a date chosen by each participating school. GCSE examinations were held in May and June 2000.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer since the international coalition began freezing ZANU-PF members' assets, what activity has occurred within each of the accounts. [67134]

Ruth Kelly: European Council Regulation 310/2002 does not allow for the disclosure of details regarding individual accounts and amounts frozen, beyond the information already made available to the right hon. Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram) on 15 April 2002.

Actions taken by other Governments in respect of individuals in Zimbabwe are a matter for those Governments. Within the European Union, it is for each member state to ensure that the terms of the regulation are implemented.

Receptions

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the (a) date, (b) purpose and (c) cost of each reception held at No 11 Downing Street since 7 June 2001; and if he will make a statement. [66279]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 4 July 2002]: A list of all receptions held at 11 Downing Street since 7 June 2001 has been placed in the Library.

The total cost to the Treasury for all official receptions held in the relevant period is £8,453 in 2001 and £6,505 in 2002. There is no cost to the Treasury or public funds for any private reception.

Contraband

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the value of contraband brought into the UK through (a) canalised, (b) non-canalised ports of entry and (c) in total (i) in sterling and (ii) as a percentage of the total through each of (a)-(c) in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [69018]

John Healey: I regret that this information is not available in the format requested but I am able to refer the hon. Member to some sources of information on the subject that he may find of interest.

The latest information about excise smuggling can be found in the documents "Measuring Indirect Tax Fraud and Tackling Indirect Tax Fraud" (HM Customs and Excise, November 2001). Details and results of Customs activities to counter other types of contraband smuggling are published in the Customs and Excise Annual Report 2000–01 (March 2002). Copies of all of these documents have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Charities

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce a VAT refund scheme for charities; and if he will make a statement. [68877]

John Healey: Charities already benefit from a range of special VAT reliefs, but the Government recognise that irrecoverable VAT still represents a problem for some charities.

While we remain alive to opportunities to modernise and update the VAT system for charities wherever possible, this remains a difficult issue. The 1999 Review of Charity Taxation gave careful consideration to a scheme to refund charities' irrecoverable VAT, but concluded that for reasons of principle and cost this should not be pursued.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer with which currencies sterling has maintained greatest exchange rate stability since 1997; and how that is measured. [69020]

Ruth Kelly: There is no unique measure of exchange rate stability. One possible measure is the co-efficient of variation. Since the start of 1997, of the currencies comprising sterling ERI, the Swiss franc-sterling exchange rate has had the lowest co-efficient of variation.

Euro

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the five economic tests will include an assessment of the short-term and long-term consequences for public spending and fiscal policy of joining the euro. [69065]

Ruth Kelly: The Government have said they will complete an assessment of the five economic tests within two years of the start of this Parliament. All relevant economic issues will be dealt with as part of the assessment.

Poor Nations (Imports)

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he has taken, and what progress he has made, towards securing the support of EU Governments for the lifting of barriers to imports from the poorest nations. [69019]

Ruth Kelly: The Government are working closely with our EU partners for a successful resolution of the new WTO 'development' trade round, including the commitments in the Doha Ministerial Declaration of 14 November 2001 on market access for agricultural and non-agricultural products. And we are strongly encouraging other industrialised countries to follow the EU lead by granting duty and quota-free access to the least developed countries for all exports except arms, and by financing capacity building in developing countries so they can participate fully and effectively in the forthcoming negotiations.

Cars

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations the Inland Revenue has received about the valuation of cars in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [69457]

John Healey: For the purposes of calculating the tax charge on the benefit of a company car, the "price" of the car is based on the UK list price. Information about the number of representations received on this issue is not available.

Unemployment

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the rate of unemployment is in each Government office region. [68900]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Kidgell to Mr. Iain Coleman, dated 11 July 2002:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the unemployment rate in each government office region. I am replying in his absence. (68900)

The latest available estimates, for the three month period ending April 2002, are given in the attached table. These estimates are from the Labour Force Survey and are seasonally adjusted.

ILO unemployment rate[1] by Government office region; February to April 2002, seasonally adjusted

Per cent.

	Rate
North-east	6.9
North-west	5.8
Yorkshire and the Humber	5.2
East Midlands	4.7
West Midlands	5.6
East	3.6
London	6.8
South-east	3.7
South-west	3.3
Wales	5.8
Scotland	6.8
Northern Ireland	5.7
United Kingdom	5.2

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Employment Relations Act

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Employment Relations Act 1989 will be reviewed; and if she will make a statement. [68342]

Ms Hewitt: The review begins today. Its terms of reference are the following:

The Government has reformed the labour market to build a durable and fair basis for constructive employment relations. By a range of measures, the UK labour market is achieving high levels of employment and combining fairness and flexibility.

In line with commitments made in the 1998 Fairness at Work White Paper, the Government will review the operation of the statutory union recognition and derecognition procedures in the Employment Relations Act 1999. The review will also look at the operation of the other provisions of the Act.

The review will be carried out by the DTI through full public consultation. The DTI will complete this task to a timetable enabling any legislative recommendations which the review may make to be introduced within the lifetime of this Parliament.

I am placing in the Libraries of the House a Schedule describing the subjects covered in the Act.

TRANSPORT

A1 Upgrade (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment has been made of the environmental impacts of the forthcoming A1 upgrade in North Yorkshire; if he will place copies of related documentation in the Library; and if he will make a statement; [66318]

(2) what assessment or research has been conducted on the safety benefits of the forthcoming A1 upgrade in North Yorkshire; if he will place copies of related documentation in the Library; and if he will make a statement; [66320]

(3) what assessment has been made of the impact on businesses and economic development in the (a) north-east and (b) Yorkshire and Humber regions of the forthcoming A1 upgrade in North Yorkshire; if he will place copies of related documentation in the Library; and if he will make a statement; [66317]

(4) what assessment has been made of the impact on (a) traffic growth, (b) freight volume, (c) car journey numbers, (d) delays and (e) congestion of the forthcoming A1 upgrade in North Yorkshire; if he will place copies of related documentation in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [66316]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Tim Matthews, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Tim Matthews to Mr. Don Foster, dated 11 July 2002:

I have been asked by the Transport Minister, David Jamieson, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions about the forthcoming A1 upgrade in North Yorkshire.

The safety benefits of this scheme were assessed in the A1 Bramham to Barton Road Based Safety Study.

That Study, and the Scheme Appraisal Report, assessed traffic growth, Light and Heavy Goods Vehicle flows and traffic congestion, together with the environmental impact of the proposal.

During the study we consulted a wide range of organisations affected by, and having an interest in, the A1 in the North East and Yorkshire and Humber. These included The Regional Development Agencies for the North East and Yorkshire and Humber as well as local councils, freight associations and other transport bodies. The results are reported in the A1 Bramham to Barton Safety Study Problems and Issues Statement.

I have arranged for copies of all these documents to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

If you require any further information, Alec Briggs in our Leeds Office will be happy to assist you. He can be contacted on 0113 283 6303.

Railtrack

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the letter of agreement of 27 June relating to the Government's undertaking to make sufficient funds available to ensure that the amount receivable by Railtrack group by way of consideration in respect of the disposal of the shares in Railtrack Plc on an after tax basis is equal to £500 million. [66545]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: The details of this letter, and the contingent liability contained within, are set out in paragraphs 24 and 25 of the non-statutory contingent liability Minute laid before the House of Commons on 27 June.

Strategic Rail Authority

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the credit rating is of the SRA. [66598]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: In line with other non-departmental public bodies, the SRA would receive a high credit rating consistent with its statutory role.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications for membership of the board of the SRA were received in response to the most recent advertisements; and when resulting appointments to the board will be announced. [69164]

Mr. Jamieson: 603 applications have been received for membership of the Board of the Strategic Rail Authority. Appointments will be announced in due course.

Railways

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the special purpose vehicles being developed for enhancement works on the railways. [66603]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster) on 9 July 2002, Official Report, column 807W.

Network Rail

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on Network Rail's proposal from (a) the ORR and (b) the SRA. [66544]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 2 July 2002]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has discussed the matter with the ORR and SRA.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the (a) statutory and (b) other powers of the SRA with regard to the control of Network Rail. [68391]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The SRA's statutory powers are set out in the Railways Act 1993 and the Transport Act 2000. The SRA will be represented as a member of Network Rail and would have certain special rights as a member (e.g. the right to appoint an SRA non-executive director to the board).

Devolution

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Technical Adaptation Committee on the protection of workers from the risks related to exposure to chemical, physical and biological agents at work is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [67756]

Mr. Jamieson: We do not know of any committee with this name and function.

Road User Charging

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he plans to make to his policy on road user charging for inter-urban motorway and trunk roads in response to the prospective opening of the M6 toll road in 2004. [68080]

Mr. Jamieson: There are no plans to introduce inter-urban road user charging, but we shall want to see what lessons can be learned from practical experience with charging schemes, including the national scheme for lorries announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his most recent Budget.

Driving Standards Agency

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what evaluations have been conducted on the efficacy and value-for-money provided by the Driving Standards Agency's schools liaison programme; [68365]

(2) if he will place in the Library copies of guidelines and regulations given to the Driving Standards Agency with regard to their schools liaison programme; [68368]

(3) what Driving Standards Agency expenditure was on their schools liaison programme in each of the past five years; and what financial provision is being made for future development of such programmes; [68362]

(4) how much was spent (a) per school and (b) per school that actively took part by the Driving Standards Agency on their schools liaison programme in each of the past five years; [68363]

(5) what funding requests his Department is planning for the Driving Standards Agency's schools liaison programme; [68364]

(6) if he will make a statement on the selection procedure for schools to take part in the Driving Standards Agency's schools liaison programme; [68367]

(7) if he will list the schools that took part in the Driving Standards Agency's schools liaison programme. [68366]

Mr. Jamieson: In our road safety strategy "Tomorrow's Roads—Safer for Everyone" we gave the Driving Standards Agency (DSA) an expanded remit to contribute to improvements in road safety for young and novice drivers by establishing, developing and disseminating high standards and best practice in driving and riding on the road. We committed DSA to boosting road safety education in schools by expanding its programme of presentations to schools and colleges. Copies of the "Strategy" are available in House Libraries, and I am arranging for copies of the "Arrive Alive" material to be placed there too.

The schools programme was recently renamed "Arrive Alive" to reflect the wider target audience that has developed since the scheme was launched in 1996. Driving examiners now visit and make presentations to a wide range of organisations including schools and colleges, the armed forces, agricultural colleges, youth football teams, probation services and young offender units. There is no rigid procedure for DSA selecting schools, colleges or other institutions in which to carry out the presentations. In some cases a local Road Safety Officer will ask DSA to take part in a road safety presentation. In other cases, interest might be generated by a visit to the "Arrive Alive" website.

Independent research carried out in 1997 by the British Institute of Traffic Education and Research (BITER) concluded that the schools programme had proved effective in promoting key safety messages and in moulding attitudes among potential drivers.

The Department has funded the programme since 2000. Prior to that, DSA obtained funding from private business and from surpluses generated by DSA's non-statutory commercial activity—mostly the sale of books. DSA spent £65,000 in 1997–98, £94,000 in 1998–99 and £25,000 in 1999–2000. In 2000–01 funding by the Department amounted to £250,000 and in 2001–02 to £500,000. We plan to increase funding so that as many young learners and novice drivers as possible can benefit from the important road safety messages that the programme conveys—£750,000 for 2002–03 and £1 million for 2003–04.

Presentations are delivered to schools, colleges and the other institutions free of charge. Each presentation costs the Agency an average of £74 for the presenter's travel and subsistence.

In 2001–02, DSA delivered some 2,800 presentations to a number of organisations: A list has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Trams

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the tram schemes (a) in operation, giving (i) the Government body responsible for oversight and (ii) the start date of the operation, (b) under appraisal and (c) under construction; and if he will make a statement. [68472]

Mr. Jamieson: For parts (a) and (b), I refer the hon. Member to my previous replies of 2 July 2002, Official Report, columns 217–18W. There is only one tram scheme currently under construction—the Nottingham Express Transit (NET), which is due to open in November 2003. In addition, there are a further three schemes which are presently being procured: South Hampshire Rapid Transit System (SHRTS); Leeds Supertram; and the three extensions to Manchester Metrolink.

Thameslink 2000

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement as to the status of the Thameslink 2000 project. [68361]

Mr. Jamieson: A public inquiry into the project was held between June 2000 and May 2001. The report of the inquiry inspector is under consideration in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, as my right hon. Friend is responsible for deciding Railtrack's consent applications.

Railways (London)

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the London orbital rail routes that (a) have been completed in the last two years, (b) are under construction, giving the expected opening date, and (c) are being considered; and if he will make a statement. [68359]

Mr. Jamieson: No new railway lines have been constructed in London in the last two years. Work has already commenced on the extension of the East London line to connect it into the National Rail Network. The Strategic Rail Authority's Strategic Plan gives a target completion date of 2006. The SRA is seeking to enhance levels of orbital rail services over existing infrastructure. The Mayor of London's Transport Strategy details a number of aspirations for improved orbital rail services, and these are being examined in conjunction with the SRA.

Rail Services (Overcrowding)

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the level of overcrowding in trains in each year since 1992. [68232]

Mr. Jamieson: Overcrowding is primarily a problem in London in the morning peak. Overall overcrowding levels fell from 1992 to 1996, rose in 1997, fell in 1998, rose in 1999 and 2000 and are unchanged in 2001.

In 2001, nearly half a million people travelled by train into London each morning. This is the highest figure since the late 1980s. Despite this growth in use at peak times, overcrowding has decreased on eight out of the 10 London franchises since spring 2001, and the number of operators that have overcrowding levels exceeding the SRA's threshold has fallen from five to four. These four operators all have plans in place to reduce overcrowding.

Mersey Passenger Transport Authority

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the level of rail expertise in the Mersey Passenger Transport Authority. [69121]

Mr. Jamieson: All Passenger Transport Executives have a range of expertise to enable them to formulate and implement local transport plans and to oversee related transport contracts. They also play a significant role in specifying and monitoring rail performance in their areas.

Car Tax

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to reduce numbers of untaxed cars on the road. [69174]

Mr. Jamieson: Detection of unlicensed vehicles on the public road is carried out by police and traffic wardens, who pass offence reports to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) for enforcement action. Last year 800,000 offenders were brought to book, bringing in £110 million in fines, penalties and relicensing revenue.

This day to day enforcement activity is being supplemented by a number of other measures. Since 1997 a nationwide scheme has been operating to wheel clamp and impound unlicensed vehicles seen on the public road. Over 90,000 vehicles have been clamped since the scheme started. The scheme has been a success and we are investigating the possibility of expansion.

In addition, we significantly increased the number of joint DVLA/police campaigns against VED evaders last year and these are running at a record level. We also introduced mobile digital camera technology to detect unlicensed moving vehicles. This complements other activities which concentrate more on stationary vehicles.

DVLA is also working closely with other enforcement agencies in a pilot scheme to target both unlicensed and abandoned vehicles. Operation Cubit is a joint operation between DVLA, the police, fire service and local authorities which removes offending vehicles from the road immediately. It is proving to be very popular with members of the public with each vehicle being dealt with by the legislation which is appropriate to its condition.

Another pilot scheme recently proved the feasibility of local authorities using DVLA's powers to wheel clamp and impound unlicensed vehicles. This is now being rolled out to any local authorities that wish to join the scheme.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to require the DVLA to introduce (a) on-line and (b) telephone notification of untaxed cars. [69176]

Mr. Jamieson: DVLA currently accepts on-line notification of untaxed vehicles. Plans are also in hand to enhance the agency's website to make it even easier for customers to report untaxed vehicles on-line.

DVLA has also set up a trial telephone hotline notification scheme of untaxed vehicles in Hertfordshire. This started on 26 February 2002. The trial is being carefully monitored and if it proves a success, will be rolled out on a nationwide basis and will be given wide publicity.

Car Use

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 4 July 2002, Official Report, column 466W, on car use, what the (a) location of and (b) amount spent on each bursary was in (i) 2000–01 and (ii) 2001–02. [68759]

Mr. Jamieson: In February 2001 we awarded 111 bursaries to 84 local authorities at a cost of £9 million over three years, to employ co-ordinators to support the development of travel plans for schools and places of work. The location and amount claimed by each local authority has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 4 July 2002, Official Report, column 466W, on car use, what assessment he has made of the travel plans presented by the local authorities; and which plans were identified by his Department as examples of best practice. [68758]

Mr. Jamieson: Although we have carried out research to establish the number of plans being implemented by local authorities, we have not undertaken an evaluation of the individual plans themselves. However, we intend to publish shortly a guide on "Making Travel Plans Work: Lessons from UK Case Studies" together with the research report and the 20 case study summaries on which the guide is based. Two of these case studies are of plans prepared by local authorities, Buckinghamshire county council and Wycombe district. We are about to commission an evaluation of the bursary scheme for local authority travel plan co-ordinators and an evaluation of the programme of free site-specific advice on travel plans.

London Underground

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statistics he collates on the number of people on the London Underground network who (a) manage to get on the first train that arrives from when they step onto the platform, (b) have to let one train go by due to overcrowding, (c) have to let two trains go by due to overcrowding and (d) have to let three or more trains go by due to overcrowding. [69177]

Mr. Jamieson: Detailed operational information of this nature is a matter for London Underground. However, I am informed that they do not collect information in the form requested.

Bus Lanes

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to consult on regulations enabling camera enforcement of bus lanes by local authorities outside London. [69925]

Mr. Spellar: We have today published draft regulations for consultation. Copies of the consultation letter and draft regulations will be placed in the Library. The draft regulations place the liability for payment of the penalty charge where a vehicle is driven illegally in a bus lane on the registered keeper, except that where a vehicle is subject to a hire agreement, liability falls upon the person who has hired the vehicle, and where a vehicle is being kept by a motor trader who is not the vehicle's registered keeper, liability falls upon the motor trader.

During the passage of the Transport Act 2000 we indicated that it was intended, at least initially, that regulations for bus lane enforcement outside London would be made on the basis of driver liability. In preparing the draft regulations, advice was taken from a working party of local authority representatives, and from the independent adjudication services dealing with parking appeals and, in London, bus lane appeals, flowing from local authority enforcement. They made representations that pursuing the driver is not a practical option for civil enforcement of bus lane contraventions. Merit is also seen in having a civil enforcement regime for bus lane contraventions that parallels the well established owner liability regime of decriminalised parking enforcement. Therefore, we decided that the draft regulations would place liability for payment of a penalty charge on the registered keeper, subject to the aforementioned exceptions.

Signage

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to replace miles with kilometres on traffic signs used to indicate speed limits and distances. [69926]

Mr. Jamieson: Although many drivers are familiar with metric units, it would not be appropriate to fix a date for converting speed limit and distance signs while there is still likely to be a significant proportion of drivers for whom the change could be potentially confusing.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Energy Conservation

Mr. Stunell: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), representing the House of Commons Commission, what steps the Commission has taken to promote energy conservation and efficiency within the parliamentary estate since 1997. [65723]

Mr. Kirkwood: One hundred and ten staff of the House have been given special responsibility for energy conservation and efficiency. They receive monthly data on the energy consumption in their respective parts of the estate and manage housekeeping economy measures—for example, by reporting damaged windows and faulty lamps, and ensuring lights and water heaters are switched off when not in use.

Some £30,000 has been invested each year in energy saving schemes. Recent examples include lighting occupancy sensors and thermal insulation. A contract has recently been let to replace the main Palace boilers and chillers with modern high efficiency plant over this summer recess and the summer recess of 2003. A combined heat and power plant provides electricity and domestic hot water to the Norman Shaw buildings.

Portcullis House was specifically designed to be energy efficient. Cooling for the air conditioning is obtained by drawing cold water from a deep aquifer. Heat exchangers recover energy from discharging warm to cool air. The thermal mass of walls, floors and ceilings balances out daily temperature changes. External light shelves reduce the need for daytime artificial lighting.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Stunell: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood), representing the House of Commons Commission, what the estimated level of energy use on the Parliamentary Estate was in each year since 1997; what proportion of energy used is generated from renewable sources; and what plans there are to increase this proportion. [65724]

Mr. Kirkwood: The energy used on the parliamentary estate in each financial year since 1997 is given in the table. Because the size of the estate has changed in this period the figures are calculated per square metre.

	KiloWatt hours per sq. m.
1997–98	342
1998–99	353
1999–2000	353
2000–01	334
2001–02	315

None of the energy used is generated from renewable sources; this issue was last considered by the Accommodation and Works Committee in November 2000, when it resolved that the situation should continue to be monitored. I have drawn my hon. Friend's question to the attention of the Chairman of that committee.

Select Committee Specialists

Mr. Dismore: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what plans he has to review salary rates for Select Committee specialists; and if he will make a statement. [65348]

Mr. Kirkwood: Salaries are kept under constant review, and a general review of pay for all staff throughout the House up to the grade above that of committee specialists is now under way.

To the best of my knowledge, committees have been able to secure suitably qualified staff to act as committee specialists, and have been content with the quality of their work, though I cannot of course tell whether other good candidates have been deterred from applying for such posts by salaries given in press advertisements.

The House recently approved the establishment of a review of committee support staff when it debated the Modernisation Committee's report on Select Committees on 14 May. That review is now beginning: I am sure that the review team will consider carefully the issue the hon. Gentleman has raised today.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

DEFRA Stand (Agricultural Shows)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs who designed her Department's stand for this year's Countryside and Agricultural Show; and what the cost was of (a) the design work, (b) the production of the stand and (c) the stand excluding staff costs, at the shows. [63195]

Mr. Morley: The DEFRA stands being used at this year's agricultural shows were designed and built by two companies. Sabre International Exhibitions and Sasex. In both cases the stands are not new, each having been used at events during 2001. The contracts for this work were awarded following an established process of competitive tendering. While the costs involved are a matter of commercial confidentiality they are in line with commercial rates that Government Departments would expect to pay for stands of this sort.

EU Management Committee

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Management Committee of the common organisations of agricultural markets for sugar is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64890]

Mr. Morley: The EU Sugar Management Committee normally meets weekly on Thursdays. UK representation depends on the agenda items under discussion. Officials from the Scottish Executive and other devolved Administrations attend as necessary in accordance with their interests.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Management Committee on application of the Directive on the standardisation and rationalisation of reports on the implementation of certain Directives relating to the environment is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64885]

Mr. Meacher: I regret that I am not yet able to provide this information. I will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Fisheries

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what contingency plans she has developed relating to the six and 12-mile inshore fisheries limits in the event that a new derogation is not in place by 31 December. [64380]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 June 2002]: I welcome the Commission's proposal to renew without any time limitation the current access arrangements for the six and 12-mile limits and their statement that these provisions have reduced fishing pressure in the most biologically-sensitive areas of the sea and provided economic stability for small-scale fishing activity. The proposal would apply from 1 January 2003 and a decision is due to be taken by the Fisheries Council during the course of this year's review of the common fisheries policy. There remains a consensus among member states in favour of renewing the limits.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress she is making in obtaining an EU wide ban on the fishing of bass while they are spawning. [64382]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 June 2002]: The International Council for the Exploration of the Seas' Advisory Committee for Fisheries Management has recently reported to the European Commission on the status of sea bass in European waters. The Commission will need to consider its response to this report. I will support any effective controls to ensure the sustainability of bass stocks.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress has been made towards reducing effort by 20 per cent. in those sectors of the UK fishing fleet with the most over-capacity; and if she will make a statement. [69158]

Mr. Morley: It has been a departmental target to reduce fishing effort, by 20 per cent. between 1997 and the end of December 2001, in those segments of the UK fishing fleet with the most overcapacity. This target was met by the due date.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 27 June 2002, Official Report, column 951, on fisheries, which member states regard relative stability as being in the best interests of all EU members. [67316]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 July 2002]: Following statements made by Ministers in the Fisheries Council and by officials in Council Working Groups, the following member states have declared that fishing opportunities should continue to be allocated according to the principle of relative stability: Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain and Sweden.

Radioactive Waste

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which bodies she (a) has consulted recently and (b) plans to consult in relation to radioactive waste management; and if she will make a statement. [65631]

Mr. Meacher: We and the devolved Administrations consulted over 1,000 people and organisations, including local authorities, green groups and others during the recent consultation on "Managing Radioactive Waste Safely". I shall write to the hon. Member with further details.

We will continue to involve these people and organisations as our radioactive waste management programme continues.

Flood Defence

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which local authorities in England were asked to complete a policy statement to determine whether the authority would be able to meet Government aims and objectives in relation to flood defence; and which of these authorities are considered to be within official flood risk areas. [66687]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 3 July 2002]: All local authorities in England have been asked to complete a policy statement in line with Government flood defence aims and objectives. With the exception of Brighton and Hove unitary authority[1], London borough of Camden and London borough of Islington, all local authorities have some part of their boundary within the area shown on the Environment Agency's 2001 indicative floodplain maps.

[1] The area within Brighton and Hove UA boundaries has no main river, therefore, no fluvial floodplain. In addition, the land rises very steeply from the shoreline and is therefore deemed to be a coastal protection (more at risk of erosion and landslides) rather than a flood defence area.

Sustainable Development

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to raise public awareness about the World summit on Sustainable Development over the next three months. [67078]

Mr. Meacher: In DEFRA we are continuing to work with other Government Departments and outside organisations to raise awareness of the World summit on Sustainable Development among both the media and the general public.

We are currently finalising proposals which not only build on the progress already made, but which also identify areas where we need to focus our resources, not only in the period running up to the event, but also during and immediately after the summit. These proposals include: producing a brochure about the summit which also highlights UK activity on sustainable development, focusing on locally based activities and making further improvements to the Government sustainable development website to enhance the information and networking opportunities it provides. The website can be found at www.sustainable-development.gov.uk

Johannesburg Summit

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what budget has been allocated by her Department to raise awareness on environmental issues linked to the Johannesburg summit. [67077]

Mr. Meacher: The World summit on Sustainable Development takes place in Johannesburg from 26 August to 4 September. Many environmental issues relate to the agenda so it is not possible to isolate a specific budget. However, through the Environmental Action Fund we are helping voluntary organisations in England to promote sustainable development. For 2002–03 we have allocated £1.4 million to 25 projects promoting 'biodiversity' and £3.1 million to 58 projects promoting the 'understanding and awareness of sustainable development'. In 2001–02 the Environmental Action Fund supported 115 projects promoting 'sustainable living' to the tune of £4.2 million. In addition, DEFRA supports Environmental Campaigns Ltd and the Energy Saving Trust's Energy Efficiency Campaign, and last financial year provided over £8.2 million (it is not possible to disaggregate a small element of Scottish Executive support for the Energy Saving Trust from this figure) for both. We expect to provide a similar level of support for this financial year.

One of the aims of the DEFRA Sustainable Development Strategy, 'Foundations for our Future', launched last month, is to raise awareness of sustainable development within staff in DEFRA. £120,000 has been earmarked over this coming year for this.

Agricultural Forms

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to reduce the complexity of forms that have to be filled in by farmers. [67556]

Mr. Morley: Many of the forms farmers are required to complete relate to CAP support schemes. These forms are reviewed each year for need and content.

The Bovine Scheme Literature Project is currently reviewing the three major bovine schemes, Suckler Cow Premium Scheme (SCPS), Slaughter Premium Scheme (SPS) and Beef Special Premium Scheme (BSPS), with a view to producing a single form and set of scheme literature, thus reducing the time farmers spend on form filling.

Wherever possible, forms are pre-printed with information we already hold.

The Department is currently considering its overall approach to reviewing forms.

Angling

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to introduce a system of bag limits for sports anglers fishing around the UK coast. [67306]

Mr. Morley: As I explained to the right hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) on 1 July 2002, Official Report, column 60W, limits on the amount of crabs and lobsters that hobby fishermen can take from the sea are being considered as part of the proposed shellfish licensing scheme. The Department is also looking at the possibility of bag limits for other species and I would hope to be able to reach firm conclusions this autumn. Any proposals to introduce bag limits will be the subject of consultation with both commercial and recreational interests.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what plans she has to introduce a licensing system for the sale of fish and lobsters from inshore waters so as to make it illegal to purchase fish or lobsters from anyone not holding a DEFRA licence; [67304]

(2) what plans she has to prevent sports fishermen and women selling their catches to the retail and restaurant trade; [67307]

(3) what assessment she has made of the impact of sale of fish caught by sports fishermen and women to the retail and restaurant sectors on the viability of the inshore fishing industry in the UK. [67305]

Mr. Morley: Under existing fisheries legislation it is only permissible to sell (for profit) fish caught from and landed by vessels which have been licensed by one of the Fisheries Departments in the UK. Sales of fish caught by unlicensed vessels can depress prices for legitimate landings and adversely affect the earnings of licensed fishermen. Steps to prevent unauthorised sales are kept under review and any proposals for additional measures will be the subject of consultation with interested parties.

Parrett Catchment Project

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what control her Department will have over the chairman of the Parrett Catchment project. [67585]

Mr. Morley: The Department does not have control over the chairman of the Parrett Catchment project.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what checks will be carried out to assess the success of the Parrett Catchment project. [67586]

Mr. Morley: The Parrett Catchment project is a local partnership and as such will not be subject to Government checks. We have welcomed the initiative and continue to encourage the project to analyse proposed options further and to integrate with existing Government sponsored mechanisms such as the Catchment Flood Management Plan.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the exemption for combined heat and power from the climate change levy, as announced by the Chancellor in his Budget, will become operational; and whether the value of the exemption will be realised by the qualifying combined heat and power generator. [67602]

Mr. Meacher: The introduction of the full exemption of CHP from the climate change levy is subject to EC State Aid approval. We hope to have this approval by the end of November. Whether the qualifying CHP generator supplements its price by the full value of the levy exemption or the licensed supplier reduces the price he pays by sharing some of it, is a commercial matter. Either way, the effect should be to make the onward sale of good quality CHP electricity more attractive.

Curry Report

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent representations she has received regarding the funding and implementation of the Curry report on the future of food and farming; and if she will make a statement. [67088]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 5 July 2002]: The Government's discussion document 'Sustainable Food and Farming: Working Together' invited views on how to take forward issues identified in the Policy Commission's report on the future of food and farming. Approximately 250 responses have been submitted, supplementing representations made during the extensive process of stakeholder engagement conducted recently. These responses are being analysed and will help inform the construction of a Strategy for Food and Farming in England, to be published this autumn.

Timber Procurement

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures the United Kingdom Government are taking to encourage other EU Governments to adopt timber procurement policies similar to those in place in the United Kingdom in respect of timber sourced legally and sustainably; and if she will make a statement. [68032]

Mr. Morley: The Government have promoted their timber procurement policy to EU member states and other countries on a number of occasions. The Minister for the Environment gave a speech on implementation of the UK procurement policy, experiences gained and lessons learned on 23 May to an international audience including some EU member states, G8 countries and China. He encouraged them to adopt similar policies. The European Commission was sent a consultation paper on implementation of the policy in the UK to help the Commission prepare for the Forest Law Enforcement, Governance and Trade workshop held in Brussels over 22–24 April. The Government's consultation exercise itself was widely publicised and the discussion held on 25 March was attended by stakeholders from across Europe. The policy has been notified to the OECD Steering Group on Green Public Purchasing and in April a Government official gave a presentation on the policy at an international conference on illegal logging held in the USA.

It is the Government's intention to continue to work closely with other EU member states and the Commission both to further promote the UK timber policy and to share experience gained and lessons learned through implementation. When the next UK consultation exercise is complete and the report we have commissioned from ERM consultants finished we will ensure that the recommendations and actions that follow are widely publicised.

Foot and Mouth

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) when she expects the European Commission to provide modulation payments to the United Kingdom for the foot and mouth outbreak; [67620]

(2) how much money she expects the European Commission to pay the United Kingdom as a modulation payment for the foot and mouth outbreak. [67621]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 July 2002]: Modulation is a mechanism which enables member states of the European Union to redirect a proportion of their CAP direct payments to rural development measures, should they choose to do so. It is not a mechanism through which EU funding is directed for FMD purposes.

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the Lessons Learned inquiry will publish its report; and if she will make a statement. [70079]

Margaret Beckett: I understand that the report of Dr. Iain Anderson's foot and mouth disease Lessons Learned inquiry is now expected to be published on Monday 22 July.

Committee Mandates

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Management Committee for the fisheries and aquaculture sector is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68606]

Mr. Morley: The Committee usually meets at monthly intervals. The next meeting is scheduled for 23 July. The composition of the UK delegation is decided according to the agenda. Representatives of the Scottish Executive attend whenever the business of the Committee requires it.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Management Committee for Fisheries Products is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68570]

Mr. Morley: The next meeting of the Committee is provisionally scheduled for 4 October. Outside the summer period it usually meets at monthly intervals. The composition of the UK delegation is decided according to the agenda. Representatives of the Scottish Executive attend whenever the business of the Committee requires it.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the Fisheries and Aquaculture Sector is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68571]

Mr. Morley: The Advisory Committee on Fisheries and Aquaculture was set up to enable the Commission to consult representatives of the EU fishery products and aquaculture industry, and of related interests such as consumers and environmentalists, and to take their views on the drafting and implementation of relevant EU measures. It is not attended by officials.

Farming Statistics

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the statistics that are collected by her Department by English parliamentary constituency; and if she will make a statement. [67096]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 8 July 2002]: DEFRA produces statistics from the June Agricultural and Horticultural Census by parliamentary constituency in England for the following data sets:

Land use and crops

Livestock numbers

Labour force

Breakdown by total area size bands

Breakdown by farm type.

These statistics have been produced for the years 1999, 2000 and 2001. Copies of the 1999 and 2000 data sets are available in the Library. Statistics for 2001 are available on request and will shortly be deposited in the Library.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what exports of sheepmeat there were to each EU country in each of the last five years. [68270]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The table shows the volume of sheepmeat exported to the EU in each of the last five years.

Supermarkets

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to help farmers to develop a better relationship with supermarkets. [67575]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The majority of farmers do not deal directly with supermarkets. However, those that do may benefit from the supermarkets Code of Practice which the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced on 18 December 2001. Although the Code is currently binding only on the four largest supermarkets, we have been encouraging smaller supermarkets and larger processors to sign up to its principles and practices.

The Policy Commission on the Future of Farming and Food stressed the potential of collaborative ventures for all farmers, large and small, and pointed out that collaboration can put farmers in a better negotiating position when dealing with large customers. We support this view and are looking at ways in which we might encourage greater collaboration between producers. We have already proposed that one of the priorities of the new Agricultural Development Scheme will be projects promoting co-operation and collaboration benefiting primary producers. We have also been considering with others the Policy Commission's Recommendation for the establishment of an English Collaborative Board that would encourage and support collaboration and co-operation among farmers.

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many and what proportion of the public service agreements of her Department set out in the document Public Services for the Future 1998 have been met; and if she will make a statement. [68713]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 July 2002]: Information relating to DEFRA's Public Service Agreement targets can be found in the DEFRA's departmental report 2002.

Recycling

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to encourage recycling of (a) paper, (b) glass, (c) aluminium and (d) inkjet cartridges. [67804]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 10 July 2002]: This Government are committed to increasing reuse and recycling of all materials. Waste Strategy 2000 set a national target of recycling or composting at least 25 per cent. of household waste by 2005, 30 per cent. by 2010 and 33 per cent. by 2015. To underpin these targets, last year we set statutory performance standards for recycling for all local authorities in England. Authorities are required, on average, to double recycling by 2003–04 and triple it by 2005–06.

These recycling standards are not material specific. It is up to the individual authority to decide which materials to collect for recycling, depending on local circumstances. Many authorities have introduced kerbside collection of recyclables and these often include paper, glass and aluminium.

We are taking various steps to help local authorities increase recycling. For example, the Waste Minimisation and Recycling Programme provides £140 million for local authority activities, and grants for the first year of funding have just been allocated. Around 58 of the schemes to be funded this year involve kerbside collection and a great number of these target the paper, glass and aluminium waste streams. In addition, schemes to increase bring site recycling and schemes that should raise awareness and consequently recycling rates, have also been approved.

We have also set up the Waste and Resources Action Programme (WRAP) to tackle the market barriers to recycling. WRAP have made good progress so far, and have awarded a grant which will result in additional paper reprocessing capacity for 320,000 tonnes of waste paper per year.

The Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment (WEEE) Directive, which the Government support, makes producers of electrical and electronic goods responsible for their recovery, treatment and environmentally sound disposal and covers inkjet cartridges if they are discarded with the printer.

Two of the amendments to the Directive proposed by the European Parliament are relevant to inkjet cartridges—amendment 7, which would give re-use of WEEE, its components, sub-assemblies and consumables priority over recycling, and amendment 22, which would prevent the production of equipment which has been manufactured in such a way as to prevent reuse. The Government fully support amendment 7 and support amendment 22 in principle. A final text is expected to be adopted by the end of this year.

Nitrate Vulnerable Zones

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the percentage of respondents to the recent consultation on nitrate vulnerable zones preferred the option of designating 100 per cent. of England as a nitrate vulnerable zone; and if she will make a statement. [68100]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 10 July 2002]: Overall 56 per cent. of respondents to the recent consultation "How should England implement the 1991 Nitrates Directive?" preferred application of Action Programme measures to the whole of England. Thirty six per cent. preferred the alternative designation of discrete areas as Nitrate Vulnerable Zones. The remainder failed to state a preference. We published an independent analysis of all the responses on 27 June 2002, which is available on the DEFRA web site at "www.defra.gov.uk/environment/water/quality/nitrate".

However, these responses were on the basis that 80 per cent. England would be designated under the discrete area option. Subsequent refinement of the mapping work has established that only 55 per cent. of England has to be designated. We took this into account in deciding how to proceed in the light of consultation.

Widdrington Carcase Disposal Site

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how the figure of £165,000 compensation paid to UK Coal in respect of the Widdrington carcases disposal site was arrived at. [66888]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 July 2002]: MAFF/DEFRA negotiated a six year lease for the Widdrington mass burial site, commencing 31 March 2001. In addition to a basic rent for the occupation of the site, since the area is zoned for future coal extraction, a further premium of £300,000 was paid for sterilised coal deposits.

This sum was determined by the local Mineral Valuer of the Valuation Office Agency in negotiation with UK Coal and was based on the area of land-take used exclusively by MAFF/DEFRA for carcase disposal and a calculation of the likely tonnage of coal that could have expected to be mined from the area.

The £165,000 referred to in the NAO Report relates to the purchase of Tow Law mass burial site. When MAFF/DEFRA acquired the site, it paid the negotiated purchase price. However, there was in the deeds a restrictive covenant which limited use of the site to open cast mining or agriculture. If any other use was made of the land, the former owners, in this case the Coal Authority, would have to be paid a clawback of 50 per cent. of the increase in the value of the site. The increase was calculated by taking the difference between the indexed sale price achieved by the Authority and deducting this from the price paid by DEFRA, and dividing the result by 2, giving £165k.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many businesses in the Widdrington area of Northumberland have received compensation or disturbance payments in respect of the carcase burial site there. [66889]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 July 2002]: No compensation or disturbance payments have been made to businesses in the Widdrington area of Northumberland in respect of the carcase burial site there.

Frozen Chicken Imports

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what assessment of the risk to animal health has been made by her Department with regard to bovine DNA contained in imported frozen chicken breasts; [68842]

(2) whether she informed the inquiry into the lessons to be learned from the foot and mouth disease outbreak of 2001 of her Department's risk assessment with regard to bovine DNA contained in imported frozen chicken breasts; [68837]

(3) what evidence her Department presented to the National Audit Office report on the 2001 outbreak of foot and mouth disease concerning the risk assessment with regard to bovine DNA contained in imported frozen chicken breasts; [68839]

(4) when she informed the Scientific Review into foot and mouth by the Royal Society of her Department's risk assessment with regard to bovine DNA contained in imported frozen chicken breasts. [68841]

Mr. Morley: Since 1 August 2001, it has been illegal to feed any processed animal proteins—including avian proteins—to animals which are kept, fattened or bred for the production of food. These legislative requirements, designed to avoid any possibility of the BSE agent getting into feedingstuffs for farmed livestock, are backed up by robust surveillance arrangements to monitor compliance. The specially developed tests which are used to help enforce the feed controls include one specifically aimed at detection of avian proteins. Given the robust controls in place, no added value would be achieved from a separate risk assessment on the animal health implications of bovine DNA contained in imported frozen chicken breasts. Consequently, no risk assessment has been produced or sent to either the inquiry into the lessons to be learned from the foot and mouth disease outbreak of 2001, or the National Audit Office Value for Money Examination into the 2001 outbreak of foot and mouth disease, or the Royal Society Study into Infectious Diseases in Livestock.

BSE

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her estimate is of the incidence of Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy in each year since 1997; and if she will make a statement. [69092]

Mr. Morley: Confirmed cases of BSE in UK since 1997 are as follows.

	Passive surveillance[1]	Active surveillance[2]
1997	4,335	0
1998	3,198	0
1999	2,263	18
2000	1,331	99
2001	812	372
2002[3]	[4]253	[5]305

[1] Animals reported as showing clinical sign suspicious of having BSE.

[2] Animals tested on presentation for slaughter, without showing clinical signs suspicious of having BSE.

[3] To 28 June.

[4] 70 results pending at 28 June 2002.

[5] 22 results pending at 28 June 2002.

Weekly statistics showing the progress of the BSE epidemic in Great Britain are available on the DEFRA website at: http://defraweb/animalh/bse/bse-statistics/level-3-incidence.html.

Agri-environment Schemes

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much land was covered by the major agri-environment schemes in (a) 1990, (b) 1995, (c) 1997, (d) 1998, (e) 1999, (f) 2000 and (g) 2001; and if she will make a statement. [69157]

Mr. Morley: Details for the Environmentally Sensitive Areas, the Countryside Stewardship and the Organic Farming Schemes are set out in the table in hectares. The area of land under these schemes continues to increase. The Government are firmly committed to agri-environment schemes, and a significant increase of funding was announced in 2000 at the beginning of the England Rural Development Programme.

	ESA	CSS	OFS
1990	111,550	—	—
1995	424,567	[1]90,900	2,118

[2] Provisional estimates.

Note:

Organic Aid Scheme operated until 1999 when it became the Organic Farming Scheme.

EU Directive 1999/74/EC

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to her answer of 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 383W, on EU Directive 1999/74/EC, if she will place the (a) full and (b) partial regulatory impact assessments in the Library. [68834]

Mr. Morley: The full regulatory impact assessment concerning implementation of EC Directive 1999/74/EC has been placed in the Library.

A partial regulatory impact assessment is being produced for the proposal to ban enriched cages from 2012 and this will soon be placed in the Library together with the consultation letter.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 383W, for what reasons she will not carry out a full regulatory impact assessment ahead of her Department's consultation. [68760]

Mr. Morley: A partial regulatory impact assessment is included with all public consultations. Subsequently, a full regulatory impact assessment will be produced, including the results of the consultation and will be submitted to Ministers.

Extraction

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the Usk valley has been identified as an area for sand and gravel extraction. [67479]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

This is a matter for the Welsh Assembly Government.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will undertake a study of sand deposits and extraction in Ceredigion. [67027]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

This is a matter for the Welsh Assembly Government.

DEFENCE

Body Armour

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether units of the British armed forces are equipped with full body armour based on ceramic plates; and what distribution of body protection (a) has been made and (b) is planned. [52125]

Mr. Ingram: Units of the United Kingdom armed forces, in operational theatres, are issued with the general service combat body armour (CBA), which is a vest designed to provide protection to the chest and much of the abdomen. There is also an explosive ordnance disposal (EOD) suit that provides head-to-toe protection for EOD units. Both are manufactured from textile ballistic fabric. Two ceramic plates can be added to the CBA vest, for extra front and back protection, if required. The current EOD suit does not have ceramic plates but a new lightweight EOD suit, which like the CBA would have ceramic plates to the front and back, has recently been trialled.

Aircraft Shortages

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) training courses and (b) exercises have been cancelled owing to unavailability of aircraft in the last 12 months. [64848]

Mr. Ingram: From 1 June 2001 to 31 May 2002, twenty training courses were cancelled as a result of aircraft unavailability.

The Defence exercise programme is responsive to Operational tempo and decisions on which exercises to support with Tactical Air Transport (Tac AT) are taken on a case-by-case basis in the light of this, and their priority within the programme. From 1 June 2001 to 31 May 2002, four of the 13 exercises not offered Tac AT support were cancelled.

No exercises were cancelled as a result of aircraft unserviceability.

Territorial Army

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the strength of the Territorial Army is. [66717]

Dr. Moonie: As at 1 May 2002, the strength of the Territorial Army stood at 39,125 personnel, which includes those currently mobilised in support of operations.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the restructuring of the Territorial Army was completed; and if he will make a statement. [69103]

Dr. Moonie: The Strategic Defence Review required the re-organised Territorial Army to be operationally effective by 31 March 2000. All units formed as required, although some units were retained beyond this date until such time as regular units could assume their role as planned. The process of converting to new roles is continuing, and shortfalls in manpower in some areas (in particular the Army Medical Service(TA)) are also being addressed.

Mr. Joyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Territorial Army intelligence specialists called out into service last February are to be replaced; and if he will make a statement. [69781]

Dr. Moonie: As a result of the significant increase in intelligence work following the events of 11 September, the need to augment the Defence Intelligence Staffs and other headquarters organisations by some 55 reservists continues. It is therefore necessary to call out compulsorily a second tranche of intelligence specialists to relieve the majority of those called out last February who now wish to resume their civilian employment. The individuals involved in the second tranche will primarily come from the Territorial Army, but a small number will also come from the Royal Naval Reserve and the Royal Auxiliary Air Force. They will commence their appointments in mid-August. We recognise the essential contribution made by these reservists to the operations against global terrorism and are grateful to them, their families and their employers for their support.

Browndown Site

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will cut back the higher trees and gorse on the Browndown site between Portsmouth Road and the sea at Lee-on-Solent. [67194]

Dr. Moonie: There are no plans to cut back trees and gorse at Browndown site. As this is a site of specific scientific interest, we would have to consult with English Nature before undertaking such work, and in any event, work would not start before the growing season ended in the autumn.

Nuclear Weapons

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the types of circumstances in which he has judged it would be legal for the United Kingdom to use nuclear weapons; and whether it is United Kingdom policy never to be the first to use nuclear weapons. [68612]

Mr. Hoon: As the Government have made clear on many occasions, we would be prepared to use nuclear weapons only in extreme circumstances of self-defence. We would not use our weapons, whether conventional or nuclear, contrary to international law.

A policy of no first use of nuclear weapons would be incompatible with our and NATO's doctrine of deterrence, nor would it further nuclear disarmament objectives. We have made clear, as have our NATO allies, that the circumstances in which any use of nuclear weapons might have to be contemplated are extremely remote. Our overall strategy is to ensure uncertainty in the mind of any aggressor about the exact nature of our response, and thus to maintain effective deterrence.

Inglis Barracks, Mill Hill

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the findings of the recent survey of the Inglis Barracks site, Mill Hill, of low level radiation. [68668]

Dr. Moonie: An environmental survey was started on 4 July 2002 at Mill Hill to check for radioactive contamination on land that previously belonged to the Ministry of Defence. The first stage was a walk-over survey with meters to check for any radiological activity. Only two small areas meriting further investigation were found. These were on the Barnet council depot/MOD boundary and in open space in the vicinity of Notting Hill Housing Group flats. The risk to the general public is considered very low and no immediate action or special precautions are necessary.

Starting on Monday 15 July, trial pits will be dug and bore holes drilled for taking soil samples. The results from analysis of the samples will be used to decided what remedial action may be necessary.

The survey is a precautionary measure following a previous Land Quality Assessment of the military site at Mill Hill that identified low levels of radioactivity in a small area in the centre of the site. This activity arises from the residues of luminous paint buried in the ground. Radium based luminous paint was commonly applied to items such as vehicle dials during the second world war as well as on a wider commercial basis for watches and clock faces up to the late 1960s. The MOD intends to remove the contaminated material from Mill Hill, as it has successfully done from other sites, such as the former Admiralty Compass Observatory at Ditton Park, Slough, now sold and re-developed.

The survey is being undertaken jointly by Barnet borough council and the MOD, working with Annington Homes, Notting Hill Housing Group and the Environment Agency. Residents are being kept informed through mail drops and a telephone help line. An on-site information office was open during the walk-over survey. The results of the survey work will be shared with residents.

Phoenix

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what the original estimated in-service life of the Phoenix UAV system that entered into service in 1999 was; and if he will make a statement; [68671]

(2) what the estimated in-service life of Watchkeeper is; and if he will make a statement; [68672]

(3) if the Phoenix UAV system will be upgraded; and if he will make a statement. [68673]

Mr. Ingram: The Phoenix UAV system entered service in December 1998 with a projected in-service life of 15 years. The Watchkeeper programme, which will subsume the capability offered by Phoenix, defines the capability required of UAV systems to contribute to overall Intelligence Surveillance Target acquisition and reconnaissance (ISTAR) requirements for the next 30 years.

Individual components that make up the capability, such as air vehicles, will change to reflect developments in technology and will not be expected to achieve in-service lives of 30 years. The question of further investment in the Phoenix system and its out of service date is being considered during the current Watchkeeper assessment phase.

Agency Performance Targets

Mr. Joyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Defence Communication Services Agency for financial year 2002–03. [69782]

Mr. Ingram: Key targets have been set for the Chief Executive of the Defence Communication Services Agency (DCSA) for financial year 2002–03. The targets build on progress already made and are as follows:

Key Target 1 Service Assurance

To meet an average of 98 per cent. for measured services against the performance targets agreed in the Agency's CSAs.

Key Target 2 Service Fulfilment

To commission an average 95 per cent. of new service requests on, or before, the dates agreed by customers with the DCSA.

Key Target 3 Service Restoration

To restore an average 97 per cent. of interrupted services classed as Operationally Urgent within four hours of the fault being reported to the DCSA, or within other specific periods agreed with customers and to restore Business Critical services in accordance with agreed periods in the CSAs.

Key Target 4 Service Support

To achieve an average 88 per cent. success rate against agreed standards in response to demands on all DCSA Operator Assistance centres and helpdesk facilities.

Key Target 5 Customer Satisfaction

To achieve an average 75 per cent. of customers/users who express moderate or high satisfaction with the way they have been treated by the Agency and the subsequent services and support provided by the DCSA.

Key Target 6 Efficiency Measurement

To achieve an improvement in efficiency by reducing the average unit cost of outputs by 3 per cent. per annum.

Key Target 7 Introduction of New Projects and Services on Time

The average cumulative slippage of in-service dates for new major projects is not to exceed 10 per cent.

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency for financial year 2002–03. [69928]

Mr. Ingram: The following key targets have been set for the Naval Recruiting and Training Agency for 2002–03:

Key Target 1

To deliver RN personnel to the trained strength (or to other training organisations) within 5 per cent. variance from the tasked requirement.

Key Target 2

To deliver RM recruits to Commandant General Royal Marines within 3 per cent. variance from the tasked requirement.

Key Target 3

To maintain success rates of 95 per cent. in Career Training and 97 per cent. in examined pre-joining training.

Key Target 4

To reduce the variance between RNR Trained Strength and Total Requirement to 28 per cent.

Key Target 5

To achieve, by 31 March 2003, a methodology for the implementation of an output cost based efficiency target.

Key Target 6

To achieve net benefits of £14 million in financial year 2002–03 from the partnering arrangement with Flagship Training Limited.

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Veterans Agency for financial year 2002–03. [69929]

Dr. Moonie: The Key Targets that have been set for the chief executive of the new Veterans Agency for 2002–03 are as follows:

Service

Key Target 1:

To reduce the average time it takes to issue decisions on claims to war pensions to no more than 82 working days. This is an improvement of eight working days on the Agency's 2001–02 target; and it represents a cumulative improvement of 18 per cent. against its 2000–01 baseline level of 100 working days.

Key Target 2:

To reduce the average time it takes to issue decisions on war widow(er)s claims to no more than 34 working days. This is an improvement of two working days on the Agency's 2001–02 target; and it represents a cumulative improvement of 5 per cent. against its 2000–01 baseline level of 36 working days.

Key Target 3:

To achieve an externally validated claims accuracy rate of at least 95 per cent.

Personnel

Key Target 4:

To carry out an externally validated programme of internal IiP assessments during 2002–03 to determine whether the Agency continues to meet the requirements of the IiP standards.

Working in Partnership

Key Target 5:

To work with the Lord Chancellor's Department's Court Service to reduce the average time it takes an appeal to pass through the war pensions appeals process. By 31 March 2003 the average time should reduce to no more than 310 working days. This is an improvement of 198 working days on the Agency's 2001–02 target; and it represents a cumulative improvement of 45 per cent. against its 2000–01 baseline level of 565 working days.

Efficiency

Key Target 6:

To develop a methodology for costing agency outputs to provide the baseline to measure any future years' business efficiencies.

Dr. Palmer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for ABRO as a trading fund for financial year 2002–03. [69930]

Mr. Ingram: The chief executive of ABRO, Michael Hayle, has been set the following Key Targets for the first year of operation:

Key Target 1:

Financial performance—Return on Capital Employed (ROCE). The measurement of ABRO's ROCE: to achieve at least a 6 per cent. average ROCE over the first three years of trading.

Key Target 2a:

Delivery performance. The measurement of Land (District) service delivery: to complete 95 per cent. of Land (District) Load tasks within the priorities agreed with the customer (Tech 3c).

Key Target 2b:

Delivery performance. The measurement of Programme service delivery: to complete 95 per cent. of critical Programme Load tasks within the times agreed with the customers (ES Land IPTs).

Key Target 3:

Efficiency—reduction in output price. The measurement of the reduction in price of ABRO output: to reduce the average equipment repair price, across the whole programme by 3 per cent. in the first year and by 12 per cent. over three years against the 2002–03 baseline.

Key Target 4:
Winning work. The measurement of ABRO winning work: to deliver more than £4 million of competed work in each of the next three years, but with the intention to change an "order book" measure from year two onwards.

Light Support Weapons

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the effectiveness of the (a) Minimi LSW and (b) SA80 LSW; and if he will make a statement. [69156]

Mr. Ingram: The Minimi Light Machine Gun (LMG) and the SA80A2 Light Support Weapon (LSW) are both deployed in support of the infantry with complementary but different roles. The Minimi LMG is capable of providing sustained suppressive firepower through belt fed ammunition at ranges of 300–400 m. The SA80A2 LSW can engage targets accurately at extended ranges (up to 600 m) at a lower rate of fire.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which light support weapons were issued to UK troops as part of (a) Taskforce Jacana and (b) Operation Fingal; and if he will make a statement. [69154]

Mr. Ingram: Minimis and light support weapons were issued to troops on both operations. We always issue weapons to our forces which are appropriate for the tasks that we expect them to undertake.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Minimi light support weapons have been issued to UK troops in Afghanistan and at what cost to his Department; and if he will make a statement. [69155]

Mr. Ingram: 149 Minimis were issued to United Kingdom troops involved in Operations Jacana and Fingal in Afghanistan. I am withholding details of the cost in accordance with Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Joint Helicopter Command

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Joint Helicopter Command was established; and if he will make a statement. [69096]

Mr. Ingram: The Joint Helicopter Command was established on 5 October 1999, as a result of the Strategic Defence Review.

Chief of Defence Logistics

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the first Chief of Defence Logistics was appointed; and if he will make a statement. [69098]

Mr. Ingram: General Sir Sam Cowan was appointed, initially as Chief of Defence Logistics (Designate), in the lead in to the DLO's former launch on 1 September 1998 for a four-year period. The appointment of Air Marshal Sir Malcolm Pledger was announced on 21 March 2002 in the normal way, and he will take up his appointment in the rank of Air Chief Marshal, on 2 September 2002.

Departmental Projects

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date his Department completed (a) the formation of 1 Joint Force Logistic Component HQ and (b) the establishment of a regular ambulance regiment; and if he will make a statement. [69099]

Mr. Ingram: The Joint Force Logistic Component Headquarters is a capability that is formed as required. It is based on the core capability of a Logistic Brigade Headquarters enhanced by a Logistics Brigade Signal Squadron, other signals assets and augmentation from the other two Services. The first Joint Force Logistic Component HQ was able to be formed from April 2000, and we will have the capability to form a second such HQ from April 2003.

The capability which would have been provided by a regular Ambulance Regiment has been created within the Strategic Defence Review endorsed Medical Regiment Concept. This has been achieved by the creation of evacuation squadrons in each of the four medical regiments formed. These evacuation squadrons were fully formed by March 2001. Embedding the evacuation capability within each regiment, rather than creating a discrete capability, has enhanced our ability to deliver the ambulance and evacuation function.

Frigate and Destroyer Fleet

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the present size is of the United Kingdom frigate and destroyer fleet; and if he will make a statement. [69101]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 17 June 2002, Official Report, columns 36–37W, to the hon. Member for Upminster (Angela Watkinson).

Forces Relocation

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the first Army unit was permanently relocated from Germany after 1997; and if he will make a statement. [69102]

Mr. Ingram: The most recent troop reduction in Germany occurred as a result of the Strategic Defence Review. One Royal Tank Regiment was the first unit under this initiative to relocate back to the UK, in April 1999.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the complete withdrawal of the RAF from Germany was completed; and if he will make a statement. [69100]

Mr. Ingram: The closure of RAF Bruggen, the RAF's last Main Operating Base in Germany, and its handover to the British Army was completed on 4 February 2002. The withdrawal of the RAF rear party from the station was undertaken on 28 February 2002. A number of RAF detachments remain in Germany.

Army Homes (Colchester)

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many dwellings in Colchester were sold to Annington Homes; when the sale took place; how many dwellings are available for married soldiers; how many have been demolished; and how many have been sold; [68854]

(2) how many houses in the private sector are rented in Colchester to accommodate (a) soldiers and (b) married families; [68856]

(3) what the average price per dwelling in Colchester sold by the Ministry of Defence to Annington Homes was; and what total sum was received for the dwellings in Colchester; [68855]

(4) if the Ministry of Defence will receive a share of the proceeds of former army houses at Colchester sold by Annington Homes. [68853]

Dr. Moonie: In 1996 most service families' accommodation in England and Wales was sold to Annington Homes Ltd. (AHL) under a sale and leaseback agreement. The sale raised £1.6 billion for the Exchequer, of which just under £35 million (about £25,000 per dwelling) related to some 1,400 family quarters in the Colchester area.

During 1996 and subsequently, a total of 182 houses in the Colchester area have been released to AHL for disposal. The rest (about 1,200) are still available for the Ministry of Defence to house service families. Of those released to AHL for disposal, some have been sold by the company, none have been demolished, but about 100 (of non-traditional construction) are awaiting development.

As part of the Sale of Agreement, a profit share scheme is in place under which the Exchequer receives a part of any profit AHL make from the properties released to them.

In the Colchester area, and separately from the arrangement with AHL, MOD rents 107 properties from the private sector, of which 106 accommodate single service personnel and one houses a service family.

War Pensions

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place current guidelines issued to the war pensions appeals tribunal in the Library. [68191]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I have been asked to reply.

The president of the pensions appeal tribunals issues practice directions which are distributed to all tribunal members. I have arranged for copies of the practice directions to be placed in the Library.

The Pensions Appeal Tribunals (England and Wales) Rules 1980 (as amended) detail the practice and procedure to be followed by the tribunals.

Sheik Hamad bin Jassim Jaber al-Thani

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date his Department was informed of payments made by (a) BAE Systems and (b) British Aerospace to His Excellency Sheik Hamad bin Jassim Jaber al-Thani; and if he will make a statement. [61106]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 13 June 2002]: The first reference we have been able to trace in our records is a report in 1998 which stated that Shaik Hamad bin Jassim Jaber al-Thani had received commissions in connection with a defence equipment package signed in 1996 (for which BAe were the lead contractor).

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CDC Capital Partners

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what representations have been made to her by UK non-Governmental organisations regarding the change in investment policy at CDC Capital Partners; [67410]

(2) what representations have been made to her Department since 1997 by non-commonwealth non-Governmental organisations regarding the change in CDC Capital Partners' investment policy; [67406]

(3) what representations have been made to her Department since 1997 by non-United Kingdom Commonwealth non-governmental organisations regarding the change in CDC Capital Partners investment policy; [67411]

(4) what representations her Department has received from (a) the Commonwealth and (b) other nations regarding CDC Capital Partners' investment policy since 1997. [67351]

Clare Short: None.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what reserved rights she would retain after the sale of the majority holding in CDC Capital Partners. [67396]

Clare Short: I hold a number of reserved rights under the special share, which is referred to in Section 18 of the Commonwealth Development Corporation Act 1999. These are set out in Article 11 of the Articles of Association of CDC Group plc. They were designed to continue beyond sale of a majority holding in CDC to private sector investors. A copy of the Articles of Association has been placed in the Library of the House.

(20) if she will list the monthly operating expenses of each CDC Capital Partners office in each year since 1997; [67391]

(21) if she will list, by office, CDC Capital Partners' expenditure on office equipment since 1997; [67383]

(22) if she will list each CDC Capital Partners' employment grade; and if she will list the (a) total number of persons employed at each CDC Capital Partners' office and (b) percentage of this figure that is represented by (i) women and (ii) ethnic minorities. [67399]

Clare Short: This information is not held by the Government. CDC will write to the hon. Member with as much information as CDC can provide without disproportionate cost. Copies of the reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Appeal Tribunals

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he will publish the second annual report of the president of appeal tribunals on the standards of decision-making coming before tribunals. [70046]

Maria Eagle: The second report by the president of appeal tribunals is published today and has been placed in the Library. Of those cases where the appeal tribunal overturned or amended the decision the main reasons given were because new evidence was produced at the hearing, the presence of the appellant at the hearing shed new light on the existing evidence or they took a different view of the same evidence.

The president has highlighted some areas where improvements have been made following his first annual report. Some examples of these are; more obvious use of the reconsideration process before cases reach the tribunal, improved standards of decision-making and the use of the medical evidence in disability living allowance cases and a reduction in the number of medical reports under-estimating the severity of disability.

The president has suggested that the agencies should concentrate on engaging appellants fully during the dispute period and encourage them to provide additional evidence earlier. This could lead to problems being resolved without the need to go to an appeal tribunal. I welcome the president's report, which provides an independent view of the standard of Secretary of State decision-making in cases coming to the appeal tribunal.

Industrial Accidents (Compensation)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what measures he has in place to ensure that those who suffer from industrial accidents are fully compensated for their injuries. [55334]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 13 May 2002]: With certain prescribed exceptions, the Employers' Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969 (ELCI) requires all employers carrying on business in the United Kingdom to insure their liability to their employees for bodily injury or disease sustained in the course of their employment in Great Britain. There is currently a penalty of up to £2,500 for failure to insure on any day.

Employers are required to display copies of certificates of employers' liability compulsory insurance while the underlying policy is in force. There is currently a penalty of up to £1,000 for failure to display a certificate. The Health and Safety Executive is responsible for enforcing ELCI.

Industrial injuries disablement benefit is payable on a no fault basis to employed earners who have sustained an industrial accident or prescribed disease. It is paid according to the degree of disablement and takes no account of factors other than the physical or mental condition of the injured person. It can be paid whether or not the person continues to work and is not taxable.

In each case, advice on the assessment of disablement and its likely duration is given by doctors specially trained in industrial injuries disablement matters. Benefit is normally paid only in respect of disablement of 14 per cent. or more.

Ministerial Salaries

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the annual cost was of ministerial salaries in his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 2001–02. [60936]

Mr. McCartney: The level of ministerial salaries are recommended by the Senior Salaries Review Body and are already a matter of public record.

The Department for Work and Pensions was created in April 2001. The information given for 1997 relates to the Department of Social Security. From May 1997 there was one Cabinet Minister (Commons), one Minister of State (Commons), two Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State (Commons) and one Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Lords).

From June 2001, there was one Cabinet Minister (Commons), two Ministers of State (Commons), two Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State (Commons) and one Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (Lords).

Jobseekers (Interview Costs)

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the financial support available to jobseekers for the cost of travelling to interviews. [64269]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: We recognise that it can sometimes be difficult for unemployed people to meet the cost of travelling to job interviews. The travel to interview scheme, which is available from the first day of unemployment, encourages people to widen their job search by helping with travelling costs to attend interviews outside their usual travel to work area. From June this year we have widened the scope of the scheme to give personal advisers the discretion to make payments for travel to local interviews where the costs exceed £4.

Additional help can also be provided through the Adviser Discretion Fund which gives New Deal personal advisers the opportunity to make available up to £300 for anything that will help a jobseeker obtain a job, or if offered a job, to accept that job. This can include help with the costs of travel to interviews.

Employment Zones are also helping long-term unemployed people in the most deprived areas get and keep work. Employment Zones are about meeting the needs of individuals. They help rebuild the confidence of participants and overcome the barriers to work such as debt, transport and housing problems. Help can be provided through Employment Zones with the cost of travelling to interviews.

Our Action Teams for Jobs, which focus on small areas with particular problems of labour market disadvantage, offer tailored help to enable people overcome barriers to employment. This can include financial assistance to help them secure and retain employment, such as help with the cost of attending job interviews. In addition, we introduced the Transport Projects Fund in April which provides an additional £5 million for Action Teams to address the particular transport difficulties faced by some unemployed people seeking to enter the labour market.

Jobcentre Plus

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he expects the roll-out of Jobcentre Plus to be fully implemented; and when this will be implemented in Northamptonshire. [61486]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Our current plans are to extend the integrated Jobcentre Plus offices progressively to cover the whole of Great Britain over the next four years, starting with a further 225 offices in 2002–03. A firm date for rolling out the new service in Northamptonshire as part of this programme has yet to be determined.

Better Government for Older People

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people have been employed in Better Government for Older People over the last five years. [64526]

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many older people are involved in Better Government for Older People, broken down by nation and region; [64840]

(2) what the procedure is for electing people to the Regional Committees of Better Government for Older People; [64841]

(3) how many people took part in the most recent election to the Regional Committees of Better Government for Older People; [64842]

(4) what the relationship is between Better Government for Older People and (a) Scotland's Older People Advisory Group and (b) the National Pensioners' Convention. [64844]

Mr. McCartney: These are matters for Better Government for Older People (BGOP) which is a non-Government organisation.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) pursuant to the answer of 18 March 2002, Official Report, column 157W, on carers, what information is collected on the removal of invalid care allowance from carers when the adult for whom they care has their disability living allowance or attendance allowance removed as a consequence of hospitalisation; [66585]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 18 March 2002, Official Report, column 157W, on disability living allowance, what data his Department hold on the number of disabled adults who have been affected by (a) the rules under which DLA is withdrawn after a person has been in hospital for four weeks and (b) the cumulative effect of short periods of hospitalisation in each of the last three years; [66589]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 18 March 2002, Official Report, column 157W, on pensioners (hospital care), what data his Department hold on the number of pensioners who have been affected by (a) the rules under which attendance allowance is withdrawn after a person has been in hospital for four weeks and (b) the cumulative effect of short hospital stays in each of the last three years. [66593]

Maria Eagle: Information is not collected (a) on the number of cases where payments of invalid care allowance to carers cease because the recipient of attendance allowance or disability living allowance for whom they provide care is in hospital, or (b) on the annual number of cases where payments of attendance allowance or disability living allowance are suspended because the recipient is in hospital. Information is collected quarterly on the number of people whose attendance allowance or disability living allowance payments are suspended because they are in hospital. The information as at 30 November in each of the last three years is in the table.

Numbers of attendance allowance and disability living allowance cases in payment at 30 November of each year in the period 1999 to 2001, and numbers of cases in which payments are recorded as suspended because the recipient is in hospital

	1999	2000	2001
Attendance allowance
Cases in payment	1,256,800	1,291,300	1,295,400
Cases with payment suspended because recipient in hospital	12,100	13,500	15,600
Disability living allowance
Cases in payment	2,098,300	2,197,700	2,298,000
Cases with payment suspended because recipient in hospital	9,700	10,200	11,500

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 100.

2. Figures for suspensions refer only to cases where the reason is known.

3. All AA recipients are aged 65 or over.

Pensioners

Mr. Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the value of the assets, including pension funds, which (a) a man aged 65 and (b) a woman aged 60 years would need in order to receive a higher income than if they had no such assets. [67226]

Mr. McCartney: The value of assets needed for the individuals described will depend upon the level of entitlement to state pension benefits that have been built up over the individuals working lives.

For illustrative purposes, the following estimates can be made for a man aged 65 who has built up rights to a full single basic state pension but has no other sources of income. At current market rates assets of about £14,000 or more are currently needed to purchase an annuity that generates a higher income level than if he had no such assets. The equivalent figure for a woman aged 60 is approximately £17,000. In practice, it is common for someone with full basic state pension entitlement to also have additional income from SERPS but this has been excluded in the above illustration.

From October 2003, the introduction of the pension credit will mean that these levels will fall to zero. Any individual with a full basic state pension who has saved for their retirement will have a higher income from doing so, regardless of the amount of this saving.

These estimates use current 2002–03 single rates for the basic state pension and minimum income guarantee, and the most favourable annuity rates quoted by The Annuity Bureau as at 4 July 2002 for an index-linked annuity with spouses benefits. It is assumed that the full pension pot is annuitised and no tax-free lump sum is taken.

Disabled People (Employment Opportunities)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a further statement on progress with the job preparation and retention pilots for disabled people. [67108]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 9 July 2002]: We will make an announcement in due course.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Throckmorton Asylum Centre

Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if the planning inspector leading the inquiry into the application to build an asylum seekers centre at Throckmorton may reach his conclusion only on planning issues; [68756]

(2) if it is his policy that the planning inspector's decision will be decisive in determining whether permission will be granted for the asylum seekers centre at Throckmorton in Worcestershire. [68755]

Mr. McNulty: The Home Office has not yet served a Notice of Proposed Development on Wychavon district council. If it does, and the council objects, the dispute will be referred to the Deputy Prime Minister, who may decide to hold a non-statutory public inquiry. The planning inspector holding any such inquiry would treat it as if it were into an appeal against refusal of planning permission. Every relevant planning issue, whether of local or national importance, which is a material consideration in assessing the proposal, would be taken into account. The inspector would weigh all the arguments and evidence presented by the parties before reaching his conclusions and recommendations, including the likely effect of the proposed development on the surrounding area, and taking into account the views of the local planning authority and local residents.

The inspector would be making a report to the Deputy Prime Minister, not making the determination himself. It would be for the Deputy Prime Minister to determine the dispute between the developing Department and the local planning authority taking into account the inspector's report and all other material considerations.

Members of Parliament (Personal Data)

Mr. Forth: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what information is held by his Department on each hon. Member in relation to (a) personal relationships, both current and past, (b) financial status and dealings, (c) connections with companies and interest groups, (d) connections with Governments and (e) published works; and what was held in January 2002. [61818]

Mr. Leslie: Ministers and officials in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister have access to published reference sources, as well as the information about hon. Members made publicly available by the House authorities, for the purpose of parliamentary business.

Social Housing Allocation

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the incentives there are in the system of allocation for social housing for young people to have children at an early age; and if he will make a statement. [62399]

Mr. McNulty: S167 of the Housing Act 1996 provides that local housing authorities must give reasonable preference in the allocation of social housing to families with dependent children, and to households consisting of or including someone who is expecting a child. Under S16 of the Homelessness Act 2002, which will come into effect early next year, the "reasonable preference categories" are revised to reflect housing need more clearly in their formulation.

The Government's Teenage Pregnancy Strategy aims to halve the under 18 conception rate by 2010 and increase the participation of teenage parents in education and employment. Early signs of the strategy's impact are encouraging with figures for 2000 showing a 6.2 per cent. reduction from 1998 in both under-18 and under-16 conception rates. The percentage of teenage parents in education or employment has increased from 17 per cent. in 1996 to 29 per cent. in 2001.

Our strategy also sets the aim that all lone parents under 18, who cannot live with their parents or partner, should be provided with suitable accommodation with support by 2003. To date the Housing Corporation has approved funding for over 1,500 new units of supported accommodation for young parents. Supported housing offers young parents adult and peer support to help prepare them for independent living and facilitate their return to education or employment.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what plans he has to take account of the costs of council tax collection within the review of the local government finance system; [67828]

(2) what plans he has to take account of the costs associated with homelessness within the review of the local government finance system; [67812]

(3) what plans he has to take account of the costs associated with visitors in the allocation of formula grant to each local authority; [67824]

(4) what estimate he has made of the financial effects of the removal of the density indicator within the environmental, protective and cultural services formula grant, broken down by local authority; [67826]

(5) what plans he has to take account of the costs associated with services to non-residents in the allocation of formula grant to each local authority; [67827]

(6) if he will make a statement on the impact of his proposed changes to the environmental, protective and cultural services block within the local authority formula grant on London. [67717]

Mr. Leslie: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government launched a consultation on options for the reform of the local government finance system. This included authority-by-authority detailed exemplification of options for the Environmental, Protective and Cultural Services block, to which all these questions relate. No decisions have yet been taken and we welcome representations from all interested parties.

Housing Corporation

Ms Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how he plans to ensure that in (a) the financial year 2003–04 and (b) future years the Housing Corporation investment programme for London reflects housing need. [67496]

Mr. McNulty: The Housing Corporation's National Investment Strategy sets out the national objectives for the Approved Development Programme and the national targets. The Corporation also produces a London Investment Strategy which contains priorities for investment in that region. In addition, the Government office for London and the Housing Corporation's London office produce a London Housing Statement working closely with local and regional stakeholders including local authorities and housing associations. The statement highlights key housing issues and pressures and helps to identify regional priorities.

Ms Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the criteria by which the recent additional grant to the Housing Corporation Draft Programme in London will be allocated; and what steps he will take to ensure that those areas with the most acute levels of housing need and homelessness derive the maximum amount of additional assistance. [67495]

Mr. McNulty: The regional cash limit for London for 2002–03 was increased in line with priorities set out in the Housing Corporation's Regional Investment Strategy. Of the programme: 60 per cent. is targeted on schemes to increase the supply of affordable housing; 20 per cent. is going to the London Housing Partnership supply initiative which is specifically focused on homeless families; 15 per cent. to support regeneration programmes which have a significant housing element; and 5 per cent. to projects that demonstrate innovation, address pan-London issues or sub-regional supported housing schemes.

Ms Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to ensure that in financial year 2003–04 the London boroughs are consulted about the Housing Corporation investment programme. [67497]

Mr. McNulty: When drawing up the Regional Housing Statement and the Regional Investment Strategy, the Housing Corporation's London office consults all the London boroughs through an Officers' Working Group. The Housing Corporation also consults the association of London Housing Directors, and meets a representative group of Association of London Members as a matter of routine.

Affordable Housing

Ms Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what plans he has to ensure that (a) the development of affordable housing on major regeneration sites in London is economically sustainable and (b) households will choose to move to such developments; [67500]

(2) what plans he has to ensure that local authorities in London are consulted in relation to proposals for the development of affordable housing on major regeneration sites. [67499]

Mr. McNulty: The Government see the provision of new affordable housing to meet the needs of homeless households and key workers in London as a key priority for the capital. For this reason we have increased the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme for 2002–03 to enable more affordable homes for rent and low-cost home ownership to be built. We are also keen to ensure that new affordable housing is developed cost-effectively so as to maximise the contribution that funding can make. At the same time we remain aware of the need to take into account local housing needs and priorities to meet the demand at local level and create sustainable communities in places where people will want to live.

Investment in affordable housing on major regeneration sites in London is an issue being addressed as part of the on-going work on the preparation of the 2002 edition of the London Housing Statement which is due for publication in a few weeks time. The Government office for London is continuing to work closely with the Housing Corporation and representatives of the London boroughs to ensure that all parties are adequately consulted before final investment decisions are made.

Planning

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to implement the proposals on planning tariffs set out in the Planning Green Paper; and if he will make a statement. [67443]

Mr. McNulty: The Government's consultation paper "Reforming Planning Obligations: delivering a fundamental change", published in December 2001, proposed the introduction of a tariff-based approach to planning obligations. We received over 500 responses, the majority of which welcomed our proposals. Ministers are considering policy options and there will be a policy statement in due course.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what recent representations he has received from groups interested in housing development and conservation; what the conclusions from those meetings were; and if he will make a statement. [68540]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has received representations from a number of local and national groups interested in housing development and conservation. These groups include the RSPB, CPRE, FoE, WWF and Green Alliance. The representations have principally concerned our proposals to reform the planning system but have underlined the importance of planning to meet housing needs in the most sustainable way practicable. This is entirely consistent with our planning policies for housing.

Special Advisers

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he last met the Government's special adviser on urban policy; and if he will make a statement. [67449]

Mr. McNulty: The Government have no special adviser specifically for urban policy. However, I assume the hon. Member is referring to Lord Rogers of Riverside, who chaired the Urban Task Force which reported in June 1999. The Deputy Prime Minister is due to meet Lord Rogers this week to discuss urban policy issues and how the Government can help deliver a lasting urban renaissance.

Young Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps he is taking to increase the supply of independent housing available to young disabled people. [67109]

Mr. McNulty: Local housing authorities have a responsibility to produce a housing strategy which sets out plans to address the range of housing needs in their area. This includes all groups with special needs where the strategy must link into the provision of associated support services. Decisions on how these should be addressed are taken locally on the basis of the assessment of the nature and scale of the different housing needs.

The Housing Corporation through the Approved Development Programme (ADP) and Supported Housing Management Grant (SHMG) provide specially adapted housing and support for the disabled. The Housing Corporation through its National Investment Strategy sets out the priorities against which registered social landlords should bid for resources for both ADP and SHMG. Included in these priorities are supported housing for people with physical disabilities. The ADP is set to rise to £1.2 billion in 2003–04, almost double the planned expenditure for 2000–01.

Local housing authorities have a statutory duty to offer Disabled Facilities Grants (DFGs) to eligible applicants who require adaptations to help them live independently in their own homes. The grant is available to home owners and tenants in both the private and social rented sector. It is subject to a means test. The Government meet 60 per cent. of the total local authority expenditure incurred on DFGs through the payment of specified capital grant. The budget for this grant for English authorities in 2002–03 is £88 million compared with £56 million in 1997–98, an increase of nearly 60 per cent.

Evictions

Ms Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many (a) council tenants and (b) RSL tenants were evicted for (i) rent arrears, (ii) anti-social behaviour and (iii) other reasons in each year from 1992–93 to 2001–02. [67683]

Mr. McNulty: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, ongoing discussions between the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Court Service are looking at ways of getting a more detailed breakdown of the data on possession order cases by social landlords.

Ms Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many families with children have been evicted in each of the last 10 years. [67857]

Mr. McNulty: The information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost

Planning Green Paper

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a list of the respondents to the planning Green Paper. [67651]

Mr. McNulty: A copy was placed in the Library on 27 May.

Local Government Boundaries

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will introduce legislation to reform local government terminology to make clear the difference between administrative boundaries and the historic boundaries of the traditional counties of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [67727]

Mr. Raynsford: The Government have no plans to introduce legislation for changes in terminology. The legislative agenda is already substantial and there are many other and pressing priorities in the Government's programme.

Social Exclusion

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much public expenditure went to each of the excluded neighbourhoods defined by the Social Exclusion Unit in the last 12 months; and what the average sum was. [67611]

Mr. McNulty: It is not currently possible to break down all public expenditure to a small area level such as the excluded neighbourhoods defined by the SEU. We recognise the importance of gathering this information on a national basis. We are designing mechanisms to do this and aim to take this forward through the Neighbourhood Statistics Initiative.

For the Neighbourhood Renewal programmes that are targeted on the 88 most deprived areas, the provisional outturn figure for expenditure in 2001–02 is £305.7 million. All of the £200 million provision of the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund has been issued as per Special Grant Report 78 made under Section 88a of the Local Government Finance Act 1988. On this basis the average sum spent by these programmes in each of the 88 deprived areas in 2001–02 was £3.47 million.

European Congress of Twinned Towns

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the 8th European Congress of Twinned Towns; what the nature of the United Kingdom representation was; what funding share fell to the United Kingdom; and if it is his policy to divest these meetings of a party political slant. [68337]

Mr. Leslie: UK representation at the 8th European Congress of Twinned Towns, held in Antwerp on 22–24 May 2002, included a cross party delegation from the Local Government Association's Local Government International Bureau, which has responsibility for arranging town twinning, and representatives of several local authorities. The Congress was co-funded by the European Commission, the City of Antwerp and by private sponsorship. In the UK, town twinning is a politically neutral activity and is supported on a cross party basis.

Disability Access

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps the Government are taking to improve disability access; and if he will make a statement. [68531]

Mr. McNulty: My officials, with the assistance of the Building Regulations Advisory Committee, have been preparing proposals for amendments to Part M of the Building Regulations relating to access for disabled people. I expect to make an announcement before the summer recess about publication of the proposals for public consultation.

Empty Properties

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the number of domestic properties in England left empty for (a) six to 12 months and (b) more than a year since 1997. [68329]

Mr. McNulty: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Data for local authority (LA), Registered Social Landlord (RSL) and 'other' private sector tenures is available and shown in the tables. Length of time 'other' public sector dwellings are vacant is not collected centrally.

Table 1: Number of LA vacant dwellings in England at 1 April

	All vacants	Vacant more than 6 months and less than 12 months	Vacant more than 12 months
2001	80,300	11,100	20,400

1998	29,300	4,100	4,800
1997	26,800	[1]—	[1]—

[1] Not applicable

Data for 'other' private sector vacant dwellings are not collected in exactly the same format as for LA and RSL dwellings. Only data on dwellings vacant for more than six to 12 months are collected (as opposed to data on those dwellings vacant for more than six, but less than 12 months).

Table 3: Number of 'other' private sector vacant dwellings in England at 1 April

Bed-and-breakfast Accommodation

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the numbers of homeless households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation. [68660]

Mr. McNulty: The latest figures indicate that there are nearly 12,000 households in bed-and-breakfast hotels (B&B) of which an estimated 6,500 are families with children.

In March this year, a £35 million programme was launched to help local authorities ensure that by March 2004 no homeless family with children are in B&B other than in an emergency, and even then for no more than six weeks. On 17 June £25 million was allocated to the 42 local authorities with the highest number of families with children in B&B hotels to help them meet the March 2004 commitment. We will now be working with the next 40 highest using authorities to see how we can help them reduce B&B hotel numbers.

Authorities have also been sent a 10-point check list of good practice outlining the key 'building blocks' in reducing B&B use. Regional seminars have been held and examples of good practice have been shared through a newsletter and via the ODPM website at: www.housing.odpm.gov.uk/bbu/news/pdf/news0302.pdf.

In addition, all local authorities will benefit from recent changes to housing benefit subsidy levels, worth an estimated £10 million, which provide an incentive to lease private sector homes as a better quality alternative to B&Bs.

New Homes

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many homes have been newly built in each of the last five years, broken down by region. [68539]

Mr. McNulty: The numbers of homes newly built in each of the last five years, broken down by region, are shown in the table.

Social Housing

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list for each English housing authority the level of (a) investment in new council housing and (b) public financial support through the Housing Corporation for the last five years. [68617]

Mr. McNulty: The table provides figures for total expenditure on new council housing and funding provided through the Housing Corporation in England. I am arranging for a table setting out the figures for individual local authorities to be placed in the Library.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Class Sizes

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will list the local education authorities in which (a) primary and (b) secondary school class sizes have risen since 1 May 1997, ranking these from largest to smallest increase in class sizes; and if she will make a statement. [66275]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 4 July 2002]: The available information is shown in the table. The change in average class size is not readily available for those local education authorities that underwent local Government reorganisation in 1997 and 1998. The table is therefore shown in two parts: the list for local education authorities which are unaffected by local Government reorganisation; and the second for those that are.

A. Local education authorities unaffected by local government reorganisation ranked in order by the increase in the average class size[1] in maintained primary and secondary schools in England

Infant Class Sizes (South Tyneside)

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average infant class size in South Tyneside was in each year since 1997; what the average sizes were in England in those years; and how many infants there were in classes in South Tyneside in each of these years. [67046]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The information requested is shown in the table.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement on the availability of transition plans to young people over 14 with a statement of special educational needs with particular reference to the obligations and compliance of local education authorities. [67110]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 9 July 2002]: The Education (Special Educational Needs) (England) (Consolidation) Regulations 2001 make provision for all young people over 14 with statements of special educational needs to have a transition plan. Head teachers are responsible for drawing up a transition plan following the year 9 annual review of a young person's statement where he or she is in school and submitting this to the local education authority. Where the young person attends either a non-maintained special school or an independent school or does not attend school the local education authority is responsible for preparing the transition plan.

Figures on the numbers of young people with statements in year 9 onwards who have transition plans are not held centrally. The Department is aware of the importance of securing successful transitions for this group of young people and has commissioned a longitudinal study of 'Post-16 Transitions of Pupils with Special Educational Needs'. Its findings will inform policy development.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) if it is her policy that parents of children with severe learning difficulties may choose whether to send their children to special schools or be integrated in mainstream schools; [69204]

(2) if it is her policy to allow parents of children with complex and severe special needs to choose whether to send their children to special schools or be integrated in mainstream schools. [69205]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Children with special educational needs must be educated in a mainstream school unless that is incompatible with the wishes of the child's parents, or the provision of efficient education of other children. Where a child has a statement, and the parents do not wish the child to be educated in a mainstream school, then the local education authority may educate the child in a special school. The local education authority must name the parents' preferred choice of school on the statement unless the school is unsuitable, or the child's inclusion would be incompatible with the efficient education of other children or the efficient use of resources.

Both mainstream and special schools have a role to play in the education of pupils with special educational needs, including those with severe and complex learning difficulties.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidance she issues to local education authorities regarding (a) the optimum size of special schools and (b) whether children with severe learning difficulties should be taught within such schools or in mainstream schools. [69201]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Secretary of State does not issue specific guidance to local education authorities on the optimum size of special schools. Children with special educational needs must be educated in a mainstream school unless that is incompatible with the wishes of the child's parents, or the provision of efficient education of other children. Where a child has a statement, and the parents do not wish the child to be educated in a mainstream school, then the local education authority may educate the child in a special school. The local education authority must name the parents' preferred choice of school on the statement unless the school is unsuitable, or the child's inclusion would be incompatible with the efficient education of other children or the efficient use of resources.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what information she collates on the proportion of pupils of ethnic minority heritage selected to attend grammar schools in (a) Kent, (b) Buckinghamshire, (c) Bexley, (d) Wiltshire, (e) Torbay, (f) Lancashire and (g) Birmingham, compared with the proportions of those groups in the appropriate age cohort. [67188]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 5 July 2002]: The available information is collected through the Annual Schools' Census and records the ethnic background of pupils of compulsory school age and above in schools in England in January each year. The ethnic background of pupils in all maintained secondary schools is provided in the table as a proxy for the proportions in the general population.

School Playing Fields

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what her Department's policy is on the sale of school playing fields. [67227]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Department has a presumption against the need to change the current pattern of playing field provision at schools. We are committed to funding schools and local education authorities so they are no longer forced to sell school playing fields to pay for school repairs. We have provided over £7 billion over the last five years for capital investment in schools and are making £6.5 billion available over the next two years for investment in school buildings.

Before October 1998, there was nothing to prevent a local authority selling a school playing field if it wanted to. To protect school playing fields from such indiscriminate disposal, we introduced legislation on 1 October 1998 that requires local authorities to obtain the Secretary of State's consent before they can dispose, or change the use, of any school playing field or any part of a school playing field that has been used by schools in the last ten years.

Applications to dispose, or change the use, of school playing fields are assessed against the following criteria:

a. Schools' needs: that playing field provision and curriculum requirements at the school making the disposal, and at other schools in the local area, will be met;

b. Community needs: that community use of a school's playing fields is taken into account, with alternative facilities made available if necessary;

c. Finance: that any sale proceeds are re-invested to provide new or improved sports facilities at schools, or are used to help to raise standards by providing better educational facilities.

Only those applications that meet the criteria are approved. All applications made since July 2001 have been scrutinised by the independent School Playing Fields Advisory Panel to make sure that they conform to the published criteria. The panel comprises representatives from the National Playing Fields Association, the Central Council of Physical Recreation, the education organisation Learning through Landscapes, the National Association of Head Teachers and the Local Government Association.

School Sponsorship

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when the rules governing school sponsorship were last reviewed. [67338]

Mr. Miliband: The rules governing specialist school sponsorship were last reviewed in May this year. As a result, we made one significant change to the criteria by reducing the amount of sponsorship required by small mainstream schools (defined as those with under 500 pupils on roll) to £100 per pupil, subject to a minimum of £20,000, rising to £50,000 for a school with 500 pupils.

Specialist Schools

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills for what reason schools cannot count funds raised by the school in their bids for specialist school status. [67477]

Mr. Miliband: The guiding principles governing the eligibility of specialist school sponsorship are that it must be raised for the purpose of the application and be from a private sector source. Sponsorship from privately sourced school foundations and from parent teacher associations is acceptable. Where the school raises money by use of a public asset, such as the school's own premises, the funds are not eligible.

School Safety Surfaces

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the advice on impact absorbing surfaces contained in Building Bulletin 85 on school premises; if she will make a statement on the extent to which reprocessed scrap tyres have been used for safety surfaces in schools; and what plans she has to increase such use. [67681]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Department for Education and Skills does not have the statistics required to make an assessment of reprocessed scrap tyre usage in schools. It is for the individual local authorities and school governors to apply the guidance on good practice in the way they consider most appropriate. The DfES has no plans to recommend an increase in the use of reprocessed scrap tyres in the future.

School Building Repairs

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what measures are being taken to ensure that the additional funds provided to local education authorities secure a significant reduction in the backlog on school building repairs identified in the 2001 Asset Management Plan; [67807]

(2) when she will set a timetable for the elimination of the backlog on repairs to the school building stock; [67808]

(3) what steps she has taken to monitor annual progress towards the delivery of (a) new schools and (b) the refurbishment of schools as promised in the 2000 comprehensive spending review; [67809]

(4) what steps she is taking to ensure that the public funds allocated under the current comprehensive spending review are spent on (a) new schools and (b) refurbishment of schools. [67810]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The great bulk of capital funding for schools is now allocated by formula to schools and local education authorities for them to address the investment priorities of their school buildings. These priorities are decided locally in the context of each authority's Asset Management Plan. The Department appraises each plan to ensure that prioritisation is done in an open, rigorous and consultative process, based on a full survey of the building needs of all the schools in the authority, and reflecting Government priorities. This process increases the amount and quality of local decision making and reduces the bureaucratic burden of bid based and hypothecated funding.

While we wish to see the backlog of repairs eliminated, and provided £1.3 billion of New Deal for Schools capital grant funded from the windfall tax from 1998 until 2001 directly to address the most urgent needs, we also wish to move away from the patch and mend approach of the past to a strategic modernisation of our schools. Subsequent capital funding, such as the £6.5 billion being made available over the two years to 2003–04, is intended both to address repair needs and to take forward the modernisation of schools for the teaching and learning needs of the 21st century. Progress on each of these objectives will depend on the balance of local priorities in each local authority between repairs and modernisation needs.

To reduce the bureaucratic burden, the Department does not require detailed information on how formulaic capital funding is invested. We do, however, have more detailed information on how capital funding is used from bid based programmes, including the New Deal for Schools from the windfall tax, the Private Finance Initiative and the Targeted Capital Fund, as well as investment in schools in the voluntary aided sector. Asset Management Plan returns provide periodic information on needs and, from this year, also on major capital projects in each authority. We have recently conducted a sample survey of the use of major formulaic programmes, and are considering how this information could be extended with minimum bureaucracy to provide evidence from which a national picture can be extrapolated.

Teacher Retirement

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the policy is on setting a fixed age of retirement for teachers in adult education. [68114]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Adult education tutors are employed by the local authority, college or provider for whom they work. Their age of retirement is therefore a matter agreed between themselves and the employer. This means that the local authority, college or provider is able to retain tutors beyond the customary retirement age if there is a particular need or a shortage of expertise in a given area.

We have no plans to restrict this and fully support colleges and providers in being able to plan and manage flexibly to meet the needs of learners.

Adult Education Courses

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what her policy is on funding adult education courses which do not lead to a recognised qualification. [68115]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: In setting the remit for the Learning and Skills Council (LSC), the Government stressed that qualifications are very important and accreditation will continue to be appropriate for many courses. But we also want to see the LSC provide a wide range of opportunities including learning not leading to awards. The Government are increasing funding for adult education secured through local education authorities and now funded through the LSC. Nationally the budget is £167 million in 2002–03, an increase of 9 per cent. on the previous year.

Ring-fenced Grants

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what ring fenced grants were made available to local authorities in financial year 2001–02. [68290]

Mr. Miliband: The following table shows the Department's ring-fenced grants made available to local education authorities in 2001–02. These are specific grants ring-fenced for specific purpose or activities or special grants paid under section 88B of the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

	£000
Standards Fund	1,583,000
School Standards Grant	631,307
Education Budget Support Grant	52,394
Teachers Pay Grants	479,275
Nursery Education Grant	184,000
Education Maintenance Allowance	98,000
Childcare Grant	148,750
GM Transitional Grants	10,335
Education Action Zone Grant	62,615
Capital Grants	704,000

Note:
Figures are in cash terms.

The Government have simplified the operation of the Standards Fund, by far the largest specific grant for education. Since April 2001, schools have had more freedom to move funds between the different Standards Fund activities; separate auditing of the Standards Fund is no longer required; and the spending period for the Standards Fund was extended from 12 months to 17 months to give schools even more flexibility in planning expenditure. The School Standards Grant offers further freedom to schools.

Home Economics

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make it her policy to ensure that all schoolchildren at Key Stages I, II and III are taught (a) basic cooking skills and (b) good diet and nutrition; and if she will make a statement. [68344]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: All primary pupils have a statutory entitlement to food technology within the national curriculum. They learn practical food handling skills, including food hygiene, and are encouraged to develop positive attitudes to food. At Key Stage 3, the Government strongly encourage secondary schools to offer pupils the opportunity to study food technology, and 90 per cent. do so. Food, nutrition and healthy eating are also taught within science and personal, social and health education.

Schools (Financial Reserves

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what her Department's estimate is of the total financial reserves held by schools in the (a) last year for which figures are available and (b) preceding five years. [68516]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 10 July 2002]: The following table sets out the information requested, in respect of schools maintained by local education authorities in England.

Financial year	Aggregate balances at end of year (£ million)
2000–01	[1]1,041
1999–2000	723
1998–99	556
1997–98	507
1996–97	524
1995–96	581

[1] Provisional

The figures contained in the table have been derived from the outturn statements prepared by local education authorities under section 52 of the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 (and corresponding previous legislation), and represent surpluses net of deficits. The figures for 2000–01 and 1999–2000 include the balances held by former grant-maintained schools, which amounted in total to approximately £108 million and £92 million respectively. I am investigating the practicability of providing information on grant-maintained schools' aggregate balances for 1998–99 and previous years, and I will write to my right hon. Friend to advise him of the outcome.

Teacher Work Load

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proposals she has to decrease the work load of teachers. [68518]

Mr. Miliband: The School Teachers' Review Body recently published its report on teacher work load. A consultation on the principles contained in the report concluded on 3 July. The Government will issue a formal response to the report later this year. This is an important part of our more general drive to enable teachers to focus on the core professional elements of their job.

Teacher Retention

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what measures are in place to improve teacher retention rates. [68519]

Mr. Miliband: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Education and Skills set out our plans to transform the school work force in her speech of last November to the Social Market Foundation. These plans directly address the key issues that we know teachers are most concerned about—work load, bureaucracy, professional development and status. 30 Pathfinder schools are testing different approaches for making improvements, and we will use the lessons learned to help the whole school work force nationwide. The number of teachers in our schools has already increased by more than 20,000 since 1997, and the number of support staff by more than 70,000.

Classroom Support Staff

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many classroom support staff are employed; and what plans there are to increase the number. [68520]

Mr. Miliband: The provisional figure for full-time equivalent number of support staff in maintained schools in England in January 2002 is 213,012. This includes 103,624 teaching assistants, 49,050 administrative staff, 16,528 technicians and some 43,809 other staff. Plans for increasing this number will depend upon the spending review and decisions taken locally by schools.

Teacher Morale

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what measures she is taking to improve morale among teachers. [68521]

Mr. Miliband: Freeing teachers to concentrate on the core of their job and improving the status of the teaching profession more generally are central to our school work force reform agenda. The package of recommendations on work load made in a recent report by the School Teachers' Review Body reflects many of the issues raised by teachers themselves. A consultation on the principles contained in the report concluded on 3 July. The Government will issue a formal response to the report later this year.

New Teachers' Contract

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what consultations she will have on the proposed new contract for teachers. [68522]

Mr. Miliband: Consultation on the recommendations in the School Teachers' Review Body's report on teacher work loads came to an end on 3 July. The Department's consultation letter of 8 May said that my right. hon. Friend would consult again on practical measures as appropriate in the light of this initial consultation. For the time being the Department is evaluating the initial consultation responses. Further consultation is likely to take place in the early autumn.

Educational Maintenance Allowance (Scotland)

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether the educational maintenance allowance scheme applies in Scotland; and if she will make a statement. [69083]

Margaret Hodge: This is a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Graduate Teacher Programme

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many training places have been allocated in each county in England under the Graduate Teacher Programme in (a) this school year and (b) next school year. [68931]

Mr. Miliband: The information is not available in the form requested. The table shows total numbers of Graduate Teacher Programme places awarded in 2001–02 by Government office region and the numbers of places for 2002–03 that have been awarded to date. Figures for 2002–03 do not therefore include approximately 600 places that have still to be allocated.

Special Schools

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will list special schools with foundation school status which (a) were previously grant maintained and (b) have become foundation schools since grant maintained status was abolished. [69203]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: From the data available, the list of special schools with foundation school status is as follows:

	LEA number	Estab. number	School name
Lambeth	208	5950	Turney Primary and Secondary Special School
Lambeth	208	5952	Thurlow Park Special School
Lambeth	208	5951	Willowfield School
Bromley	305	5950	Glebe School
Hillingdon	312	5950	Chantry School
Kingston upon Thames	314	5950	Bedelsford School
Redbridge	317	5950	Little Heath School
Waltham Forest	320	5950	Whitefield Schools and Centre
Bedfordshire	820	5950	St. Margaret's Residential School
Bedfordshire	820	5951	St. John's School
Dorset	835	5950	Beaucroft Foundation School
Poole	836	5951	Montacute School
Dorset	835	5953	Westfield Technology College
Bournemouth	837	5952	The Bicknell School
Southend-on-Sea	882	5950	The St. Christopher School
Essex	881	5951	The Endeavour School
Leicester	856	5950	Emily Fortey School
Nottinghamshire	891	5950	Foxwood Foundation School

All of the above schools were previously grant maintained and all became foundation schools since grant maintained status was abolished.

Entry to Employment

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if she will make a statement about progress in introducing Entry to Employment provision. [69293]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: In making its recommendations to encourage greater take up of Modern Apprenticeships, Sir John Cassels' Modern Apprenticeship Advisory Committee proposed the establishment of pre-employment provision for those young people not immediately able to enter a Modern Apprenticeship or other employment. The Learning and Skills Council and the Department have been working together over recent months with other relevant interests to develop a more effective set of arrangements in work-based learning that will enable more young people to progress to higher learning opportunities. To this end a pathfinder Entry to Employment programme will be introduced in the following areas from this August:

Bedfordshire and Luton

Bristol

Central Birmingham and North Solihull

Derbyshire

Greater Manchester(Rochdale)

Oxfordshire

North Yorkshire

Nottinghamshire

Portsmouth and the South East Hampshire area

Tyne and Wear (Newcastle and Gateshead).

Current work-based learning provision beneath National Vocational Qualification at Level 2 will be subsumed within the new programme in which there will be a better focus on meeting individual aspiration and need. The Learning and Skills Council plan to evaluate the effectiveness of these pathfinders with a view to wider introduction of a new Entry to Employment programme by August 2003.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when the EU Advisory Committee on veterinary training is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66454]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

The last meeting of the Advisory Committee on Veterinary Training (ACVT) was held on 16 June 2000 and it was abolished later that year.

Representatives of the Scottish Executive have never been members of this committee. Representation was at UK level.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

United Arab Emirates

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by the embassy in the United Arab Emirates to contact lawyers on the embassy list on behalf of Mr. Clark since 20 February; and with what results. [64364]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 25 June 2002]: At the meeting with my noble Friend Baroness Amos on 20 February 2002, your constituent, Jason Clark, told us that his father was unable to find a lawyer to represent him. He understood that his father had tried, without success, all the lawyers on our embassy list.

Following the meeting, embassy staff spoke with a local law firm on our list on 5 March 2002. Firstly, they advised us that any local lawyer would require a substantial fee in advance, and secondly, if Mr. Michael Clark were to recommence legal action, his appeal for clemency might not be considered by the Abu Dhabi authorities while proceedings were on-going. They also had no record of Michael Clark getting in touch with them previously.

We advised Michael Clark accordingly. We also reminded him that our staff are not able to appoint a lawyer on behalf of a British national. However, if he wished to pursue a legal case, our offer to assist putting him in touch with a local lawyer remained. We also said that it would be helpful to us if he could list the local lawyers he had already tried.

This issue had been discussed previously with Michael Clark himself during a meeting at the embassy on 20 January. However, at that time, he did not want to pursue any legal action.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the estimated (a) level and (b) cost of energy use in his Department and associated agencies was in each year since 1997; what proportion of energy was generated from renewable sources; and if he will make a statement. [65951]

Mr. MacShane: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given him by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Rural Affairs, at the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs on 3 July 2002, Official Report, columns 384–86W.

UN Racism Summit

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people attended the UN Racism summit in Durban in September 2001, from (a) his Department and (b) other UK Government Departments; and what the total cost of the visit was. [66215]

Mr. MacShane: In addition to Foreign and Commonwealth Office Minister Baroness Amos and Home Office Minister Angela Eagle, 19 officials from UK Government Departments attended the UN World Conference Against Racism in Durban in September 2001 at an average cost of approximately £3,100.

10 of these officials were from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, seven were from the Home Office, one was from the Department for Education and Skills and one was from the Scottish Executive.

The Government publish on an annual basis details of all Ministers' visits overseas. Details of travel undertaken during the period 1 April 2001 to 31 March 2002 will be published in a similar form to previous years as soon as possible. Copies of the lists are available in the Libraries of the House.

Building Values

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the buildings owned by his Department and estimate the market value of each of them. [66944]

Mr. MacShane: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given him by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary on 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 339W.

The FCO Section of the Register can be found at: http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk/mediastore/otherfiles/218.pdf

Female Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the staff of his Department are women; and what the percentage was in June 1997. [66920]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office on 5 July 2002, Official Report, column 622W.

Buildings Insurance

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the cost of buildings insurance to his Department was (a) before and (b) after 11 September 2001. [66926]

Mr. MacShane: The Government's general policy on insurance, set out in Government Accounting, Chapter 30, notes that Government only needs to purchase insurance to protect the viability of its business, where the value of claims met would exceed the cost of insurance premiums. Commercial insurance of a building is acceptable in cases where (a) insurance is a condition of a lease; (b) the lessor will not accept a Government indemnity; (c) incurring the total cost of the accommodation in question, including the cost of the insurance, is more cost-effective than other accommodation options.

The FCO follows this policy.

Peacekeeping Forces

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the impact on British peacekeeping forces (a) in Bosnia, (b) in other regions in the world and (c) not yet deployed of the refusal by the US to extend its Bosnia mission by six months; and if he will make a statement. [66820]

Mr. MacShane: On 30 June the US vetoed the UNSC resolution renewing the UNMIBH/SFOR mandate for Bosnia. An extension was agreed until 3 July to allow more time to seek a solution. It did not prove possible by this deadline to find a solution acceptable to Security Council Members. The Council therefore decided to extend the mandate until 15 July, to allow for further efforts to resolve the issue.

The practical effect of this is that the UN police operation in Bosnia may continue for the time being. The basic operational capability of the SFOR peacekeeping mission is not affected. The legal base for this operation is also the Dayton peace agreement and the consent of the Bosnian parties. The US have made clear that they intend to maintain their contribution to SFOR.

Nepal

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will break down the £30 million package for the Nepalese Government according to (a) development aid and (b) military assistance. [67038]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK has a substantial bilateral development programme in Nepal through DFID. The programme for this financial year amounts to £22 million. Of this, approximately £4 million will be spent on support for rural livelihoods, £5 million on enhancing rural infrastructure, £5 million on health programmes and £8 million on Government reform.

We have also approved a further package of measures totalling approximately £6.5 million to be run jointly by FCO, DFID and MOD. These projects will assist in the development and implementation of aid projects in Nepal and reinforcing their military and police capacity.

In particular, this package will fund the creation of a Civil Society Joint Forum, support for a rural development programme, a programme to promote and monitor human rights, peace support and separate human rights training to the Royal Nepalese Army (RNA) and the provision of low-level logistical communications and transport equipment. The package will also cover the costs of infrastructure support to the UN Peacekeeping Centre in Panchkal.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to assist the enforcement of the Southern African Development Communities Programme for free and fair elections in Zimbabwe; if he will hold discussions on this issue; and if he will make a statement. [67122]

Mr. MacShane: There is no Southern African Development Community Programme for free and fair elections in Zimbabwe. However, the SADC parliamentary forum has published electoral norms and standards. These formed the basis by which the EU judged the presidential election in Zimbabwe on 9–11 March.

Our policy towards Zimbabwe is to work with concerned members of the international community, including SADC, to promote democracy, good governance, respect for human rights and the rule of law.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had on an unconditional asset freeze and travel ban on ZANU-PF members, unqualified by international treaty obligations. [67120]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend, the Foreign Secretary had discussions with EU colleagues resulting in a travel ban and asset freeze on key ZANU-PF leaders, but has not held subsequent discussions on an unconditional asset freeze and travel ban on ZANU-PF members unqualified by international treaty obligations.

My right hon. Friend, the Foreign Secretary continues to discuss with EU partners how to ensure maximum coercive pressure is placed on Mr. Mugabe and his allies.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 29 May from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Keith Marks. [67865]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary replied to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton on 8 July.

Secondments

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review the Civil Service Commissioners Recruitment Code in order to allow self-employed people to be considered for secondment positions at his office. [67735]

Mr. MacShane: Review of the Civil Service Commissioners' Recruitment Code is the sole responsibility of the Civil Service Commissioners.

I shall raise this matter with them and write to my hon. Friend in due course.

Weapons (Outer Space)

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's position on recent proposals by China and Russia to the conference on disarmament for the control of weapons in outer space. [68188]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK recognises the importance China and Russia attach to international consideration of proposals for further controls on weapons in space. We have signed and ratified the outer space treaty and other treaties that place important limits on military activity in space, including a prohibition on the deployment of weapons of mass destruction. Space-based assets play a prominent role in security and military operations. While we do not wish to see a general ban on the military use of outer space, we would be ready to engage in further discussions of issues relating to the prevention of an arms race in outer space at the conference on disarmament.

Future of Europe

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the cost to date has been of the national debate on the future of Europe broken down by type of expenditure. [68339]

Peter Hain: The debate on the future of Europe is just one part of the Government's wider commitment to making the European Union better understood by the British public. The budget for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's EU public diplomacy programme in 2002–03 is £260,000.

Gibraltar

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what end date has been set with Spain for the conclusion of talks on the future status of Gibraltar. [R] [68454]

Peter Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to my statement in Westminster Hall on 18 June 2002, Official Report, column 38WH.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Joyce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received in respect of abuses of human rights against the Banyamulenge population in the towns of Uvira and Bukauu in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [68447]

Mr. MacShane: None.

Greece

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role police forces from the United Kingdom are playing in the hunt for members of the November 17 terrorist group in Greece; and if he will make a statement. [68207]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A team of Metropolitan police officers travelled to Athens at the invitation of the Greek Government on 8 June 2000, the day the British Defence Attache, Stephen Saunders, was murdered by N17. British police officers have remained in Athens since that date, working closely with the Greek police on their investigation into Brigadier Saunders' assassination and providing advice and training for their Greek counterparts.

Following an explosion in Piraeus on 29 June and the subsequent detention of an N17 suspect, an additional team of Metropolitan police officers flew to Athens on 30 June and have remained there to assist the Greeks with their investigation.

The Government remain committed to bringing Brigadier Saunders' murderers to justice, and more widely to helping Greece fight the terrorism menace of N17. The Metropolitan police team will remain in Athens as long as its presence there is useful.

Afghanistan

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the UK's involvement in Afghanistan. [68541]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK is working alongside the Afghan Transitional Administration and international partners to support the Bonn political process. The UK is committed to achieving its campaign objectives of defeating international terrorism and breaking the link between Afghanistan and terrorism (the details of which were placed in the Library of the House on 16 October 2001).

The UK was the first western nation to reopen a diplomatic mission in Kabul on 19 November 2001.

The UK has given £60 million since 11 September to UN agencies, the Red Cross and other organisations towards the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Afghanistan. The UK has pledged a further £200 million from the UK over the next five years for both reconstruction and humanitarian assistance in Afghanistan. The UK was the first donor to contribute to the Afghanistan Reconstruction Trust Fund with £100 million. Development assistance focuses on five key areas: economic management; security sector reform (funded from the joint DFID/FCO/MOD Global Conflict Prevention Pool); humanitarian assistance; the development of sustainable livelihoods; and support to the political process.

The UK leads in co-ordinating international efforts and developing a strategy to assist the Afghan Government to tackle drugs.

The UK has developed close links with the new Transitional Administration and it's predecessor, the Interim Administration, through a number of high level visits including by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and other ministerial colleagues to Afghanistan, and President Karzai to the UK. The UK is contributing towards the future development of Afghan leaders through an expanded Chevening scholarship scheme.

After successfully leading ISAF in Afghanistan for the past six months, the UK handed over this role to Turkey on 20 June. The UK will continue to play a role in ISAF, with around 400 military personnel still committed. We remain committed to coalition activities in Afghanistan.

China (Human Rights)

Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was discussed at the Human Rights Dialogue held between the United Kingdom and China in May. [69927]

Mr. MacShane: The eighth round of the UK-China Human Rights Dialogue took place in Beijing on 15 May.

The theme of this round was the management of ethnic minority affairs. In this context, the talks in Beijing were preceded by a four-day field trip to Gansu Province where the UK delegation visited both Tibetan and Muslim minority groups. The UK delegation included a senior British expert on race relations.

At the main session of talks in Beijing, the UK delegation raised a wide range of human rights concerns including: Tibet and Xinjiang; freedom of expression, religion and association; Falun Gong; criminal justice issues, including the death penalty; North Korean refugees; co-operation with UN human rights mechanisms, including visits by special rapporteurs; the ratification of the ICECSR and ILO Conventions; and the blocking of the BBC World Service website and Mandarin Service. The UK delegation also discussed the programmes of practical co-operation between the UK and China to promote human rights and the rule of law.

They raised over 50 individual cases of concern.

Bahrain

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Bahrain authorities regarding the case of Richard Mechan, a constituent. [68761]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our embassy staff have not had any discussions with the Bahrain authorities regarding the case of Richard Mechan.

East Timor

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 21 June 2002, Official Report, column 634W on East Timor, whether the unverified reports of Indonesian involvement in East Timor ahead of the invasion of 1975 were obtained from (a) press reports, (b) British diplomats in Indonesia and (c) the Australian embassy in Jakarta. [69031]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As will be seen when the files are made available shortly, reports such as these the FCO received about Indonesian involvement in East Timor ahead of the invasion of 7 December 1975 came from all three sources referred to by the hon. Member.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer of 21 June 2002, Official Report, column 633W, on East Timor, whether the regular contacts between UK and Australian officials concerning the UN investigation of the deaths of British and other newsmen in East Timor have included discussion of the documentation published by Australia by the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade in September 2000 on those deaths. [69033]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Yes.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 21 June 2002, Official Report, column 634W, if he will raise with the Indonesian Government the problems that have been experienced by the UN investigation on obtaining access to possible witnesses in Indonesia concerning the deaths of Malcolm Rennie and others in East Timor. [69032]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Further to my answer of 21 June 2002, Official Report, column 634W, the Government have raised this case with the Indonesian authorities at every appropriate opportunity and will continue to do so.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from the former special representative of the UN Secretary-General in East Timor, Mr. Sergio Vieira de Mello, concerning the status of the UN investigation into the deaths of Malcolm Rennie and others; and if he will make a statement. [68933]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Before he left Dili in May, Sergio Vieira de Mello confirmed that responsibility for the Balibo investigation remains with the Serious Crimes Unit in East Timor. I have since written to his successor Kamalesh Sharma to ask him to ensure that our ambassador in Dili is informed of any further developments with the UN investigation.

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 21 June 2002, Official Report, column 634W, on East Timor, if the documents on non-intelligence aspects of Balibo case that he plans to release will include the full text of (a) the report to his department of mid-1975 by the Chancery Department of the British Embassy in Jakarta on East Timor's prospects and (b) the covering letter attached thereto sent by the then British Ambassador to Indonesia. [69030]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Yes. The full text of these documents will be released when the files are made available shortly.

SCOTLAND

Mental Health

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will make a statement on the training of mental health professionals in Scotland. [65243]

Mrs. McGuire: The standards to which NHS mental health professionals are trained are set by UK regulatory bodies. However, the training routes by which mental health professionals meet these standards are devolved and are a matter for the Scottish Executive.

Government Liabilities

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment she has made of the proportion of the rise in Government liabilities resulting from unfunded parts of Scottish (a) teachers and (b) NHS pension schemes in the last five years due to (i) wage inflation, (ii) longevity, (iii) extension of the rights of part-time workers and (iv) other factors; and if she will make a statement. [67026]

Mrs. McGuire: The regulation and administration of the teachers and NHS pension schemes in Scotland is a devolved matter for the Scottish Executive.

Consumer Credit Act

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations she has received from organisations in Scotland relating to reform of procedures relating to time orders under the Consumer Credit Act 1974. [67146]

Mrs. McGuire: Citizens Advice Scotland have sent the Scotland Office their briefing on this matter.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions she has had with the Department of Trade and Industry on possible reform of procedures relating to Time Orders under the Consumer Credit Act 1974. [67147]

Mrs. McGuire: The Department of Trade and Industry is currently reviewing the Consumer Credit Act 1974. The Scotland Office is working closely with the DTI in this area and the Government will consider whether it is necessary to make any changes to the provisions on Time Orders as part of the review.

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions she has had with the Scottish Executive on reform of procedures relating to time orders under the Consumer Credit Act 1974. [67145]

Mrs. McGuire: The Government will consider whether it is necessary to make any changes to the provisions on Time Orders as part of our review of the Consumer Credit Act. We will fully consult the Scottish Executive on this matter.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General how many (a) inspections and (b) thematic reviews have been undertaken in each CPS area since the inception of the HM Crown Prosecution Service Inspectorate; and how long each took on average. [59348]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 12 June 2002]: Between May 2000 and May 2002 the Inspectorate inspected 37 of the 42 CPS areas. Gloucestershire was also the subject of a short follow-up inspection. Reports have been published on all these 38 inspections. West Midlands was also the subject of a follow-up inspection confined to a small aspect of its work, namely discharged committals. The inspection was extended to include scrutiny of police performance as well. The Inspectorate was assisted in the follow-up by HM Inspectorate of Constabulary and HM Magistrates Courts Service Inspectorate. A report on this joint inspection is expected to be published in July 2002.

First inspections of the remaining five CPS areas are in progress and reports on all of them should be published by the end of September 2002.

The Inspectorate has carried out nine thematic reviews between January 1998 and May 2002. Each review involved visits to CPS branches or areas, varying in number between six and 16. Since April 1999 each of the 42 areas has featured in a thematic review on at least one occasion and several of them twice.

The length of an inspection of a CPS area will vary with the size of the area. The core inspection phases take 10 weeks for a smaller area and 20 weeks for a larger area, longer in the case of CPS London, the largest CPS area. Consultation with the area, agreeing the draft report and publishing the final version takes a further seven weeks or more after the completion of the field work.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what action has been taken to reduce the number of (a) judge-ordered and (b) judge-directed acquittals since 1999. [60203]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 10 June 2002]: In 1999, the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) introduced an adverse outcome analysis system. This provides CPS areas with a consistent means to identify reasons for adverse outcomes and also to allocate responsibility of any failure. This information is collated centrally.

For the last seven years, many areas of the CPS have had in place, with the police, a system of joint performance management that involves an appraisal of Crown Court acquittals, including those ordered and directed by the judge. This process provides areas with information showing particular trends and a means by which improvements can be made.

The Crown Prosecution Service produces quarterly summaries of unsuccessful case outcomes from information drawn from its various case tracking systems. This year the CPS and the police have begun to develop a joint case outcome analysis which builds on these two processes and will focus on avoidable case failure. Under this system, the reasons for judge ordered and judge directed acquittals in individual cases will be jointly assessed for individual training needs and other joint strategies for performance improvement.

The process will be supported by more sophisticated management information following the introduction of the CPS' Compass Case Management System due to roll out between April and December 2003.

The figures in the table show a fall in judge directed acquittals from 1,777 in 1999 to 1,471 last year, a reduction of 17.2 per cent. Over the same period judge ordered acquittals rose from 9,616 to 11,825, an increase of 23 per cent. Much of this increase can be attributed to recent changes in procedures. Since January 2001, the prosecution, unlike before, have been able to discontinue cases in the Crown Court. Although this is a prosecution decision, the current system records these as judge ordered acquittals.

Judge ordered and judge directed acquittals, 1999–2002

	Judge ordered acquittals	Judge directed acquittals
1999–2000
Number of acquittals	9,616	1,777
Percentage of completed cases	11.1	2.0
2000–01
Number of acquittals	10,145	1,755
Percentage of completed cases	12.3	2.1
2001–02
Number of acquittals	11,825	1,471
Percentage of completed cases	14.0	1.7

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Television (Subtitling)

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if it is her policy that the forthcoming communications legislation will have the power to ensure that video on demand and other forms of developing television are covered by the requirement to carry subtitles and other ancillary services. [66251]

Dr. Howells: No. The draft Communications Bill extends obligations for the provision of subtitling, sign language and audio-description services from terrestrial broadcasters to all licensed broadcasters. It is not proposed to extend them to other media unless such media were brought into the licensing regime by order, having met the criteria set out in the Bill for licensable television services. Under the Bill as drafted, true video on demand would not be licensable and, therefore, would not have legal obligations for subtitling any more than on-demand services provided over the internet. It would be for those who provide such services to decide whether to offer ancillary services for viewers with disabilities.

Football and Hockey

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many coaches Sport England funds for (a) football, (b) hockey, (c) men's football, (d) women's football, (e) men's hockey and (f) women's hockey. [66769]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Sport England funds the Football Foundation who provide funding for grassroots football.

Sport England does not directly fund any individuals except through the World Class programmes. Sport England put Exchequer funding into the coach education programme of hockey.

The figures for hockey are as follows:

11 full-time coaches or core consultant coaches;

9 national age group coaches;

43 sessional coaches.

No further breakdown can be provided.

Arts Council

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will provide a list of consultants and change managers employed by the Arts Council of England to assist the change process over the last 15 months; and if she will make a statement. [68346]

Dr. Howells: The following consultants and change managers were employed by the Arts Council of England to assist the change process over the last 15 months: Richard Pulford; Graham Devlin; Jeremy Brown; Carol Beckford Associates; People Initiatives; Thorpeworks Ltd; Lesley Payne; PwC; Anite Consulting; Network Marketing Group; Bacon Woodrow; Baker Tilley; Gregory Consulting Ltd; SGS Consulting; The Management Centre; Marketlink Research; Leonard Hull; The Change Partnership; Office for Public Management.

Historic Buildings (Public Access)

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 314, if there is an automatic access requirement when historic buildings are grant-aided by the Heritage Lottery Fund. [68301]

Dr. Howells: As part of the condition of grant, the Heritage Lottery Fund requires that grantees ensure that the general public has appropriate access to properties and that no one is unreasonably denied access.

Tobacco Sponsorship

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the impact of the removal of tobacco sponsorship on the sport of darts; and if she will make a statement. [68469]

Mr. Caborn: I am aware of the extent to which the British Darts Organisation is reliant on tobacco sponsorship and of the difficulties it faces in finding replacement sponsorship. I can assure my hon. Friend that the Government have looked very carefully at how best to achieve an end to the advertising and promotion of tobacco at sports events in a way that will minimise any damage to the sports concerned.

My Department has maintained a constant dialogue with the British Darts Organisation, partly through the Tobacco Sponsorship Task Force, and I fully understand its concern about the impact of a ban on British darts. As it remains the Government's intention, subject to consultation, to end tobacco sponsorship for non-global sports by the end of July 2003, it is vital that the British Darts Organisation continue its efforts to find replacement sponsorship.

I will, of course, continue my own efforts in helping the British Darts Organisation and all other sports that would be affected by the ban, to ensure that they do not suffer unduly during the transition away from tobacco sponsorship.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the future of the Tobacco Sponsorship Task Force. [68468]

Mr. Caborn: The Sponsorship Tobacco Task Force last met in October 1999. Following that meeting it was agreed that the task force had completed its initial work of identifying the needs of sports affected by the ban on tobacco sponsorship. At that time these sports believed that it was too soon to be looking to replace existing contracts, and that the situation should be reviewed before the expiry of current contracts.

Following the introduction of the Tobacco Advertising and Promotion Bill, and the proposed consultation on draft regulations, I wrote to the seven sports represented on the Tobacco Task Force on 14 April to ask for their thoughts on whether this might be an appropriate time for it to resume its work. So far, I have only received a response from the British Darts Organisation. Should the other six members respond favourably, the Government would be happy to reconvene the Tobacco Sponsorship Task Force.

Tourism

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assistance has been given to (a) the tourist industry and (b) coastal towns since the foot and mouth epidemic. [68239]

Dr. Howells: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport gave an additional £14.2 million to the British Tourist Authority in 2001–02. This funding was one element in the Government's package of recovery assistance that included rural business recovery funding, hardship business rate relief and interest-free deferral of tax payments. This year, the British Tourist Authority has launched a £40 million 'Million Visitor Campaign' aimed at promoting Britain in seven key international markets through a unique partnership between Government and the tourism industry.

Assistance for tourism in Scotland and Wales, outside the programmes of the British Tourist Authority, is a matter for the devolved Administrations. Coastal towns have continued to benefit from a range of Government programmes.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on tourism in the UK in 2002; and what assessment she has made of the prospects for tourism. [68238]

Dr. Howells: The British Tourist Authority has forecast that inbound tourism trips to the UK in 2002 will be up by 5 per cent. to 7 per cent., and inbound tourism expenditure up by 8 per cent. to 10 per cent., on 2001.

The English Tourism Council (ETC) has said that it expects tourism to return to pre-foot and mouth levels during 2002. A recent survey by the ETC has suggested that 59 per cent. of tourism businesses have already returned to normal business levels.

Domestic tourism forecasts in Scotland and Wales are matters for the devolved Administrations.

Music Industry

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress has been made in establishing an office in the USA to assist and promote the British music industry. [66389]

Dr. Howells: The Government share the UK music industry's assessment of the importance of the US market, and are working closely with the industry on ways of improving our export performance in it. We welcome the industry's innovative approach, and are considering very carefully the proposal, set out in its report of 28 May, to establish a music office in the US.

Hockey

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the role hockey will play in the plans to invest in school sports recently announced by the Prime Minister. [68111]

Mr. Caborn: Hockey, together with other sports played in schools and clubs, will benefit from initiatives to improve access to, and the quality of, PE, school sport and club links for five to 16-year-olds. These initiatives include: expanding the specialist sport college network and school sport co-ordinator programme; "Step into Sport", a leadership and volunteering programme and investment in school sport facilities with an element of community use. Sports clubs will be helped to develop stronger links with local schools and to attract more children and young people as members and volunteers.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) how many new astroturf hockey pitches have been opened in each of the last five years; [68113]

(2) how many (a) water based astroturf hockey pitches and (b) sand based astroturf hockey pitches there are in England. [68112]

Mr. Caborn: We have contacted Sport England to request the information required, and I will write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available, placing copies of my letter in the Libraries of both Houses.

NORTHERN IRELAND

District Policing Partnerships

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the timetable is for the establishment of district policing partnerships in each of the district command units in Northern Ireland. [66696]

Jane Kennedy: It is the Policing Board's intention to establish Direct Policing Partnerships (DPPs) as soon as practicable. Recruitment consultants have been appointed to facilitate the process leading to the appointment of independent members, and the Government will shortly issue a code of practice providing guidance as to how that process is to be managed. The final decision as to when positions are advertised rests with the Policing Board.

Paramilitary Symbols

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the role of the Terrorism Act 2000 in addressing the problems of (a) paramilitary flags, (b) paramilitary murals and (c) kerbstone painting; and if he will make a statement. [67223]

Jane Kennedy: Section 13 of the Terrorism Act makes it an offence to wear clothing or to wear, carry or display an article which arouses reasonable suspicion that the individual concerned is a member or supporter of a proscribed organisation. The Act makes no specific provision about flags, murals or kerbstone painting. Many of the flags, murals or kerbstone paintings in Northern Ireland are in any event of sectarian rather than paramilitary nature.

Police Service for Northern Ireland

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent progress has been made in improving ethnic minority representation in the Police Service for Northern Ireland. [67330]

Jane Kennedy: At 1 November 2001 there were 17 police officers in Northern Ireland from an ethnic minority background (0.16 per cent. of the total). Since recruitment to the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI) began on 4 November 2001, there has been one new recruit from an ethnic minority community background, bringing the total number within the PSNI to 18 (0.18 per cent.)

While the Report of the Independent Commission on Policing in Northern Ireland (the Patten Report) noted that ethnic minorities comprise less than 1 per cent. of the Northern Ireland population (para. 14.6), particular account is being taken of the need to increase ethnic minority representation in the new policing service. This is reflected through both the design and publication of recruitment advertisements, and the organisation of familiarisation days for members of the Chinese community.

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent progress has been made in improving the gender balance in the Police Service for Northern Ireland. [67336]

Jane Kennedy: At 1 November 2001 there were 931 (12.9 per cent.) female officers in the Northern Ireland police service. Since recruitment to the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI) began on 4 November 2001, this figure has risen to 1,012 (14.9 per cent.) female police officers (as at 1 June 2002).

Particular effort is being made to increase female representation in the PSNI, through targeted recruitment advertising and the organisation of familiarisation days for women. In addition, section 48 of the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 2000 requires the Policing Board to make an action plan for monitoring the number of women in the service and for increasing their numbers if they are under-represented.

Public Service Agreement Targets

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in reviewing PSA targets. [67331]

Jane Kennedy: Discussions are ongoing between the Department and the Treasury to finalise the details of NIO's revised PSA, covering the three-year period of the 2002 Spending Review, commencing 2003–04 and ending 2005–06. This will appear in a Treasury White Paper, to be published within the next few weeks.

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress the Northern Ireland Office has made in meeting objectives and targets in its PSA. [67332]

Jane Kennedy: Details of progress made in meeting objectives and targets in the NIO's PSA as at 31 March 2002 are contained in the Northern Ireland Office 2002 departmental report, "Expenditure Plans and Priorities" (Cm 5432), published in June 2002 (Table 4.1).

Small Business Security Grant Scheme

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made by the Northern Ireland Office with the Small Business Security Grant Scheme. [67333]

Jane Kennedy: The Small Business Security Grant Scheme is administered by the Northern Ireland Crime Prevention Panel (NICPP), a registered charity which aims to promote initiatives that help reduce crime locally. The NIO has provided funding amounting to £650,000 for the scheme. The panel established a scoring system based against which to assess applications. After a slow start, 1,800 applications were received by the closing date of 31 January 2002 exceeding expectations and the funding available. £560,000 has already been distributed to 631 successful applicants. The NICPP's Awards Panel has recently met to approve a further tranche of grants and to finalise the arrangements finalising the scheme at the end of November 2002 by which time all applicants to the scheme will have been informed as to the outcome of their application.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Accommodation

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will offer undertakings to (a) West Mercia police authority police and (b) Hereford and Worcester fire authority about their protection from legal liability for the consequences of disturbances at the proposed asylum accommodation centre at Throckmorton. [59799]

Beverley Hughes: We are considering the insurance provisions necessary for accommodation centres.

Asylum Seekers

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will conduct an inquiry into NASS's supervision of contracts related to landmark properties in Liverpool. [62423]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 17 June 2002]: Arrangements already exist to monitor the performance of the National Asylum Support Service (NASS). Like any other directorate within Immigration Nationality Directorate (IND), NASS and its management is subject to investigation by the Home Office Internal Audit and the National Audit Office on financial issues. However I have asked the director of NASS to arrange for an inquiry into issues arising from NASS's dealings with the Landmark company to be carried out. The terms of reference for the inquiry are as follows:

> To carry out an investigation into and to establish the facts surrounding the transfer of NASS supported asylum seekers from the Landmark building and The Inn on the Park in May/June 2002;
> To review the actions of Landmark, its directors and employees during the period up to and including the removal of asylum seekers from these two properties with particular reference to the terms of NASS's contract with Landmark and to make a report on any contract compliance issues that arise;
> To review and report on NASS's dealings with Landmark and the asylum seekers resident in these two buildings throughout the transfer period;
> To review and report on the extent to which the rights and reasonable expectations of the NASS supported asylum seekers were met during this transfer period;
> To review more generally NASS's handling of its contracts with Landmark: and
> To make recommendations for any immediate actions to be taken in relation to the transfer and to make recommendations in relation to NASS's management of such contracts and similar situations in the future.

Asylum Seekers (Afghanistan)

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is towards unsuccessful asylum seekers from Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement. [69923]

Beverley Hughes: Our long standing approach to Afghan asylum applications has been that we would not, other than in exceptional circumstances, normally seek to return to Afghanistan asylum seekers whose applications have been found not to meet the criteria set down in the 1951 United Nations Refugee Convention. In those circumstances we would normally grant the unsuccessful asylum applicant four years exceptional leave to remain (ELR) in the United Kingdom. We modified that policy in April this year so as to grant only 12 months ELR to reflect the improving situation in Afghanistan.

Large numbers of Afghans have come to the United Kingdom to seek asylum in recent years. We have provided them with asylum when they have needed it or granted ELR. But the situation in Afghanistan has now changed.

We believe there has been a real and sustained improvement in the country situation. The recent establishment of the Transitional Government serves to underline the improvements which continue to be made. The improvement in the country situation no longer justifies a blanket policy of granting exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom to all asylum seekers from Afghanistan who do not meet the criteria in the 1951 United Nations Refugee Convention. We will of course continue to honour our international obligations under the 1951 United Nations Refugee Convention and European Convention on Human Rights.

Asylum caseworkers will continue to consider—on a case by case basis—whether in the individual circumstances of a particular case it is appropriate to grant exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom to an unsuccessful asylum applicant and taking into full account the country situation. If the circumstances of an individual case justify it, exceptional leave to remain will be granted but, for the reasons stated above, I have decided that a blanket policy of granting exceptional leave to remain in all such cases is no longer justified. In cases where asylum has been refused, and exceptional leave has not been granted, we will take the appropriate enforcement action.

Further, in order to facilitate voluntary returns to Afghanistan I am considering whether for a limited period of time, incentive payments could be made to returnees. The payments would help returnees to re-establish themselves in Afghanistan. The payments would be closely administered and time limited: it is essential that they not act as a pull-factor to the United Kingdom, nor their provision abused. We will also be looking into what other support may be needed in order to ensure the sustainability of returns.

This would be the start of a number of packages we intend to develop to encourage return to help in the reconstruction of Afghanistan. Other packages will involve, for example, different forms of re-integration programmes and explore and prepare visits. This demonstrates our long-term commitment to the reconstruction of Afghanistan.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases the Criminal Cases Review Commission are reviewing; how cases are classified; what percentage of all cases concern sexual abuse and of those, how many cases are (a) related to historic sexual abuse in care homes and (b) within a domestic context; and what period of time has elapsed between the sex crime being committed, the case being brought to court and the CCRC considering the case in each case. [64267]

Hilary Benn: At 30 April 2002 there were 402 cases under review and 309 waiting for allocation distributed as follows:

Stage	Cases
Waiting for Stage 1 review	3
Under Stage 1 review	35
Waiting for Stage 2 Screen review	120
Under State 2 Screen review	171
Waiting for Stage 2 review	186
Under Stage 2 review	187
Under Stage 3 review	9

The Commission includes abuse in care homes cases in the category of "Sexual Offences". Sexual offences cases constitute a very significant percentage of all the applications received.

Of the 834 applications received in the 12 months to 31 March 2002 the sexual offences were as shown:

Sexual offences	Number of offences	Percentage of all offences	Number of counts	Percentage of all counts
Indecent assault	129	12.1	328	18.9
Rape	124	11.8	195	11.2
Other	67	6.3	165	9.5
Total	320	30.2	688	39.6

The Commission has set up a working group to analyse and refine its approach to child sex abuse cases and this group will gather more detailed data on the type and circumstances of the offences and convictions. This will include information on the institutional/domestic environment of the offence and the elapsed time from the crime to the conviction.

The average time between conviction and application to the Commission for all applications is 3.5 years.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will answer the questions from the hon. Member for Hendon, refs 25180 and 25186. [31629]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: I replied to question 25180 on 15 January 2002 and to question 25186 on 23 January 2002. Unfortunately, there was an error in the printing of the Official Report, and the answers appeared with the wrong questions. This error has been rectified for the Bound Volume of Hansard. In the meantime, I have resubmitted the correct versions of these questions and answers to my hon. Friend.

New Prisons

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who will pay insurance for future new prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [66620]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 2 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington (John McDonnell) on 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 439W.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much and what proportion of the departmental expenditure limit for 2002–03 had been spent by 31 May; what the figures were for 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [61012]

Beverley Hughes: The information requested is provided in the table.

	2001–02	2002–03
Annual departmental expenditure limit (DEL) (£ million)	10,731	10,230
Spend to 31 May (£ million)	1,823	2,140
Spend to 31 May as proportion of annual DEL (per cent.)	17.0	20.9

The 2001–02 DEL includes £826 million from the DEL Reserve, voted in the spring Supplementary Estimates, mainly to fund asylum expenditure. If this is discounted, the spend to 31 May 2001 constitutes 19.9 per cent. of that year's DEL.

Case Numbers

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases (a) his Department and (b) each of its agencies have defended in (i) industrial tribunals and (ii) the courts in each year since 1997; what proportion were concluded in their favour; and what the costs of cases fought were, including damages paid. [38033]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 27 February 2002]: The information is given in the table. I am sorry for the delay in replying.

Financial Year	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02

Billable casework	359,250.63	273,758.80	464,692.55	794,655.63	1,023,295.85

Notes:

1. Figures given for the Home Office include its agencies apart from the Prison Service.
2. The figures are supplied by the Treasury Solicitor's Department, which is responsible for litigation on behalf of the Home Office and its agencies.
3. Court cases include judicial review and personal injury litigation. There is a small amount of commercial litigation not reflected in these figures.
4. These figures do not include the proportion of cases concluded in favour of the department or the amount of damages paid. These items could not be obtained without disproportionate effort.
5. The figures for billable casework include amounts charged by the Treasury Solicitor in respect of both time and disbursements.

These figures show the arising amount and cost of litigation over the last five years. Around 2,500 cases were opened in the financial year 1997–8; over 3,500 have been opened to date in this financial year. The cost has arisen from roughly £7.5 million to £9.7 million. Prison Service litigation represents about a third of the total number of cases; while immigration judicial review covers about 90 per cent. of the judicial review cases which themselves form about two thirds of all the litigation.

While the rise in the number and cost of judicial review and personal injury cases has been about 50 per cent. over the past five years, in the employment field the cases have doubled and the costs have all but trebled. This matter is under active consideration by the Prison Service.

Paul Wright

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the report of the independent investigation into the circumstances of Paul Wright's death at Leeds Prison on 7 November 1996, ordered by Mr. Justice Jackson on 27 June 2001. [69924]

Hilary Benn: I welcome this report, which is today being placed in the Library together with our response to the five findings and 20 recommendations made in the report. The Prison Service has previously accepted partial liability for the death of Paul Wright because failure to provide proper medical treatment was a contributory factor to his death, and in October 2000 apologised to the family, followed by an out-of-court settlement in December 2000. This independent investigation provides a very thorough review of the circumstances surrounding the death of Paul Wright and associated issues. Two of the findings reflect conflicts of evidence that are unlikely ever to be resolved.

This was a unique investigation in circumstances unlikely to be repeated, largely because of changes made since 1996, including: provision of health care services in prison has been changed through a partnership between the Prison Service and the NHS at local, regional and national level; procedures for recruitment and supervision of prison medical officers have been improved, with training and qualification requirements tightened; and all self-inflicted deaths in prisons are now routinely investigated and investigation reports disclosed to families. In addition, a clinical review of the treatment provided to a prisoner dying in custody from natural causes routinely now takes place. Procedures for investigating all deaths in prison custody are currently under review. In parallel, a wider Home Office and Government review of investigations and inquiries is taking place against a background of emerging jurisprudence from both the domestic and European Courts. This investigation has provided some valuable insights which will help inform this debate, specifically in relation to the introduction of independence in future investigations.

I hope that the changes which have been made show that we are trying to learn from what's happened as a result of our failure to look after Paul Wright in the way that we should have done.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Contact Orders

Ms Shipley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many schedule 1 offenders have been granted unsupervised contact orders in each year since 1999. [68208]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department keeps routine statistics on the numbers of applications for contact and orders made but does not keep information about the party in whose favour an order was made. When considering making a contact order the court has the child's welfare as its paramount consideration. This includes taking into account any harm a child has suffered or is at risk of suffering.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will make a statement on how contact arrangements will be made safe for children before new measures are introduced; and how she will enforce contact orders. [68212]

Ms Rosie Winterton: When considering applications for contact the court is obliged to make the welfare of the child its paramount concern. This includes considering any harm a child has suffered or is at risk of suffering. The court can attach conditions to contact and make orders for the protection of children and their parents in any family proceedings. In addition to case law and the Guidelines prepared by the Children Act Sub Committee of the Lord Chancellor's Advisory Board on Family Law (CASC), the Department is considering possible amendments to court rules to ensure consistency in the treatment of applications for contact where there are allegations of violence. The Department is also facilitating the Child Contact Centre Working Group. The group is prioritising measures to ensure the safety of those using such services. The Government are considering the recommendations of CASC's report 'Making Contact Work' on the facilitation and enforcement of contact and will be making an initial response shortly. Ensuring contact is safe is a key consideration.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many contact orders under section 8 of the Children Act 1989 were (a) refused and (b) granted in (i) 1999, (ii) 2000 and (iii) 2001. [68213]

Vera Baird: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many contact orders were (a) granted and (b) refused under section 8 of the Children Act 1989 in (i) 1999, (iii) 2000 and (iii) 2001. [68319]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The figures sought are published annually in Judicial Statistics.

	1999	2000	2001
Granted	41,862	46,070	55,030
Refused	1,752	1,276	713

Contact orders include ones made for indirect contact or supervised contact. Although no breakdown is currently available, we will be undertaking a sampling exercise later this year to obtain information on this area.

Ms Shipley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if courts are required to ensure contact arrangements are safe for children. [68209]

Ms Rosie Winterton: When considering applications for contact the court is obliged to make the welfare of the child its paramount concern. This includes determining whether a child has suffered or is at risk of suffering harm and taking steps to protect the child and any other party to proceedings. The court can attach conditions to contact and make orders for the protection of children and their parents in any family proceedings if the court believes this is necessary, regardless of whether or not such conditions or orders have been requested. The Department is considering possible amendments to court rules to ensure consistency in the treatment of applications for contact where there are allegations of violence.

Public Consultations

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the length was of each public consultation undertaken by his Department since 8 June 2001. [68744]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The length of each public written consultation undertaken by the Department since 8 June 2001 is as follows.

Title	Month	Length of consultation (weeks)
Report of the Review Group on the Royal Peculiars	July 2001	11

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many staff have contributed to her Department's input to the Spending Review. [68678]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Lord Chancellor's Department employed six officials within the central finance function to work on the Spending Review on a near full-time basis in recent months. In addition, two senior civil servants devoted a substantial proportion of their time to the review. A large number of officials from discrete business areas also contributed.

Asylum Applications

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many appeals in relation to rejected asylum applications were (a) received, (b) withdrawn and (c) heard in the periods (i) April 2000 to March 2001 and (ii) April 2001 to February 2002. [42897]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I apologise for the delay in responding.

(a) The IAA received 37,573 asylum appeals during the period April 2000 to March 2001 and 46,578 cases during the period April 2001 to February 2002.

(b) Reliable data on withdrawals and hearings was not held prior to October 2000.

(b) During the periods:

October 2000 to March 2001:

1,181 applications for appeal were withdrawn; 1,124 at the adjudicator level, two at leave to appeal to tribunal level and 55 at tribunal level.

April 2001 to February 2002:

3,047 applications for appeal were withdrawn; 2,932 at the adjudicator level, nine at leave to appeal to tribunal level and 106 at tribunal level.

(c) During the periods:

October 2000 to March 2001:

The IAA heard 26,603 appeal applications; 25,528 at the adjudicator level and 1,075 at the tribunal level.

April 2001 to February 2002:

The IAA heard 57,718 appeal applications; 54,828 at the adjudicator level and 2,890 at the tribunal level.

HEALTH

Homeless People

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on homeless people's ability to gain access (a) to health services in (i) primary and (ii) secondary care and (b) to social services. [56155]

Mr. Lammy: Primary care trusts are responsible for developing in partnership with social services departments, other agencies and local communities, a local health improvement and modernisation plan (HIMP) that outlines the health and social care services available for their local population, including homeless people. In conjunction with local authorities' homeless strategies, the HIMP should assess local need and address any gaps in services.

Ministerial Salaries

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the annual cost was of ministerial salaries in his Department in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 2001–02. [60935]

Mr. Lammy: The level of ministerial salaries are recommended by the Senior Salaries Review Body. The figures below exclude the salaries House of Commons Ministers receive as Members of Parliament.

From May 1997 to July 1998, in this Department there was one Cabinet Minister at an annual salary of £43,991; two Ministers of State at an annual salary of £31,125; one Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at an annual salary of £23,623; and one Minister of State (House of Lords) at an annual salary of £51,838.

From June 2001, there was one Cabinet Minister at an annual salary of £68,157; two Ministers of State at an annual salary of £35,356; two Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State at an annual salary of £26,835; and one Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (House of Lords) at an annual salary of £60,961.

Medical Students

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters Ministers in his Department have received in the last three months from (a) hon. Members, (b) medical students and their representatives and (c) others regarding problems faced by medical students. [61442]

Mr. Lammy: The Department cannot provide the information in the format requested.

Strategic Health Authorities

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many strategic health authorities have nurses on their boards. [61446]

Mr. Lammy: Information on the number of nurses on the boards of the new health authorities (to be known as strategic health authorities) is as follows:

midlands and east of England: four of the eight health authorities (HAs) have members on the board with nursing qualifications;

north: seven of the eight HAs have nurses/people with nursing qualifications on their boards;

London: at present there are no nurses on the boards of the five HAs in London. However, nurse views are represented on the North West London health authority board by the chief executive, who is a qualified nurse. In addition to this, two HAs in the London area are currently in the process of recruiting Directors of Nursing; south: four of the seven HAs have nurses/people with nursing qualifications on their boards.

Of those HAs in the country who do not have nurses/people with nursing qualifications on their boards, they propose to have such people on their top management teams or are ensuring that they have direct access to senior nursing advice.

Coronary Care

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether guidance has been provided to primary care trusts on the provision of drug eluting stents for use in percutaneous coronary intervention. [61629]

Ms Blears: No guidance has been given to primary care trusts on the provision of drug eluting stents for use in percutaneous coronary intervention. The Department referred drug eluting stents to the National Institute of Clinical Excellence (NICE) on 20 May this year for appraisal. NICE will produce technology appraisal guidance for the national health service on the clinical and cost-effectiveness of drug eluting stents and on the appropriate use of this new technology.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the (a) start date and (b) completion date is for the private finance initiative at the Queen Alexandra Hospital, Portsmouth; whether the initiative is on schedule for completion; and if he will make a statement. [61670]

Ms Blears: The Queen Alexandra Hospital, Portsmouth re-issued its Official Journal of the European Community in August 2001, and is expected to reach financial close by the end of February 2003. Start on site will commence shortly after and completion is anticipated in 2007.

Consultant Neurologists

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects both positions for consultant neurologists at Colchester General Hospital will be filled; when the posts were advertised; and if he will make a statement. [63469]

Ms Blears: The local primary care trusts have been seeking to expand the neurology service at Essex Rivers Healthcare National Health Service Trust from a one-consultant to a two-consultant service.

The trust held interviews on 25 June to appoint a consultant neurologist. Once the first consultant neurologist is in post, the trust will recruit to the second post.

Affordable Housing

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is being taken by his Department with regard to the provision of affordable housing for NHS staff. [65729]

Mr. Hutton: We fully recognise the importance to recruitment and retention of good quality, affordable accommodation being available for nurses and other health workers, and this is why we set out a target of providing 2,000 additional units by July 2003 in the NHS Plan.

We have established the national health service housing initiative and, since the launch of the NHS Plan, 1,273 additional units of accommodation have been sourced through negotiation with registered social landlords and other providers. In addition, contracts have been agreed on a further 243 units of accommodation and 725 units are agreed subject to contract. The housing initiative has been extended to include the south-east and other hotspots, including a new staff hotel at the John Radcliffe in Oxford. We have also established an accommodation bureau and website so that available accommodation is used more efficiently.

We also recognise the importance of home ownership in the retention of staff and by 2004, around 5,000 NHS staff should have benefited from the £250 million allocated under the starter home initiative. Assistance is in the form of equity loans, interest free loans and shared ownership.

Recycling

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of waste produced in his Department was (a) recycled, (b) composted and (c) re-used, broken down into (i) paper, (ii) plastics, (iii) aluminium cans and (iv) other in each year since 1997; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65680]

Mr. Lammy: Figures are only available from 2001–02. These show that of the total waste collected in the main buildings occupied by the Department, 84.1 per cent. has been recycled. There is no breakdown to show what proportions have been composted or re-used.

Of the amount recycled, 80.5 per cent. was paper, 0.7 per cent. cans and 18.8 per cent. all other waste.

The levels of waste and recycled materials are continually monitored and opportunities and initiatives to increase the levels of waste material recycled or re-used are under constant consideration.

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of (a) paper and (b) other goods purchased by his Department was recycled paper in each year since 1997; what the annual total cost of these purchases was; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65774]

Mr. Lammy: It is only possible to answer in the detail required for the last year 2001–02.

The Department has a central stationery contract through which its normal supply of paper is purchased. For 2001–02, the amount of recycled paper purchased constituted 73.8 per cent. of the total paper purchased by the Department. The cost of this purchase was £138,864.

The Department continues to monitor usage of paper and seeks, where possible, to reduce use of paper in favour of electronic communications. Where paper products are necessary, the Department encourages the use of recycled paper. This is an on-going initiative.

NHS Direct

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints have been made about NHS Direct in each region in each month since its launch; and if he will make a statement. [65585]

Mr. Lammy: It is not possible to provide a comprehensive breakdown of complaints made about NHS Direct in each region. In the financial year 2000–01, 148 written complaints were received about NHS Direct in England. These figures are collected annually and not monthly. This equates to one complaint in over 20,000 calls made to NHS Direct.

Details of all written complaints can be found on the Department's website: www.doh.gov.uk/nhscomplaints

0870 Telephone Numbers

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on using 0870 telephone numbers for inquiries by the public to the Department and its agencies. [66195]

Mr. Lammy: The Department decides on the appropriate tariff for national lines on a case by case basis, taking account of the purpose of the line, its intended audience and the ability of the target audience to pay.

Clinical Nurse Specialists

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many clinical nurse specialists there are in the field of skin cancer; [66658]

(2) what plans he has to increase the number of clinical nurse specialists in skin cancer. [66659]

Mr. Lammy: The Department does not collect information on nurse sub-specialities.

The NHS Cancer Plan sets out the Government's commitment to investment in cancer services, including the nursing work force. We expect to see an increase in specialist cancer nurses in line with needs identified in local cancer service delivery plans.

Infliximab

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional funding has been made available to primary care trusts and acute hospitals to help fund the cost of patients using infliximab. [66814]

Mr. Lammy: We have not allocated earmarked funding for National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) recommended treatments such as infliximab. However, national health service bodies have a statutory obligation to fund such treatments. General allocations to health authorities take account of the pressures on pay, prices and the cost of implementing NICE recommendations which they all face. Allocations have increased by at least 6 per cent. in real terms in 2002–03.

Smallpox Vaccine

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether Bavarian Nordic were approached directly and invited to bid during the negotiations to award the smallpox vaccine contract. [67549]

Mr. Hutton: Yes, Bavarian Nordic were approached directly regarding the supply of smallpox vaccine, but made it clear that Powderject were their nominated supplier for smallpox vaccine in the UK.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether other bidders for the smallpox vaccine awarded to Powderject committed themselves to supply a vaccine that was free of BSE agents. [67543]

Mr. Hutton: Yes, other bidders for the smallpox vaccine awarded to Powderject committed themselves to supply a vaccine that was free of bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE) agents. European legislation demands that an application for marketing authorisation of a medicinal product in the European Union must include satisfactory demonstration of compliance with the European note for guidance on minimising the risk of transmitting animal spongiform encephalopathy agents via human and veterinary medicinal products.

If a manufacturer wishes to produce smallpox vaccine using virus culture in bovine cells, the appropriate regulatory guidance on cell characterisation and storage would have to be followed.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether IDT were approached directly during the negotiations to award the smallpox vaccine contract and invited to make a bid. [67540]

Mr. Hutton: Impfstoffwerke Dessau Tornav Gmbh (IDT) were not approached during the negotiations to award the smallpox vaccine contract and were not invited to make a bid. It was known from the outset that IDT were a sub-contracting partner of Bavarian Nordic, with whom Powderject had an exclusive agreement to act as their suppliers. An official from the Department accompanied officials from the Ministry of Defence on a visit to Bavarian Nordic and IDT at the end of January (31) on a fact-finding visit to discuss vaccine developments and manufacturing techniques and capacity for both types of smallpox vaccine being made by the company.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the relevance of the nationality of the supplier to national security was considered during the tendering process for the smallpox vaccine contract. [67545]

Mr. Hutton: The key selection criteria upon which the contract for the supply of smallpox vaccine was awarded were the company's ability to provide vaccine of the chosen strain and its ability to complete supply within the preferred timescale. The security of supply in the event of an emergency was a factor that was considered, but not the nationality of the supplier.

Racial Harassment

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures have been implemented to reduce racial harassment of NHS staff; how many incidents of racial (a) abuse and (b) attacks have been recorded in the last year in each health authority; and if he will make a statement. [67420]

Mr. Hutton: The Government is fully committed to diversity and equality of opportunity for all health service staff and patients and we are taking vigorous action to achieve this. There is no place for discrimination or harassment in the National Health Service on grounds of race or ethnicity, gender, sexual orientation, disability, religion, or age.

The Improving Working Lives (IWL) Standard establishes targets and measures for promoting real improvements in the working lives of NHS staff. It makes it clear that every member of staff is entitled to work in an organisation which can prove that it is investing in, and improving, diversity and tackling discrimination and harassment.

Activity to achieve this aim is occurring on a number of fronts. We have launched an equalities framework ('The Vital Connection') which incorporates clear requirements for the NHS in promoting equality and introduces a package of indicators, standards and monitoring arrangements to support progress and manage performance as part of human resources performance management. It includes specific measures on race and harassment.

In addition, the 'Positively Diverse' programme is developing the knowledge and capacity of NHS organisations to build and manage a diverse workforce. It provides the process for achieving the equalities related aspects of IWL and the targets set by the equalities framework and supports NHS organisations in meeting the workforce challenges set by the Race Relations (Amendment) Act 2000. In addition, new guidance and publicity posters, aligned with the NHS zero tolerance zone campaign, on dealing with harassment from service users has been developed and will be launched in September.

Information on incidents of racial abuse or attacks is not collected centrally, but may be held at a local level by NHS employers. The findings of the 2000–2001 survey of reported violent or abusive incidents, accidents involving staff and sickness absence in NHS trusts and health authorities, in England, were published on 13 June. A copy of the report setting out the main findings of the survey has been placed in the Library.

Junior Doctors' Time-sheets

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the reliability of junior doctors' time-sheets. [67701]

Mr. Hutton: The monitoring of the hours worked by junior doctors is the responsibility of local employers. They and the juniors themselves are accountable for the accuracy of the figures, and the returns are required to be certified by the doctors in post.

Devon and Cornwall Health Authorities

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much the Devon and Cornwall Strategic Health Authority is overspent; and by how much this will reduce health spending from central Government allocations in the year 2002–03. [69186]

Ms Blears: The new health authority (HA) for the south-west peninsula is currently within budget. The HA running costs of £4 million were top sliced from the overall allocation to the local health community.

Waiting Times (Mid-Essex)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people (a) were waiting for in-patient treatment, (b) had been waiting for over 12 months for in-patient treatment and (c) had been waiting over 15 months for in-patient treatment, in the Mid-Essex hospital trust area in the last two months for which figures are available. [69029]

Mr. Lammy: The latest available information on patients waiting for inpatient treatment at the Mid-Essex Hospital National Health Service Trust are shown in the table.

	End of April 2002	End of May 2002
For inpatient treatment	4,149	4,199
Waiting over 12 months	192	162
Waiting over 15 months	0	0

Delayed Discharges

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide the latest delayed discharge percentages by local authority within the star rating system. [68394]

Jacqui Smith: There is no direct numerical relationship between the local authority star ratings and the figures for delayed discharge. The evidence upon which the ratings are based includes a wide range of information from inspections, joint reviews and monitoring, as well as the performance indicator data. Judgments that lead to the ratings are made against a set of standards, taking all this information into account. Information from Quarter 4 of 2001–02 on the numbers and percentage of delayed discharges at national and regional level, together with the reasons for delay, has been placed in the Library.

Social Services Grants

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on schemes submitted by local authorities for the personal social services performance grant for 2002–03. [68395]

Jacqui Smith: Councils have until 25 July 2002 to provide final details of their performance fund schemes to the Department. There is therefore as yet no information on the final schemes.

Doctors (Suspensions)

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 25 June 2002, Official Report, column 846W, on doctors (suspensions), whether the definition of suspension includes absence on special leave, gardening leave and other paid absence; what the total costs to the NHS are of the suspensions for (a) the latest quarter for which figures are available and (b) the equivalent quarter for each of the previous six years; and if he will make a statement on the other information that is available from the Department's data collection exercise. [68657]

Mr. Hutton: For the purposes of the central quarterly data collection exercise into the long-term suspension of hospital medical and community dental staff, the definition of suspension does not include special leave, gardening leave or any other paid absence.

Based on national health service trust returns to the Department, the total cumulative costs of current suspensions lasting over six months for the first quarter of 2002 (1 January to 31 March) is £5,095,742.

Figures for the first quarter for the last three years is as follows:

1 January 2000 to 31 March 2000: £3,956,225

1 January 2001 to 31 March 2001: £4,245,789

1 January 2002 to 31 March 2002: £5,095,742.

Comparable and reliable data for the previous four years are not available.

The Department collects details which identify the individual doctor concerned in order to validate information relating to the suspension. This is not published in order to protect the confidentiality of the individual.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors were suspended for (a) less and (b) more than six months (i) at the latest date for which figures are available and (ii) for the equivalent quarter for each of the last six years. [68656]

Mr. Hutton: National health service trusts routinely report suspensions lasting six months or longer to the Department. Figures are not available for suspensions lasting less than six months.

As at quarter ended 31 March 2002 (the latest date for which figures are available) there were 29 doctors suspended for more than six months.

The figures for the last three years is as follows:

1 January 2000 to 31 March 2000: 32

1 January 2001 to 31 March 2001: 31

1 January 2002 to 31 March 2002: 29.

Comparable and reliable data for the previous four years is not available.

Mental Health

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there is an (a) named person, (b) named organisation and (c) multi-agency group responsible for mental health promotion in County Durham and Darlington. [68141]

Jacqui Smith: A health promotion lead has been identified for County Durham and Darlington. Easington Primary Care Trust (PCT) is the lead organisation for mental health promotion, on behalf of all PCTs in County Durham and Darlington. The multi-agency group responsible for mental health is the County Durham and Darlington mental health promotion steering group. There are 34 members of the group which includes all PCTs, County Durham and Darlington Priority Services National Health Service Trust and representatives from general practitioner practices, users and carers, prisons, health promotion services, the police and social services.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has started to collect data on (a) the number of NHS nurses who work in mental health, (b) how many leave the service each year and (c) how many NHS nurses are recruited to mental health each year. [68155]

Mr. Hutton: The non-medical work force census currently includes community psychiatry, other psychiatry, community learning disabilities and other learning disabilities among other detailed areas.

An exercise to re-define occupation codes and collect work force data by care groups is under way and will provide a more accurate picture of number of nurses working in mental health.

In a separate exercise we are also modelling nurse labour market by branch, including mental health. This work will include consideration of mental health nurses joining and leaving the national health service each year.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, (1) pursuant to his answer of 5 February 2002, Official Report, column 926W, on mental health, if he will list the data for 2001–02 in the same form; [68294]

(2) what the highest level of occupancy of beds on a single day in an acute mental health ward in London has been in 2002. [68168]

Jacqui Smith: Occupancy levels are not collected on a daily basis for acute mental health wards. The average bed occupancy rate for each National Health Service trust, including London, in the financial year 2000–01 is available from http://www/doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/

Data for 2001–02 are not yet available.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the evaluation of the Working Minds programme includes an assessment of how many people with a diagnosis of severe mental illness have found employment as a result of the programme; and if he will make a statement. [68123]

Jacqui Smith: The evaluation of the mind out for mental health campaign, including the Working Minds programme, does not include an assessment of how many people have found employment as a result of the programme. However, as I indicated to the hon. Member in my reply on 30 October 2001, Official Report, column 648W, the Working Minds programme works in partnership with employers to create positive shifts in workplace attitudes and behaviour surrounding mental health. Its objectives are far greater than helping people with mental health problems to find employment; the programme seeks to bring about a fundamental, long-term change in employers' policy and practice so that people with mental health problems are able to participate fully in the workplace. We are currently considering the findings of the evaluation.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the draft strategy on mental health services for people from black and ethnic minorities. [68149]

Jacqui Smith: The draft strategy is still being developed. We are aiming to publish a consultation document in the autumn.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many primary care mental health workers are in (a) employment and (b) training. [68140]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 13 February 2002 at column 469W, when I said that funds to support the appointment of 1,000 new graduate primary care mental health workers would be allocated in 2003–04. This year, £2.5 million has been made available to establish new training programmes to support them when they are employed. This initiative is being led by South Trent workforce development confederation.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been spent on the National Institute for Mental Health; and what its budget is for 2002–03. [68165]

Jacqui Smith: The National Institute for Mental Health—England has a budget of £6,818,000 in 2002–03.

The budget will fund eight development centres across the country which will act as a main point of contact for frontline staff to, network, find solutions and put them into practice. It will also fund a mental health research network and eight other national programmes, to deliver change at a national level, help staff implement national plan commitments, and broaden capacity in the development centres to support the frontline.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many "Working Minds Employers' Toolkit" have been produced in the current financial year. [68125]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 8 July 2002, Official Report, column 783W.

An additional 2,000 copies of the "Working Minds Employers' Toolkit" were printed in March 2002. Copies of the toolkit are still available and there are no plans at present to produce additional copies in this financial year.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the 10 community mental health teams with the highest caseload per care staff member; [68129]

(2) what the total caseload is of early intervention teams for mental health; [68137]

(3) how many early intervention teams for mental health (a) are in place and (b) offer a comprehensive service as described in the model. [68135]

Jacqui Smith: The numbers and configuration of community mental health teams are being monitored by the mental health mapping project. Data from autumn 2001 have recently become available. Copies of a mental health mapping atlas, which contains this information, have been deposited in the Library.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much money is allocated for the Mind Out for Mental Health campaign in 2002–03; and how much was spent in 2001–02; [68166]

(2) what the communications expenditure of the Mind Out for Mental Health campaign was in 2000–01 and 2001–02; and what the communications budget is for 2002–03. [68167]

Jacqui Smith: Expenditure on the Mind Out for Mental Health campaign was as follows:

2000–01	573,000
2001–02	1,300,000

Decisions have not yet been made on communications expenditure for 2002–03.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the reasons are for variations in the use made of guardianship under section 7 of the Mental Health Act 1983. [68143]

Jacqui Smith: The purpose of guardianship, under the Mental Health Act 1983, is to enable patients to receive community care where it cannot be provided without the use of compulsory powers. Local social services authorities have the responsibility for applying guardianship orders and we know that there is variation in their use. We believe that the reasons for this may include a lack of awareness and understanding of the provisions, and a lack of powers to compel compliance with a guardianship order.

The draft Mental Health Bill which was published on 25 June 2002 addresses these problems by introducing a legal framework that will enable patients on orders, under the Mental Health Act, to be based in the community. These will supersede guardianship orders and will provide a clearer statutory basis for protecting patients in the community.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of local implementation teams for mental health services have emergency beds available for a crisis. [68138]

Jacqui Smith: Local implementation teams (LIT) have a planning function and also report back on progress with implementation of the mental health national framework service and NHS Plan. The teams do not themselves have available any service resources. However the trusts and social services departments supply information on the availability of services in their areas to the appropriate LIT.

All trusts will have beds available for the needs of people in an emergency and many now have 'crisis beds' available at special crisis houses supported by trusts, social services and/or voluntary organisations.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the contribution made by (a) the electronic media and (b) the written media in changing attitudes and behaviour surrounding mental health as part of the Mind Out for Mental Health campaign. [68124]

Jacqui Smith: An evaluation of the Mind Out for Mental Health campaign, including the media strand, has been undertaken by an independent research company. We are currently considering the findings of this evaluation which covered all the main aspects of the campaign, including the campaign website.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which services within mental health are collecting the mental health minimum data set. [68106]

Jacqui Smith: The mental health minimum data set has been designed to provide person-based information about adult and elderly people in contact with specialist mental health care services in England. The data set is being implemented on a phased basis with all adult and elderly services due to assemble it from their operational systems from April 2003.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to improve the mental health of children in local authority care. [68110]

Jacqui Smith: A number of initiatives are under way to improve the mental health of children in local authority care. These include several targeted projects funded through the child and adolescent mental health services innovation grant, new guidance on promoting the health of looked after children and the development of a national healthy care standard which will support care providers in developing a healthy care environment.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made by his Department in developing reporting lines which differentiate between (a) mental health crisis admissions out of areas which are not clinically indicated and (b) those which are so indicated; and if he will make a statement. [68153]

Jacqui Smith: The Department is looking at the best way of capturing information on admissions that are appropriately referred and dealt with by out of area services and those that are not.

This is a complicated area, and the Department needs to develop a way of assessing the use of out of area treatments that does not overburden the service with additional data collection, instead trying to use the systems already in place like the hospital episode statistics. This will take time, and in the meantime we are focusing attention on the development of crisis resolution services that will help avoid unnecessary out of area treatments.

Nursing Vacancies

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing posts there are in (a) London and (b) England which have been vacant for three months or more. [68157]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is provided in the table.

	England	London region
Three month vacancy rate
Qualified staff (per cent.)	3.1	6.1
Three month vacancy numbers (wte)
Qualified staff	8,390	2,750
Staff in post (wte)
Qualified staff	255,760	41,980
Staff in Post (head count)
Qualified staff	299,950	46,470

Notes:

1. Three month vacancies are vacancies as at 31 March 2002 which trusts are actively trying to fill, which have lasted for three months or more (whole time equivalent)
2. Three month vacancy rates are three month vacancies expressed as a percentage of three month vacancies plus staff in post from this survey.
3. Vacancy and staff in post numbers are rounded to the nearest 10.
4. Percentages are rounded to one decimal place.
5. Due to rounding calculating the vacancy rates using the above data may not equal the actual.
6. Staff in data is from the non-medical work force census September 2001.

NHS Costs

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost of the NHS was per head of population in 2001–02. [68147]

Mr. Hutton: Public expenditure on the National Health Service in England is estimated to be £980 per head of population in 2001–02.

NHS Staff (Qualifications)

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress made by the NHS in England in staff undertaking NVQ levels two and three in care. [68158]

Mr. Hutton: In 2001–02, the investment identified in the NHS Plan enabled over 9,000 staff to undertake National Vocational Qualification (NVQ) training and/or assessment. The investment is designed to help those National Health Service staff without a professional qualification to access either NVQ training to levels 2 or 3 or a NHS learning account.

Overseas Recruitment

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which directorate within his Department is responsible for overseas recruitment of staff. [68109]

Mr. Hutton: The human resources directorate is responsible for the international recruitment of staff.

Non-EU Nurse Training

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 4 March 2002, Official Report, column 122W, whether the figures for the year to 31 March 2001 are available; and if he will make a statement. [68295]

Mr. Hutton: The figures for the year ending 31 March 2001 are provided in the table.

Admissions to the register 2000–01

Country	Number	Percentage
Australia	1,046	12.42
Canada	89	1.06
New Zealand	393	4.67
Nigeria	347	4.12
Philippines	3,396	40.33
South Africa	1,086	12.90
USA	147	1.75
West Indies	172	2.04
Zimbabwe	382	4.54
India	289	3.43
Other	1,073	12.74
Total	8,420	100.00

Central Council for Physical Recreation

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the Central Council for Physical Recreation report "Saving Lives, Saving Money"; and if he will make a statement. [68152]

Ms Blears: Increasing participation in physical recreation has an important role to play in raising the rates of physical activity and improving public health. The national service framework for coronary heart disease requires the National Health Service to develop local programmes of effective policies on increasing physical activity. We welcome the findings of the Central Council of Physical Recreation report which documents the progress being made by primary care trusts towards this milestone. We are currently developing a primary care handbook which will provide guidance on delivering the national service frameworks, including advice on developing local prevention strategies and effective approaches to increasing physical activity.

Eating Disorders

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the timetable is for the guidelines on the management of eating disorders to be produced by NICE. [68151]

Mr. Lammy: Full information about the guideline on the management of eating disorders to be produced by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) may be found on the NICE website at www.nice.org.uk

The guideline is expected in September 2003.

Primary Care Trusts

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a list of the primary care trusts which have been established. [68145]

Mr. Hutton: A full list of all 303 primary care trusts in operation at 1 April 2002 will be placed in the Library.

Student Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve the help available to student (a) nurses and (b) midwives in financial hardship. [68154]

Mr. Hutton: The Government is confident that the National Health Service bursary scheme continues to provide satisfactory support for the great majority of students. At the same time we recognise that there are undoubtedly individual cases of hardship, and work is continuing to ensure we address any specific weaknesses in the support arrangements.

The Government is increasing the financial support provided for all health professional students through the NHS bursary scheme (including trainee nurses and midwives), both in terms of the basic bursary and other elements of the package. This will help ensure that as few a students as possible experience financial difficulties during their training.

The overall level of additional support available to those studying at degree level, through higher education (HE) access and hardship funds (funded by the Department for Education and Skills) in 2001–02 is £93 million, over four times that provided in 1997–98.

Nurses

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 12 June 2002, Official Report, column 1312W, if NHS Professionals' administration has been contracted to private nurses agencies; and if he will make a statement. [66848]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 4 July 2002]: NHS Professionals is the NHS-led approach to temporary staffing for the NHS. The administration has not been contracted out to private nurses' agencies.

Cognitive Behaviour Therapy

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how widespread the use of cognitive behaviour therapy is; and in which parts of England it is not available. [68139]

Jacqui Smith: The Department has made no recent assessment of the use of cognitive behaviour therapy. However, cognitive behaviour therapy is recognised as an effective treatment for a range of mental health problems and information relating to this treatment can be found in the national service framework for mental health (www.doh.gov.uk/mentalhealth). The Department has also published a guideline 'Treatment Choice in Psychological Therapies and Counselling' and a booklet for service users that contain information about cognitive behaviour therapy and the common mental disorders for which its use is indicated.

Food Standards Agency

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to put in place a system for measuring the performance of the Food Standards Agency; and if he will make a statement. [69088]

Ms Blears: As a non-ministerial Government Department the system for measuring the performance of the Food Standards Agency (FSA) is the same as for other Government Departments. The FSA independently prepares its own submissions as part of Her Majesty's Treasury's (HMT) Spending Review although these are submitted to the HMT through my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. HMT approve the funding of the FSA on the basis of their submission and also agree a service delivery agreement setting out the main aims and targets to be achieved over the Spending Review period. A Departmental Report is prepared annually setting out the achievements of the FSA including an assessment of progress against each of the targets.

Drug Treatment Programmes

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of problem drug misusers, including prisoners, were in drug treatment programmes in each year since 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [69106]

Ms Blears: The estimated number of problem drug users in the United Kingdom is between 260,000 and 340,000.

It is estimated that there were around 118,500 drug misusers in treatment in England, in 2000–01 (from 'Statistics from the Regional Drug Misuse Databases on drug misusers in treatment in England, 2000/01'); comparable information is not available for earlier years. The number of users presenting to drug misuse agencies (including both general practitioners and other agencies) in England in each of the six month periods ending 31 March 1997 to 31 March 2001 is given in the table.

Number of users presenting for treatment to drug misuse agencies in England during the six month periods ending 31 March 1997 to 31 March 2001

Six month period ending	Number of users
March 1997	25,925
September 1997	21,996
March 1998	23,916
September 1998	28,599
March 1999	28,499
September 1999	30,545
March 2000	31,815
September 2000	33,093
March 2001	33,234

Source: Statistics from the Regional Drug Misuse Databases, Department of Health

The figures above exclude treatment in prisons. The Prison Service does not hold this information. Figures on the number of prisoners entering drug treatment programmes is available but only for the period 2000 to 2002. They are:

2000–01, there were 3,100 entrants

2001/02 there were 4,691 entrants.

Food Safety

Mr. Keith Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what evidence his Department presented to the National Audit Office report on the 2001 outbreak of foot and mouth disease concerning the risk assessment with regard to bovine DNA contained in imported frozen chicken breasts; [68838]

(2) whether he informed the Scientific Review into Foot and Mouth by the Royal Society of his Department's risk assessment with regard to bovine DNA contained in imported frozen chicken breasts; [68840]

(3) whether he informed the Inquiry into the lessons to be learned from the foot and mouth disease outbreak of 2001 of his Department's risk assessment with regard to bovine DNA contained in imported frozen chicken breasts. [68836]

Ms Blears: As this is not an issue which comes under the remit of either the inquiry into the lessons to be learned from the foot and mouth disease outbreak of 2001, or the National Audit Office value for money examination into the 2001 outbreak of foot and mouth disease, or the Royal Society study into infectious diseases in livestock, neither the Food Standards Agency (FSA) nor the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs has raised it with them.

The FSA's survey investigating composition and labelling of frozen chicken breasts sold in the United Kingdom catering sector, published in December 2001, found pork DNA in two samples, but no bovine DNA was detected in any of the samples. However, a recent Irish survey published by the Food Safety Authority (Ireland) this May, found samples showing the presence of either pork DNA or beef DNA or both.

Correspondence

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will respond to the letter submitted by Mrs. Taylor of Stroud in November 2001, which was subsequently passed to the NHS Information Authority. [58340]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 22 May 2002]: A letter answering the queries raised was sent by the chief executive of the National Health Service information authority to my hon. Friend on 24 June 2002.

NHS-PPP Estates Bid

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce the winning consortia of the NHS-PPP Estates bid; and if he will make a statement. [65595]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 1 July 2002]: The winning consortia will be announced following the approval of the business case, which is planned for the autumn 2002.

Medicinal Products

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the progress to the changes proposed to the definition of a medicinal product and the Government's position on these changes; [66854]

(2) if he will make a statement on progress that has been made to secure Her Majesty's Government's policy for no change to the scope of the centralised procedure with regards to the EU proposed amendments to the authorisation of human and veterinary medicines; [66850]

(3) if he will make a statement on the proposals to extend the use of the centralised system for the authorisation of human medicines; [66853]

(4) what assessment he has made of the impact the reduction in the amount of mutual recognition work concerning medicinal products will have on the relevant UK regulatory bodies. [66857]

Mr. Lammy [holding answers 4 July 2002]: The European Commission published proposals for wide-ranging amendments to the regulatory regime for human and veterinary medicines in December 2001. Among the proposed changes were the mandatory use of the centralised system for the authorisation of human medicines containing a New Active Substance (NAS) and a new definition of a medicinal product.

The UK, together with a number of other member states, has strongly opposed the mandatory use of the Centralised Procedure in negotiations. We do not see any scientific justification for this proposal, as it is the regulatory bodies in the member states who possess the expertise to carry out the scientific work. Nor do we believe that the proposal will improve the competitiveness of the pharmaceutical industry, as it reduces business flexibility.

The UK has promoted this view in the Council of Ministers and in the European Parliament and we have the support of a number of other member states. Final decisions have not been taken in either institution and the UK will continue to argue its case strongly in the meantime.

The Government agrees that there is a need to ensure that definition of a medicine is drafted in such a way that will allow new therapies to be appropriately regulated. However, the UK view is that the extension of the scope of the medicines legislation, particularly when linked to the new definition, is unwarranted and unacceptable, as it would capture many products already covered by other sectoral legislation. The Government sees no justification for this proposal and will continue to resist it. This position is shared by most other member states.

Outpatients, Lister Hospital

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average waiting time is for an outpatient appointment in the Maxilla/Facial Orthodontic and Restorative Department at the Lister hospital, Stevenage. [66765]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 4 July 2002]: Figures are not available for the average waiting time for an outpatient appointment in the Maxilla/Facial Orthodontic and Restorative Department at the Lister hospital.

The table provides latest waiting time information for orthodontics and plastic surgery at East and North Hertfordshire NHS trust on how long the number of general practitioner referrals seen in quarter 4 2001–02 waited before they received their appointment.

	0 to 3 weeks	4 to 12 weeks	13 to 25 weeks	26 plus weeks
East and North Hertfordshire Hospitals NHS Trust
Orthodontics	9	20	13	106
Plastic surgery	134	225	161	417

Ashford and St. Peter's Hospitals NHS Trust

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) extra beds and (b) extra staff he estimates will be required at the Ashford & St Peter's Hospitals NHS Trust to enable the new chief executive to achieve the franchise plan that he has approved. [67462]

Ms Blears [holding answer 5 July 2002]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 456W. The franchise plan for Ashford & St. Peter's Hospitals NHS Trust does not make any commitment to extra staff and beds. The Trust is assessing its capacity requirements in the longer term but plans have yet to be finalised.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many extra midwives are required by the Ashford & St. Peter's Hospitals NHS Trust to achieve full establishment. [67461]

Ms Blears [holding answer 5 July 2002]: I am advised by Ashford & St. Peter's Hospitals National Health Service Trust that the current funded establishment of midwives is 103 whole-time equivalents (WTE). There are currently 75 WTE staff in permanent positions. Therefore an additional 28 WTE staff are required to achieve full establishment.

However, in addition to the current permanent WTE staff of 75, the Trust has informed me that it also has a dedicated team of midwives temporarily employed to cover the shortfall, under the new NHS Professionals initiative. This results in an overall vacancy rate of 14 per cent. at the current time.

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the required reduction in expenditure arising from the merger of the Ashford Hospital NHS Trust and the St. Peter's Hospital NHS Trust was (a) in the year the merger took place and (b) in each subsequent year; [67464]

(2) what reduction in expenditure by Ashford & St. Peter's Hospitals NHS Trust was required by West Surrey Health Authority's Sustainable NHS plan. [67463]

Ms Blears [holding answer 5 July 2002]: In 1998–99, the year the hospitals merged, West Surrey Health Authority required strategic change savings of £300,000. As a result of the merger, the Ashford & St. Peter's Hospitals NHS Trust actually saved £1.4 million in management costs (£1.2 million in 1998–99 and £0.2 million in 1999–2000) and £0.6 million in support service costs. The benefits of the savings have been ongoing in subsequent years. The savings made met the strategic change target and helped fund cost pressures at the Trust.

The Trust was required to contribute the sums shown in the table to the West Surrey sustainable National Health Service project on a recurring basis:

1999–2000	1,072
2000–01	1,665
2001–02	324
Total	3,061

In 2000–01, the Trust received non-recurrent support of £1.24 million against the contribution of £1.665 million.

Bed Blocking

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds have been blocked in Surrey hospitals in each month in 2002. [67467]

Ms Blears [holding answer 5 July 2002]: Information on delayed discharges is collected at health authority level and has been placed in the Library. The most recent figures available are for quarter 4 of 2001–02.

National Health Service Act

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to use powers under section 97(6) of the National Health Service Act 1977 to ring-fence funds for the implementation of NICE guidance; and if he will make a statement as to his policy on the use of section 97(6). [67966]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 8 July 2002]: We have no plans to ring fence funds for the implementation of guidance from the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE). National health service organisations are expected to meet the cost of implementing NICE guidance from their general allocations.

Anti-psychotic Drugs

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to restrict the use of typical anti-psychotic drugs to a named patient basis. [67967]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 8 July 2002]: There are no plans to restrict the use of the traditional or typical anti-psychotic drugs to a named patient basis. The recently published guidance from the national institute for clinical excellence stated that oral atypical anti-psychotic drugs should be considered in the choice of first-line treatments for individuals with newly diagnosed schizophrenia and where there are unacceptable side effects with the typical anti-psychotics in people with a more long-established schizophrenic illness.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the implementation of the NICE guidance on atypical anti-psychotic drugs. [67965]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The Secretary of State has not received representations concerning the implementation of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence's guidance on atypical anti-psychotic drugs. The national health service has, since 1 January 2002, been required to provide appropriate funding for recommended treatments within three months of the publication of technology appraisal guidance.

Child Welfare

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many whole-time equivalent national health service (a) consultant child and adolescent psychiatrists, (b) clinical psychologists working with children and (c) psychotherapists working with children there are. [67970]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 8 July 2002]: The Department's non-medical work force census does not break down the area of work for clinical psychologists and psychotherapists. The information shown in the table for these two professions covers all staff, regardless of whether they work with children.

NHS hospital and community health services (HCHS): consultants working in the child and adolescent psychiatry specialty and qualified scientific, therapeutic and technical staff employed within the clinical psychology and psychotherapy areas of work as at 30 September 2001

	Whole time equivalents
Child and adolescent psychiatry consultants	420
Clinical psychologists	4,400
Psychotherapists	470

Health Professions Council

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made as regards grandparent rights for non state-registered chiropodists; and if he will make a statement on progress in the negotiations taking place under the auspices of the Health Professions Council. [67978]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 8 July 2002]: There is a continuing dialogue, facilitated by the Department, between the health professions council (HPC), those bodies representing the currently unregulated chiropody sector and those representing the regulated sector. The arrangements for grandparenting (the assimilation of unregulated practitioners to regulated status) will not be finalised until after the HPC have completed and analysed the results of their public consultation. This is likely to be April 2003.

Stalybridge and Hyde

James Purnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what impact his Department's policies have had on the Stalybridge and Hyde constituency since 1997. [54335]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 7 May 2002]: Detailed information on the impact of the Department's policies nationally is set out in the Department's annual reports. A copy of the most recent report 'Department of Health—Government Expenditure Plans 2001–02' is available in the Library and on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/dhreport

The impact of policies are not examined by constituency.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Nepal

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 8 July 2002, Official Report, column 702W, on Nepal, if she will make a statement on the failure of the Nepalese Government to allow journalists and aid agencies access to the western districts of Nepal. [69513]

Clare Short: UK funded development assistance, and that of other donor agencies too, continues throughout Nepal, including in many of the Mid- and Far-Western districts of the country where the conflict situation is worse. However, development staff based in Kathmandu do not, for security reasons, visit areas of active conflict. There are no Government restrictions per se.

There has been some press coverage recently of visits made by journalists to districts in the west of the country. However, the current State of Emergency is deterring many journalists from visiting parts of the country.

World Bank

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Meriden (Mrs. Spelman) of 8 July 2002, Official Report, column 613W, on World Bank loans, how much the UK Government contributed to the 12th Replenishment of the International Development Association IDA-12; and how much it contributed to IDA-13. [69515]

Clare Short: The British Government contributed £511m to the 12th Replenishment of the International Development Association (IDA-12), equating to a 7.3 per cent. share. This made the UK the joint fourth largest donor to IDA.

The UK's contribution to the 13th Replenishment of IDA (IDA-13) has not yet been finalised. An announcement will be made shortly.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Meriden (Mrs. Spelman) of 8 July 2002, Official Report, column 613W, on World Bank loans, what provisions are in place to ensure that the level of overall IDA resources does not decrease in future as a result of the conversion of some loans to grants; and if she will make a statement. [69514]

Clare Short: Around 40 per cent of the International Development Association's (IDA's) resources currently come from re-flows from previous loans being repaid. During negotiations for the 13th Replenishment of the International Development Association (IDA-13), the British Government argued consistently that if some loans were to be converted to grants under IDA-13, IDA donors should ensure that a scheme was agreed to compensate IDA for the resulting future loss in re-flows. Such a scheme would require donors to start putting aside a small amount of resources now and during future replenishments.

Very regrettably, IDA donors have not yet managed to agree such a scheme, despite strong UK pressure to do so. Donors have, however, accepted the principle that extra resources do need to be put aside in advance of future shortfalls. They have agreed to make a final decision on what sort of scheme should be used during the Mid-Term Review of IDA-13, which is scheduled to begin in around six months' time. The British Government will continue to press hard to ensure a satisfactory outcome which will protect IDA's long-term financial sustainability.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Service

Harry Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the collection of fines by the Court Service; [62600]

(2) what the level of arrears of fines was, and what percentage of fines had not been collected within the due time (a) in the last 12 months and (b) in the 12 month period before the change in the collection system; and if he will make a statement. [62601]

Yvette Cooper: Fines are imposed by both Magistrates' Courts and the Crown Court. The Crown Court is part of the Court Service, which is an executive agency of the Lord Chancellor's Department. The Court Service does not collect fines. Fines are collected by Magistrates' Courts and their staff, which constitute an independent local service with statutory powers for the enforcement and collection of financial penalties.

The Government are committed to improving the enforcement of financial penalties. Variations in performance across the country are too wide. We have transferred lead responsibility for warrant execution from the police to Magistrates' Courts Committees, on 1 April 2001.

We have established an information sharing scheme, which enables Magistrates' Courts to obtain basic information on defaulters from the Department for Work and Pensions. We have set performance targets for 2002–03 and Magistrates' Courts Committees have also been given nearly £10 million extra from April 2002, ring-fenced for enforcement purposes. We will monitor the position carefully to check that performance improves.

Magistrates' Courts Committees have responsibility for the collection of a range of debts imposed through the courts, including not only fines but also fees, compensation, confiscation orders, legal aid contributions and some maintenance orders. It is not possible to separate out just the fines from the total.

Arrears is described as the total of missed lump sums or missed instalments on impositions where deferred payment was allowed. The latest available figures for the level of arrears of all debt are:

(c) £246 million as at 31 March 2002; and

(d) £226 million as at 31 March 2001.

Data are only collected on the financial value of the debt, not the number of fines. Fines are normally payable from the moment of imposition unless time to pay is granted.

Since the transfer, the write-off rate has reduced from 19 per cent of total debt imposed in 2000–01 to 15 per cent. of total debt imposed in 2001–02, which was equivalent to £19.5 million.

Judiciary (Sexual Offences and Domestic Violence Cases)

Vera Baird: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will amend the rules of the Supreme Court to ensure that a woman judge is a member of appeal courts hearing a case concerning (a) rape, (b) other sexual offences and (c) domestic violence. [65211]

Yvette Cooper: The Government have no proposals to amend the Rules of the Supreme Court on the composition of courts hearing appeals.

Rape

Vera Baird: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to ensure that judges receive equivalent training about rape offences to that recommended for police and prosecutors by the HMIC/CPSI thematic inquiry into rape. [65213]

Yvette Cooper: Judicial Training is the responsibility of the Judicial Studies Board (JSB) which is an independent non-departmental public body. It is chaired by Lord Justice Waller.

The Board provides specialist training to those judges authorised to hear cases of rape through its regular Serious Sexual Offences Seminars.

The Criminal Committee of the JSB will be considering the comments made in the Joint Inspectors' Report over the coming months.

Vera Baird: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he will take to ensure that the recommendations of the Sentencing Advisory Panel on rape are implemented by the judiciary. [65210]

Yvette Cooper: The decision on whether or not to issue guidelines based on the Sentencing Advisory Panel's advice to the Court of Appeal is for that Court.

Fines

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of fine-defaulters were in receipt of income support and income-related jobseekers allowance in each year since 1990. [65119]

Yvette Cooper: It is not possible to provide proportions of fine defaulters who were in receipt of Income Support (IS) or Income-based Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA IB). The table below shows numbers of IS/JSA (IB) claimants at a point in time each year since 1994, with a deduction in force on their benefit for fines recovery. It is not possible to provide historical figures back to 1990 as fines recovery data was not collected.

Year	IS Claimants (1000s)	JSA (IB) Claimants (1000s)
May 1994	7	—
May 1995	9	—
May 1996	16	—
May 1997	14	8
May 1998	13	7
May 1999	13	6
May 2000	12	5
May 2001	13	4
Feb 2002	14	4

Notes:

1. Based on 5 per cent. sample, therefore subject to sampling variation.
2. IS figures from May 1994 to May 1997 include unemployed claimants claiming Income Support.
3. JSA (IB) replaced IS for the unemployed in October 1996.
4. Some Income-based JSA claimants may also have entitlement to benefit via the contributory route.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion of fines imposed by Sussex magistrates were (a) paid, (b) written off, (c) cancelled and (d) in arrears in each year since 1990. [65120]

Yvette Cooper: Magistrates' Courts Committees have responsibility for the collection of a range of debts imposed through the courts, including not only fines but also fees, compensation, confiscation orders, legal aid contributions and some maintenance orders. It is not possible to separate out just fines from the total.

Sussex Magistrates' Courts Committee IT system includes cancellations in the write off figures. The figures available for Sussex Magistrates' Courts Committee are as follows:

2001–02—Imposed: £7,990,163 (a) £4,106,942 (b) £2,462,123 (d) £3,441,695;

2000–01—Imposed: £9,066,983 (a) £4,648,440 (b) £3,475,773 (d) £2,728,719;

1999–2000—Imposed: £8,094,313 (a) £5,611,954 (b) £ 3,406,299 (d) £7,404,347.

Prior to 1999, the Magistrates' Courts Committees were not asked as part of their data collection to provide full-information on the amounts imposed, paid or cancelled. The national data for the period 1996 – 1998 for amounts "written off" were only collected for the last quarter of each calendar year; while the "amounts in arrears" show the position as at 31 December for each year.

1998—(b) £572,651 (d) £4,544,567;

1997—(b) £451,266 (d) £4,461,302;

1996—(b) £712,100 (d) £4,807,596.

For the period 1993 – 1995 only figures for the total arrears at the year's end are available:

1995—(d) £4,062,847;

1994—(d) £4,859,747,

1993—(d) £2,086,118. (Data only provided by East Sussex.)

Prior to 1993 data were not collected centrally.

Electoral Systems

Mr. Laws: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on (a) the (i) timing and (ii) structure of the proposed review of the new voting systems in the devolved administrations and (b) the report of the Jenkins Commission. [65572]

Yvette Cooper: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on Tuesday 3 July 2001 by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, Official Report, column 93W.

Magistrates' Court, Liverpool

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the total level of fines imposed by Liverpool Magistrates' Court was in each year since 1998–99. [66689]

Yvette Cooper: Magistrates' Courts have responsibility for the collection of a range of debts imposed through the courts, including not only fines but also fees, compensation, confiscation orders, legal aid contributions and some maintenance orders. It is not possible to separate out just fines from the total.

Liverpool Magistrates' Court has imposed the following amount of debt:

April 2001–March 2002—£3,754,209

April 2000–March 2001—£5,053,315

April 1999–March 2000—£5,523,974

April 1998–March 1999—£5,459,562

The fall in impositions over the period April 2001 to March 2002 was due to the fact that under the Human Rights Act introduced in October 2000 some of the accommodation at Liverpool was judged to be unsuitable and so work had to be transferred to other courts within Merseyside while remedial building work was completed at Liverpool.

TRANSPORT

South West Trains

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) for how long the Strategic Rail Authority has been in negotiation with South West Trains for its franchise renewal; [67427]

(2) when he intends to announce the South West Trains franchise renewal. [67425]

Mr. Spellar: The Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) signed heads of terms with Stagecoach in April 2001. Negotiation of a new franchise agreement is continuing. On 1 July the SRA announced that, while negotiations for a long-term franchise continue, the existing South West Trains franchise has been amended to provide a £29 million package of improvements for passengers including new Desiro trains.

M1

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reason a tall fence is being erected adjacent to the hard shoulder on the southbound carriageway of the M1 motorway south of junction 25; what the total cost is of the works; who authorised the same; and who is bearing the cost. [67764]

Mr. Spellar: The Highways Agency has received numerous complaints from local residents living adjacent to the M1 south of junction 25 about the high level of traffic noise. As part of the Government's "New Deal for Trunk Roads in England", revised criteria and a ring fenced annual budget have been established to help the Agency to deal with some of the most serious and pressing cases of noise from the motorway and trunk road network.

Following an initial assessment of sites on the network, the M1 junction 25 was identified as an area with a particular noise problem and was subsequently included in the list of locations to be prioritised for treatment published in Hansard in November 1999. This was followed by a detailed Scheme Identification Study to determine the most appropriate and viable method of reducing the noise problems at this location. Environmental barriers were found to be the most cost effective solution. A local consultation exercise was carried out in October 2000.

The estimated final cost of the works is £1.2 million, but this includes an element for the upgrade of part of the motorway communications network (approximately £130,000), which is being carried out at the same time. The work was authorised and is being funded by the Highways Agency.

Devolution

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the EU Committee on application of the legislation on access to the ground-handling market at Community airports is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if he will make a statement. [68596]

Mr. Jamieson: The mandate of the ground handling committee is to advise the Commission when member states apply for exemptions from the ground handling directive. There are no cases currently being considered by the committee and so there is no date set for its next meeting. Officials from my Department represent the UK on the Committee as policy responsibility on access to the groundhandling market is a reserved matter. However, my officials consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the Devolved Administrations.

Hazardous Cargoes

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vessels with hazardous cargoes have been allowed to transit a compulsory pilotage district since 12 December 2001 (a) in total and (b) without an authorised pilot on board. [68763]

Mr. Spellar: The Department does not hold this information nationally. The new arrangements for pilotage on the Humber began on 12 December 2001: it is understood that no vessels with bulk hazardous cargoes have been allowed to transit that pilotage district since that date without an authorised pilot on board.

Humber Pilots

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received on the countries of origin of the pilots' certificates of the Humber Pilots employed by ABP; and if he will make a statement. [69544]

Mr. Jamieson: None. The criteria for pilot applicants is a matter for the competent harbour authority, in accordance with the Pilotage Act 1987.

Rural Bus Services

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those schemes supported by the Rural Bus Challenge competition identified by his Department as providing best practice examples. [69352]

Mr. Jamieson: Research commissioned by my Department on the impact of the rural bus grant schemes introduced in 1998–99 is currently on-going. This work includes consideration of examples of good practice supported under the Rural Bus Challenge. The research report is expected by the end of this year and will be published.

Road Safety

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) fatal motor vehicle accidents, (b) fatalities, (c) motor vehicle accidents resulting in serious injury and (d) motor vehicle accidents requiring the attendance of an ambulance there were on the (i) A47 between Uppingham and Leicester and (ii) A52 between Barrowby and Bingham in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [69516]

Mr. Jamieson: The number of fatal accidents, fatalities and serious road accidents for the stretches of road requested are shown in the tables below. Information is not available on the number of accidents requiring the attendance of an ambulance.

Personal Injury Road Accidents and Casualties on the A47 Uppingham[1] to Leicester[2]

Year of Accident	Fatal accidents	Fatalities	Serious accidents
1997	2	3	1
1998	0	0	6
1999	2	3	8
2000	2	3	5
2001(P)	4	5	7

[1] Uppingham is taken as OS reference (48639,30066).

[2] Leicester is taken as OS reference (46145,30540).

(P) Figures for 2001 are provisional.

DEFENCE

Munitions

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) factors and (b) criteria were used by Defence Estates Organisation in their table-top evaluation of the likely sale value of Dean Hill Munitions Depot. [68912]

Mr. Ingram: In June 2001 Defence Estates SW provided an outline desktop valuation of the Dean Hill Munitions Site to advise the Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 Investment Appraisal.

The valuation was based on the estimated realisation price, assuming that the sites had been subject to a Phase 2 Land Quality Assessment. It had been proposed that the eventual value for the site would be abated by the cost of the remedial work once known. Site inspections were permitted. However, in view of the sensitivity of the issues and as the purpose was to inform an investment appraisal, no approach was made to the local planning authority at that stage.

Due to the absence of clear planning guidance, with the exception of the residential property and agricultural land, the possible future uses of the remainder of the site were limited, The value was established by assuming disposal of the residential and agricultural property, and based on the limited redevelopment and re-use of the remaining area for potential employment uses.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many copies of Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 Consultative Document (D/DM/72/46/1) dated 24 June were printed; and if he will list the locations to which they were distributed. [69422]

Mr. Ingram: 131 hard copies of the Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 Consultative Document were printed. These were distributed to:

46 to National Trades Union officials at various locations nationwide, 57 to civilian employees at Defence Munitions (DM) Dean Hill, 21 to the Ministry of Defence Police Officers stationed at DM Dean Hill. One copy each to the DM Whitley, Vice Chair and Vice Secretaries at DM Longtown (Cumbria), DM Beith (Ayrshire), DM Kineton (Warwickshire) and London.

Three copies for internal MOD distribution (one Bath, one Andover, one Wethersfield (Essex).

In the interests of openness, efficiency and better use of resources, the Consultative Document itself has been posted on the Defence Munitions Web Site where it can be viewed by MOD staff as required. It was also sent electronically to each Defence Munitions establishment at Beith, Crombie, Glen Douglas, Gosport, Kineton, Longtown and Plymouth. Each DM Depot reproduced sufficient hard copies from this for their local needs as appropriate. Main MOD customers and stakeholders were advised of the existence of the Consultative Document on the DM Web Site.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Director of Military Operations participated in Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2. [68908]

Mr. Ingram: Director of Military Operations did not participate in the Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2. The study drew its knowledge of anticipated Tri Service munitions requirements from both the current and future munitions equipment owners who were asked to take into account the latest output from the Ministry of Defence's Stockpile Planning Group.

Other MOD customers and internal stakeholders (particularly Strike Command given the nature of the RAF tasks currently undertaken at Defence Munitions Dean Hill) have been made aware of the proposal to close DM Dean Hill.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of whether the recommendations of Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 will achieve a 20 per cent reduction in operating costs by March 2004. [68914]

Mr. Ingram: Defence Munitions is part of the DG Defence Supply Chain (DG Def SC) that, in turn, is part of the Defence Logistics Organisation. Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 identified a number of potential efficiency initiatives pertinent to the Defence Munitions environment, including the proposal to close Defence Munitions Dean Hill. Taken together as a package these initiatives will, if implemented, contribute towards the DG Def SC Strategic Plan which is designed to deliver a 20 per cent reduction in operating costs by Financial Year 2005–06.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what modifications were made to the terms of reference for Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 after 11 September 2001. [68913]

Mr. Ingram: There were no modifications made to the Terms of Reference for the Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 after 11 September 2001.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the team responsible for Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 presented their final report. [68910]

Mr. Ingram: The Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 presented their final report to the Defence Munitions Management Board in February 2002. There then followed an internal Departmental approvals procedure which culminated in a submission to Minister (Armed Forces) in June 2002.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 included a strategic analysis. [68909]

Mr. Ingram: Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 was in itself a strategic analysis of the Defence Munitions business. Among those elements addressed were:

Capacity versus long-term liability
Risk to outputs
Uniqueness of facilities
Transferability of tasks
Proximity to customers
Health and safety and explosives safety regulations
Scale and quality of facilities
Cost of transferring tasks
Remediation
Potential savings to operating costs
Potential site realisable value

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if private sector commercial advice was sought by (a) Defence Estates Organisation and (b) the Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 team in their assessment of the likely sale value of Dean Hill Munitions Depot. [68911]

Mr. Ingram: In June 2001 Defence Estates South West were requested to provide an outline desktop valuation of the Dean Hill Munitions Site to inform the Defence Munitions Rationalisation Study 2 Investment Appraisal. Given the nature of the valuation requested no external advice was sought.

HMS Nottingham

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the last refit of HMS Nottingham was; how long she has been deployed on her current deployment; what task she is carrying out; and if he will make a statement. [68771]

Mr. Ingram: HMS Nottingham's last refit began in August 1999 and she returned to the Fleet in February 2001 following sea trials.

HMS Nottingham deployed from Portsmouth on 18 March 2002 and was scheduled to return to the United Kingdom on 6 December 2002. She deployed for duties as the Five Power Defence Arrangements (FPDA) ship but was subsequently assigned to Operation ORACLE in support of the fight against terrorism and was being held at notice for this purpose while deployed to the Asia Pacific to honour our commitments to the FPDA. The main focus of this deployment was to have been participation in the FPDA Exercise STARDEX in September with other FPDA partners (Australia, Malaysia, New Zealand and Singapore). HMS Nottingham was also scheduled to undertake a series of visits in support of Defence Diplomacy, wider security objectives, and Defence Export Services and United Kingdom industry initiatives. Her immediate programme will no longer proceed. The impact on Fleet programming is being assessed.

Prisoners of War/Unlawful Combatants

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is his policy to treat POWs and captured unlawful combatants in the same manner. [69008]

Mr. Hoon: It is the Government's policy to treat both POWs and unlawful combatants in accordance with their rights under the Geneva Convention.

Rosyth Dockyard

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is the intention of his Department to cease the allocation of surface ship refits to Rosyth Dockyard in 2005; and what plans he has to allocate further refits to Rosyth Dockyard. [69402]

Mr. Ingram: The last refit in the programme of surface ship work allocated to Rosyth Dockyard is due to be completed in 2005. There are no plans to allocate further refit work to the Dockyard, as the Department is opening up the wider ship refit and repair programme to competition. Rosyth Dockyard is expected to bid for that work.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Pig Industry

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what representations she has received from the UK pig industry about overseas restrictions on the export of British pigs; [64463]

(2) what representations she has made, and to which countries, to remove restrictions on the export of pigs from the United Kingdom. [64462]

Margaret Beckett: I have received a number of letters from the UK pig industry, which is naturally anxious that overseas restrictions on the import of British pigs are removed as soon as possible. The Chief Veterinary Officer wrote to his opposite numbers in other countries on 25 January this year asking them to recognise the UK's foot and mouth disease free status and requesting import certification requirements for livestock and genetic material. Officials in my Department are working closely with representatives from the livestock industry to identify the priority markets and to pursuade those countries to lift any remaining restrictions. The priority countries for pigs and porcine genetic material include Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Cyprus, Czech Republic, Estonia, Hungary, Korea, Latvia, Lithuania, Malaysia, Malta, Mexico, Philippines, Poland, Romania, Slovenia, Slovak Republic, South Africa, Thailand, USA. This is being pursued by a variety of methods such as lobbying officials at trade shows, bringing them in on inward missions, getting British Embassies to make representations and through further correspondence.

Fox Hunting

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which interested parties received an invitation to contribute to the consultation on the future of fox hunting; which of those bodies she (a) has met and (b) plans to meet before the consultation finishes; and if she will make a statement. [64362]

Margaret Beckett: My right hon. Friend, the Minister of State for Rural Affairs (Alun Michael) continues to meet with representatives of the three main interest organisations on a regular basis. They are the Countryside Alliance, the Middle Way Group and the Campaign for the Protection of the Hunted Animal. In addition to these regular meetings, he is holding a number of meetings with a wide range of groups with more specific interests

Following my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 21 March, he has written to all Members of both Houses of Parliament, Welsh Assembly members, interested individuals and interested organisations.

Overcharging

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action she is taking to implement the NAO recommendation on the pursuit of cases where the Department believes it was overcharged for goods and services and the investigation and resolution of irregularities in contractors' claims. [65188]

Mr. Morley: The accounts of the principal contractors used by DEFRA during the FMD outbreak have been the subject of detailed examination. This has been an extensive exercise as the contractors concerned carried out work to the value of hundreds of millions of pounds involving the generation of tens of thousands of invoices. This work is on-going.

It has necessitated DEFRA obtaining legal advice from a number of external law firms as well as the establishment of invoicing panels and commercial teams staffed by forensic accountants and quantity surveyors, all of whom come from external professional firms.

It is on the recommendation of these panels and teams following examination of the accounts that further payments have been made by DEFRA to contractors and/or deductions have been sought from the contractors' invoiced sums. In many cases, the deductions have been substantial. The process is on-going.

Wide-ranging issues have arisen on the accounts. These include legal issues such as matters of contractual interpretation, forensic accountancy issues and evidential issues involving the assessment of both a large amount of documentation and proofing of witnesses.

Some of these disputes will inevitably result in court proceedings although DEFRA remains committed to resolving matters by mediation where appropriate. We will have no hesitation in taking whatever action is required to protect taxpayer interest in the light of forensic examination of the accounts of contractors.

EU Management Committee

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Management Committee of the common organisations of agricultural markets for poultrymeat and eggs is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [64889]

Mr. Morley: The next meeting of the EU Poultrymeat and Eggs Management Committee will be held on Tuesday, 17 September 2002. UK representation depends on the agenda items under discussion. Officials from the Scottish Executive and other devolved Administrations attend as necessary in accordance with their interests. However, there have been no occasions in the last 12 months where the Scottish Executive have sought to have an official form part of the delegation.

CO_2 Emissions

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the implementation of the Directive relating to the availability of consumer information on fuel economy and CO_2 emissions in respect of the marketing of new passenger cars is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66460]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

At present there are no meetings of the Committee of Directive 99/94/EC scheduled. Fuel consumption and CO_2 labelling of passenger cars is a reserved issue and Committee meetings would therefore generally be attended by officials of the Department for Transport only. However, officials will continue to ensure that their counterparts in the Devolved Administrations are kept informed of developments in this area and consulted on any proposals to amend the directive put to the Committee.

My response on 21 May 2002 to the hon. Member for Buckingham (John Bercow), Official Report, column 214W–15W, was incorrect. It stated that this Committee had not yet met, whereas it did in fact meet on 15 November 2000 to agree a format for reporting on the effectiveness of the Directive. Since this question was answered, the Committee has met a further time although as yet no proposals to amend the Directive have been received.

Marine Pollution

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the EU Committee for the implementation of the Community framework for co-operation in the field of accidental or deliberate marine pollution is next due to meet; whether experts nominated by the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [66450]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

The Management Committee on Marine Pollution is scheduled to meet on 4 October 2002 in Brussels. Officials from the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA), part of my Department, represents the UK on the Committee. However, my officials consult the Scottish Executive on agenda items in which it might have an interest in accordance with our Concordat with the Devolved Administrations.

Bovine TB

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average time taken is (a) in the territory of each of her Department's regional offices, and (b) in England, between an animal reacting positive to a test for Bovine TB and that animal being taken for slaughter. [65472]

Margaret Beckett: The information requested is given in the table below.

The average length of time taken to remove TB-infected reactors from farms in each State Veterinary Service region with a breakdown between 21 June 2001 and 20 June 2002

SVS Region	Number of observations	Average no. days between date of reading the tuberculin test and date of slaughter
West	968	30.4
East	21	13.1
North	92	9.7
England total	1081	17.7

Note:

The TB-infected reactors reported are animals with a reaction to the tuberculin test that were compulsorily slaughtered and had samples submitted to VLA for microbiology. Provided that they (a) had lesions of TB visible at the slaughterhouse, and/or (b) VLA found the TB organism in the sample.

The time reported represents the number of days between reading the skin test and removing an animal from the farm.

Figures for West region include cases where animals became reactors in the month before the disruption of normal TB control procedures caused by Foot and Mouth Disease.

Comprehensive Spending Review

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many staff have contributed to her Department's input to the Spending Review. [68680]

Mr. Morley: A small team of six staff reporting to the Director of Finance has co-ordinated input to the Spending Review, drawing on material contributed by staff across the Department.

National Parks

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the report of the Review of National Park Authorities will be published. [70288]

Mr. Michael: The report will be published tomorrow. Copies will be available in the House libraries and the vote office. The report will also be available on the Department's website: www:efra.gsi.gov.uk/countryside-wildlife. The responses to the public consultation will be deposited in the Department's library.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Boris Johnson: To ask the Solicitor-General what category of offences require the appointment of (a) a senior Treasury counsel, (b) a leading junior counsel and (c) a disclosure counsel by the CPS. [68084]

Solicitor-General: There are no categories of offence which require the appointment of a particular type of counsel but guidance is as follows:

(a) Senior Treasury counsel:

The appointment of Treasury Counsel ought to be considered for prosecutions of the following offences:

Murder (including attempt/conspiracy/incitement).

Manslaughter.

Offences involving terrorism.

Official Secrets Act.

Unduly Lenient Sentences.

Cases where the Director (or the court) wishes to brief counsel as Amicus (Advocate to the Court), e.g. where PII is an issue.

Obscene Publications Act offences involving difficult questions of law or which are considered "sensitive", e.g. racial hatred.

Offences of "special rarity", e.g. blasphemy, piracy.

Serious offences committed by public servants (including police officers) tried at the Crown Court, the magistrates having declined jurisdiction.

Serious offences by a public figure or person in the public eye.

Serious offences by a CPS employee.

Large scale public disorder.

Serious offences where the evidence includes a participating informer/cover police operation.

Offences where the prosecution is likely to make an ex parte application to withhold disclosure of sensitive material on PII grounds.

Offences by members of organised crime syndicates, e.g. Mafia; Triads; Yardies.

Multiple indictable only offences committed by one or more people, e.g. serial/gang rapes.

Robberies where a firearm was discharged.

Large scale/complex frauds.

"Sensitive" frauds, e.g. frauds:

- (i) involving foreign government or foreign public bodies;
- (ii) involving British public bodies or public figures in this country as either victims or defendants, e.g. very high profile businessmen; national or local politicians;

Local government officers; persons holding public office:

- (i) which might generate grave public disquiet, e.g. offences by doctors or pharmacists against hospitals or the NHS;
- (ii) involving national or local government spending and procurement;
- (iii) where public confidence may be undermined, e.g. Pension fund frauds.

The list is not exhaustive and there will be other cases of sensitivity or complexity, which, regardless of the offence type, may warrant instructing Treasury Counsel.

Treasury Counsel are appointed by the Attorney General to advise on, and if necessary present, on behalf of the Crown Prosecution Service, prosecutions of important and complex cases at the Central Criminal Court and other London Courts.

(b) leading junior counsel

The CPS will adopt objective criteria in its decision to instruct a leading junior counsel. This will depend on a number of factors:

Number of defendants charged on the indictment.

The volume of the case (pages of documents).

The weight and complexity of the evidence.

Whether there are significant factors of gravity, sensitivity complexity or responsibility to warrant a leading junior counsel.

(c) disclosure counsel by the CPS

The appointment/instruction of a disclosure counsel is considered by the CPS according to the merits of the individual case rather than by reference to any category of offences.

The term "disclosure counsel" is not commonly applied across CPS. In a small number of cases, junior counsel can be instructed specifically to assist in complex cases where there are voluminous quantities of unused material to be examined.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Drugs (Sport)

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will place a copy of Dr. Richard Johnson's report on drugs administration in the UK commissioned by the UK Sports Council in the Library. [69508]

Mr. Caborn: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the member for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey) on 9 July 2002, Official Report, column 865W.

Overseas Tourist Offices

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, how many tourist offices the UK has overseas; where they are located; and what plans she has to extend the UK tourist offices overseas. [66084]

Dr. Howells [pursuant to his reply, 4 July 2002, c. 515W]: The British Tourist Authority is active in Austria, Finland and Saudi Arabia but does not have physical offices in these countries. These markets are operated from the BTA's offices in Zurich, Stockholm and Dubai respectively.

CABINET OFFICE

Government Targets

Tony Wright: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will list those targets which apply across Government and which are not contained in individual Departments' public service agreements. [64608]

Mr. Alexander: The Cabinet Office is responsible for the following such targets.

Targets which apply across government have been incorporated into its own Public Service Agreement (PSA) and across Departments through the guidance on Service Delivery Agreements (SDAs) which underpin PSAs. Examples include targets on:

electronic delivery;

handling correspondence promptly;

Civil Service Reform including diversity, interchange, sickness absence and other aspects of managing people.

Departmental PSAs/SDAs and related guidance are available on the HM Treasury website.

An area which is not currently included in PSA/SDAs is the National Learning Targets for 2002 which were adopted by the Civil Service in 1999:

50 per cent of adults to have at least a "level 3" qualification (roughly equivalent to 2 A-levels);

28 per cent of adults to have at least a "level 4" qualification (roughly equivalent to a first degree).

These are monitored separately by the Civil Service Corporate Management and Reform group within Cabinet Office.

TREASURY

Waste Minimisation

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set aside funds in the comprehensive spending review to invest in waste minimisation. [68670]

Mr. Boateng: Spending Review 2002 is still under way, and until its completion it would be premature to comment on specific elements.

Waste growth is part of the broader challenge of reforming waste management in the UK. The Performance and Innovation Unit is currently undertaking a thorough review of waste policy, and waste minimisation is one of the issues that the Performance and Innovation Unit will address in their forthcoming report.

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times since December 1998 he has met Ministers from other Government Departments to review progress in achieving public service agreements; and if he will make a statement. [69299]

Mr. Boateng: The Cabinet Committee on Public Services and Public Expenditure, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, meets regularly to discuss progress by departments against their PSA targets.

Barnett Formula

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the calculations relating to the provision for Scotland under the Barnett formula are based upon spend per head of population on (a) health and (b) education. [69400]

Mr. Boateng: The Barnett formula provides the devolved Administrations with a population based share of comparable increases in spending of UK Government departments, including the Department of Health and the Department for Education and Skills.

Contingent Liabilities

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list contingent liabilities incurred by Government departments since May 1997 with the permission of the Treasury; and if he will make a statement. [69349]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to the Consolidated Fund and National Loans Fund Accounts Supplementary Statements. Those for 2000–01 were published on 19 December 2001 (HC 381 of 2000–01) and follow the reporting pattern in the Supplementary Statements for each of the financial years from 1997–98 to 1999–2000. They list all non-statutory contingent liabilities which are reportable to Parliament under the guidance in chapter 26 of Government Accounting. The guidance requires a department, when reporting a contingent liability to state that the Treasury has approved it in principle. The Supplementary Statements also list all statutory contingent liabilities incurred where they are above £100,000.

Travel Insurance

Clive Efford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to review the regulation of the selling of travel insurance. [69512]

Ruth Kelly: The Treasury will issue a consultation document on the proposed new regulatory regime for the sale of general insurance following the adoption of the Insurance Mediation Directive.

Silver Items

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his plans are for the future of the Treasury's silver items formerly associated with the Privy Council. [70452]

Ruth Kelly: The Treasury has agreed to transfer the items concerned to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. This will ensure that the cost of holding them is borne by the Department whose objectives include broadening access for all to a rich and varied cultural life. That Department will lend them to the Victoria and Albert Museum, on condition that they are shared with appropriate regional institutions. The transfer will ensure that the items are available to public view for the first time in many years.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Licences

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many arms export licences have been granted in the last 12 months; how many have been rejected; and if she will make a statement. [66750]

Ms Hewitt: Between 1 July 2001 and 1 July 2002 the Department of Trade and Industry's Export Control Organisation issued 6,449 Standard Individual Export Licences (SIELs) and 312 Open Individual Export Licences (OIELs) for items on the military list. During that same period the ECO refused 137 SIEL and 4 OIEL applications in full, for items on the military list.

Details of all relevant export licences issued and refused are published in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls; copies of which are placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when a decision will be made in relation to individual export licence applications numbered 35307, 35313, 35315 and 35316. [68051]

Ms Hewitt: Licences to export arms and other items whose export is controlled for strategic reasons are issued by me as Secretary of State for Trade and Industry acting through the Export Control Organisation (ECO).

Decisions have not yet been reached on export licence applications 35307, 35313, 35315 and 35316, but will be taken as quickly as possible consistent with the need to give full consideration to the issues involved.

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration is given during the deliberation of export licence applications to the recent human rights record of the country to which the items in question are being exported; and if she will make a statement. [68510]

Mr. O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

All relevant export licence applications are rigorously assessed on a case by case basis against the consolidated EU and national arms export licensing criteria, in the light of the circumstances prevailing at the time and taking account of other relevant factors. The consolidated criteria were announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Europe in a written reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Laura Moffatt) on 26 October 2000, Official Report, column 199–203W. The criteria clearly set out our commitment to take account of the risk that exports might be used for internal repression. In making our assessments we take account of reliable evidence, including for example, reporting from diplomatic posts, relevant reports by international bodies, intelligence and information from open sources and non-governmental organisations. This will include any relevant information about the recent human rights record of the recipient country.

Recycling

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of (a) paper and (b) other goods purchased by her Department was recycled paper in each year since 1997; what the annual total cost of these purchases was; what plans there are to increase these proportions; and if he will make a statement. [65764]

Ms Hewitt: The proportion and cost of recycled paper purchased is as follows:

Year	Proportion of recycled per cent	Annual Cost (£)
1997–98	18	55,333
1998–99	11	36,999
1999–2000	44	104,817
2000–01	61	137,985
2001–02	68	141,540

Information on the proportion of recycled paper in other goods purchased is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

I am fully committed to increasing the proportion of recycled paper that is being used and my Department is working closely with our stationery supplier to achieve this. An environmental switch programme was recently introduced for the purchase of copier paper via the on-line stationery ordering system. This involves an automatic switch to the recycled option whenever copier paper is selected.

National Weights and Measures Laboratory

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what targets she has set her Department's National Weights and Measures Laboratory. [70222]

Miss Johnson: I have set the National Weights and Measures Laboratory the following quality of service and efficiency targets for 2002–03.

Financial Targets To report a deficit of no more than £310,000 in the Income and Expenditure Account for 2002–03.

To achieve £566,000 worth of new external income during the next four years.

Efficiency Target To contribute to continuous efficiency improvement by ensuring that total overhead costs are less than 58 per cent. of total costs.

Operational Targets To meet the expectations of its customers by completing at least 90 per cent. of European type approvals within 10 weeks.

To complete European type approvals within an average of 5 weeks.

To complete calibration jobs within the time requested by customers, with at least 95 per cent. of all jobs (including preparation of certificates) completed within 18 working days of acceptance of the work and an average completion time of less than 14 days.

To complete 72 per cent. of the milestones schedule for year 1 of the National Measurement System (NMS) legal metrology programme by their due dates.

To satisfy all its customers as demonstrated by at least 95 per cent. of them rating NWML's provision of services as satisfactory or better.

Questions Delegated to the Chief Executive Chief Executive to reply within 10 working days to all letters from Members of Parliament delegated to him for reply.

Scientific Research

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the total amount spent on scientific research that has taken place in the UK in each of the last five years; and what her estimate is of the proportions that were funded (a) privately and (b) publicly. [61092]

Ms Hewitt: The total amount spent on research and development in the UK in £ billion is as follows:

	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999
Cash terms	14,172	14,470	14,781	15,582	16,663
Real terms (base year = 1999)	15,827	15,656	15,551	15,940	16,663

The percentage funded privately (businesses and private non-profit organisations) and publicly (government departments, Research Councils and Funding Councils) is as follows:

	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999
Private	52	51	54	51	54
Public	34	33	32	32	29

The balance (14 to 18 per cent.) comes from abroad and includes contributions from the EU. Further information can be found in Table 6.3 on the Science, Engineering and Technology Statistics website at http://www.dti.gov.uk/ost/setstats.

The increase in the level of R&D investment by the private sector funders indicates that greater "leverage" is being achieved by the Government investment in science, and that the publicly funded UK Science Base is fit for purpose in meeting the requirements of those other groups in society which fund.

Nuclear Industry (Special Advisers)

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many special advisers in her Department (a) have had experience of the nuclear industry and (b) of advising the nuclear industry. [69399]

Ms Hewitt: No special adviser in the department has, or ever has had, a commercial relationship with a company in the nuclear industry. However they have experience of working with representatives of the nuclear industry and will consult with them from time to time as part of their current job, just as they consult routinely with other companies, organisations and interest groups.

Ministerial Visits (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the (a) date, (b) location and (c) purpose was of visits by Ministers in her Department to Wales since 1997; and when she next intends to visit Wales. [62071]

Ms Hewitt: Since 1999 this Government have published an annual list of all visits undertaken by Cabinet Ministers costing £500 or more during each financial year. This Government have also published on an annual basis the cost of all Ministers' visits overseas. Information in respect of UK travel is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

All travel is undertaken fully in accordance with the guidelines set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

DTI Ministers have plans to undertake engagements in Wales before the end of the year.

EU Committees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EU Committee on Projects of Common Interest in the Field of trans-European Telecommunications Networks (TEN-telecom) is next due to meet; whether representatives of the Scottish Executive (a) have been and (b) are members of it; and if she will make a statement. [68572]

Ms Hewitt: The Committee on the trans-European telecommunications networks (TEN-Telecom) programme is next due to meet on 29 October 2002. One official from the Department of Trade and Industry normally represents all of the UK. Officials from the devolved Administrations are consulted as appropriate.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many oral questions she has transferred to other departments in each of the last 18 months. [67048]

Ms Hewitt: The information is as follows:

	Number
January 2001	0
February	0
March	3
May	3
July	3
November (2 oral sessions)	8
January 2002	2
February	2

World Trade Organisation

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the Government's negotiating position with regard to (a) TRIPS and (b) GATS with the WTO framework. [66867]

Ms Hewitt: On TRIPS, we are strong advocates of the need to find a solution by the end of 2002 to the problem of the difficulties which some WTO Members could face in making effective use of compulsory licensing under the TRIPS Agreement as a result of having insufficient or no manufacturing capacities in the pharmaceutical sector.

Beyond that, we support continued discussions in the TRIPS Council on the relationship between TRIPS and the Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD) and how TRIPS and the CBD can be implemented in a mutually supportive manner.

We also support the EC position in the TRIPS Council on considering the possible extension of protection for Geographical Indications.

On GATS, the Government strongly support the current negotiations. The UK is the second largest exporter of services in the world. Our aim is to achieve further steps in the progressive liberalisation of trade in services, which we believe will have a positive impact not only on our own economic interests but also on the development of developing countries. That said, the EC has made clear in its liberalisation requests that it is not seeking the dismantling of public services nor the privatisation of state owned companies. Under GATS, countries cannot be forced to privatise services where it is not in their interest to do so.

Business Regulation

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received to reduce the regulatory burden on businesses by introducing regulations that would lapse after a certain time period. [69077]

Nigel Griffiths: The Government's policy is always to consider whether sunset clauses ought to be included in legislation it brings forward.

These are appropriate particularly where technology in a given sector is changing rapidly, where a given piece of legislation deals with a situation which is itself expected to last only for a given period of time (e.g., a road closure), or where an issue is so sensitive that it is considered appropriate that it should be regularly debated and reviewed.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Church Commission Properties

Ms Buck: To ask the hon. Member for Middlesbrough representing the Church Commissioners, how many Church Commission properties are let on assured shorthold tenancies; and how many tenants holding assured shorthold tenancies have not had these renewed on request in the last three years. [68246]

Mr. Bell: The Church Commissioners have 781 Assured Shorthold Tenancies. No records are kept as to how many tenants do not have their tenancies renewed upon request but it is estimated that there have been approximately 25 such cases in the last three years.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average time has been between initial decisions in asylum cases and the hearing of appeals arising from them in the last 12 months. [68637]

Beverley Hughes: The requested information is not available and could only be obtained by examination of individual cases files thereby incurring a disproportionate cost.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers from Zimbabwe have been turned back at point of entry since 15 January. [49967]

Beverley Hughes: The Government are committed to ensuring that this country adheres to its obligations under the 1951 Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees, and that those who are fleeing persecution are given the protection they need. It is not Home Office policy to turn asylum seekers back at ports of entry to the United Kingdom at any time before their claims are fully considered, unless there is an alternative safe country which should be responsible for considering the claim.

On 15 January 2002, we announced a temporary suspension of returns of unsuccessful asylum applicants to Zimbabwe. We will resume returns only when we are satisfied that it is safe to do so. We are monitoring events in the aftermath of the Zimbabwe presidential election before making a decision on the resumption of returns.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average time taken was from first application to initial decison in asylum cases in each of the last six months. [68647]

Beverley Hughes: The data requested are given in the table.

Average time from date of application to initial decision for initial decisions made between October 2001 and March 2002[1,2,3,4]

Month of initial decision	Average time (months) to initial decision
October 2001	12
November 2001	11
December 2001	8
January 2002	8
February 2002	7
March 2002	7

[1] Excluding dependants.

[2] Figures are estimates based on cases for which information is recorded.

[3] The average length of time (in months) is calculated from date application is lodged to the date of initial decision, and relates to the month in which the decisions were made.

[4] Provisional data. These data are still subject to revision following quality checking.

The corresponding figure for April 1997 was 20 months.

The latest provisional data indicate that 53 per cent. of applications[5] received in the period April to December 2001, inclusive, had initial decisions reached and served within two months[6]. The data are subject to revision following the results of further data cleansing. Data for 2001–2002 will be published on the Home Office RDS website on 30 August, subject to data quality.

[5] The Immigration and Nationality Directorate's (IND's) target for 2001–02 is to reach and serve initial decisions on 60 per cent of applications. These exclude 3rd country cases which may be the responsibility of other European Union member states under the terms of the Dublin Convention,. Details of government targets relating to the proportion of decisions served within two months are provided in the 2000 Spending Review Public Service Agreements White Paper available from http://www.treasury.gov.uk/

[6] "Two months" is defined as 61 days.

ASBOs

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many ASBOs have been made in Surrey in each of the last 12 months. [68624]

Mr. Denham: Anti-social behaviour orders (ASBOs) were introduced from 1 April 1999. The data given in the table show the number of ASBOs reported to the Home Office up to the end of December 2001 (latest available).

Number of anti-social behaviour orders issued within Surrey from 1 April 1999 to 31 December 2001.

1 April 1999– 31 December 2000[1]	1 January 2001– 31 December 2001	Total

[1] From 1 April 1999 to 31 May 2000 information collected on the total number of ASBOs issued by police force area only.

We are currently considering whether any further checks are needed to ensure the accuracy of the number reported.

Pension Schemes

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the proportion of the rise in Government liabilities resulting from unfunded parts of the police and fire pension scheme in the last five years due to (a) wage inflation, (b) longevity, (c) extension of the rights of part-time workers and (d) other factors; and if he will make a statement. [67025]

Mr. Denham: In relation to the police pension scheme, which is unfunded, I refer the hon. Member to the answer of 1 July 2002 given by myself to the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Andrew Turner), Official Report, column 186W. There is no baseline at present by which to measure the increase in liabilities, but the main driving factors are price inflation, and real earnings growth for current employees and new pensioners.

Matters relating to firefighters' pensions are for my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister.

ID Cards

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce ID cards; at what estimated cost; and if he will make a statement. [67203]

Beverley Hughes: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary made a statement to the House on 3 July 2002, announcing the publication of a consultation paper on Entitlement Cards and Identity Fraud. The consultation period will last until 10 January 2003. The Government have made it clear that the introduction of an entitlement card would be a major step and that it would not proceed without consulting widely and considering all the views expressed very carefully.

The paper includes a number of estimates of what a scheme would cost, depending on the sophistication of the card. A reasonable estimate would be that a scheme would cost around £1.5 billion over a 13 year period covering the three years it would take to set up the necessary Information Technology systems and the 10 year period for which the first cards would be valid.

This would include much more stringent identity checks than currently apply for passports and driving licences in response to increased levels of fraudulent applications.

It would also include the costs of using biometric information (fingerprints or iris images) which would uniquely link the card holder with a card.

This estimate does not include any savings to Government through more efficient administration and reductions in fraud. The paper also sets out how the costs might be recovered through increases in fees for driving licences and passports and charging a fee for entitlement cards issued to those who did not qualify for or who did not want to apply for a card in the form of a photocard driving licence or passport card. It would not be the Government's intention to use funds allocated for investment in public services for a card scheme.

Brixton Cannabis Experiment

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the objectives and criteria for success were of the Brixton experiment on policing cannabis use. [67191]

Mr. Ainsworth: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the key objective for the Lambeth cannabis pilot study was to allow police officers to devote more time to deal with serious crimes by reducing the amount of time they spent at the police station completing the necessary paperwork associated with persons arrested for the possession of cannabis.

During the initial pilot period, a total of 13:50 hours were saved.

Over the period of the pilot there was a 10 per cent. increase in arrests for Class A dealings, and a 44 per cent. increase in arrests for dealing crack.

Police

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people died in police custody in 2001. [68017]

Mr. Denham: Sixty-four people died in police custody or otherwise following contact with the police during 2001. Two of these deaths occurred in police stations.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the overall crime detection rate for each police force in England in each year from 1990–91 to 2001–02; if he will rank each force in order of highest to lowest detection rate for the latest year for which information is available; and if he will make a statement. [66883]

Mr. Denham: Details for the calendar years 1990 to 1997, and financial years thereafter, were published in table 2.11 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales 2000", and are given in the table.

There was a change in counting rules for recorded crime on 1 April 1998, which increased the total number of crimes counted in each police force area, and therefore may have affected the detection rate. Detection rates after this date are therefore not directly comparable with previous years.

There was a change in the counting rules for detections on 1 April 1999, the new instructions providing more precise and rigorous criteria for securing a detection, with the underlying emphasis on the successful result of a police investigation. For example, detections obtained by the interview of a convicted prisoner were no longer included. Numbers of detections before and after this date are therefore not directly comparable.

As different police forces have different crime mixes, comparing overall detection rates between forces is of limited value. This is because different types of crime tend to have different detection rates, and so a police force with which has a higher proportion of types of crime with high detection rates will tend to have a higher overall detection rate. Also, police forces may give priority to tackling particular types of crime, with the detection rate of those crimes having some effect on the force's overall detection rate.

Police Custody

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) fatalities and (b) suicides have taken place among those in police custody in each year since 1992. [68234]

Mr. Denham: The Home Office publishes annual statistics of deaths in police custody or otherwise following contact with the police. Relevant figures derived from those statistics are shown in the following table. Statistics for 2001–02 are currently being finalised.

Year	Total number of deaths in police custody	Deaths that occurred in police stations	Inquest verdicts of suicide	Inquest verdicts awaited

Crime Fighting Fund

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what level he plans to set the crime fighting fund in future years; and what plans he has to fund an increase in the number of police officers. [68040]

Mr. Denham: Under the Government's Crime Fighting Fund (CFF) recruitment initiative, forces have been allocated funding for 9,000 recruits over and above their previous recruitment plans for the three years to March 2003 which will ensure a total 130,000 officers by April 2003.

£454 million has been provided to cover the cost of officers recruited under the scheme during these three years. In addition, the Spending Review 2000 also provided £272 million for 2003–04 to meet the continuing cost of officers recruited under the CFF initiative.

Provision for funding CFF officers beyond 2003–04 is a matter for the current Spending Review. Further provision for the Crime Fighting Fund or other central government funding specifically to increase the number of police officers will be determined in the light of the outcome of the Spending Review 2002.

Police Authority Budgets

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what adjustments he proposes to make to the base budget of police authorities relating to funding for officers. [68039]

Mr. Denham: Total Standard Spending for police authorities will be determined in the light of the outcome of the Spending Review 2002. It is for police authorities to determine their own budgets in the light of funding available to them.

PC Taiwo Oduntan

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police service and inspectorate is reporting to him on the assault on British Transport police constable Taiwo Oduntan. [68074]

Mr. Denham: Sussex Police are investigating the matter on behalf of the Metropolitan Police Service, as agreed by the Police Complaints Authority. The Police Complaints Authority inform us that the agreed terms of reference are:

> To investigate objectively and thoroughly the circumstances surrounding an incident that took place on 22 April 2002, when Taiwo Oduntan was arrested at his home address by officers of the Metropolitan Police Service, detained at Uxbridge Police Station, and suffered injuries;
> To investigate specifically the allegation that the actions of the officers were racially motivated;
> To take full account of the perspective of each party to the investigative process; and
> To ensure that the investigation itself is non-discriminatory.

There is no involvement of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary at present but the Police Complaints Authority informs us that any issues of concern will be highlighted to them at the conclusion of the investigation.

Street Crime

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what role Baroness Blackstone has in overseeing the street crime initiative of the Avon and Somerset Constabulary; and if he will make a statement. [67692]

Mr. Denham: The cross-government Street Crime Action Group, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister agreed that it would be helpful for each of the 10 street crime areas to be supported by a minister. As one of the sponsor ministers Baroness Blackstone is undertaking visits to Avon and Somerset to meet with and support local agencies, to promote a shared approach to tackling street crime at local level, and to identify any issues on which further action by government agencies would be helpful.

Illegal Working

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions for illegal working have taken place in the last 12 months; and with what results. [68644]

Beverley Hughes: The information requested is not available centrally, as illegal working is a circumstance rather than a specific offence and the Home Office Court Proceedings Database does not hold information on offence circumstances. However, in the year 2000, 32 persons were prosecuted under section 8 of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996. This section makes it an offence for employers knowingly or negligently to employ persons aged 16 or over who are subject to immigration control unless they fall into one of two categories. They must either have current and valid permission to be in the United Kingdom which does not prevent them taking the job in question, or they must fall into a category where such employment is otherwise allowed.

Information on the number of prosecutions in 2001 is due to be published in the Command Paper "Control of Immigration Statistics United Kingdom 2001" in late autumn of this year.

Heart Detector Machines

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many full-time staff are employed at (a) Dover and (b) Folkestone to operate a heart detector machine. [68629]

Beverley Hughes: There are the equivalent of 68 immigration officers, based on the number of staff days worked in a typical week, deployed on freight searching duties at Dover. The officers operate the heartbeat detector as well as other methods for detecting clandestine illegal entrants, such as dogs and carbon dioxide detectors.

The heartbeat detector is not deployed at Folkestone. However the Immigration Service deploys 56 officers in the United Kingdom Control Zone at Coquelles to operate the heartbeat detector and other detection methods.

Robbery

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the estimated cost to public funds is of the failure to achieve the Public Service Agreement target to reduce robbery. [68777]

Mr. Denham: The Public Service Agreement target is to reduce robbery in the Greater Manchester, West Yorkshire, Merseyside, West Midlands and Metropolitan Police Service areas by 14 per cent by 2005. The target is ongoing and the forces concerned are continuing to work towards its delivery.

Police Treatment of Detainees

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the PACE Code of Practice on police treatment of detainees will be issued for consultation; and how long the consultation will last. [68789]

Mr. Denham: A draft revised version of the Police and Criminal Evidence Code of Practice (PACE) Code of Practice C on the detention, treatment and questioning of persons by police officers was issued for consultation on 12 June 2002. The consultation period lasts until 16 August.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of domestic violence have been prosecuted by the Crown Prosecution Service in each of the last three years. [63585]

Solicitor-General: I have been asked to reply.

In 1999, the CPS prosecuted 6,404 cases of domestic violence. In 2000, the CPS prosecuted 7,680 cases of domestic violence. In 2001, the CPS prosecuted 7,996 cases of domestic violence. The figures include cases where a defendant agreed to be bound over and are based on the CPS monitoring system of annual 3-month snapshots carried out between 1999 and 2001.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Missions

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many serious offences were committed in 2001 by persons entitled to immunity by virtue of their employment by a diplomatic mission or an international organisation, and by their dependants. [70289]

Mr. Macshane: From a community of over 19,500 persons entitled to immunity, 21 serious offences, allegedly committed by such persons, were drawn to the attention of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in 2001. "Serious offences" are defined in accordance with the 1985 White Paper on Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges—i.e. as offences that would, in certain circumstances, carry a penalty of 12 months or more imprisonment.

Non-Domestic Rates

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will name the diplomatic missions in the United Kingdom that owed more than £10,000 as at 5 April in respect of national non-domestic rates for office premises. [70290]

Mr. Macshane: Most diplomatic missions in the United Kingdom meet their obligations and pay the NNDR requested from them. However, as at 5 April 2002, the following missions owed over £10,000 in respect of NNDR:

Country	Amount
Bulgaria	117,511.13
Iran	97,352.55
Sierra Leone	48,274.76
Algeria	43,194.62
Mozambique	31,116.14
Cameroon	27,646.19
Uganda	24,760.37
Bangladesh	20,636.91
Syria	20,004.66
Zambia	19,276.56
Senegal	14,600,98
Jordan	13,154.29
Cote d'Ivoire	12,066.16
Total	489,595.32

Eleven additional diplomatic missions who each owe more than £10,000 in respect of NNDR have made arrangements with the Valuation Office Agency to clear their outstanding debts have not been included in the list. These eleven missions owe £729,731.66. The total amount outstanding from all missions, therefore, is £1,219,326.98.

Traffic Offences

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the number of outstanding parking and other minor traffic violation fines incurred by diplomatic missions during the year ended 31 December 2001. [70291]

Mr. Macshane: At the end of 2001, unpaid fines in respect of parking and other minor traffic violations incurred by Diplomatic Missions and International Organisations in the United Kingdom totalled 5,842 (£276,410.00). In April this year the Foreign and Commonwealth Office wrote to all affected Diplomatic Missions and International Organisations giving them the opportunity either to pay their outstanding fines or to appeal against them if they considered that the fines had been issued incorrectly. As a result payments totalling £62,931.00 were received, leaving a total of 4,485 (£213,479.00) unpaid fines for 2001. The attached table details those Diplomatic Missions and International Organisations that have more than 10 undisputed fines unpaid.

Arms Exports

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations Her Majesty's Government have undertaken (a) within the UK and (b) with European partners in arriving at the new criteria on arms export components. [69507]

Mr. O'Brien: The other factors referred to by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary in his response to the question from the hon. Member for Sherwood (Paddy Tipping), 8 July 2002, Official Report, columns 650–52W, were the result of extensive discussion within Government. Since they were an elaboration of existing policy covering a limited category of cases, we did not conduct consultations outside the Government within the UK. But we conducted two rounds of consultations with other EU Member States to check carefully their approach in such cases. Our consultations confirmed that other EU MS recognise the need for a special approach in such cases.

Gibraltar

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the reforms put in place since 1996 in Gibraltar in relation to company law and practice; and what deficiencies these were aimed at correcting. [67847]

Mr. Hain: Since 1996 the Government of Gibraltar has introduced both new legislation and amendments to existing legislation concerning company law and practice. These legislative changes have been made to implement EU Directives impacting on company law.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the reforms put in place since 1996 in Gibraltar in relation to company law and practice; and what deficiencies these were aimed at correcting. [69353]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the above answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Thurrock.

Sheik Hamad bin Jassin bin Jaber al-Thari

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date his Department was informed of payments made by BAE Systems for its predecessor British Aerospace to his Excellency Sheik Hamad bin Jassin bin Jaber al-Thari; and if he will make a statement. [61120]

Mr. O'Brien: The first reference we have been able to trace in our records is a report in 1998 which stated that Shaik Hamed bin Jassin bin Jaber al-Thari had received commissions in connection with a defence equipment package signed in 1996 (for which BAe were the lead contractor).

HEALTH

Foundation Hospitals

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many three star hospitals have indicated a willingness to become a foundation hospital. [64325]

Mr. Lammy: Thirty-one of the acute National Health Service trusts that were awarded 3 stars in the NHS performance ratings announced in 2001 have expressed an interest in foundation status. The first wave of NHS foundation trusts will be selected from among the cohort of NHS acute trusts that achieve 3 stars in the performance ratings to be published in July 2002.

NHS Doctors

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors were employed in the NHS in (a) 2000 and (b) 2001, broken down by nationality. [64336]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect data on individual nationalities of doctors but does collect the countries in which they qualified, broken down into United Kingdom, the rest of the European Economic Area and elsewhere.

The table only shows hospital medical staff working in the National Health Service in England. The country of qualification for dental staff is not collected.

Beta Interferon

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received on the discrepancies between health authorities in prescribing beta interferon and Interferon for MS; and if he will make a statement. [64459]

Mr. Lammy: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received the hon. Member's letter of 20 June. According to the Department's records we have not received any other recent representations about prescribing discrepancies under the risk-sharing scheme for drugs for people with multiple sclerosis announced on 4 February. The scheme started to operate on 6 May and the guidance in Health Service Circular 2002–04 recognised that it may take 18 months or longer for treatment to be initiated for all eligible patients.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans are in place and what the timetable is to introduce the beta interferon risk-sharing scheme to Hertfordshire. [68107]

Mr. Lammy: The National Health Service organisations in Hertfordshire are close to finalising arrangements to meet the requirements of the guidance in health service circular 2002–04 so that patients who meet the criteria developed by the association of British neurologists benefit from treatment with Beta Interferon.

Social Services Departments

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he proposes to (a) start and (b) finish the consultation exercise on social service department fines as set out in paragraph 8.10 of Delivering the NHS Plan; [64514]

(2) if he will set out his plans for social services departments who are consistently fined under his proposals in Delivering the NHS Plan, paragraph 8.10. [64517]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the response I gave him on the 18 June 2002, Official Report, column 235W.

Female Staff

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the staff of his Department are women; and what the percentage was in June 1997. [66921]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office on 5 July 2002, Official Report, column 622W.

Building Values

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the buildings owned by his Department and estimate the market value of each of them. [66943]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 3 July 2002, Official Report, column 339W.

Teenage Pregnancies

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which voluntary groups are assisting the Government develop and deliver its teenage pregnancy strategy. [66711]

Ms Blears: The teenage pregnancy unit has invited a wide range of voluntary organisations to become members of a non-statutory forum, which meets twice a year. The organisations are listed below.

ACET
Barnados
Black Health Agency
British Pregnancy Advisory Service

Brook
The Children's Society
Crisis
Education for Choice
Fathers Direct
The Foyer Federation
fpa
Gingerbread
Girls Friendly Society
The Guide Association
Health Action for Homeless People
Homestart
Image in Action
Marie Stopes International
Maternity Alliance
National Association of Governors and Managers
National Childbirth Trust
National Children's Bureau
National Children's Home
National Council of Voluntary Child Care Organisations
National Family and Parenting Institute
National Foster Carers Association
National Housing Federation
National Newpin
National Council for One Parent Families
National Pyramid Trust
NSPCC
Parentline Plus
Parenting, Education and Support Forum
PIPPIN
The Princes Trust
Relate
Save the Children
Trust for the Study of Adolescence
Working with Men
YMCA
YWCA

Professionals from the voluntary sector also attend the independent advisory group on teenage pregnancy where, in their personal capacity, they provide advice on the teenage pregnancy strategy.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the religious organisations which are involved in helping the Government deliver their teenage pregnancy strategy; and if he will make a statement on their role. [66707]

Ms Blears: Development of the teenage pregnancy strategy was informed by consultation with individuals and organisations representing a wide range of faiths.

To ensure on-going dialogue with faith groups during the implementation of the strategy, the teenage pregnancy unit has established an inter-faith forum. The forum meets twice a year to discuss particular aspects of the teenage pregnancy strategy, to consider what role faith members can play in supporting its implementation and to share examples of work in practice with faith communities. The forum has over 40 members and includes representation from the following faiths.

Church of England
Roman Catholic Methodist
Moslem
Hindu
Jewish

In addition to the inter-faith forum, there are two members of the independent advisory group on teenage pregnancy who provide advice on the strategy from a faith perspective.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the funding mechanisms and funding streams for the delivery of his teenage pregnancy strategy. [66704]

Ms Blears: Since April 2002, funding to support implementation of local teenage pregnancy strategies has been routed to top tier local authorities through the teenage pregnancy local implementation grant. The resources support locally agreed teenage pregnancy strategies and action plans, developed jointly by health and local authority partners, with the aim of pump-priming promising approaches and new developments, and facilitating effective local co-ordination. The local teenage pregnancy partnership board, with representation from the local authority, primary care trusts (PCTs) and other key local partners, make recommendations on the use of the grant and oversee implementation of the local action plan.

Local teenage pregnancy partnership boards also liaise with the local authorities, PCTs, and other local organisations to secure additional mainstream sources of funding to support implementation of the strategy.

In addition to the local implementation grant, the teenage pregnancy strategy is supported by other relevant Government initiatives such as the Connexions service, neighbourhood renewal and the children's fund, and funding from other Government Departments, including:

teenage pregnancy standards fund to support school age parents in continuing with their education; sure start plus and childcare pilots to provide better support for pregnant teenagers and teenage parents; approved funding from the housing corporation for 1,500 new units of supported housing for teenage parents.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding the Government are making available for reducing teenage conceptions, broken down by non-statutory group funded in the current financial year. [66710]

Ms Blears: During this financial year, we are investing £16 million to support the implementation of local teenage pregnancy strategies which will include, at local discretion, the involvement of the voluntary sector, and a further £900,000 to support regional coordination. An additional £4 million will be invested in the teenage pregnancy strategy national campaign which includes the provision of the sexwise helpline, through the Essentia Group, and funding for Parentline Plus. In addition, a small number of projects undertaken by non-statutory organisations are supported at national level and are listed below.

National Family and Parenting Institute, for consultation with parents.	37,000
GFS Platform Great Yarmouth, for a conference on young parents.	5,000
National Children's Bureau, for consultation with young people and to support further developments in Personal Social and Health Education, including Sex and Relationship Education.	68,000
Brook, for the development of a quality assurance framework for youth contraceptive services.	£20,000

Air Pollution

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the costs borne by the National Health Service as a result of illness caused from air pollution, in each Government Office Region, in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [67491]

Ms Blears: The Department's committee on the medical effects of air pollutants published a report in 1998 on "Quantification of the Health Effects of Air Pollution on Health in the United Kingdom", a copy of which is available in the Library. The report was based on levels of pollutants in 1995. It estimated that the deaths of between 12,000 and 24,000 vulnerable people (mainly those with heart or lung disease) may be brought forward and between 14,000 and 24,000 respiratory hospital admissions and readmissions may be associated with short term exposure to air pollution each year. There was insufficient information to allow quantification of other health effects of air pollution.

The Department's ad-hoc group on the economic appraisal of the health effects of air pollution estimated that the average cost to the National Health Service of a respiratory hospital admission was about £1,390[1].

Dementia

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department is doing to help increase the early diagnosis of dementia; what support groups and services there are for people with dementia and their carers in (a) Jarrow constituency, (b) South Tyneside and (c) England; and what his Department is doing to increase the availability of information about dementia to the public. [67040]

Jacqui Smith: The importance of early diagnosis of dementia is recognised in the national service framework (NSF) for older people, which was published in March 2001. Implementation of Standard 7, on mental health in older people, will increase early diagnosis. Introduction of the single assessment process, also required by the NSF, will also help.

There are a number of national organisations which provide support and services for people with dementia and their carers, including the alzheimer's society, dementia voice and carers UK. In South Tyneside, there is a network of community services, provided through the community services department, which support people with dementia and their carers; and other services are being developed. The Alzheimer's Society provides a wide range of support services in collaboration with the personal advisor service which works in local primary health care teams and with the specialist mental health trust. Day care facilities are provided at Palmers Community Hospital in Jarrow.

The Department is promoting the availability of information through implementation of Standard 2 of the NSF, and of the information strategy which underpins the NSF, and through more general developments to promote patient and public involvement, for example, through patient advice and liaison services.

Ambulances

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ambulance vehicles were involved in (a) slight injuries, (b) serious injuries and (c) fatal accidents in the last five years. [67435]

Mr. Lammy: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on ambulance response times for the Staffordshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust. [66898]

Mr. Lammy: Staffordshire Ambulance Service National Health Service Trust has consistently been one of the best performers for "Category A" response times in the United Kingdom. In 2001–02, they not only exceeded the national target of 75 per cent. of calls responded to within eight minutes, but also exceeded the target for 2002–03 of 80 per cent of calls responded to within eight minutes. Their response rate was listed by the National Audit office in figures published recently as achieving an average of 87.5 per cent., the top performer in the UK. The trust is to be commended on their continuing excellent response rates.

Yellow Card Scheme

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) adverse incidents and (b) deaths have been reported under the yellow card scheme since 1997 involving (i) proprietary analgesics, (ii) aspirin-based products, (iii) paracetamol-based products, (iv) non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drug-based products and (v) anti-histamines. [67424]

Mr. Lammy: Reports of suspected adverse drug reactions (ADRs) to medicines are collected by the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) and the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) through the spontaneous reporting scheme, the yellow card scheme.

The number of suspected ADR reports including reports with a fatal outcome received via the yellow card scheme from 1 January 1997 to 4 July 2002 for aspirin-based products, paracetamol-based products, non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drug (NSAID) based products and anti-histamines are provided in the following table.

	No. of ADR reports	No. of reports with a fatal outcome
Aspirin-based products	572	41
Paracetamol-based products	368	38
NSAID-based products	7833	256
Anti-histamines	1039	19

Proprietary analgesics are difficult to define as a group and include aspirin-based, paracetamol-based and NSAID based products, the data for which are provided in the table above. These data should be seen in the context of the very wide usage of these drugs with millions of patients being treated every year in the United Kingdom.

It is important to note that submission of a suspected ADR report does not necessarily mean that it was caused by the drug. Many factors have to be taken into account in assessing causal relationships including temporal association, the possible contribution of concomitant medication and the underlying disease.

Data from the yellow card scheme cannot be used to measure the frequency of an adverse reaction as it is associated with a degree of underreporting which varies between different medicines.

The MCA/CSM has provided guidance on safe prescribing of NSAIDs to health professionals in 1994 and most recently in April 2002.

Cancer

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by the NHS on (a) cancer research and (b) cancer treatment in each of the last three years. [67801]

Ms Blears: Total Department and National Health Service expenditure in England for cancer research was £77.4 million in 1999–2000 and £83.8 million in 2000–01. Figures for 2001–02 are not yet available.

The Department does not collect figures on the cost of NHS services in a way that enables an accurate figure to be calculated for the cost of a particular disease.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of Datamonitor's recently published research on five year cancer survival rates. [68279]

Ms Blears: The Datamonitor survey was based on survival rates for cancer patients diagnosed over a decade ago. These figures showed that survival rates in this country were lower than for comparable European countries. That is why, in September 2000, we published the NHS Cancer Plan which sets out a programme of action to improve cancer prevention, detection, treatment and research which are intended to bring our survival rates in line with the rest of Europe.

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what epidemiology studies his Department have carried out to investigate the causes of cancer clusters. [67136]

Ms Blears: The Department has funded a number of epidemiology studies on specific cancer clusters. The following studies were commissioned from the Small Area Health Statistics Unit at Imperial College and all are published in the scientific literature:

Incidence of cancer of the larynx and lung near incinerators of waste solvents and oils in Great Britain. (Elliott et al., Lancet (1992): Volume 339, pp. 854–858.)

Cancer incidence and mortality near the Baglan Bay petrochemical works, South Wales. (Sans et al., Occupational and Environmental Medicine (1995): Volume 52, pp. 217–224.)

Lympho-haematopoetic malignancy around all industrial complexes that include major oil refineries in Great Britain. (Wilkinson et al., Occupational and Environmental Medicine (1999): Volume 56, pp. 577–590.)

Cancer incidence near radio and television transmitters in Great Britain. 1. Sutton Coldfield Transmitter and 2. All high power transmitters. (Dolk et al., American Journal of Epidemiology (1997): Volume 145, pp. 1–9 and 10–17.)

Cancer incidence and mortality around the Pan Britannica Industries pesticide factory, Waltham Abbey. (Wilkinson et al., Occupational and Environmental Medicine (1997): Volume 54, pp. 101–107.)

The Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) recommended (COMARE Third Report) an investigation of the geographical distribution of childhood cancer and leukaemia in Great Britain and how the pattern of cases around nuclear installations compares with the national pattern. A study has been commissioned by the Department of Health Radiological Protection Research Programme (RPRP) and is a multicentre study co-ordinated by the childhood cancer research group in Oxford. This study is nearing completion and the Department has asked COMARE to advise on which, if any, nuclear installations in Great Britain have incidences of childhood cancer and leukaemia in their vicinity which are statistically outside the distribution seen nationally. COMARE is hoping to report on this aspect of the study to the Department in 2003. The study is investigating, among other topics, clustering as a feature of childhood cancer. This will be broken down as leukaemia and other childhood cancers and other groupings considered relevant. The study will also relate leukaemia and non-Hodgkin lymphoma around nuclear installations to the Great Britain clustering analysis.

When complete, the database will also allow investigation of other environmental factors and their potential relevance to the temporal and spatial distribution of childhood cancer.

The RPRP is also funding a study into the possible association between childhood cancer, electromagnetic fields (emf) and powerlines. The Department also contributes to the Electromagnetic Field project, which is examining possible associations between emf and general disease patterns (including cancer).

Breast Cancer

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women have been diagnosed with breast cancer in the Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authority in each of the last five years; what the local survival rate is; how much funding has been given to breast cancer treatment in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [67421]

Ms Blears: Information held centrally on diagnoses of breast cancer in the former Isle of Wight, Portsmouth and South East Hampshire Health Authority area is shown in the table.

Finished consultant episodes (FCEs) where the main diagnosis was "Malignant neoplasm of breast" or "Carcinoma in situ of breast", for patients resident in Isle of Wight and Portsmouth & South East Hampshire Health Authority

Health Authority	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01
QD2 Portsmouth & South East Hampshire HA	471	558	531	494	836
QD4 Isle of Wight HA	451	498	508	548	249
Total	992	1,056	1,039	1,042	1,085

Notes:

1. An FCE is defined as a period of patient care under one consultant in one health care provider. The figures do not represent the number of patients, as one person may have several episodes within the year.
2. The main diagnosis is the first of seven diagnosis fields in the HES data set, and provides the main reason why the patient was in hospital.
3. Data in this table are adjusted for both coverage and unknown/invalid clinical data, except for 2000–01 which are not yet adjusted for shortfalls.

Source:

Hospital Episode Statistics (HES), Department of Health.

Additional information on registrations and survival rates can be found in the Compendium of Clinical and Health Indicators 2001, which is available on national centre for health outcomes website. Information on breast cancer is also available on the National Statistics website.

The mortality rates for the former health authority area have decreased over the last decade but do remain high compared to the rest of the country, as do the average life years lost for women under 75 years. The breast cancer group of the central south coast cancer network is to examine in more detail the apparent variations and to review all treatment protocols to ensure they follow best practice.

The funding allocated to local breast cancer services is determined by the health authority and, for that reason, figures are not held centrally.

ADHD

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial resources are available for the treatment of ADHD; how many specialist staff are employed in the NHS to work with children with ADHD in (a) Gloucestershire, (b) England and (c) the average health authority in England; and if he will make a statement. [67141]

Jacqui Smith: Information is not collected centrally on the expenditure on attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) nor on the number of specialist staff employed in the National Health Service who work with children with ADHD.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's increase in licence fees; and if he will make a statement. [67138]

Ms Blears: We will consider the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority's proposals when they have completed the wide ranging consultation currently under way.

Genetic Diagnostics

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what public consultation was undertaken by the HFEA on pre-implantation genetic diagnostics, prior to their HASHMI decision; what the results of the consultation were; and what conclusion the HFEA reported. [67135]

Ms Blears: The decision in principle to allow the licensing of treatment whereby an embryo is tested for its tissue compatibility with an existing sibling by preimplantation genetic diagnosis (PGD) is a matter for the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA).

In November 2001 the HFEA and the Human Genetics Commission (HGC) published the outcome of their joint public consultation on PGD which had begun in November 1999 as a joint consultation between the HFEA and the then Advisory Committee on Genetics Testing. This supported the use of PGD, subject to strict licensing arrangements, and concluded that tissue-typing as part of PGD would require further discussion. Following further consideration of the issue by the HFEA's ethics committee, the HFEA announced in December 2001 their decision in principle to allow PGD for serious genetic disease to be used in conjunction with tissue typing. Applications are considered on an individual basis and to date only one licence has been granted after very careful and lengthy consideration of the issues involved.

Alcohol

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number of (a) admissions to hospital, (b) visits to a GP and (c) other interfaces with the National Health Service that were alcohol related and their combined cost in each of the last five years. [67020]

Ms Blears: Data on National Health Service hospital admissions and costs to the NHS are provided in the tables shown. Data are not available on the number of visit to general practitioners and other interfaces with the NHS that were alcohol related.

Table 1

NHS hospital admissions where there was a primary diagnosis of selected alcohol related disease, England, 1996–97 to 2000–01

Primary diagnosis (ICD10)		number of admissions
1996–97

Notes:

1. The data include private patients in NHS hospitals.
2. The data do not include patients admitted with a primary diagnosis not related to alcohol (e.g. an injury).
3. Data in this table have been rounded to the nearest one hundred admissions. Data for 1996–97 to 1999–2000 have been grossed for both coverage and unknown/invalid clinical data.

Spending Review

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff have contributed to his Department's input to the Spending Review. [68692]

Mr. Lammy: The Spending Review has covered the breadth of the Department's spending programmes in varying degrees. As such, the Review has required the involvement of a range of staff from across the Department. The Spending Review is closely linked to the Department's on-going work programme and it is not possible to estimate precisely how many staff have been involved.

Royal Prerogative

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what decisions have been made by his Department in the last year under authority from the Royal Prerogative. [63131]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member to the response given by my hon. Friend the Member for Salford (Ms Blears) to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 9 November 2001, Official Report, column 470W.

Cancelled Operations

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations were cancelled in each quarter of 2001, broken down by NHS trust. [65166]

Mr. Hutton: Data on the total number of operations cancelled are not collected. A list of the number of operations cancelled by the hospital for non-clinical reasons on, or after the day the patient was due to be admitted, broken down by National Health Service trust, will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operating slots have been cancelled at the (a) Kent and Sussex Hospital and (b) Pembury Hospital since May 1997. [67047]

Ms Blears: Information on operating slots has not been collected centrally for a number of years. Information on cancelled operations is collected at health authority level and placed in the Library. Information for individual National Health Service trusts is available on the Department's website.

Herbal Products

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what progress the Government have made in its negotiations within Europe to amend the drafting of the European Traditional Herbal Medicinal Products Directive to ensure that account can be taken of herbal traditions from outside the EU in satisfying the 30 years qualifying period for herbal products without proof of efficacy; [66852]

(2) if he will place in the Library the evidence of people being harmed by unregulated herbal medicines referred to by the Parliamentary Under Secretary of the Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, European Standing Committee C on 18 June 2002, Official Report, column 11W; [66851]

(3) if he will list the criteria being used to determine which herbal products will be included on the positive list of herbal substances under Article 16f of the amendment proposed to Directive 2001/83/EC regarding traditional herbal medicinal products; [66773]

(4) what representations his Department has received to reduce the length of period that a herbal product or combination of herbal products must have been in use to 15 years; and if he will make a statement; [66858]

(5) what estimate his Department has made of the number of herbal products available in the UK that will be excluded under the current draft of amendments to Directive 2001/83/EC concerning traditional herbal medicinal products; [66855]

(6) what plans he has to inform the public of the difference between a licensed and a registered herbal product; and what this difference will mean in terms of the safety and efficacy of the herbal product; [66859]

(7) what evidence his Department has received of products that have contained dangerous combinations of herbs; if he will list these combinations; and what harmful effect each combination had on humans; [66856]

(8) if he will define the terms very high, high and medium in terms of pounds sterling, with regard to compliance costs referred to in the regulatory assessment for the prosposals amending Directive 2001/83/EC regarding traditional herbal medicinal products. [66774]

Ms Blears: An assessment of safety issues associated with herbal medicines, whether comprising of one or more ingredients, will be placed in the Library. In summary, safety issues relating to unlicensed herbal remedies leading to public health risk have arisen in the United Kingdom and elsewhere as a result of a number of factors. These include: interactions between herbal remedies and other medicines; the inherent toxicity of a herbal ingredient; the inclusion of toxic herbal ingredients or contamination as a result of poor manufacturing standards; and the adulteration of herbal remedies with other ingredients, such as prescription only corticosteroids.

There are a range of possible reasons why a product currently sold as an unlicensed herbal remedy under Section 12(2) of the Medicines Act, 1968, might not satisfy the criteria of the proposed Directive on Traditional Herbal Medicinal Products. There are no specific quality or safety standards set under the current regulatory regime for unlicensed herbal remedies and it is therefore possible that in some cases, without adjustment to the product, the safety and quality standards applicable under the proposed directive might not be met. Concerns have been expressed by some respondents to a recent consultation exercise (MLX 283) carried out by the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) that some products, currently legally sold as unlicensed herbal remedies may fall outside the scope of the directive as a result of an inability to demonstrate traditional usage as currently defined in the directive. The consultation period has been extended to the end of July specifically to allow those expressing concerns to identify any examples of such products.

As the MCA's consultation exercise on the proposed directive is still in progress analysis of the results is ongoing. There have, however, been some representations suggesting that the 30 year period for demonstrating traditional use might be reduced. The figure of 30 years as a reasonable indicator of traditional usage was once commanded wide support among many member states throughout the informal development of the directive. The specific examples which the MCA has asked the herbal sector to provide by the end of July should help to demonstrate whether the proposed 30 year criteria would in practice present a significant threat to the regulatory position of herbal remedies which could reasonably be regarded as traditional.

An initial discussion of the proposed directive took place in the Council of Ministers' working group on 10 June. The UK Government indicated their view that the quality, reliability and relevance of the evidence of traditional use was more important than its geographical origin. We will continue to argue this position as negotiations proceed.

The purpose of the positive list of herbal substances within the proposed directive is to facilitate applications for traditional use registrations so that, where an application complies with the positive list, the applicant need not demonstrate safety or traditional use of the product. The directive proposes that the Committee on Herbal Medicinal Products will be responsible for establishing and maintaining the list. Items will be included on the list where the committee accepts that a particular herbal substance, used within the parameters laid down in the list for example as to strength and therapeutic indication, meet the requirements of the directive as to safety and traditional usage.

The terms used in the initial regulatory impact assessment of the proposed directive were intended to give a very broad indication of the relative impact of the proposals. The actual costs attributable to the directive are likely to vary widely between companies, depending on many factors. For example, the impact of the directive could be very high on a company which was currently placing large numbers of herbal medicines on the market while not following any systematic quality standards. This assessment of very high regulatory impact is unlikely to apply, for example, to those UK companies which manufacture unlicensed herbal remedies in compliance with various systematic codes of practice operated by a number of trade associations in the herbal medicines and health food sector. Similarly, the potential for increased sales, which may for example flow from increased public confidence in the quality of products on offer and improved product information will depend on the response of individual companies.

The proposed directive would require product information for a herbal medicine with a traditional use registration to include a statement indicating that the efficacy of the product was not proven. A separate proposal in the review of European Union legislation for licensed medicines would allow companies to state in advertising that a medicine with a marketing authorisation was licensed. Both herbal medicines with a marketing authorisation and those with a traditional use registration would have been assessed by the competent authority as having acceptable safety. The indication for a traditional use registered product would be based on long usage rather than proven efficacy, as is required for a product with a marketing authorisation. The MCA has indicated that it has no present plans to review licensed herbal medicines with a view to assessing whether some might more appropriately come within the category of traditional use registration. This is a complex issue and it is possible that the Committee on Herbal Medicinal Products as proposed in the directive may develop guidance on this area in due course.

Concerns have been expressed by some in the health sector that the proposed quality and manufacturing standards may be over-regulatory. Those expressing such concerns have been invited during the extended period of consultation on the directive to identify which particular standards might be regarded as unnecessary or inappropriate. Further dialogue on this issue should enable the regulatory impact assessment to be enhanced.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends to make further representations to the European Commission about the proposed Traditional Herbal Medicinal Products Directive. [67968]

Ms Blears: We intend to participate actively in negotiations on the proposed Directive on Traditional Herbal Medicinal Products and will make representations and propose, support or oppose amendments to the directive as may be necessary in the interests of public health and consumer choice in the United Kingdom. We have extended the period of the Medicines Control Agency's consultation on the directive until the end of July in order to allow those with concerns an opportunity to provide more specific evidence. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and I are meeting representatives of the herbal sector during July to discuss the proposed Directive. In the light of points which may emerge from this further consultation and dialogue, we will consider what additional points we may wish to pursue during the course of the negotiations. We have already highlighted that we wish to see greater flexibility to take account of non-European herbal traditions and that we intend to press for an early date to be specified for the review of the scope of the directive with a view to its possible extension to at least some categories of non herbal traditional medicines.

Withholding Food and Fluid

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what his policy is on the use of sedation, with specific reference to withholding food and fluid from a patient; [67215]

(2) what his policy is on withholding food and fluid from patients and the notice to be taken of relatives' wishes; [67214]

(3) what advice his Department offers on the use of drugs that suppress the symptoms of terminal dehydration. [67216]

Mr. Lammy: I am advised that food and fluids should always be offered to patients who are capable of swallowing them. For terminally ill patients in the final days of life the objective is to control distressing and painful symptoms. Achieving such control may result in sedation. Many patients stop drinking and eating during the final days and it will be for clinical judgment to decide what is the appropriate treatment. Where nutrition and hydration have to be provided by artificial means, their possible withdrawal is in all cases a matter of clinical judgment which is undertaken in accordance with professional advice in accordance with a responsible body of medical opinion and the general law.

An adult patient who is capable of making his or her own treatment decision is entitled to do so and can refuse artificial hydration and nutrition just as he can any other form of treatment. In the absence of a valid advance refusal of treatment, doctors are required to act in the best interests of a adult patient who is unable to make his or her own treatment decisions. Sometimes this will mean that medical treatment (which includes artificial hydration and nutrition) which is no longer beneficial to the patient should be withdrawn. In these circumstances, suitable medical or other care should be provided to ensure that the comfort and dignity of the patient are maintained. In line with good practice, decisions to withdraw medical treatment should be made only after discussions with the healthcare team and those close to the patient.

Guidance in relation to palliative care (Changing Gear—Guidelines for Managing the last days of life in adults) was issued by the Department of Health in 1998, and advice on withdrawing and withholding treatment was included in the Reference Guide to Consent for Examination and Treatment, published in March 2001. Further guidance is also available from the British Medical Association.

North Surrey Primary Care Trust

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the (a) budgeted income and (b) planned expenditure of the North Surrey Primary Care Trust are for 2002–03. [67465]

Ms Blears: The North Surrey Primary Care Trust has reported that the current position on the 2002–03 budget is expenditure of £166.640 million. This position takes account of the trust's £2.3 million internal savings programme.

The trust's income is subject to service and financial framework discussions between Surrey & Sussex Health Authority and the Department's Directorate of Health and Social Care for the South of England, which are still ongoing.

IT Projects

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the cost to private sector IT suppliers of developing proposals for core ICT demonstrator projects initially supported by his Department, but for which funding was not found; [67976]

(2) what representations he has received from private sector IT suppliers concerning the provision of funding for core ICT demonstrator projects initially supported by his Department. [67977]

Ms Blears: A programme of small-scale pilot projects—electronic record demonstrator and implementation programme (ERDIP) was funded by the Department. These are currently being evaluated to assess progress and lessons learned prior to a decision being taken about further work.

In addition, joint work between the Department and a number of private sector consortia was undertaken to explore potential large-scale development projects in information technology (IT). Resources were made available by both the Department and the private sector for this but the considerable monies required for the execution of the projects could not be found.

All future IT developments in the NHS are now subsumed into the National Programme described in "Delivering 21st Century IT Support for the NHS—National Strategic Programme"—copies are available in the Library and at: www.doh.gsi.gov.uk/ipu/whatnew/deliveringit

The Department will continue to work in partnership with the private sector to deliver IT for the NHS.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the status is of existing NHS ICT procurements at PCT level; and if he will make a statement; [67987]

(2) if he will publish the guidance which he has issued to PCTs to halt existing NHS ICT procurements; [68003]

(3) whether he intends to issue further guidance concerning existing NHS ICT procurements at PCT level. [67986]

Ms Blears: The new National Health Service information technology programme was outlined in the document "Delivering 21st Century IT Support for the NHS: National Strategic Programme", published by the Department in June 2002. The key change of direction is to take greater central control over the specification, procurement, resource management, performance management and implementation of the information and IT strategy.

Existing local procurements, and the development by local primary care organisations of system specifications and functional requirements, are valuable in the development of a new national approach. Guidance published by the Department in support of the June 2002 document states:

> "Procurements are underway in many places to deliver electronic patient records and other systems and these procurements need to proceed. Certainly by 2008, as indicated in Delivering the NHS Plan, we expect to see all key applications and functionality of electronic patient records in all PCTs and Trusts."

On 29 April 2002 the NHS primary care information modernisation programme published a guidance document advising local organisations that have not yet begun procurements to await further guidance arising from the new approach to system certification and accreditation. There was no advice to halt existing procurements; instead the programme advised:

> "Primary care organisations that have already begun the procurement of new primary and community information systems should contact the Primary Care Information Modernisation team. This will enable the team to have a clear understanding of all local activity and the impact that this will have on current and future national initiatives. The team will ensure that the primary care organisation is made aware of any other relevant activity, including contact details, and will provide more detailed guidance and support if required."

As the new procurement strategy is developed, the Department will issue further advice as to how migration to the new arrangements will be made. This will cover all NHS IT procurements, including those relating to primary care organisations, and will take into account developments arising from existing local procurements.

Primary Care Drug Dictionary

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what procedures were followed in procuring the design, prototyping and population of the primary care drug dictionary; [67992]

(2) whether tenders were issued for the design, prototyping and population of the primary care drug dictionary. [67990]

Mr. Lammy: A drug dictionary has been developed as part of the research phase of the development of PRODIGY, a computerised decision and learning support tool for general practitioners.

A recent re-procurement of primary care decision support (based on PRODIGY) is near completion as the work moves from research and development to the implementation phase. Reference to the design work and prototyping for an electronic drug dictionary was included as part of the procurement process. This is consistent with European Union procurement rules.

Statistics

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the statistics that are collected by his Department by English parliamentary constituency; and if he will make a statement. [67100]

Mr. Lammy: The Department collects a wide range of statistics, most of which are collected at a local level. They are based on administrative areas such as health authorities, primary care trusts, National Health Service trusts or local authorities that reflect local lines of responsibility and accountability. They are not collected at Parliamentary constituency level.

Members of the Government statistical service (GSS) in all Government Departments provide a statistical service to the Library.

The Library provides a tailored service for Members. Statistics that can often be provided at parliamentary constituency level include economic status (employment, unemployment, and inactivity), claimant count, employee jobs, average earnings and census data. Also, many statistics that are available at a lower level can generally be aggregated to parliamentary constituency level. This includes the increasing range of statistics at ward level becoming available through the neighbourhood statistics service (www.statistics.gov.uk/neighbourhood).

Medical Devices Directive

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to ensure that the European Medical Devices Directive is in accordance with the Furniture and Furnishing Regulations of 1988 with respect to flame resistance tests for furniture. [67637]

Mr. Lammy: The Medical Devices Agency, an executive agency of the Department, has consulted the European Commission about the mechanism for requiring manufacturers of orthopaedic mattresses who place their products on the market as a medical device to also meet the national measures relating to the flammability of furniture in the United Kingdom and is waiting a response.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the (a) Chairman of the Council of the BMA, (b) President of the Royal College of Physicians, (c) President of the Royal College of Surgeons, (d) President of the Royal College of Psychiatrists, (e) President of the Royal College of General Practitioners, (f) President of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists and (g) President of the Royal College of Nursing. [68061]

Mr. Lammy: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, my Ministerial colleagues and I meet regularly, formally and informally, with key stakeholders, including representatives of the medical and nursing professions and other bodies.

NHS Funding

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 25 February 2002, Official Report, column 991W, on NHS-funded activity, if he will share the key findings referred to. [68266]

Mr. Hutton: We are considering how best the findings might be made available.

Surplus Property

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations in the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on "The Management of Surplus Property by Trusts in the NHS in England"; and if he will make a statement. [68059]

Mr. Lammy: Departmental officials are making substantial progress in implementing the recommendations contained in the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General on "The Management of Surplus Property by Trusts in the NHS in England".

This includes:

A letter to all National Health Service trust and primary care trust (PCT) chief executives requiring them to have an estate strategy by 31 December 2002 with progress being monitored by NHS Estates.

"Amendments to Estatecode" which incorporate the report's recommendations which is being published this month.

A training session for all staff involved in corporately overseeing sales by NHS trusts and PCTs.

The publication this month of an information guide to local planning authorities and the NHS on development plans and NHS modernisation.

European Law

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department takes to ensure that it follows procedures for procurement in accordance with European law. [68048]

Mr. Lammy: The Department maintains comprehensive guidance covering all aspects of procurement activity, including the European Union Public Procurement Directives. This information and guidance is posted on the Department's Intranet to which all its staff has access.

In addition to written instructions, the Department's central procurement policy and advisory unit exists to instruct and provide support to anyone in the Department who may be engaged in any procurement activity. It is a specific Departmental requirement that all procurements in excess of £50,000 involve the services of a trained purchaser.

Correspondence

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for West Chelmsford of 22 April regarding the treatment of bowel cancer. [68289]

Ms Blears: A reply was sent on 11 July.

E-injuries

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has undertaken on children with (a) repetitive strain injury, (b) text message injury and (c) long-term injuries from playing gaming consoles. [68097]

Jacqui Smith: The main Government agency for medical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC), which is funded via the Department of Trade and Industry. The MRC funds research into repetitive strain injury and spent £97,000 on research into this condition in 2000–01. The MRC is not supporting any research into children with repetitive strain injury, text message injury or long term injuries from playing gaming consoles.

Eden Strang

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role his Department has played in the (a) release and (b) post-release arrangements of Eden Strang; and if he will make a statement. [67854]

Jacqui Smith: Mr. Strang was managed as a voluntary National Health Service patient.

His pre discharge and discharge plan was in line with the care programme approach which in general terms involves a multi-disciplinary assessment of health and social care needs, including risk assessment, and an appropriate care plan.

Community Equipment Services

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people benefited from the use of community equipment services in (a) 2000 and (b) 2001. [68271]

Jacqui Smith: It is estimated that 1,300,000 individual people benefited from National Health Service and social services community equipment services in the year ending 31 March 2001. An estimate is not available for the year ending 31 March 2000.

Defibrillators

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures his Department has put in place to ensure that members of staff at sites where automated defibrillators have been installed have been appropriately trained in the use of such equipment. [68275]

Ms Blears: A defibrillator advisory committee (DAC) was established at the outset of the initiative to assist the government with the implementation of the defibrillator initiative. One of its tasks was to recommend criteria for the training competencies of those individuals who may be required to use an automated external defibrillator (AEDs) at sites identified. An initial four hour training programme was agreed that covered the training outcomes of basic life support (BLS) and the use of an AED. Trainees are not certified if they fail to achieve the crucial competencies. Refresher training occurs at six monthly intervals to ensure skill and knowledge retention. All trainees who pass the course are issued with a training record card that is certified by the trainer to show they have attended a training course in BLS and the use of an AED; this is updated following the successful completion of subsequent refresher training courses.

A formal procurement process to purchase training services was undertaken to meet the training requirements of the programme's national roll-out and to ensure the appropriate training of personnel at sites identified. Training contracts were awarded under the direction of the NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency (PASA) and in conjunction with medical and educational advisors from the resuscitation council (UK) Training contracts for five National Health Service regions were awarded to ambulance service training departments, St. John Ambulance was awarded contracts for two regions, and the British Red Cross was awarded a contract for one region.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new automated defibrillators have been installed in public places since 1 May. [68276]

Ms Blears: Since 1 May 2002, fifty-five automated external defibrillators (AEDs) have been installed across seventeen public sites in England. Since the launch of the first site in April 2000, 542 AEDs have been installed across eighty-two sites.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff at each of the sites where automated defibrillators have been placed have participated in training programmes in their use. [68274]

Ms Blears [holding answer 10 July 2002]: By the end of June 2002, 2914 personnel across seventy-five sites identified for the Defibrillators in Public Places Initiative had received training in basic life support and the use of an automated external defibrillator. A breakdown of training activity at each site is illustrated below:

Medical Records

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Electronic Record Development and Implementation Programme with regards to the national rollout of electronic personal medical records for all patients. [68288]

Mr. Lammy: The electronic record development and implementation programme (ERDIP) was established in June 2000 to explore developmental issues around the electronic record programme specified in the information strategy Information for Health, published in September 1998. The programme consisted of 19 projects, nine of which have now completed. The projects ranged in size from one to exchange information between NHS Direct and general practitioner (GP) systems, to a pan community service covering a health authority (as previously defined), linking hospitals, general practice, ambulance and social care. Two general practices (Bury Knowle and Hatfield) have explored the issues of allowing patients access to their own GP records.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of patients have access to their electronic medical records. [68287]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 10 July 2002]: At present no official figures are available on the proportion of patients who have been given direct on-line, secure access to their electronic record. However, there are a number of sites that have taken forward work in this area, which will inform policy development and any future national rollout.

In addition proposals are currently being considered to take forward the development of an electronic personal health record as specified in the National Health Service information strategy, Information for Health. This will be the patient's own record, separate from the general practice and hospital records.

Photodynamic Therapy

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make photodynamic therapy an approved NHS treatment; and if he will make a statement. [68292]

Mr. Lammy: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) are carrying out an appraisal of photodynamic therapy as a treatment for age related macular degeneration. NICE published its final appraisal determination on photodynamic therapy on 12 June. This has been appealed against. An appeal panel will now be convened to hear the appeal and decide the outcome. If the appeal is not upheld, then guidance will be published, however, if it is upheld then the appeals panel will ask the appraisal committee to reconsider the evidence in light of the appeal panel's decision. The earliest guidance could be available to the National Health Service is early August.

Mental Health

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of trusts have mixed-sex mental health wards. [67957]

Mr. Hutton: All mental health wards generally care for both men and women. To provide the required levels of privacy and dignity for patients, wards are split into single sex bays, or single rooms, or otherwise configured to provide adequate segregation of gender. It is the responsibility of each National Health Service trust to determine the most appropriate configuration to meet their specific requirements.

The Department has set three objectives which trusts must meet to be deemed compliant. These objectives refer to single sex accommodation and not single sex wards.

The target is for three objectives to be achieved in 95 per cent. of trusts by December 2002.

The three objectives are:

To ensure that appropriate organisational arrangements are in place to secure good standards of privacy and dignity for hospital patients;

To achieve the patient's charter standard for segregated washing and toilet facilities across the NHS; and Provide safe facilities for patients in hospitals who are mentally ill which safeguard their privacy and dignity.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on recruitment and retention as a result of the National Director of Mental Health's working group. [67974]

Mr. Hutton: The national director for mental health's working group has taken a number of practical steps related to the recruitment and retention of psychiatrists. The group has initiated an attrition study of psychiatric trainees, a study of flexible trainees in psychiatry, a survey into the retirement intentions of consultant psychiatrists and a study of psychiatrists' workload. The group has provided psychiatric input to international recruitment and work is in progress to recruit psychiatrists through the general global recruitment campaign and the International Fellowship scheme.

The group has developed a new model of psychiatrists' numbers, tracking recruitment and retention from graduation to retirement and an action plan based on these figures is being prepared.

Recruitment and retention issues relating to the mental health workforce as a whole are taken forward by the mental health care group workforce team.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many more staff will need to be recruited to acute mental health wards as a result of implementation of the Working Time Regulations; and if he will make a statement as to his plans. [67971]

Mr. Hutton: The working time regulations currently fully apply to all staff except for doctors in training.

The Department is currently in the process of supporting a range of pilot projects to test solutions to implementation of the working time directive. This includes mental health services.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities offer women-only day centres for mental health patients. [68272]

Jacqui Smith: This information is not currently available centrally. The mental health service mapping system is being refined to enable the Department to gauge progress against this NHS Plan commitment.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many whole-time equivalent community psychiatry and other psychiatry nurses there are. [68156]

Mr. Hutton: Non-medical workforce information is collected each year as at 31 September, the latest being September 2001.

As at 31 September 2001, there were 11,040 community psychiatric nurses and 25,930 other psychiatric nurses working in the National Health Service.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the drugs Ziprazidone and Aripipazole will be available on prescription to treat schizophrenia. [65075]

Mr. Lammy: Neither Ziprasidone nor Aripiprazole are licensed drugs in the United Kingdom. These products will become available for prescription once the licensing authority is satisfied of their quality, safety and efficacy for the intended use.

Suicides

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric outpatients from the Portsmouth, South constituency have committed suicide in the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [67419]

Ms Blears: The information requested is not collected centrally.

MIND

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of MIND's prescribing protocol; and if he will make a statement. [67039]

Mr. Lammy: We welcome the MIND prescribing protocol. The themes highlighted are in line with action we are taking to improve the use of medicines in the National Health Service through medicines management schemes and patient partnership.

Electro-Convulsive Therapy

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has undertaken on electro-convulsive therapy in the last two years. [67636]

Mr. Lammy: The main Government agency for medical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC), which is funded via the Department of Trade and Industry. The MRC currently supports one research project on electro convulsive therapy (ECT) being undertaken by Dr. M. J. Koepp at the Institute of Neurology. The research started on 1 November 2001 and is expected to take three years.

The Department directly funds research into policy and the delivery of effective practice in health and social care, and provides National Health Service support funding for research commissioned by the research councils and charities in the NHS. The Department has directly funded research projects relevant to ECT as follows:.

Role of ECT: Review of studies and information on service user experience;

Systematic review effectiveness and adverse effects of ECT;

The Clinical effectiveness and cost effectiveness of electroconvulsive therapy;

Clinical Effectiveness and cost of repetitive transcranial magnetic stimulation versus ECT in severe depression: a multi-centre randomised controlled trial and economic analysis.

In addition, the Department provides NHS support funding for research councils' and charities' research that is conducted in the NHS. Details of this research can be found on the National Research Register on www.doh.gov.uk/research/nrr.htm

Nurses

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses work (a) as managers and (b) within education services. [68159]

Mr. Hutton: Non-medical workforce information is collected each year as at 31 September, the latest being September 2001.

As at 31 September 2001, there are 5,590 nurses with line management responsibility working as managers and 900 qualified nurse education staff working in the National Health Service in addition to those working in universities.

National Care Standards Commission

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the work of the National Care Standards Commission. [66899]

Jacqui Smith: Under the Care Standards Act the National Care Standards Commission from the 1 April 2002 became responsible for regulating statutory and independent sector care services in accordance with national minimum standards to ensure consistency and improve the quality of life and level of protection for users of social care some of whom are amongst the most vulnerable people in society.

In addition to fulfilling its regulatory functions, the Commission is charged with other responsibilities, reflecting its position as a national body well-placed to monitor changes in the provision and quality of registered services across the country. The Commission also has a general duty to encourage improvements in the quality of registered services and will be able to suggest ways in which services improve.

National standards will promote better quality care and help prevent abuse by grounding practice in the principles of dignity, choice privacy and respect.

INDEX TO THE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES

VOLUME 388

SESSION 2001–2002

1st July—12th July 2002

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volumes of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The fortnightly index to Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references are to the column numbering in the daily parts and weekly edition of Hansard.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Fortnightly, volume and sessional indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings and written questions:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - Debates etc. (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
  - Sittings in Westminster Hall (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings); and
  - Questions (which includes written, oral and private notice questions).

ABBREVIATIONS

The following abbreviations are used in connection with the progress of bills:

- 1R=First reading
- 2R=Second reading
- Com=Committee stage
- Rep=Report stage
- 3R=Third reading
- res=resolution
- amendt(s)=amendment(s)
- *=matter taken formally without debate or division.

Parliamentary background

- The Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk contains a range of information about Parliament and the full text of some Parliamentary papers and proceedings including Hansard.
- Information on current Parliamentary business is provided in the House of Commons Information Office Weekly Information Bulletin, available on the website and from The Stationery Office (020 7873 8499).
- Further information on Parliamentary proceedings and procedures is available from the House of Commons Information Office (020 7219 4272).
